It exhibits a mixture of new conceits and old; whereas the instauration gives the new unmixed, otherwise than with some little aspersions of the old, for taste's sake. Bacon.

2. Calumny; censure.

Not casting any aspersions on their religion, but ready to maintain my own. Bp. Hall, Specialties in his Life.

The same aspersions of the king, and the same grounds of a rebellion. Dryden.

ASPHA'LTI'CK. adj. [from asphaltos.] Gummy; bituminous.

And with asphaltick slime, broad as the gate,
Deep to the roots of hell the gather'd bench
They fasten'd. Milton, P. L. x. 298.

ASPHALTOS. † n. s. [ἄσφαλτος, bitumen.] A solid, brittle, black, bituminous, inflammable substance, resembling pitch, and chiefly found swimming on the surface of the Lacus Asphaltites, or Dead Sea, where anciently stood the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah. It is cast up in the nature of liquid pitch, from the bottom of this sea; and, being thrown upon the water, swims like other fat bodies, and condenses gradually.

Many a row
Of starry lamps and blazing cressets, fed
With naphtha and asphaltus, yielded light
As from a sky.

Milton, P. L. B. 1.

ASPHALTUM. n. s. [Lat.] A bituminous stone found near the ancient Babylon, and lately in the province of Neuchâtel; which, mixed with other matters, makes an excellent cement, incorruptible by air, and impenetrable by water; supposed to be the mortar so much celebrated among the ancients, with which the walls of Babylon were laid.

Chambers.

ASPHODEL. n. s. [Lilio-asphodelus, Lat.] Day-lily.

Asphodels were by the ancients planted near burying-places, in order to supply the manes of the dead with nourishment.

By those happy souls who dwell
In yellow meads of asphodel.

Pope.

ASPICK. † n. s. [See Serp.]

1. The name of a serpent.

Why did I 'scape th' invenom'd aspick's rage,
And all the fiery monsters of the desert,
To see this day?

Addison.

2. The name of a piece of ordnance, which is said to carry a twelve-pound shot; adopted from the serpent's name, like basilisk, another piece of ordnance; ancient pieces of artillery being often denominated culverins and serpentes, and the like, from the circumstance of these animals being sculptured on them.

ASPIRANT.* n. s. [Fr.] A candidate.

I require then in our young aspirant to the name and honours of an English senator, that his mind be early and thoroughly seasoned with the principles of virtue and religion. Hurd.

TO ASPIRATE. † v. a. [aspiro, Lat.] To pronounce with aspiration, or full breath; as we aspirate horse, house, and hog.

Evia, saith Clemens, if it be aspirated Hevia, signifies, in the Hebrew tongue, a female serpent: where the good man calls the Chaldean tongue, the Hebrew; for in the Hebrew I do not find such a word for a serpent. Lightfoot's Miscell. p. 160.

TO ASPIRATE. v. n. [aspiro, Lat.] To be pronounced with full breath.

Where a vowel ends a word, the next begins either with a consonant, or what is its equivalent; for our w and h aspirate. Dryden.

ASPIRATE. adj. [aspiratus, Lat.] Pronounced with full breath.

For their being pervious, you may call them, if you please, peraspirate; but yet they are not aspirate, i. e. with such an aspiration as h. Holder.

ASPIRATE.* n. s. The mark to denote an aspirated pronunciation.

We must correct then twenty authors who have it in the compound ἀσπρίον and ἀσπρίμα; and not, as the aspirate would require it, ἀσπρίον and ἀσπρίμα. Bentley to Dr. Mead.

ASPIRATION. n. s. [aspiratio, Lat.]

1. A breathing after; an ardent wish: used generally of a wish for spiritual blessings.

A soul inspired with the warmest aspirations after celestial beatitude, keeps its powers attentive. Hall.

2. The act of aspiring, or desiring something high and great.

'Tis he; I ken the manner of his gate;
He rises on his toe; that spirit of his
In aspiration lifts him from the earth.

Shakspeare.

3. The pronunciation of a vowel with full breath.

It is only a guttural aspiration, i. e. a more forcible impulse of the breath from the lungs. Holder.

TO ASPIRE. v. n. [aspiro, Lat.]

1. To desire with eagerness; to pant after something higher: sometimes with the particle to.

Most excellent lady, no expectation in others, nor hope in himself, could aspire to a higher mark, than to be thought worthy to be praised by you. Sidney.

His father's grave counsellors, by whose means he had aspired to the kingdom, he cruelly tortured. Kneller.

Hence springs that universal strong desire,

Which all men have of immortality:

Not some few spirits unto this thought aspire.

But all men's minds in this united be.

Davies.

Horace did n'er aspire to epic bays:

Nor lofty Maro stoop to lyric lays.

Roscommon.

Till then a helpless, hopeless, homely swain;

ought not freedom, nor aspir'd to gain.

Dryden.

Aspiring to be gods, if angels fell,

Aspiring to be angels, men rebel.

Pope.

Sometimes with after.

Those are raised above sense, and aspire after immortality, who believe the perpetual duration of their souls. Tillotson.

There is none of us but who would be thought, throughout the whole course of his life, to aspire after immortality.

Atterbury.

3 To rise; to tower.

There is betwixt that smile we would aspire to,

That sweet aspect of princes and our ruin,

More pangs and fears than war or women have. Shakspeare.

My own breath still foment the fire,

Which flames as high as fancy can aspire.

Waller.

TO ASPIRE.* v. a. To aspire to.

Who dare aspire this journey with a stain,

Hath weight will force him headlong back again.

Donne's Poems, p. 184.

That gallant spirit hath aspired the clouds,

Shakspeare, Rom. and Juliet.

ASPIREMENT.* n. s. [from aspire.] The act of aspiring.

The only means [light] by which each mortal eye

Sends messengers to the wide firmament;

That to the longing soul brings presently

High contemplation and deep wonderment:

By which aspiration she her wings displays.

Brewer's Lingua, 3. 6.

ASPIRER.* n. s. [from aspire.] One that ambitiously strives to be greater than he is.

They ween'd

To win the mount of God; and on his throne,

To set the envier of his state, the proud

Aspirer: but their thoughts prov'd fond and vain.

Milton.

I find not that he did put up for advancement, during Henry the Eighth's time, though a vast aspirer and provident storier.

Naunton's Fragmenta Regalia, Leicester.

ASPIRING.* n. s. [from aspire.]

1. The desire of something great.

The ambitions and aspirings of the worldling.

Hammond's Sermons.

2. With to.

Having quite lost not only all inclination and aspirings to knowledge and virtue, but likewise all courage and bravery of mind to recover their ancient freedom and honour.

Howell's Letters, ii. 57.

3. Points; stops.

Nor are those so fastidious in pyramidal aspirings, nor curious in architecture or inside glory, as in many lesser towns.

Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 211.

ASPORTATION.† n. s. [asportatio, Lat.] A carrying away.

A bare removal from the place where the thief found the goods, is a sufficient asportation or carrying away. Blackstone.

ASQUINT.† adv. [Dutch schuin. See ASKANCE.]

1. Obliquely; not in the strait line of vision.

A single guide may direct the way better than five hundred, who have contrary views, or look asquint, or shut their eyes.

Swift.

2. Figuratively, not with regard or due notice.

Thereto he answered not, but looked as it were asquint at it.

Forc's Acts, Life of Rogers.

If Herod the great had been ερωδης, or eaten up of worms, and by the judgement of God too; is it to be thought that this judgement looked asquint upon all the rest of this king's enormities, and cast a full eye only on the massacre of the children?

Gregory's Posthumus, (1650) p. 105.

Ass.† n. s. [asinus, Lat. ase, old Fr. appa, Sax.]

1. An animal of burden, remarkable for sluggishness, patience, hardness, coarseness of food, and long life.

You have among you many a purchas'd slave,
Which, like your asses, and your dogs and mules,
You use in abject and in slavish part,
Because you bought them.

Shakspeare.

2. A stupid, heavy, dull fellow; a dolt.

I do begin to perceive that I am made an ass.

Shakspeare.

That such a crafty mother
Should yield the world to this ass!—a woman that Bears all down with her brain; and yet her son Cannot take two from twenty for his heart,
And leave eighteen.

Shakspeare.

To ASSAIL. v. a. [assaillir, Fr.]

1. To attack in a hostile manner; to assault; to fall upon; to invade.

So when he saw his flatt'ring arts to fail,
With greedy force he gain'd the fort t' assail.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. To attack with argument; censure; or motives applied to the passions.

My gracious lord, here in the parliament
Let us assail the family of York.

Shakspeare.

She will not stay the siege of loving terms,
Nor bide th' encounter of assailing eyes.

Shakspeare.

How have I fear'd your fate! but fear'd it most,
When love assail'd you on the Libyan coast.

Dryden.

All books he reads, and all he reads assail'd,
From Dryden's Fables down to D—y's Tales.

Pope.

In vain Thalestris with reproach assails;
For who can move when fair Belinda fails?

Pope.

ASSAILABLE. adj. [from assail.] That which may be attacked.

Banquo, and his Fleance, lives.—

— But in them nature's copy's not eternal.—

— There's comfort yet, they are assailable.

Shakspeare.

ASSAILANT. n. s. [assaillant, Fr.] He that attacks; in opposition to defendant.

The same was so well encountered by the defendants, that the obstinacy of the assailants did but increase the loss.

Hayward.

I'll put myself in poor and mean attire,
And with a kind of umber smirch my face,
The like do you; so shall we pass along,
And never stir assailants.

Shakspeare.

ASSAILANT. adj. Attacking; invading.

And as evening dragon came,
Assailant on the perched roosts
Of tame villatick fowl.

Milton.

ASSAILER. n. s. [from assail.] One who attacks another.

Balladius heated, so pursued our assailers, that one of them slew him.

Sidney.

ASSAILMENT.† n. s. [from assail.] Attack.

His most frequent assailment was the head-ache.

Johnson, Life of Pope.

ASSAINEE NICK. n. s. A little animal of Virginia, which issaid to fly by stretching out its shoulders and its skin, and is called in English the flying squirrel. Trevoux.

ASSART.† n. s. [essart, from essarter, Fr. to clear away wood in a forest.] An offence committed in the forest, by plucking up those woods by the roots, that are thickets or coverts of the forest, and by making them as plain as arable land.

Corvel.

Freedom from assart is an exemption from a fine or penalty for so doing.

Burn's Hist. of Westm. and Cumb. Gloss.

To ASSART.† v. a. [essartir, Fr. according to Dr. Johnson. Others deduce it from exaratum, contracted into exartum, which signifies to plow or cut up; and others from exertum, which means to pull up by the roots. V. Archæologia, vol. 15. p. 216.]

To commit an assart; one of the greatest offences cognizable by the laws of the forest; and simply, to grub up.

The king granted to him free chase, and free warren, in all those his lands, &c. and also power to assart his lands.

Ashmole's Berkshire, ii. 425.

ASSASSIN.† } n. s. [assassin, Fr. a word brought originally from Asia, where, about the time of the holy war, there was a set of men called assassins, as is supposed for Arsacide, who killed any man without regard to danger, at the command of their chief. Such is Dr. Johnson's etymology of assassin. Some have thought it taken from the Assacani, a people mentioned by Arrian, lib. iv. The Abbé Vertot inclines to the derivation of it from the Persian word hassissin, a poniard used in private murders. Lacombe interprets assassins by the Lat. sicarii, from sica, a poniard. So it is recorded by Matthew of Paris respecting their chief, "si quos habuit principes odiosos, aut genti suæ suspectos, datâ uni de suis sichâ, vel pluribus, non considerato rei exitu, vel quæ eis pœna sequatur, illuc contendunt, quibus mandatum est; et tam diu pro complendo imperio anxii circumeunt et laborant, quousque peragant sibi homicidium commissum. Hos tam Saraceni, quàm Christiani, assassinos appellant, etymologiam ignorant." Roquefort exhibits them under the name of hakesins, haacains, héissesins, which Sainte-Palaye and Mouchet derive, he says, from occidentes, that is, slayers, murderers. V. Gloss. de la Lang. Rom. Lord Bacon, in a charge in the King's Bench, refers to "the Saracen prince, of whom the name of the assassins is derived;" where he means perhaps simply, not etymologically, the petty prince at the head of them, who was called the old man of the mountain.] A murderer; one that kills by treachery, or sudden violence.

In the very moment as the knight withdrew from the duke, this assassin gave him, with a back blow, a deep wound into his left side.

Wotton.

The Syrian king, who, to surprize
One man, assassin like, had levy'd war,
War unproclaim'd.

Milton.

The old king is just murdered, and the person that did it is unknown.—Let the soldiers seize him for one of the assassins, and let me alone to accuse him afterwards.

Dryden.

Here hir'd assassins for their gain invade,
And treacherous poisoners urge their fatal trade.

Creech.

When she hears of a murder, she enlarges more on the guilt to the suffering person, than of the assassin.

Addison.

Orestes brandish'd the revenging sword,
Slew the dire pair, and gave to funeral flame
The vile assassin, and adult'rous dame.

Pope.

Useful, we grant, it serves what life requires,
But dreadful too, the dark assassin hires. Pope.

To ASSA'SSIN.* v. a. [Fr. assassiner.] To murder.

Can God be as well-pleased with him that *assassin*s his parents, as with him that obeys them. Stillingfleet's Sermon, p. 502.
ASSA'SSINACY.* n. s. [from assassin.] The act of assassinating.

This spiritual assassination, this deepest die of blood being most satanically designed on souls. Hammond's Sermon.

ASSA'SSINATE.* v. n. s. [Fr. assassinat.]

1. The crime of an assassin; murder.

For which his temper'd zeal, see Providence
Flying in here, and arms him with defence
Against the assassinate made upon his life
By a foul wretch. B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

Were not all assassinates and popular insurrections wrongfully chastised, if the meanness of the offenders indemnified them from punishment? Pope.

2. A murderer. See ASSASSIN.

To ASSA'SSINATE.* v. a. [from assassin.]

1. To murder by violence; to destroy.

Help, neighbours, my house is broken open by force, and I am ravished, and like to be assassinated. Dryden.

What could provoke thy madness
To assassinate so great, so brave a man! Philips.

The incorporating
Of these same outward things into that part,
Which we call mental, leaves some certain faces
That stop the organs, and, as Plato says, Assassinates our knowledge. B. Jonson, For.

2. To way-lay; to take by treachery. This meaning is perhaps peculiar to Milton.

Such usage as your honourable lords
Afford me, assassinated and betrayed,
Who durst not, with your whole united pow'rs,
In fight withstand one single and unarm'd. Milton.

To ASSA'SSINATE.* v. n. To murder.

You who those ways fear'd of late,
Where now no thieves assassinate.
Sundys, Paraphrase of Sacred Songs, Judges v.

ASSA'SSINATION. n. s. [from assassinate.] The act of assassinating; murder by violence.

It were done quickly, if th' assassination
Could trammel up the consequence. Shakspeare.

The duke finish'd his course by a wicked assassination.
Clarendon.

ASSA'SSINATOR. n. s. [from assassinate.] Murderer;
mankiller; the person that kills another by violence.

ASSA'SSINOUS.* adj. [from assassin.] Murderous.
Cockram.

ASSA'TION.* v. n. s. [Fr. assation, a roasting, from the Lat. assatus.] Roasting.

The egg expiring less in the elixation or boiling; whereas, & in the assation or roasting, it will sometimes abate a drachm. &
Brown, Vulg. Err.

Assation is a concoction of the inward moisture by heat.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 21.

ASSA'ULT. n. s. [assault, Fr.]

1. Attack; hostile onset; opposed to defence.

Her spirit had been invincible against all assaults of affection.
Shakspeare.

Not to be shook thyself, but all assaults,
Baffling, like thy hoar cliffs the loud sea wave. Thomson.

2. Storm: opposed to sap or siege.

Jason took at least a thousand men, and suddenly made an assault upon the city. 2 Macc. v. 5.

After some days siege, he resolved to try the fortune of an assault: he succeeded therein so far, that he had taken the principal tower and fort. Bacon.

3. Hostile violence.

Themselves at discord fell,
And cruel combat join'd in middle space,
With horrible assault, and fury fell. Spenser, F. Q.

4. Invasion; hostility; attack.

After some unhappy assaults upon the prerogative by the parliament, which produced its dissolution, there followed a composure. Clarendon.

Theories built upon narrow foundations, are very hard to be supported against the assaults of opposition. Locke.

5. In law. A violent kind of injury offered to a man's person. It may be committed by offering of a blow, or by a fearful speech. Corvel.

6. It has upon before the thing assaulted.

To ASSA'ULT. v. a. [from the noun.] To attack; to invade; to fall upon with violence.

The king granted the Jews to gather themselves together, and to stand for their life, to destroy all the power that would assault them. Esth. viii. 11.

Before the gates the cries of babes new-born,
Whom fate had from their tender mothers torn,
Assault his ears. Dryden.

New cursed steel, and more accursed gold,
Gave mischief birth, and made that mischief hold:
And double death did wretched man invade,
By steel assaulted, and by gold betray'd. Dryden.

ASSA'ULTABLE.* adj. [from assault.] Capable of assault.

A breach, be it made never so assaultable, having many hands to defend it with any valour, lightly is never entered.

Sir Roger Williams, Actions of the Low Countries, p. 106.

ASSA'ULTER. n. s. [from assault.] One who violently assaults another.

Neither liking their eloquence, nor fearing their might, we esteemed few swords in a just defence, able to resist many unjust assaulters. Sidney.

ASSAY.* v. n. s. [essaye, Fr. from which the ancient writers borrowed assay, according to the sound, and the latter, essay, according to the writing; but the senses now differing, they may be considered as two words. This is Dr. Johnson's observation.

But the word is certainly from the old Fr. substantive assai, which means the same as essai.]

1. Examination; trial.

This cannot be
By no assay of reason. 'Tis a pageant,
To keep us in false gaze. Shakspeare.

2. In law. The examination of measures and weights used by the clerk of the market. Corvel.

3. The first entrance upon any thing; a taste for trial.

For well he weened, that so glorious bait
Would tempt his guest to take thereof assay. Spenser, F. Q.

4. Trial by danger or distress; difficulty; hardship.

She heard with patience all unto the end,
And strove to master sorrowful assay. Spenser, F. Q.

The men he prest but late,
To hard assays unfit, unsure at need,
Yet arm'd to point in well attempted plate. Fairfax.

Be sure to find,
What I foretel thee, many a hard assay
Of dangers, and adversities, and pains,
Ere thou of Israel's sceptre get fast hold. Milton.

5. Value.

She saw bestowed all with rich array
Of pearls and precious stones of great assay. Spenser.

To ASSA'Y.* v. a. [old Fr. assai.]

1. To make trial of; to make experiment of.

One that to bounty never cast his mind,
Ne thought of honour ever did assay
His baser breast. Spenser.

Gray and Bryan obtained leave of the general a little to assay them; and so with some horsemen charged them home.

Hayward.

What unweighed behaviour hath this drunkard picked out of my conversation, that he dares in this manner assay me? Shakspeare.

2. To apply to, as the touchstone in assaying metals.

B A U

No, I shan't envy him, who'er he be,
That stands upon the battlements of state;
I'd rather be secure than great.
The weighty matter demands surrounding blows,
Till the proud battlements her towers inclose.

BA'TLEMENTED.* part. adj. [from battlement.]
Secured by battlements.

So broad [the wall of Babylon] that six chariots could well drive together at the top, and so battlemented that they could not fall.

BA'TTLING.* n. s. [from battle.] Conflict; encounter; battle.

The livid Fury spread —
She blaz'd in omens, swell'd the groaning winds
With wild surmises, battlings, sounds of war.

Thomson, Liberty, p. 4.

BATTO'LOGIST.* n. s. [from battology, Fr. battalogue, "auteur ennuyeux et insipide," Lacombe.] One who repeats the same thing in speaking or writing.
Should a truly dull battologist, that is of Ausonius's character, quam paucis, quam diu loquuntur Attici? that an hour by the glass speaketh nothing; should such a one, I say, and a deserving eminent preacher, change sermons; people would not only come thicker, but return satisfied.

Whitlock's Manners of the English, p. 209.

To BATTO'LOGIZE.* v. a. [from battology.] To repeat needlessly the same thing.

After the eastern mode, they wagged their bodies, howing their heads, and battologizing the names Allough whoddaw and Mahumet very often.

Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 191.

After they have battologized Lila y-lala, or Hilula, i. e. praises, they iterate another [prayer].

Ibid, p. 324.

BATTOLOGY.* n. s. [Fr. battologie, from the Gr.
βαττολογία which means "to do as Battus did, and which is described by Suidas in these words βαττολογία ἡ Πολλολογία, battology is multiplying of words, &c. ἀπὸ Βάττε, κ. τ. λ. taken from one Battus, who made long hymns, consisting of many lines, full of tauto-logies." Hammond on S. Matt. vi. 7.] This is an old English substantive, which Bullokar defines the "often repeating one and the same thing."

That heathenish battology of multiplying words.

Milton, Animado. Rem. Defence.

BA'TTY. adj. [from bat.] Belonging to a bat.

Till o'er their brows death counterfeiting sleep,

With leaden legs and batty wings doth creep.

Shakspeare.

BA'VAROY.† n. s. [probably from a Bavarian fashion of dress, Bavarois, Fr.] A kind of cloak, or surtout.

Let the loop'd bavarois the fop embrace,

Of his deep cloke be spatter'd o'er with lace.

Gay.

BAUBE'E.† n. s. A word used in Scotland, and the northern counties, for a halfpenny. This coin, bearing the head of James the Sixth, king of Scotland, when young, has been supposed by some to have been therefore called baubee, as exhibiting the
a great mistake; the name, as well as the coin, being known before that prince's reign. Mr. Pinkerton derives it from the Fr. bas-billon. "The billon coin worth six pennies Scottish, and called bas-pièce, from the first questionable shape in which it appeared, being of what the French called bas-billon, or the worst kind of billon, was now [in the reign of James VI.] struck in copper, and termed by the Scottish pronunciation, bawbee." Essay on Medals, vol. 2. p. 109.

Though in the drawers of my japan bureau,

To lady Gripeall I the Caesars show,

'Tis equal to her ladyship or me

A copper Otho, or a Scotch baubee.

Bramston's Man of Taste.

BA'UBLE. See BAUBLE.

BA'VIN.† n. s. [of uncertain derivation, Dr. Johnson says. Some have referred to it the Fr. fevin, (a word which I find nowhere,) from feu, fire. Bavin or faggot is rendered by the Fr. foilage, and foilles are the smallest sort of bavins. V. Cotgrave.
Bavin, Dr. Johnson has elsewhere observed, means brushwood, which, fired, burns fiercely, but is soon out. In Florio's Ital. Dict. (1591) it is clearly a little faggot: "There is no fire: — make a little blaze with a bavin." In the Kentish dialect, bavin is a brush, a faggot.] A stick like those bound up in faggots; a piece of waste wood.

He rambled up and down

With shallow jesters and rash bavin wits,

Soon kindled, and soon burnt.

Shakspeare, Henry IV.

For moulded to the life in clouts,

Th' have pick'd from dunghills thereabouts,

He's mounted on a hazel bavin,

A cropp'd malignant baker gave him.

Hudibras.

The truncheons make billet, bavin, and coals.

Mortimer.

To BAULK. See BALK.

BA'WBLE.† n. s. [Baubellum, in barbarous Latin, signified a jewel, or any thing valuable, but not necessary. Omnia baubella sua dedit Othoni, Hoveden. Probably from beau, Fr. Such is Dr.
Johnson's etymology. The word may also be traced to the old Fr. baubêlo, babiole, a plaything. Ital. babbolo. Bauble is now mostly used, and rightly, according to the derivation. It was formerly written babble, so late indeed as by Bp.
Bramhall.] A gew-gaw; a trifling piece of finery;
a thing of more show than use; a trifle. It is in general, whether applied to persons or things, a term of contempt, Dr. Johnson says. 'This, I may add, was doubtless occasioned by the word being, in ancient times, commonly coupled with a licensed jester, a fool; the bauble being a little truncheon, with a head carved on it, which such an one usually carried in his hand, as the mock ensign of his office; in which sense the sour protector of England, Oliver Cromwell, absurdly called the speaker's mace, as Blackstone also has observed, a "fool's bauble," when he forcibly turned out the rump-parliament, and bade the soldiers take away this object of his absurd acrimony.

The kynges foolc

Here is a contradiction deserves a bell and a bauble.

Bp. Bramhall, Schism guarded, (1658) p. 373.

A lady's watch needs neither figures nor wheels;

'Tis enough that 'tis loaded with baubles and seals.

Prior,

Our author then, to please you in your way,

Presents you now a bauble of a play,

In glingling rhyme.

Granville.

A prince, the moment he is crown'd,

Inherits every virtue round,

As emblems of the sovereign power;

Like other baubles of the Tower.

Swift.

BA'WBLING. adj. [from bauble.] Trifling; contemptible: a word not now in use.

A baubling vessel was he captain of,
For shallow draught and bulk unprizable;
With which such scuffling grapple did he make
With the most noble bottom of our fleet.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

BA'WCOCK. n. s. [perhaps from beau, or baude, and cock.] A familiar word, which seems to signify the same as fine fellow.

Why, how now, my bawcock? how dost thou, chuck?

Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.

BAWD. † n. s. [baude, old Fr. Dr. Johnson says. But here the Welsh baw, dirt, barwai dirty, whence barwddyn, a base or dirty fellow, is derived, must not be omitted. Chaucer and our elder writers use bawdy and bawd in the sense of filthy, naughty. Hence the application to the infamous character which our word denotes. See To BAWD, and BAWDY.] A procurer, or procuress; one that introduces men and women to each other, for the promotion of debauchery.

He [Pandarus] is named Troilus' bawd;

Of that name he is sure,

Whiles the world shall dure. Skelton's Poems, p. 235.

If your worship will take order for the drabs and the knaves, you need not to fear the bawds. Shakespeare.

This commodity,

This bawd, this broker, this all changing word,
Hath drawn him from his own determin'd aid. Shakespeare.

Our author calls colouring lena sororis, the bawd of her sister design; she dresses her up, she paints her, she procures for the design, and makes lovers for her. Dryden.

To BAWD.* v. a. [from bawd.] To foul; to dirty.

Her shoone smered with tallow

Gresed upon dyrt,

That baudeth her skyrt. Skelton's Poems, p. 126.

To BAWD. v. n. [from the noun.] To procure; to provide gallants with strumpets.

Leucippe is agent for the king's lust, and bawds, at the same time, for the whole court. Spectator, No. 266.

And in four months a batter'd harridan;
Now nothing's left, but wither'd, pale, and shrunk,
To bawd for others, and go shares with punk. Swift.

BA'WBORN.* part. adj. [from bawd and born.]

Descended of a bawd.

Bawd is he, doubtless; and of antiquity too; bawd-born.

Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

BA'WDILY. adv. [from bawdy.] Obscenely.

BA'WDINESS. † n. s. [from bawd; and defined by our old lexicographers, though unnoticed by Dr. Johnson, "greasiness, or filthiness, of apparel or body." V. Barret's Alv. and Bullokar's Expos. of Hard Words.] We now use it only in the sense of obscenity or lewdness.

BA'WDRICK. n. s. [See BALDRICK.] A belt.

Fresh garlands too, the virgins temples crown'd;

The youths gilt swords wore at their thighs, with silver bawdricks bound. Chapman's Iliad.

BA'WDRY. † n. s. [contracted from bawdery, the practice of a bawd; Dr. Johnson says; but it was formerly written and pronounced with three syllables.

1. A wicked practice of procuring and bringing whores and rogues together. Ayliffe.

Cheating and bawdry go together in the world. L' Etrange.

Obscenity; unchaste language.

Rhymed in rules of stewish ribaldry,

Teaching experimental bawdery. Bp. Hall's Satires, i. 9.

Pr'ythee say on; he's for a jig or a tale of bawdry, or he sleeps. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

I have no salt: no bawdry doth mean:

For witty, in his language, is obscene.

Ben Jonson.

It is most certain, that barefaced bawdry is the poorest pretence to wit imaginable. Dryden.

BAWDY. adj. [from bawd.]

1. Filthy; dirty; agreeably to its derivation.

BAWD.

His overest sloppe it is not worth a mite

As in effect to him, so mote I go;

It is all bawdy, and to-tore all-o.

Why is thy lord so sluttish, I thee preye,

And is of power better cloth to buye?

Chaucer, Chan. Ycoman's Prolog.

And in a tawny tabard, of twelve winter age,

All torn and bawdy.

Vision of Piers Plowman.

2. Obscene; unchaste: generally applied to language.

The bawdy wind that kisses all it meets,

Is hush'd within the hollow mine of earth,

And will not hear't.

Shakespeare, Othello.

Only they,

That come to hear a merry bawdy play,

Will be deceiv'd.

Shakespeare.

Not one poor bawdy jest shall dare appear;

For now the batter'd veteran strumpets here

Pretend at least to bring a modest ear.

Southey.

BA'WDY-HOUSE. n. s. A house where traffick is made by wickedness and debauchery.

Has the pope lately shut up the bawdy-houses, or does he continue to lay a tax upon sin?

Dennis.

To BAWL. † v. n. [balo, Lat. according to Dr. Johnson. It has probably been adopted by us from the old Fr. baula, to cry for help. Similar also is the Icelandic baela, baula, and the Germ. bellen, to roar.]

1. To hoot; to cry with great vehemence, whether for joy or pain. A word always used in contempt.

They bawl for freedom in their senseless mood,

And still revolt, when truth would set them free.

Milton.

To cry the cause up heretofore,

And bawl the bishops out of door.

Hindibras.

Through the thick shades th' eternal scribbler bawls,

And shakes the statues on their pedestals.

Dryden.

From his lov'd home no lucre him can draw;

The senate's mad decrees he never saw;

Nor heard at bawling bars corrupted law.

Dryden.

Loud menaces were heard, and foul disgrace

And bawling infamy, in language base,

Till sense was lost in sound, and silence fled the place.

Dryden, Fables.

So on the tuneful Margarita's tongue

The list'ning nymphs, and ravis'd heroes hung;

But cits and fops the heav'n-born musick blame,

And bawl, and hiss, and damn her into fame.

Smith.

I have a face of orderly elderly people, who can bawl when I am deaf, and tread softly when I am only giddy and would sleep. Swift.

2. To cry as a froward child.

A little chuld was bawling, and a woman chiding it.

L' Etrange.

If they were never suffered to have what they cried for, they would never, with bawling and peevishness, contend for mastery.

Locke.

My husband took him in, a dirty boy; it was the business of the servants to attend him, the rogue did bawl and make such a noise. Arbuthnot, History of John Bull.

To BAWL. v. a. To proclaim as a crier.

It grieved me, when I saw labours which had cost so much, bawled about by common hawkers.

Swift.

BAWN.* n. s. In Ireland, a bawn is said to be a place near the house, inclosed with mud or stone-walls, to keep the cattle from being stolen in the night. See the note on Swift's poem "whether Hamilton's bawn should be turned into a barrack or a malt-house." But originally, it seems to be an inclosure of a different kind; a fortification.

These round hills, and square bawnes, which you see so strongly trenched and throwne up, were (they say) at first ordained for the same purpose, that people might assemble themselves therein, and therefore anciently they were called folk-motes; baie is a place of people, to meete, or talke of any thing that concerned any difference betweene parties and towneships. Spenser on Ireland.

BA'WREL. n. s. A kind of hawk.

BA'WSIN. † n. s. In old English, a badger. In the passage of Drayton, which I cite for the illustration of this word, the late Bishop Percy preferred the interpretation of bazane, Fr. meaning sheep's leather, dressed and coloured red. But there can be no occasion to alter the meaning of badger's skin; which certainly was in use for apparel, as appears in our translation of the Bible, Ezek. xvi. 10. "I clothed thee also with broidered work, and shod thee with badger's-skin." A badger. Dict.

His mittens were of bausen's skinn.

Drayton's Dowsabell, (1593,) st. 10.

Why scorn you me?

Because I am a herdsman, and feed swine! —

I am a lord of other geer! this fine

Smooth bawson's cub, the young g'rice of a gray.

B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd, ii. 2.

BAY. † adj. [adius, Lat. baye, bai, rouge-brun, old Fr. baio, Ital.] A bay horse is what is inclining to a chesnut; and this colour is various, either a light bay or a dark bay, according as it is less or more deep. There are also coloured horses, that are called dappled bays. All bay horses are commonly called brown by the common people. "All bay horses have black manes, which distinguish them from the sorrel, that have red or white manes. There are light bays and gilded bays, which are somewhat of a yellowish colour. The chesnut bay is that which comes nearest to the colour of the chesnut." Farrier's Dict.

My lord, you gave good words the other day of a bay courser I rode on. 'Tis yours because you liked it.

Shakspeare.

Poor Tom! proud of heart, to ride on a bay trotting horse over four inch'd bridges.

Shakspeare.

His colour'd grey,

For beauty dappled, or the brightest bay.

Dryden.

BAY. † n. s. [baye, Dutch, according to Dr. Johnson; but it is rather from the Sax. bygan, to bend; a bay being incurvated, as it were, like a bow.]

1. An opening into the land, where the water is shut in on all sides, except at the entrance.

A reverend Syracusan merchant,

Who put unluckily into this bay.

Shakspeare.

We have also some works in the midst of the sea, and some bays upon the shore for some works, wherein is required the air and vapour of the sea.

Bacon.

Hail, sacred solitude! from this calm bay

I view the world's tempestuous sea.

Roscommon.

Here in a royal bed the waters sleep,

When tir'd at sea, within this bay they creep.

Dryden.

Some of you have bay.

Dryden.

2. A pen or pond-head raised to keep in store of water for driving a mill.

BAY. n. s. [aboi, Fr. signifies the last extremity; as, Innocence est aux abois, Boileau: Innocence is in the most distress. It is taken from aboi, the barking of a dog at hand, and thence signifies the condition of a stag when the hounds were almost upon him.]

1. The state of any thing surrounded by enemies, and obliged to face them by an impossibility of escape.

This ship for fifteen hours, sat like a stag among hounds at the bay, and was sieged and fought with, in turn, by fifteen great ships.

Bacon, War with Spain.

Fair liberty, pursu'd and meant a prey.

To lawless power, here turn'd, and stood at bay.

Denham.

Nor flight was left, nor hopes to force his way;

Embolden'd by despair, he stood at bay;

Resolv'd on death, he dissipates his fears,

And bounds aloft against the pointed spears.

Dryden.

2. Some writers, perhaps mistaking the meaning, have used bay as referred to the assailant, for distance beyond which no approach could be made.

All, fir'd with noble emulation, strive;

And, with a storm of darts, to distance drive

The Trojan chief; who held at bay, from far

On his Vulcanian orb, sustain'd the war.

Dryden.

We have now, for ten years together, turned the whole force and expence of the war, where the enemy was best able to hold us at a bay.

Swift.

BAY. † n. s. [Germ. bau.]

1. In architecture, a term used to signify the magnitude of a building; as if a barn consists of a floor and two heads, where they lay corn, they call it a barn of two bays. These bays are from fourteen to twenty feet long, and floors, from ten to twelve broad, and usually twenty feet long, which is the breadth of the barn.

Builder's Dict.

If this law hold in Vienna ten years, I'll rent the fairest house in it after threepence a bay.

Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

There may be kept one thousand bushels in each bay, there being sixteen bays, each eighteen feet long, about seventeen wide, or three hundred square feet in each bay.

Mortimer.

2. In building also, used to signify any kind of opening in walls; as a door, window, or even chimney.

Chambers.

BAY Tree. † [laurus, Lat.] The tree, as is generally thought, which is translated laurel, and of which honorary garlands were anciently made.

I have seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like a green bay tree.

Psal. xxxvii. 35.

Like thunder 'gainst the bay,

Whose lightning may enclose but never stay

Upon his charmed branches.

Fletcher, Faith. Shepherdess.

BAY. † n. s.

1. A poetical name for an honorary crown or garland, bestowed as a prize for any kind of victory or excellence.

I — play'd to please myself, on rustick reed,
Nor sought for bay, the learned shepherd's meed.

Brown, Brit. Poet. 1.

Beneath his reign shall Eusden wear the bays.

Pope.

2. Figuratively, learning itself.

Strife arose betwixt them, whether they

Her beauty should extol, or she admire their bay.

Drayton, Polyolbion, S. 15.

To BAY. v. n. [abbayer, Fr.]

1. To bark as a dog at a thief, or at the game which he pursues.

And all the while she stood upon the ground,

The wakeful dogs did never cease to bay.

Spenser, F. Q.

The hounds at nearer distance hoarsely bay'd;

The hunter close pursu'd the visionary maid;

She rent the heaven with loud laments, imploring aid.

Dryden, Fab.

B E A

All th' impossibilities which poets
Count to extravagance of loose description,
Shall sooner be.

Rowe.

To be contents his natural desire;
He asks no angel's wing, nor seraph's fire.

Pope.

4. To have something by appointment or rule.

If all political power be derived only from Adam, and be to descend only to his successive heirs, by the ordinance of God, and divine institution, this is a right antecedent and paramount to all government.

Locke.

5. Let BE. Do not meddle with; leave untouched.

Let be, said he, my prey.

Dryden.

BE.* Used, in our old language, for the preposition by, and also for the participle been.

BE.* Much used in composition; as, bespeak, befall, become; which is agreeable to the Saxon manner, be, as well as for, at, and to, being often prefixed to Saxon words, especially verbs and participles of the past time.

BE-ALL.* n. s. [from be and all.] All that is to be done.

If the assassination
Could trammel up the consequence, and catch,
With his surcease, success; that but this blow
Might be the be-all and the end-all here.

Shakspeare, Mach. i. 7.

BEACH.* n. s. [Dr. Johnson offers no etymology. Serenius gives the Goth. backar, signifying the same as beach.] The shore; particularly that part that is dashed by the waves; the strand.

The fishermen, that walk upon the beach,
Appear like mice,

Deep to the rocks of hell, the gather'd beach
They fastened, and the mole immense wrought on,
Over the foaming deep.

Milton, P. L.

They find the washed amber further out upon the beaches and shores, where it has been longer exposed.

Woodward.

BE'ACHED. adj. [from beach.] Exposed to the waves.

Timon hath made his everlasting mansion
Upon the beached verge of the salt flood;
Which once a day, with his embossed froth,
The turbulent surge shall cover.

Shakspeare.

BE'ACHY. adj. [from beach.] Having beaches.

The beachy girdle of the ocean
Too wide for Neptune's hips.

Shakspeare.

BE'ACON. n. s. [beacen, Sax. from beon, a signal, and beanian, whence beckon, to make a signal.]

1. Something raised on an eminence, to be fired on the approach of an enemy, to alarm the country.

His blazing eyes, like two bright shining shields,
Did burn with wrath, and sparkled living fire;
As two broad beacons set in open fields,

Send forth their flames.

Spenser, F. Q.

Modest doubt is called

The beacon of the wise.

Shakspeare.

The king seemed to account of Perkin as a May-game; yet had given order for the watching of beacons upon the coasts, and erecting more where they stood too thin.

Bacon.

No flaming beacons cast their blaze afar,
The dreadful signal of invasive war.

Gay.

2. Marks erected, or lights made in the night, to direct navigators in their courses, and warn them from rocks, shallows, and sand-banks.

BE'ACONAGE.* n. s. Money paid for the maintaining of beacons.

Minshew.

A suit for beaconage of a beacon standing on a rock in the sea may be brought in the court of admiralty.

Blackstone.

BE'ACONED.* adj. [from beacon.] Having a beacon.

O'er the broad downs, a novel race,
The lambs with faltering pace,
Their eager bleatings fill

The beacon that skirts the beacon'd hill.

T. Warton, Ode

B E A

BEAD.* n. s. [bebe, prayer, Saxon, from the Goth. bida.]

1. Small globes or balls of glass or pearl, or other substance, strung upon a thread, and used by the Romanists to count their prayers; from whence the phrase to tell beads, or to be at one's beads, is to be at prayer, Dr. Johnson says: but the old expression, which also continued long in use, was to bid their beads. And the primary meaning of bead, i. e. prayer, is noted in our oldest dictionaries, without any references to the balls of glass.

Beware therefore, and bid thy beads,

And do nothing in holy churchie,
But that thou might by reason worche.

Gower, Conf. Am. b. 3.

Saying over a number of beads not understood or minded on.

Injunctions to the Clergy, (1541.)

That aged dame, the lady of the place,
Who all this while was busy at her beads.

Spenser, F. Q.

Thy voice I seem'd in every hymn to hear,

With every bead I drop too soft a tear.

Pope.

2. Little balls worn about the neck for ornament.

With scarfs and fans, and double charge of brav'ry,
With amber bracelets, beads, and all such knavery.

Shakspeare.

3. Any globular bodies.

Thy spirit within thee hath been so at war,
That beads of sweat have stood upon thy brow.

Shakspeare.

Several yellow lumps of amber, almost like beads, with one side flat, had fastened themselves to the bottom.

Boyle.

BEAD Tree. [Azedarach.] A plant.

BE'ADLF.* n. s. býdel, bardel, Sax. a messenger; badel, old Fr. bedel, Sp. bedela, Basque; bedelle, Dutch. Often written bedel.]

1. A messenger or servitor belonging to a court, or publick body. In the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge they are academical officers, and are distinguished as esquire and yeomen beadles.

If the university would bring in some bachelors of Art to be yeomen-beadles, which are well grounded, and towards to serve that press as composers:—they, which thrived well and did good service, might after be preferred to be esquire-beadles; and so that press would ever train up able men for itself.

Ahp. Land, Hist. of his Chan. at Ox. p. 132.

He procured an addition of 20*l.* per annum to each of the inferior beadles; he restored the practice of the vice-chancellor's court; and added several other improvements in the academical economy.

Warton, Life of Bathurst, p. 89.

2. A petty officer in parishes, whose business it is to punish petty offenders.

A dog's obey'd in office.

Thou rascal beadle, hold thy bloody hand!

Why dost thou lash that whore?

Shakspeare.

They ought to be taken care of in this condition, either by the beadle or the magistrate.

Speaker.

Their common loves, a lewd abandon'd pack,

The beadle's lash still flagrant on their back.

Prior.

BE'ADLESHIP.* n. s. [from beadle.] The office of a beadle.

There was convocation for the election of his successor in the beadleship.

A. Wood, Ath. Ox. Fast. ii. 274.

BE'ADROLL.* n. s. [from bead and roll.] A catalogue of those who are to be mentioned at prayers; a list, simply.

The king, for the better credit of his espials abroad, did use to have them cursed by name amongst the beadroll of the king's enemies.

Bacon, Henry VII.

So, in the high descent of that South-Saxon king,

We, in the bead-roll here of our religious, bring

Wise Ethelwald.

Drayton's Polyolbion, S. 11.

He left me out of the bead-roll of some riming paper-blotters that he called poets.

Flarington, Br. View of the Church, p. 168.

Through what fairy land, would the man deduce this perpetual beadroll of uncontradicted episcopacy?

Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

B E A

BE'ADSMAN. n. s. [from bead and man.] A man employed in praying generally in praying for another.

*And his hospital,
In which seven beadsmen had vowed all
Their life to service of the heaven's king.* Spenser, F. Q.

*Commend thy grievance to my holy prayer;
For I will be thy beadsman, Valentine.* Shakespeare.

BE'ADSWOMAN. n. s. [from bead and woman.] A woman who prays for, or thanks, another.

*'Twas such a bounty
And honour due to your beadswoman,
I know not how to owe it, but to thank you.*
B. Jonson, Sad Shep. ii. 6.

BE'AGLE. n. s. [bagle, Fr.] A small hound with which hares are hunted.

*The rest were various huntings.
The graceful goddess was array'd in green;
About her feet were little beagles seen,
That watch'd with upward eyes the motions of their queen.* Dryden, Fables.

*To plains with well-bred beagles we repair,
And trace the mazes of the circling hare.* Pope.

BEAK. n. s. [bec, Fr. pig, Welsh; beg, Bret. beik, beck, Dutch.]

1. The bill or horny mouth of a bird.

*His royal bird
Prunes the immortal wing, and cloyes his beak,
As when his god is pleas'd.* Shakespeare, Cymbeline.
*He saw the ravens with their horny beaks
Food to Elijah bringing.* Milton, P. R.

*The magpie, lighting on the stock,
Stood chatt'ring with incessant din,
And with her beak gave many a knock.* Swift.

2. A piece of brass like a beak, fixed at the end of the ancient galleys, with which they pierced their enemies. It can now be used only for the fore-part of a ship.

*With boiling pitch another, near at hand,
From friendly Sweden brought, the seams instops;
Which well laid o'er, the salt sea waves withstand,
And shakes them from the rising beak in drops.* Dryden.

3. A beak is a little shoe, at the toe about an inch long, turned up and fastened in upon the fore-part of the hoof. Farrier's Dict.

4. Any thing ending in a point like a beak; as the spout of a cup; a prominence of land.

Cuddenbeak, from a well advanced promontory, which entitled it beak, taketh a prospect of the river. Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

BE'AKED. adj. [Fr. becqué. A term also in heraldry.] Having a beak; having the form of a beak.

*And question'd every gust of rugged winds,
That blows from off each beaked promontory.* Milton.

BE'AKER. n. s. [Dr. Johnson derives this word from ak, and defines it, "a cup with a spout in the form of a bird's beak." Both his etymology and definition are incorrect. Our word is the Germ. becher, a cup; Ital. bicchiere; low Lat. baccharium, fancifully derived from Bacchus. V. Du Cange. Bicker, in the Northumb. dialect, is a quart vessel, about two inches and a half deep, made with small staves or hoops.] A vessel for drink; a flagon.

*And into pikes and musqueteers,
Stamp beakers, cups and porringers.* Bulter, Hudibras.

*With dulcet beverage this the beaker crown'd,
Fair in the midst, with gilded cups around.* Pope, Odyssey.

BEAL. n. s. [bolga, Goth. bolla, Ital.] A whelk or pimple.

B E A

To BEAL. v. a. [from the noun.] To ripen; to gather matter, or come to a head, as a sore does.

Shewood.

BEAM. n. s. [bagme, Goth. beam, Sax. a tree.]

1. The main piece of timber that supports the house.

A beam is the largest piece of wood in a building, which always lies cross the building, or the walls, serving to support the principal rafters of the roof, and into which the feet of the principal rafters are framed. No building has less than two beams, one at each head. Into these, the girders of the garret floor are also framed; and if the building be of timber, the razel-tenons of the posts are framed. The proportions of beams in or near London, are fixed by act of parliament. A beam fifteen feet long, must be seven inches on one side its square, and five on the other; if it be sixteen feet long, one side must be eight inches, the other six; and so proportionable to their lengths. Builder's Dict.

The building of living creatures is like the building of a timber house; the walls and other parts have columns and beams, but the roof is tile, or lead, or stone. Bacon.

*He heav'd, with more than human force, to move
A weighty stone, the labour of a team,
And rais'd from thence he reach'd the neighb'ring beam.* Dryden.

2. Any large and long piece of timber: a beam must have more length than thickness, by which it is distinguished from a block.

*But Lycus, swifter,
Springs to the walls and leaves his foes behind,
And snatches at the beam he first can find.* Dryden, Æneid.

3. That part of a balance, at the ends of which the scales are suspended.

*Poise the cause in justice' equal scales,
Whose beam stands sure, whose rightful cause prevails.* Shakespeare.

If the length of the sides in the balance, and the weights at the ends be both equal, the beam will be in horizontal situation: but if either the weights alone be equal, or the distances alone, the beam will accordingly decline. Wilkins.

4. The horn of a stag.

*And taught the woods to echo to the stream
His dreadful challenge, and his clashing beam.* Denham.

5. The pole of a chariot; that piece of wood which runs between the horses.

*Juturna heard, and seiz'd with mortal fear,
Forc'd from the beam her brother's charioteer.* Dryden.

6. Among weavers, a cylindrical piece of wood belonging to the loom, on which the web is gradually rolled as it is wove.

The staff of his spear was like a weaver's beam. 1 Sam. xvii. 7.

7. BEAM of an Anchor. The straight part or shank of an anchor, to which the hooks are fastened.

8. BEAM Compasses. A wooden or brass instrument, with sliding sockets, to carry several shifting points, in order to draw circles with very long radii; and useful in large projections, for drawing the furniture on wall dials. Harris.

9. [Junnebeam, Sax. a ray of the sun.] The ray of light emitted from some luminous body, or received by the eye. Thus in the old Prompt. Parv. we have "candell-beame."

*Pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock,
That the precipitation might downstretch
Below the beam of sight.* Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

Pleasing, yet cold, like Cynthia's silver beam. Dryden.
As heav'n's blest beam turns vinegar more sour. Pope.

B E A

To BEAM. † v. n. [Sax. beamian.] To emit rays or beams.

Each emanation of his fires

That beams on earth; each virtue he inspires.

Pope.

BEAM Tree. A species of wild service.

BEAMLESS. * adj. [from beam and less.] Yielding no ray of light.

No sun to cheer us, but a bloody globe,
That rolls above, a bald and beamless fire.

Dryden and Lee, Œdipus.

The ghastly form,

The lip pale-quivering, and the beamless eye.

Thomson, Summer, v. 1045.

BEAMY. † adj. [from beam.]

1. Radiant; shining; emitting beams.

Who is there that cannot trace Thee now in thy beamy walk through the midst of thy sanctuary, amidst those golden candlesticks, which have long suffered a dimness amongst us through the violence of those that had seized them.

Milton, Animadv. on the Remonstr. Defence.

Each of w^hose eyes, like a bright beamy shield,
Conquers, without blows, the contentions.

Beaum. and Fl. Martial Mail.

Ope, aged Atlas, open then thy lap,
And from thy beamy bosom strike a light.

B. Jonson, Masques.

Hide, hide in shameful night, thy beamy head.

When I a fat and bean-fed horse beguile,

Neighing in likeness of a silly foal.

Shakspeare, Mids. N. D.

To BEAR. v. a. pret. I bore, or bare; part. pass.

bore, or born, or borne. [beopan, began, Sax. bairan,

Gothick. It is sounded as bare, as the are in care and ware.]

This is a word used with such latitude, that it is not easily explained.

We say to bear a burden, to bear sorrow or reproach, to bear a name, to bear a grudge, to bear fruit, or to bear children. The word bear is used in very different senses.

Watts.

2. To carry as a burden.

They bear him upon the shoulder; they carry him, and set him in his place.

Isaiah, xlv. 7.

And Solomon had threescore and ten thousand that bare burdens.

1 Kings, v. 15.

As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings.

Deuteronomy, xxxii. 12.

B E A

We see some, who, we think, have borne less of the burden, rewarded above themselves.

Decay of Piety.

3. To convey or carry.

My message to the ghost of Priam bear;

Tell him a new Achilles sent thee there.

Dryden, Æneid.

A guest like him, a Trojan guest before,

In shew of friendship, sought the Spartan shore,

And ravish'd Helen from her husband bore.

Garth.

4. To carry as a mark of authority.

I do commit into your hand

Th' unstained sword that you have us'd to bear.

Shakspeare.

5. To carry as a mark of distinction.

He may not bear so fair and so noble an image of the divine glory, as the universe in its full system.

Illeg.

His pious brother, sure the best

Who ever bore that name.

Dryden.

The sad spectators stiffen'd with their fears,

She sees, and sudden every limb she smears;

Then each of savage beasts the figure bears.

Garth.

His supreme spirit of mind will bear its best resemblance, when it represents the supreme infinite.

Cheyne.

So we say, to bear arms in a coat.

6. To carry as in show.

Look like the time; bear welcome in your eye,

Your hand, your tongue; look like the innocent flower,

But be the serpent under't.

Shakspeare.

7. To carry as in trust.

He was a thief, and had the bag, and bare what was put therein.

John.

8. To support; to keep from falling: frequently with up.

Under colour of rooting out popery, the most effectual means to bear up the state of religion may be removed, and so a way be made either for paganism, or for barbarism to enter.

Hooker.

And Samson took hold of the two middle pillars, upon which the house stood, and on which it was borne up.

Judges.

A religious hope does not only bear up the mind under her sufferings, but makes her rejoice in them.

Addison.

Some power invisible supports his soul,

And bears it up in all its wonted greatness.

Addison.

9. To keep afloat; to keep from sinking; sometimes with up.

The waters encreased, and bare up the ark, and it was lifted up above the earth.

Genesis.

10. To support with proportionate strength.

Animals that use a great deal of labour and exercise, have their solid parts more elastick and strong; they can bear, and ought to have stronger food.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

11. To carry in the mind, as love, hate.

How did the open multitude reveal

The wond'rous love they bear him under hand!

Daniel.

They bare great faith and obedience to the kings.

Bacon.

Darah, the eldest, bears a generous mind,

But to implacable revenge inclin'd.

Dryden.

The coward bore the man immortal spite.

Dryden.

As for this gentleman, who is fond of her, she beareth him an invincible hatred.

Swift.

That inviolable love I bear to the land of my nativity, prevailed upon me to engage in so bold an attempt.

Swift.

12. To endure, as pain, without sinking.

It was not an enemy that reproached me, then I could have borne it.

Psalms.

13. To suffer; to undergo, as punishment or misfortune.

I have borne chastisements, I will not offend any more.

That which was torn of beasts, I brought not unto thee, I bare the loss of it; of my hand didst thou require it.

Genesis.

14. To permit; to suffer without resentment.

To reject all orders of the church which men have established, is to think worse of the laws of men in this respect, than either the judgement of wise men alloweth, or the law of God itself will bear.

Hooker.

Not the gods, nor angry Jove will bear

Thy lawless wand'ring walks in upper air.

Dryden.

B E A

15. To be capable of; to admit.
Being the son of the earl of Pembroke, and younger brother to another, who liberally supplied his expence, beyond what his annuity from his father could bear. Clarendon.

Do not charge your coins with more uses than they can bear. Addison on Medals.
It is the method of such as love any science, to discover all others in it.
Had he not been eager to find mistakes, he would not have strained my works to such a sense as they will not bear. Atterbury.
In all criminal cases, the most favourable interpretation should be put upon words that they possibly can bear. Swift.
16. To produce, as fruit.
There be some plants that bear no flower, and yet bear fruit: there be some that bear flowers, and no fruit: there be some that bear neither flowers nor fruit. Bacon.
They wing'd their flight aloft; then stooping down, Perch'd on the double tree that bears the golden bough. Dryden.
Say, shepherd, say, in what glad soil appears
A wond'rous tree that sacred monarchs bears. Pope.
17. To bring forth, as a child.
The queen that bore thee,
— Oftener upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day she liv'd. Shakspeare.
Ye know that my wife bare two sons. Gen. iis.
What could the muse herself that Orpheus bore,
The muse herself, for her enchanting son?
The same Æneas, whom fair Venus bore
To fam'd Anchises on th' Ædean shore. Dryden.
18. To give birth to; to be the native place of.
Here dwelt the man divine whom Samos bore,
But now self-banish'd from his native shore. Dryden.
19. To possess, as power or honour.
When vice prevails, and impious men bear sway,
The post of honour is a private station. Addison, Cato.
20. To gain; to win: commonly with away.
As it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question bear it;
For that it stands not in such warlike brace. Shakspeare.
Because the Greek and Latin have ever borne away the prerogative from all other tongues, they shall serve as touchstones to make our trials by. Candem.
Some think to bear it by speaking a great word, and being peremptory; and go on, and take by admittance that which they cannot make good. Bacon.
21. To maintain; to keep up.
He finds the pleasure and credit of bearing a part in the conversation, and of hearing his reasons approved. Locke.
22. To support any thing good or bad.
I was carried on to observe, how they did bear their fortunes, and how they did employ their times. Bacon.
23. To exhibit.
Ye Trojan flames, your testimony bear,
What I perform'd and what I suffer'd there. Dryden.
24. To be answerable for.
If I bring him not unto thee, let me bear the blame. Genesis.
O more than madmen! you yourselves shall bear
The guilt of blood and sacrilegious war. Dryden.
25. To supply.
What have you under your arm? Somewhat that will bear your charges in your pilgrimage? Dryden.
26. To be the object of. This is unusual.
I'll be your father and your brother too;
Let me but bear your love, I'll bear your cares. Shakspeare.
27. To behave; to act in any character.
Some good instruction give,
How I may bear me here. Shakspeare.

B E A

29. To impel; to urge; to push: with some particle noting the direction of the impulse; as, down, on, back, forward.
The residue were so disordered as they could not conveniently fight or fly, and not only jumbled and bore down one another, but, in their confused tumbling back, brake a part of the avant guard. Sir J. Hayward.
Contention, like a horse
Full of high feeding, madly hath broke loose,
And bears down all before him. Shakspeare.
Their broken oars, and floating planks, withstand
Their passage, while they labour to the land;
And ebbing tides bear back upon th' uncertain sand. Dryden.
Now with a noiseless gentle course
It keeps within the middle bed;
Anon it lifts aloft the head,
And bears down all before it with impetuous force. Dryden.
Truth is borne down, attestations neglected, the testimony of sober persons despised. Swift.
The hopes of enjoying the abbey lands would soon bear down all considerations, and be an effectual incitement to their perversion. Swift.
30. To conduct; to manage.
My hope is
So to bear through, and out, the consulship,
As spite shall ne'er wound you, though it may me. B. Jonson.
31. To press.
Cæsar doth bear me hard; but he loves Brutus. Shakspeare.
Though he bear me hard,
I yet must do him right. B. Jonson.
These men bear hard upon the suspected party, pursue her close through all her windings. Addison.
32. To incite; to animate.
But confidence then bore thee on; secure
Either to meet no danger, or to find Mutter of glorious trial. Milton.
33. To bear a body. A colour is said to bear a body in painting, when it is capable of being ground so fine, and mixing with the oil so entirely, as to seem only a very thick oil of the same colour.
34. To bear date. To carry the mark of the time when any thing was written.
35. To bear a price. To have a certain value.
36. To bear in hand. To amuse with false pretences; to deceive.
Your daughter, whom she bore in hand to love
With such integrity she did confess,
Was as a scorpion to her sight. Shakspeare.
His sickness, age, and impotence,
Was falsely borne in hand. Shakspeare.
He repaired to Bruges, desiring of the states of Bruges, to enter peaceably into their town, with a retinue fit for his estate; and bearing them in hand, that he was to communicate with them of matters of great importance, for their good. Bacon.
It is no wonder, that some would bear the world in hand, that the apostle's design and meaning is for presbytery, though his words are for episcopacy. South.
37. To bear off. To carry away.
I will respect thee as a father, if Thou bear'st my life off hence.
The sun views half the earth on either way,
And here brings on, and there bears off the day. Creech.
Give but the word, we'll snatch this damsel up,
And bear her off. Cato.
My soul grows desperate
I'll bear her off. A. Philips.
38. To bear out. To support; to maintain; to defend.
I hope your warrant will bear out the deed. Shakspeare.
I can once or twice a quarter bear out a knave against an honest man. Shakspeare.

Quoth Sidrophel I do not doubt
To find friends that will bear me out. Hudibras.

B E A

Company only can bear a man out in an ill thing. South.
I doubted whether that occasion could bear me out in the confidence of giving your ladyship any farther trouble. Temple.

To BEAR. v. n.

1. To suffer pain.

Stranger, cease thy care;
Wise is the soul; but man is born to bear:
Jove weighs affairs of earth in dubious scales,
And the good suffers while the bad prevails.
They bore as heroes, but they felt as man.

Pope.
Pope.

2. To be patient.

I cannot, cannot bear; 'tis past, 'tis done;
Perish this impious, this detested son!

Dryden.

3. To be fruitful or prolific.

A fruit tree hath been blown up almost by the roots, and set up again, and the next year bear exceedingly. Bacon.
Betwixt two seasons comes th' auspicious air,
This age to blossom, and the next to bear. Dryden.
Melons on beds of ice are taught to bear,
And, strangers to the sun, yet ripen here. Glanville.

4. To take effect; to succeed.

Having pawned a full suit of cloaths, for a sum of money, which, my operator assured me, was the last he should want to bring all our matters to bear. Guardian.

5. To act in any character.

Instruct me
How I may formally in person bear,
Like a true friar. Shakspeare.

6. To tend; to be directed to any point: with a particle to determine the meaning; as, up, away, onward.

The oily drops swimming on the spirit of wine, moved restlessly to and fro, sometimes bearing up to one another, as if all were to unite into one body, and then falling off, and continuing to shift places. Boyle.

Never did men more joyfully obey,
Or sooner understood the sign to fly:
With such alacrity they bore away. Dryden.
Whose navy like a stiff-stretched cord did shew,
Till he bore in, and bent them into flight. Dryden.
On this the hero fix'd an oak in sight,
The mark to guide the mariners aright:
To bear with this, the seamen stretch their oars,
Then round the rock they steer and seek the former shores. Dryden.

In a convex mirror, we view the figures of all other things, which bear out with more life or strength than nature itself. Dryden.

7. To act as an impellent, opponent, or as a reciprocal power; generally with the particles upon or against.

We were encounter'd, by a mighty rock,
Which being violently bore upon,
Our helpless ship was splitt'd in the midst. Shakspeare.
Upon the tops of mountains, the air which bears against the restagnant quicksilver, is less pressed. Boyle.
The sides bearing one against the other, they could not lie so close at the bottoms. Burnet.

As a lion bounding in his way,
And bearing augmented bears against his prey,
his is no seize. Dryden.

fruit, or to bear childly doth bear most upon the knee in very different senses and most upon the muscles of the Wilkins.

2. To carry as a burden.

They bear him upon the shut up by the land. Broome.
And Solomon had three, did bear upon those within, who burdens. Hayward.

As an eagle stirreth up,
And bears abroad her wings, respect to other places; as, this wings. of the promontory.

B E A

10. To bear up: To stand firm without falling; not to sink; not to faint or fail.

So long as nature
Will bear up with this exercise, so long
I daily vow to use it. Shakspeare.

Persons in distress may speak of themselves with dignity; it shews a greatness of soul, that they bear up against the storms of fortune. Broome.

The consciousness of integrity, the sense of a life spent in doing good, will enable a man to bear up under any change of circumstances. Atterbury.

When our commanders and soldiers were raw and unexpe-rienced, we lost battles and towns; yet we bore up then, as the French do now; nor was there any thing decisive in their successes. Swift.

11. To bear with. To endure an unpleasant thing.

They are content to bear with my absence and folly. Sidney.
Though I must be content to bear with those that say you are reverend grave men; yet they lie dead, that tell you, you have good faces. Shakspeare.

Look you lay home to him;
Tell him his pranks have been broad to bear with. Shakspeare.
Bear with me then, if lawful what I ask. Milton.

BEAR. n. s. bepa, Saxon, baer, Germ.]

1. A rough savage animal.

Some have falsely reported, that bears bring their young into the world shapeless, and that their dams lick them into form. The dams go no longer than thirty days, and generally produce five young ones. In the winter, they lie hid and asleep, the male forty days, and the female four months; and so soundly for the first fourteen days, that blows will not wake them. In the sleepy season, they are said to have no nourishment but from licking their feet. This animal has naturally an hideous look, but when enraged it is terrible; and, as rough and stupid as it seems to be, it is capable of discipline; it leaps, dances, and plays a thousand little tricks at the sound of a trumpet. They abound in Poland. In the remote northern countries the species is white. Calmet.

Call hither to the stake my two brave bears,
Bid Salisbury and Warwick come to me. —
— Are these thy bears? we'll bait thy bears to death,
And manacle the bearward in their chains. Shakspeare.

Thou'dst shun a bear;
But if thy flight lay tow'rd the raging sea,
Thou'dst meet the bear i' the mouth. Shakspeare.

2. The name of two constellations, called the greater or lesser bear; in the tail of the lesser bear, is the pole-star.

E'en then when Troy was by the Greeks o'erthrown,
The bear oppos'd to bright Orion shone. Creech.

3. A word, still in use, to denote a certain description of stock-jobbers.

He who sells that, of which he is not possessed, is proverbially said to sell the skin before he has caught the bear.
It was the practice of stock-jobbers, in the year 1720, to enter into a contract for transferring South Sea stock at a future time for a certain price; but he who contracted to sell, had frequently no stock to transfer; nor did he who bought, intend to receive any in consequence of his bargain: the seller was therefore called a bear, in allusion to the proverb; and the buyer a bull, perhaps only as a similar distinction. The contract was merely a wager, to be determined by the rise or fall of stock; if it rose, the seller paid the difference to the buyer, proportioned to the sum determined by the same computation to the seller. Dr. Warton on Pope.

BEAR-BAITING. n. s. [from bear and bait.] The sport of baiting bears with dogs. See To BAIT.

He haunts, wakes, fairs, and bear-baitings.
Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.

B E A

Let's have ~~the~~ bear-baiting; ye shall see me play
The rarest for a single dog. Beaumont, Fl. Mad Lover.
He [lord Downe] entertained the king [James I.] with the fashionable and courtly diversions of hawking and bearbaiting. Parton, Life of Sir T. Pope, p. 438.

They spent their time (1215) in tournaments and bear-baitings, and other diversions suited to the fierce rusticity of their manners. Burke, Abridg. Eng. Hist. iii. 8.

BEAR'S-WORT. n. s. A herb.

BEARD. n. s. [beardh, Saxon.]

1. The hair that grows on the lips and chin.

Ere on thy chin the springing beard began
To spread a doubtful down, and promise man. Prior.

2. Beard is used for the face; as, to do any thing to a man's beard, is to do it in defiance, or to his face.

Rail'd at their covenant, and jeer'd
Their rev'rend persons to my beard. Hudibras.

3. Beard is used to mark age or virility; as, he has a long beard, means he is old.

This ancient ruffian, sir, whose life I have spared at suit of his grey beard. Shakspeare.

Some thin remains of chastity appear'd,
Ev'n under Jove, but Jove without a beard. Dryden.

Would it not be insufferable for a professor to have his authority, of forty years standing, confirmed by general tradition, and a reverend beard overturned by an upstart novelist? Locke.

4. Sharp prickles growing upon the ears of corn.

The ploughman lost his sweat, and the green corn
Hath rotted ere its youth attained a beard. Shakspeare.

A certain farmer complained that the beards of his corn cut the reapers and threshers fingers. L'Estrange.

5. A barb on an arrow.

6. The beard or chuck of a horse, is that part which bears the curb of the bridle. Farricr's Dict.

To BEARD. v. a. [from beard.]

1. To take or pluck by the beard, in contempt or anger.

No man so potent breathes upon the ground,
But I will beard him. Shakspeare.

B E A

2. To oppose to the face; to set at open defiance:
adopted, according to Mr. Steevens, from romance;
in the old language of which it signified, to cut off the beard.

He, whosoever he should swerve from duty, may be able to beard him. Spenser.

I have been bearded by boys. More.

The design of utterly extirpating monarchy and episcopacy, the presbyterians alone begun, continued, and would have ended, if they had not been bearded by that new party, with whom they could not agree about dividing the spoil. Swift.

BE'ARDED. adj. [from beard.]

1. Having a beard.

Think every bearded fellow that's but yok'd,
May draw with you. Shakspeare.

Old prophecies foretell our fall at hand,
When bearded men in floating castles land. Dryden.

2. Having sharp prickles, as corn.

As when a field
Of Ceres ripe for harvest, waving bends
Her bearded grove of ears, which way the wind, Sways them. Milton.

The fierce virago
Flew o'er the field, nor hurt the bearded grain. Dryden.

3. Barbed or jagged.

Thou shouldst have pull'd the secret from my breast,
Torn out the bearded steel to give me rest. Dryden.

BE'ARDLESS. † adj. [Sax. beapleary.]

1. Without a beard.

There are some coins of Cunobelin, king of Essex and Mid-

2. Youthful.

And, as young striplings whip the top for sport,
On the smooth pavement of an empty court,
The wooden engine flies and whirls about,
Admir'd with clamours of the beardless rout. Dryden.

BE'ARER. † n. s. [from To bear.]

A carrier of any thing, who conveys any thing from one place or person to another.

He should the bearers put to sudden death,
Not shiving time allowed. Shakspeare.

Forgive the bearer of unhappy news;

Your alter'd father openly pursues
Your ruin. Dryden.

No gentleman sends a servant with a message, without endeavouring to put it into terms brought down to the capacity of the bearer. Swift.

One employed in carrying burthens.

And he set threescore and ten thousand of them to be bearers of burthens. 2 Chronicles.

3. One who wears any thing.

O majesty!
When thou dost pinch thy bearer, thou dost sit
Like a rich armour worn in heat of day,
That scalds with safety. Shakspeare.

4. One who carries the body to the grave.

Nay, quoth he, on his swooning bed outstretch'd,
If I mayn't carry, sure I'll ne'er be fetch'd,
But vow, though the cross doctors all stood hearers,
For one carrier put down, to make six bearers.

Milton, Ept. on Hobson the Carrier,
The King's body being by the bearers set down near the place of burial. Sir T. Herbert, Mem. of K. Ch. I.

5. A tree that yields its produce.

This way of procuring autumnal roses in some that are good bearers, will succeed. Boyle.
Reprune apricots, saving the young shoots, for the raw bearers commonly perish. Evelyn.

6. [In architecture.] A post or brick wall raised up between the ends of a piece of timber, to shorten its bearing; or to prevent its bearing with the whole weight at the ends only.

7. [In heraldry.] A supporter.

B E A

BE'ARHERD. n. s. [from bear and herd; as, shepherd, from sheep.] A man that tends bears.

He that is more than a youth, is not for me; and he that is less than a man, I am not for him; therefore I will even take silence in earnest of the bearherd, and lead his spes into hell.

Shakspeare.

BE'ARING. n. s. [from bear.]

1. The site or place of any thing with respect to something else.

But of this frame, the bearing and the ties,

The strong connections, nice dependencies,

* Gradations just, has thy pervading soul

Look'd through? or can a part contain the whole? Pope.

2. Gesture; mien; behaviour.

That is Claudio; I know him by his bearing. Shakspeare.

3. [In architecture.] Bearing of a piece of timber, with carpenters, is the space either between the two fixt extremes thereof, or between the one extreme and a post or wall, trimmed up between the ends to shorten its bearing. Builder's Dict.

4. [In heraldry.] That which is borne in a coat of arms.

The sun beat upon the head of Jonah, that he fainted, and wished in himself to die.

Jonah, iv. 8.

9. To speak frequently; to repeat; to enforce by repetition: with upon.

We are drawn on into a larger speech, 'by reason of their so great earnestness, who beat more and more upon these last alleged words.

Hooker.

How frequently and fervently doth the scripture beat upon this cause?

Hakewill.

10. To beat up; as, to beat up for soldiers. The word up seems redundant, but enforces the sense, the technical term being to raise soldiers.BEAT. part. passive. [from the verb.]

Like a rich vessel beat by storms to shore,
'Twere madness should I venture out once more.

Dryden.

BEAT.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Stroke.

2. Manner of striking.

Albeit the base and treble strings of a viol be turned to an unison; yet the former will still make a bigger sound than the latter, as making a broader beat upon the air.

Grew.

He with a careless beat,

Dryden.

3. Manner of being struck; as, the beat of the pulse, or a drum.4. [In hunting or fowling.] The round taken, when people beat up for game.BE'ATEN.† particip. adj. [Sax. beaten.] Tracked.

Without a guide, and this no beaten road?

Dryden.

BE'ATER.† n. s. [Sax. beatepe, Fr. buteur.]

1. An instrument with which any thing is comminuted or mingled.

Beat all your mortar with a beater three or four times over, before you use it; for thereby you incorporate the sand and lime well together.

Mason.

. A person much given to blows.

The best schoolmaster of our time, was the greatest beater.

Ascham's Schoolmaster.

. [In hunting or fowling.] He that beats for game.

All the heroical glory he aspires to, is to be reputed a most potent and victorious beater of deer, and beater up of parks.

Butler's Characters.

To BEATH.* v. a. [Sax. beðian, baðian, to steep, dip, or bathe. In Suffolk and Norfolk, beathing or bathing wood by the fire, means straitening unseasoned wood by heat; and this is much the same as Spenser's meaning in the example.] To bathe or warm in fire, so as to harden.

And in his hand a tall young oake he bore,
Whose knottie snags were sharp'ned all afore,
And beath'd in fire for Steele to be in sted.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. vii. 7.

BEAT'FICAL. } adj. [beatificus, low Lat. from beatus, BEAT'FICK. } happy.] That which has the power of making happy, or completing fruition; blissful.

It is used only of heavenly fruition after death.

Admiring more

The riches of heaven's pavement, trodden gold,
Than aught divine or holy else, enjoy'd
In vision beatifick.

Milton, P. L.

It is also their felicity to have no faith; for, enjoying the beatifical vision in the fruition of the object of faith, they have received the full evacuation of it.

Brown, Vulg. Errors.

We may contemplate upon the greatness and strangeness of the beatifical vision; how a created eye should be so fortified, as to bear all those glories that stream from the fountain of un-created light.

South.

BEAT'FICALLY. adv. [from beatifical.] In such a manner as to complete happiness.

*Beatifical*ly to behold the face of God in the fulness of wisdom, righteousness and peace, is blessedness no way incident unto the creatures beneath man.

Hakewill.

BEATIFICA'TION. n. s. [from beatifick.] A term in the Romish church, distinguished from canonization. Beatification is an acknowledgement made by the Pope, that the person beatified is in heaven, and therefore may be revered as blessed; but is not a concession of the honours due to saints, which are conferred by canonization.To BEA'TIFY.† v. a. [beatifico, Lat. beatifier, Fr. Cotgrave.]

1. To make happy; to bless with the completion of celestial enjoyment.

The use of spiritual conference is unimaginable and unspeakable, especially if free and unrestrained, bearing an image of that conversation which is among angels and beatified saints.

Hammond.

We shall know him to be the fullest good, the nearest to us, and the most certain; and, consequently, the most beatifying of all others.

Brown.

I wish I had the wings of an angel, to have beaten into paradise, and to have beheld the forms of those beatified spirits, from which I might have copied my archangel.

Dryden.

2. To settle the character of any person by a public acknowledgement that he is received in heaven, though he is not invested with the dignity of a saint.

Over against this church stands an hospital, erected by a shoemaker, who has been beatified, though never sainted.

Addison.

BE'ATING.† n. s. [from beat, and Fr. batement.] Correction; punishment by blows.

Playwright, convict of public wrongs to men,
Takes private beatings, and begins again.

B. Jonson.

Do you come hither with your bottled valour,
Your windy froth, to limit out my beatings?

Braun. and Fl. King and No King.

BEA'TITUDE.† n. s. [beatitudo, Lat. beatitude, Fr.]

1. Blessedness; felicity; happiness: commonly used of the joys of heaven.

The end of that government, and of all man's aims, is agreed to be beatitude, that is, his being completely well.

Digby.

This is the image and little representation of heaven; it is beatitude in picture.

Taylor.

He set out the felicity of his heaven, by the delights of sense; slightly passing over the accomplishment of the soul, and the beatitude of that part which earth and visibilities too weakly affect.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. A declaration of blessedness made by our Saviour to particular virtues.

BEAU. n. s. [beau, Fr. It is sounded like bo, and has often the French plural beaux, sounded as boes.] A man of dress; a man whose great care is to deck his person.

What will not beaux attempt to please the fair?

Dryden.

The water nymphs are too unkind

To Vill'rous are the laud nymphs so?

And fly they all, at once combin'd

To shame a general, and a beau?

Prior.

You will become the delight of nine ladies in ten, and the envy of ninety-nine beaux in a hundred.

Swift.

B E A

BEAU-MONDE.* n. s. [Fr.] The gay world; the fashionable part of the world.

She courted the beau-monde to night,
L'assemblée her supreme delight. Prior.
His whole dress and appearance exactly resembled that of our modern beau-monde. Student, i. 301.

BEAVER.† n. s. [bicvre, Fr. bepet, beopet, Sax. fiber, Lat.]

1. An animal, otherwise named the castor, amphibious, and remarkable for his art in building his habitation; of which many wonderful accounts are delivered by travellers. His skin is very valuable on account of the fur.

The beaver being hunted, biteth off his stones, knowing that for them only his life is sought. Hakewill.

They placed this invention upon the beaver, for the sagacity and wisdom of that animal; indeed from its artifice in building. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. A hat of the best kind; so called from being made of the fur of beaver.

You see a smart rhetorician turning his hat, moulding it into different cocks, examining the lining and the button during his harangue: a deaf man would think he was cheapening a beaver, when he is talking of the fate of a nation. Addison.

The broker here his spacious beaver wears,
Upon his brow sit jealousies and cares. Gay.

3. The part of a helmet that covers the lower part of the face, as distinguished from the visor. [baviere, Fr.]

His dreadful hideous head
Close couched on the beaver, seem'd to throw,
From flaming mouth, bright sparkles fiery red. Spenser.

Big Mars seems bankrupt in their beggar'd host,
And faintly through a rusty beaver peeps. Shakspeare.
He was slain upon a course at tilt, the splinters of the staff going in at his beaver. Bacon.

BEAVERED. adj. [from beaver.] Covered with a beaver; wearing a beaver.

His beaver'd brow a birchen garland bears,
Dropping with infant's blood, and mother's tears. Pope.

BEAU'ISH. adj. [from beau.] Becfitting a beau; foppish.

BEAU'TEOUS. adj. [from beauty.] Fair elegant in form; pleasing to the sight; beautiful. This word is chiefly poetical.

I can, Petrucio, help thee to a wife,
With wealth enough, and young, and beauteous. Shakspeare.
Alas! not hoping to subdue,
I only to the flight aspir'd;
To keep the beauteous foe in view,
Was all the glory I desir'd. Prior.

BEAU'TEOUSLY. adv. [from beauteous.] In a beauteous manner; in a manner pleasing to the sight; beautifully.

Look upon pleasures not upon that side that is next the sun, or where they look beauteously; that is, as they come towards you to be enjoyed. Taylor.

BEAU'TEOUSNESS. n. s. [from beauteous.] The state or quality of being beauteous; beauty.

From less virtue, and less beauteousness,
The gentiles fram'd them gods and goddesses. Donne, Poems, p. 84.

BEAU'TIFIER.* n. s. [from beautify.] That which beautifies or embellishes.

Semiramis, the founder of Babylon, according to Justin and Strabo; but the enlarger only and beautifier of it, according to Herodotus. Costard, Astron. of the Ancients, P. ii. p. 102.

BEAU'TIFUL. adj. [from beauty and full.] Fair; having the qualities that constitute beauty.

He stole away and took by strong hand all the beautiful women in his time. Rulegh.

B E A

The most important part of painting, is to know what is most beautiful in nature, and most proper for that art; that which is the most beautiful, is the most noble subject: so, in poetry, tragedy is more beautiful than comedy, because the persons are greater whom the poet instructs, and consequently the instructions of more benefit to mankind. Dryden.

Beautiful looks are rul'd by fickle minds,
And summer seas are turn'd by sudden winds. Prior.

BEAU'TIFULLY. adv. [from beautiful.] In a beautiful manner.

No longer shall the boddice aptly lac'd,
From thy full bosom to thy slender waist,
That air and harmony of shape express,
Fine by degrees, and beautifully less. Prior.

BEAU'TIFULNESS.† n. s. [from beautiful.] The quality of being beautiful; beauty; excellence of form. The innate loveliness and beautifulness of virtue. Hallywell, Saving of Souls, p. 115.

To BEAU'TIFY.† v. a. [obsolete Fr. beautifier.] To adorn; to embellish; to deck; to grace; to add beauty to.

Never was sorrow more sweetly set forth, their faces seeming rather to beautify their sorrow, than their sorrow to cloud the beauty of their faces. Hayward.

Sufficeth not that we are brought to Rome,
To beautify thy triumphs and return,
Captive to thee and to thy Roman yoke? Shakspeare.

These were not created to beautify the earth alone, but for the use of man and beast. Raleigh.

How all conspire to grace
Th' extended earth, and beautify her face. Blackmore.
There is charity and justice; and the one serves to heighten and beautify the other. Atterbury.

To BEAU'TIFY. v. n. To grow beautiful; to advance in beauty.

It must be a prospect pleasing to God himself, to see his creation for ever beautifying in his eyes, and drawing nearer to him, by greater degrees of resemblance. Addison.

BEAU'TIFYING.* n. s. [from beautify.] The method or act of rendering beautiful.

All that either soberly please themselves, or civilly appear less unpleasing to others, by the help of any artificial beautifyings. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom, p. 67.

BEAU'TILESS.* adj. [from beauty and less.] Without beauty.

The only unamiable, undesirable, formless, beautiless reprobate in the mass. Hammond, Sermons.

BEAU'TY. n. s. [brauté, Fr.]

1. That assemblage of graces, or proportion of parts, which pleases the eye.

Beauty consists of a certain composition of colour and figure, causing delight in the beholder. Locke.

Your beauty was the cause of that effect,
Your beauty, that did haunt me in my sleep.—
If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide,
These nails should rend that beauty from my cheeks. Shakspeare.

Beauty is best in a body that hath rather dignity of presence than beauty of aspect. The beautiful prove accomplished, but not of great spirit, and study for the most part rather behaviour than virtue. Bacon.

The best part of beauty is that which a picture cannot express. Bacon.

Of the beauty of the eye I shall say little, leaving that to poets and orators: that it is a very pleasant and lovely object to behold, if we consider the figure, colours, splendour of it, is the least I can say. Ruy.

He view'd their twining branches with delight,
And prais'd the beauty of the pleasing sight. Pope.

2. A particular grace, feature, or ornament.

The ancient pieces are beautiful, because they resemble the beauties of nature; and nature will ever be beautiful, which resembles those beauties of antiquity. Dryden.

Wherever you place a patch, you destroy a beauty. Addison.

Any thing more eminently excellent than the rest of that with which it is united.

. A nod of command.

This gave me an occasion of looking backward on some beauties of my author in his former books.

With incredible pains have I endeavoured to copy the several beauties of the ancient and modern historians.

4. A beautiful person.

Remember that Pellean conquerour,

A youth, how all the beauties of the east

He slightly view'd and slightly overpass'd.

What can thy ends, malicious beauty, be?

Can he, who kill'd thy brother, live for thee?

To BEAU'TY. v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn; to beautify; to embellish: not in use.

The harlot's cheek, beautied with plast'ring art,

Is not more ugly to the thing that helps it,

Than is my deed to your most painted word.

BEAU'TY-SPOT. n. s. [from beauty and spot.] A spot placed to direct the eye to something else, or to heighten some beauty; a foil; a patch.

The filthiness of swine makes them the beauty-spot of the animal creation.

BEAU'TY-WANING. * adj. [from beauty and wane.] Declining in beauty.

A beauty-waning and distressed widow,

Even in the afternoon of her best days,

Made prize and purchase of his wanton eye.

To BEBLE'ED. * v. a. [from be and bleed; one of our oldest verbs.] To make bloody; to stain with blood.

The open war, with wounds all bebledde.

Chaucer, Kn. Tale, 2004.

The feast —

All was torned into blond:

The dishe forthwith, the cuppe and all,

Bebled they weren over all.

To BEBLO'OD, or BEBLO'ODY. * v. a. [from be and blood; and Teut. bebloeden.] The latter is noticed by Sherwood under bloudie; and is defined, "to imbue with blood; to make bloody."

You will not admit, I trow, that he was so beblooded with the blood of your sacrament-god.

To BEBLO'T. * v. a. [from be and blot; Germ. bebluten.] To stain. Obsolete.

Touching thy letter, thou art wise enough,

I wot thou wilt it deigneliche endite,

As make it with the argumentis tough,

Ne scriven-like, or craftily it write,

Beblotte it with thy tearis eke a lite.

Chaucer, Tr. and Cr. ii. 1027.

BEBLU'BBERED. * part. adj. [from be and blubber.] Swoln with weeping.

A very beautiful lady did call him from a certain window, her eyes all beblubbered with tears.

Shelton, Tr. of D. Quixote, i. iii. 13.

BECAFI'CO. n. s. [becafico, Span.] A bird like a nightingale, feeding on figs and grapes; a fig-pecker.

The robin-redbreast, till of late, had rest,

And children sacred held a martin's nest;

Till becaficos sold so devilish dear,

To one that was, or would have been, a peer.

Pope.

To BECA'LM. † v. a. [from calm.]

1. To still the elements.

The moon shone clear on the becalmed flood.

Dryden.

2. To keep a ship from motion.

Like a ship at hull and becalmed.

Hammond's Sermons, p. 655.

A man becalmed at sea, out of sight of land, in a fair day, may look on the sun, or sea, or ship, a whole hour, and perceive no motion.

Locke.

3. To quiet the mind.

Soft whispering airs, and the lark's matin song,

Then woe to music, and becalm the mind

Perplext with irksome thoughts.

Philips.

Banish his sorrows, and becalm his soul
With easy dreams.

Addison.

Perhaps prosperity becalm'd his breast;

Perhaps the wind just shifted from the east.

Pope.

4. To becalm and to calm differ in this, that to calm is to stop motion, and to becalm is to withhold from motion.

BECA'LMING. * n. s. [from becalm.] A calm at sea.

Other unlucky accidents oft-times happen in these seas, as when (especially in becalmings) men swim in the bearing ocean.

Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 6.

Thou art a merchant; what tellest thou me of crosse winds, of Michaelmas flaws, of ill weathers, of tedious becalmings, of piratical hazards.

Seasonable Sermon, p. 30.

BECA'ME. The preterite of become; which see.

BECA'USE. † conjunct. [from by and cause.] Formerly written bicause, and by cause. It formerly also expressed the motive or end; but is not now so used, viz. "It is the case of some to contrive false periods, because they may seem men of despatch." Bacon. We now use that for this old sense. See Lowth's Gram.

1. For this reason that; on this account that, for this cause that. It makes the first part of an illative proposition either expressly or by implication, and is answered by therefore; as, I fled, because I was afraid; which is the same with, because I was afraid, therefore I fled.

How great soever the sins of any person are, Christ died for him, because he died for all; and he died for those sins, because he died for all sins; only he must reform.

Hammond.

Men do not so generally agree in the sense of these as of the other, because the interests, and lusts, and passions of men, are more concerned in the one than the other.

Tillotson.

2. It has, in some sort, the force of a preposition; but, because it is compounded of a noun, has of after it.

Infancy demands aliment, such as lengthens fibres without breaking, because of the state of accretion.

Arbutnot.

To BECH'ANCE. v. a. [from be and chance.] To befall; to happen to: a word proper, but now in little use.

My sons, God knows what has bechanced them.

Shakspeare.

All happiness bechance to thee at Milan.

Shakspeare.

To BECH'ARM. * v. a. [from be and charm.] To captivate; to subdue by pleasure.

I am awak'd, and with clear eyes behold

The lethargy wherein my reason long

Hath been becharm'd.

Beaumont and Fl. Laws of Candy.

BE'CHICKS. † n. s. [Gr. $\beta\epsilon\chi\iota\kappa\alpha$, of $\beta\epsilon\chi$, a cough, Fr. bechique.] Medicines proper for relieving coughs.

Colegrave.

To BECK. † v. n. [becken, Sax. bec, Fr. head, Dr. Johnson says. But see To BECKON.] To make a sign with the head.

It becometh the king to perform the least word he hath spoken, yea, if he should only beck with his head.

Homily of Prayer, P. 3.

To BECK. v. a. To call or guide, as by a motion of the head.

Bell, book, and candle, shall not drive me back,

When gold and silver beck me to come on.

Oh, this false soul of Egypt, this gay charm,

Whose eye beck'd forth my wars, and call'd them home.

Shakspeare, Antony and Cleopatra.

BECK. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A sign with the head; a nod.

Haste thee, nymph, and bring with thee

Quips, and cranks, and wanton wiles,

Nods, and becks, and wreathed smiles.

Milton, L' Allegro.

B E C

Neither the lusty kind shewed any roughness, nor the easier any idleness; but still like a well-obeyed master, whose beck is enough for discipline. Sidney.

Then forthwith to him takes a chosen band
Of spirits, likest to himself in guile,
To be at hand, and at his beck appear. Milton.

The menial fair, that round her wait,
At Helen's beck prepare the room of state. Pope.

BECK.* n. s. [Sax. becc, a little river; Dutch bece; Dan. beck; Teut. back.] A small stream; a common word in the north of England.

The brooks, the becks, the rills, the rivulets. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 1.

Petty bourns and becks. Ibid. S. xxix.

Stainburn, a stony burn or beck, is a township within this parish, [Workington.] Burn, Hist. of Cumberland, p. 56.

To BECKON.† v. n. [Sax. beacnian, bycnian, Germ. biegen, to bow, from the Iceland. beiga.] To make a sign without words.

Alexander beckoned with the hand, and would have made his defence unto the people. Acts, xix. 33.

When he had raised my thoughts by those transporting airs, he beckoned to me, and, by the waving of his hand, directed me to approach. Addison.

Sudden you mount! you beckon from the skies,
Clouds interpose, waves roar, and winds arise. Pope.

To BECKON. v. a. To make a sign to. Spenser, F. Q.
With her two crooked hands she signs did make,
And beckon'd him.

It beckons you to go away with it,
As if it some impartient did desire
To you alone. Shakspeare.

With this his distant friends he beckons near,
Provokes their duty; and prevents their fear. Dryden.

BECKON.* n. s. The same as beck. [from the verb.]
A sign with the head; a sign without words.

He, that is corrupted, cooperates with him that corrupts;
he runs into his arms at the first beckon.

Bolingbroke, Diss. on Parties, L. 1.

To BECLIP.† v. a. [be-clýppan, Sax.] To embrace. One of our oldest verbs, but not exemplified by Dr Johnson.

And he took a child, and sett him in the myddil of hem, and when he hadde beclipped him, he sayde to hem, Whoever resceyeth oon of sicke children in my name, he resceyeth me.

Wicliffe, S. Mark, ix. 36.

And sodenly, ere she it wiste,
Beclipt in armes he her kiste. Gower, Conf. Am. b. 1.

To BECLOU'D.* v. a. [be and cloud.] To dim, to obscure.

Stella oft sees the very face of woe
Painted in my beclouded stormy face.

Sidney, Astrophel and Stella.

Storms of tears

Becloud his eyes, which soon fore'd smiling clears.

P. Fletcher, Pisc. Rel. 5. st. 15.

To BECOME.† v. n. pret. I became; comp. pret. I have become. [from by and come.]

1. To enter into some state or condition, by a change from some other.

The Lord God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul. Gen. ii. 7.

And unto the Jews I became a Jew, that I might gain the Jews. I Cor. ix. 20.

A smaller pear, grafted upon a stock that beareth a greater pear, will become great.

Bacon.

My voice thou oft hast heard, and hast not fear'd,
But still rejoic'd; how is it now become
So dreadful to thee?

Milton.

So the least faults, if mix'd with fairest deeds,
Of future ill become the fatal seed. Prior.

2. To become of. To be the fate of; to be the end of; to be the subsequent or final condition of. It is observable, that this word is never, or very seldom, used but with what, either indefinite or interrogative.

What is then become of so huge a multitude, as would have overspread a great part of the continent? Raleigh.

Perplex'd with thoughts, what would become of me, and all mankind? Milton.

The first hints of the circulation of the blood were taken from a common person's wondering what became of all the blood which issued out of the heart. Graunt.

What will become of me then? for when he is free, he will infallibly accuse me. Dryden.

What became of this thoughtful busy creature, when removed from this world, has amazed the vulgar, and puzzled the wise. Rogers.

3. In the following passage, the phrase, where is he become? is used for what is become of him? as Dr. Johnson says. But it is of much older authority than Shakspeare, from whom he cites his example.

Again the day, he him withdrough
So privily, that she ne wiste
Where he become; but as hym liste,
Out of the temple he goth li way. Gower, Conf. Am. b. 1.

Where is the antique glory now become,
That whylome wout in wemen to appeare?
Spenser, F. Q. iii. iv. 1.

I cannot joy, until I be resolved
Where our right valiant father is become. Shakspeare.

4. To go.
You shall have sometimes fair houses so full of glass, that one cannot tell where to become to be out of the sun. Bacon.
To BECOME. v. a. [from be or by, and epemen, Sax.] to please.

1. Applied to persons, to appear in a manner suitable to something.

If I become not a cart as well as another man, a plague on my bringing up. Shakspeare.

Why would I be a queen? because my face
Would wear the title with a better grace;
If I became it not, yet it would be Part of your duty then to flatter me. Dryden.

2. Applied to things, to be suitable to the person; to befit; to be congruous to the appearance, or character, or circumstances, in such a manner as to add grace; to be graceful.

She to her sire made humble reverence,
And bowed low, that her right well became,
And added grace unto her excellence. Spenser, F. Q.

I would I had some flowers of spring that might Become your time of day; and your's, and your's,
That wear upon your virgin branches yet
Your maidenheads, growing. Shaksp.

Yet be sad, good brothers;
For, to speak truth, it very well becomes you. Shakspeare.

Your dishonour
Mangles true judgement, and bereaves the state
Of that integrity which should become it. Shakspeare.

Wicherly was of my opinion, or rather, I of his: for it becomes me so to speak of so excellent a poet. Dryden.

He utterly rejected their fables concerning their gods, as not becoming good men, much less those which were worshipped for gods. Stillingfleet.

BECOMING. particip. adj. [from become.] That which pleases by an elegant propriety; graceful. It is sometimes used with the particle of; but generally without any government of the following words.

Of thee, kind boy, I ask no red and white
To make up my delight,
No odd becoming graces,

Black eyes, or little know not what, in faces. Suckling.
Their discourses are such as belong to their age, their calling, and their breeding; such as are becoming of them, and of them only. Dryden.

B E D

Yet some becoming boldness I may use;
I've well deserv'd, nor will he now refuse.

Dryden.

Make their pupils repeat the action, that they may correct what is constrained in it, till it be perfected into an habitual and becoming easiness.

Locke.

BECOM'ING. n. s. [from become.] Ornament. A word not now in use.

Sir, forgive me,

Since my becomings kill me, when they not
Eye well to you.

Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

BECOM'INGLY. † adv. [from becoming.] After a becoming or proper manner.

So truly and becomingly religious.

More, Co's. Cobb. Dedication.

That she may be not only commendable for the innocent privity of her heart, but unblamable for the elegance and decency of her hand; which useth these, as all things, not only lawfully, but expediently, piously, and prudently, conscientiously, and becomingly.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Hands. p. 74.

BECOM'INGNESS. † n. s. [from becoming. See To BECOME.] Decency; elegant congruity; propriety.

There is a natural bravery, excellency, and becomingness, in some actions, and there is a baseness and filthiness in others, whether we will or not. Hallywell's Discourses, p. 127.

Nor is the majesty of the divine government greater in its extent, than the becomingness hereof is in its manner and form.

Greiv.

Let us live with the utmost regard to that beauty and becomingness of virtue, which will make the conduct of a good Christian lovely in the eyes of all that behold it.

Delany, Christmas Sermon.

To BECU'RL.  v. a.* [from be and curl.] A ludicrous word.

Is the beau compelled against his will to practise winning airs before the glass, or employ for whole hours all the thought withinside his noddle to bepowder and becurl the outside.

Search's Freeman's, Foreknowledge, and Fate, p. 98.

BED. † n. s. [bed, Sax. budi, Goth. bedde, Dutch.]

1. Something made to sleep on.

Lying not erect, but hollow, which is in the making of the bed; or with the legs gathered up, which is in the posture of the body, is the more wholesome.

Bacon.

Rigour now is gone to bed,

And Advice with scrupulous head.

Milton.

Those houses then were caves, or homely sheds,

With twining ozers fen'd, and moss their beds.

Dryden.

2. Lodging; the convenience of a place to sleep in.

On my knees I beg,

That you'll vouchsafe me, raiment, bed, and food.

Shakspeare.

3. Marriage.

George, the eldest son of this second bed, was, after the death of his father, by the singular care and affection of his mother, well brought up.

Clarendon.

4. Bank of earth raised in a garden, Dr. Johnson says; but here bed, it should be added, is the participie of the Sax. bebbian, to spread.

Herbs will be tenderer and fairer, if you take them out of beds, when they are newly come up, and remove them into pots, with better earth.

Bacon.

5. The channel of a river, or any hollow.

So high as heav'd the tunid hills, so low Down sunk a hollow bottom, broad, and deep,
Capacious bed of waters.

Milton.

The great magazine for all kinds of treasure is supposed to be the bed of the Tiber. We may be sure, when the Romans lay under the apprehensions of seeing their city sacked by a barbarous enemy, that they would take care to bestow such of their riches that way, as could best bear the water.

Addison.

6. The place where any thing is generated, or reposited.

See hoary Albula's infected tide

O'er the warm bed of smoking sulphur glide.

Addison.

7. A layer; a stratum; a body spread over another.

B E D

I see no reason, but the surface of the land should be as regular as that of the water, in the first production of it; and the strata, or beds within, lie as even.

Burnet.

8. To bring to BED. To deliver of a child. It is often used with the particle of; as, she was brought to bed of a daughter.

Ten months after Florimel happen'd to wed,
And was brought in a laudable manner to bed.

Prior.

9. To make the BED. To put the bed in order after it has been used.

To BEDA'BBLE. v. a. [from dabble.] To wet; to be-sprinkle. It is generally applied to persons, in a sense including inconvenience

Never so weary, never so in woe,

Bedabbled with the dew, and torn with rars,

I can no further crawl, no further go.

Shakspeare.

To BEDA'FF.  v. a.* [One of our oldest verbs, from daff, a fool; which, Mr. Tyrwhitt says, is the Sax. daffe. The Icelandick daufr or dauft is certainly a stupid person; to which our word may be referred.

Chaucer ranks a cockney and a daff together.

"When this jape is told another day, I shall be holden a daffe or a cokenay," Reve's Tale. The word daff is yet used as a verb, meaning to daunt, in the north of England; and a daff fellow is a blockish or daunted fellow. It is to be observed that Urry, in the example of this old verb which I cite from Chaucer, reads adassid; but Mr. Tyrwhitt, from the best manuscripts, bedaffed.] To make a fool of.

Be not bedaffed for your innocence.

Clerk's Tale, ad fin.

1. A madhouse; a place appointed for the cure of lunacy.

They should have provided—an hundred bedlams to entertain pious, zealous, and outrageous puritans, who have lost their wits and senses. Spelman's Hist. of Sacrilege, ch. 6.

Is this the language of the Exchange, or of the Ensuring-Office? Once in a man's life, he might be content at Bedlam to hear such a rapture. Rymer on Tragedy, p. 5.

All ask, what crouds the tumult could produce—
Is Bedlam or the Commons all broke loose?

T. Warton's Newmarket.

2. A madman; a lunatick, an inhabitant of Bedlam.

Let's follow the old earl, and get the bedlam
To lead him where he would; his roguish madness
Allows itself to any thing. Shakspeare.

BE'DLAM.† adj. [from the noun.] Belonging to a madhouse; fit for a madhouse. Dr. Johnson might have added that this adjective, in the sense of mad, is applied to things as well as persons; and is of older authority than that of Shakspeare; for Huloet and Barret, in their dictionaries, give “a bedlam body;” which is rendered furiosus.

The country gives me proof and precedent
Of bedlam beggars, who with roaring voices,
Strike in their numb'd and mortify'd bare arms,
Pins, wooden pricks. Shakspeare.

They accounted them bedlam fools, who did not believe that the drunkenness of the German people was the true foundation and establishment of so many famous republicks as were now seen among them. Transl. of Boccacini, (1626,) p. 51.

This which follows is plain bedlam stuff; this is the demoniack legion indeed. Milton, Apol. for Smeatymn.

Life to the immortal, death to the perishing part of thee;
blessing to the rational, divine; cursing to the bedlam, brutish part of thee. Hammond's Sermons, p. 511.

BE'DLAMITE.† n. s. [from bedlam.] An inhabitant of Bedlam; a madman.

The nurse enters like a frantick bedlamite.

B. Jonson, New Inn, Argument.

If wild ambition in thy bosom reign,
Alas! thou boast'st thy sober sense in vain;
In these poor bedlamites thyself survey,
Thyself less innocently mad than they. Fitzgerald.

Had the Egyptian prince intended the ruin of this city of wicked bedlamites, he could not have taken a more effectual method to do it, than by such an ensnaring largess. Burke's Vind. of Natural Society.

BE'DMAKER. n. s. [from bed and make.] A person in the universities, whose office it is to make the beds, and clean the chambers.

I was deeply in love with my bedmaker, upon which I was rusticated for ever. Spectator.

BE'DMATE. n. s. [from bed and mate.] A bedfellow; one that partakes of the same bed.

Had I so good occasion to lie long
As you, prince Paris, nought but heav'nly business Should rob my bedmate of my company. Shakspeare.

BE'DMOULDING. } n. s. [from bed and mould.]

BE'DDING-MOULDING. } A term used by workmen, to signify those members in the cornice, which are placed below the coronet. Builder's Dict.

To BEDO'TE.* v. a. [from be and dote.] To make to dote. Obsolete.

To bedote this queene was their intent.

Chaucer, Leg. of Hips. ver. 180.

POST. n. s. [from bed and post.] The post at the corner of the bed, which supports the canopy.

I came the next day prepared, and placed her in a clear light, her head leaning to a bedpost, another standing behind, holding it steady. Wiseman's Surgery.

BE'DPRESSER. n. s. [from bed and press.] A heavy lazy fellow.

This sanguine coward, this bedpresser, this horseback-breaker, this huge hill of flesh. Shakspeare.

To BEDRA'GGLE. v. a. [from be and dragggle.] To soil the cloaths, by suffering them, in walking, to reach the dirt.

Poor Patty Blount, no more be seen Bedraggled in my walks so green. Swift.

To BEDRENCH. v. a. [from be and drench.] To drench; to soak; to saturate with moisture.

Far off from the mind of Bolingbroke
It is, such crimson to'pest should bedrench
The fresh green lap of fair king Richard's land. Shakspeare.

BE'DRID.† adj. [Sax. bedruba, clanicus; Teut. bedder, Germ. bed-reise.] Confined to the bed by age or sickness.

Norway, uncle of young Fontinbras,
Who, impotent and bedrid, scarcely hears
Of this his nephew's purpose. Shakspeare.

Lies he not bedrid? and, again, does nothing,
But what he did being childish? Shakspeare.

Now, as a myria:
Of ants durst th' emperor's lov'd snake invade;
The crawling galleys, seagulls, finny chips,
Might brave our pinnaces, now bedrid ships.

Donne, Poems, p. 145.

Hanging old men, who were bedrid, because they would not discover where their money was. Clarendon.

Infirm persons, when they come to be so weak as to be fixed to their beds, hold out many years; some have lain bedrid twenty years. Ray.

BE'DROOM.* n. s. [from bed and room.] A bed-chamber.

BE'DRITE. n. s. [from bed and rite.] The privilege of the marriage bed.

Whose vows are, that no bedrite shall be paid
Till Hymen's torch be lighted. Shakspeare.

To BEDRO'P.† v. a. [from be and drop.] To besprinkle; to mark with spots or drops; to speckle.

In clothis black bedropped all with tears.

Chaucer, Knight's Tale.

Not so thick swarm'd once the soil
Bedropt with blood of Gorgon. Milton.

Our plenteous streams a various race supply;
The silver eel in shining volumes roll'd,
The yellow carp, in scales bedropt with gold. Pope.

BE'DSIDE.* n. s. [from bed and side.] The side of the bed.

Last night he plaid his horrid game agen,
Came to my bed-side at the full of midnight,
And in his hand that fatal fearful cup. Middleton's Witch, ii. 2.

When I was thus dressed, I was carried to a bed-side.

Tatler, No. 15.

BE'DSTAFF. [bed and staff.] A wooden pin stuck anciently on sides of the bedstead to hold the cloaths from slipping on either side.

Hostess, accommodate us with a bedstaff.
B. Jonson, Every A Man in his Humour.

BE'DSTEAD. n. s. [from bed and stead.] The frame on which the bed is placed.

Chimnies with scorn rejecting smoke;
Stools, tables, chairs, and bedsteads broke. Swift.

BE'DSTRAW. n. s. [from bed and straw.] The straw laid under a bed to make it soft.

Fleas breed principally of straw or mats, where there hath been a little moisture; or the chamber or bedstraw kept close, and not aired. Bacon.

B E E

BEDSWE'NER. n. s. [from bed and swerve.] One that is false to the bed; one that ranges or swerves from one bed to another.

She's a bedswerner, even as bad as those,
That vulgar give the boldest titles to. Shakspeare.

BEDTIME. † n. s. [from bed and time; formerly bedtide, from the Sax. bedtid.] The hour of rest; sleeping time.

What masks, what dances shall we have,
To wear away this long age of three hours,
Between our after-supper and bedtime? Shakspeare.

After evening repasts, till bedtime, their thoughts will be best taken up in the easy grounds of religion. Milton on Education.

The scouring drunkard, if he does not fight
Before his bedtime, takes no rest that night. Dryden.

To BEDU'CK.  v. a.* [from be and duck.] To put under water.

The varlet saw, when to the flood he came,
How without stop or stay he fierly leapt,
And deepe himself beducked in the same. Spenser, A. Q. ii. vi. 42.

To BEDU'NG. † v. a. [from be and dung.] To cover, or manure with dung.

Leaving all but his [Goliath's] head to bedung that earth, which had lately shaken at his terror.

Bp. Hall, Causes of Cons. ii. 2.

If they will fall quaking and groaning intolerably, and appear in the streets, as some have done, soundly be-dunged with calumny and filth; such may make some people believe any Romish tenets as revelations from God.

Puller's Moderation of the Ch. of England, p. 485.

To BEDU'SK.  v. a.* [from be and dusk.] To smutch; to make brown, swart, or blackish. Not now in use. Cotgrave, in V. Basaner.

To BEDU'ST. † v. a. [from be and dust.] To sprinkle with dust. Sherecord.

BE'DWARD. adv. [from bed and ward.] Toward bed. In heart

As merry, as when our nuptial-day was done,
And tapers burnt to bedward. Shakspeare.

To BEDWA'RF. v. a. [from be and dwarf.] To make little; to hinder in growth; to stunt.

'Tis shrinking, not close weaving, that hath thus
In mind and body both bedwarfed us. Donne.

BE'DWORK. n. s. [from bed and work.] Work done in bed; work performed without toil of the hands.

The still and mental parts,
That do contrive how many hands shall strike,
When fitness call them on, and know, by measure
Of their observant toil, the enemy's weight;
Why this hath not a finger's dignity:
They call this bedwork, mappery, closet war. Shakspeare.

To BEDYE.  v. a.* [of be and dye.] To stain; to colour.

Fayre goddesse, lay that furious fitt asyde,
Till I of warres and bloody Mars doe sing,
And Briton fields with Sarazin blood bedyde.
Spenser, F. Q. i. xi. 7.

BEE. n. s. [beo, Saxon.]

1. The animal that makes honey, remarkable for its industry and art.

So work the honey bees,
Creatures that, by a ruling nature, teach
The art of order to a peopled kingdom. Shakspeare.

From the Moorish camp,
There has been heard a distant humming noise,
Like bees disturb'd, and arming in their hives. Dryden.

A company of poor insects, whereof some are bees, delighted with flowers, and their sweetness; others beetles, delighted with other viands. Locke.

2. An industrious and careful person. This signification is only used in familiar language.

BEE-EATER. n. s. [from bee and eat.] A bird that feeds upon bees.

VOL. I.

BEE-FLOWER. n. s. [from bee and flower.] A species of foolstones. Miller.

BEE-GARDEN. n. s. [from bee and garden.] A place to set hives of bees in.

A convenient and necessary place ought to be made choice of, for your apiary, or bee-garden. Mortimer's Husbandry.

BEE-HIVE. † n. s. [from bee and hive.] The case, or box, in which bees are kept.

Drones suck not eagles' blood, but rob beehives.
Shakspeare, K. Hen. VI. P. II.

I find, in the school of nature, no better emblem of this commendable resignation of ourselves to publick service, than the beehive.
Whitlock's Manners of the English, p. 375.

Or rob the beehive of its golden hoard.

Tickell, to a Lady before Marriage.

BEE-MASTER. n. s. [from bee and master.] One that keeps bees.

They that are bee-masters, and have not care enough of them, must not expect to reap any considerable advantage by them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

BEECH. n. s. [bece, or boc, Saxon; fagus.]

There is but one species of this tree at present known, except two varieties, with striped leaves. It will grow to a considerable stature, though the soil be stony and barren; as also, upon the declivities of mountains. The shade of this tree is very injurious to plants, but is believed to be very salubrious to human bodies. The timber is of great use to turners and joiners. The mast is very good to fatten swine and deer. Miller.

Black was the forest, thick with beech it stood. Dryden.

Nor is that sprightly wildness in their notes,

Which, clear and vigorous, warbles from the beech. Thomson.

BEECHEN. adj. [beecen, Sax.] Consisting of the wood of the beech; belonging to the beech.

With diligence he'll serve us when we dine,
And in plain beechen vessels fill our wine.

Congreve, Jew. Sat. xi.

BEEF. † n. s. [beuf, French.]

1. The flesh of black cattle prepared for food.

What say you to a piece of beef and mustard? Shakspeare.
The fat of roasted beef falling on birds, will baste them. Swift.

2. An ox, bull, or cow, considered as fit for food. In this sense it has the plural beeves; the singular is seldom found, Dr. Johnson says. The passage in Shakspeare, however, in which he has given beeves, has beefs. This word, beef, was the common language, as Mr. Malone also has observed, for an ox or cow in the time of queen Elizabeth; since which time it has been disused in England, but was then carried to Scotland, and is still retained there.

These are the beasts which ye shall eat; the beef, the sheep, and the goat. Deut. xiv. 4. (Tr. of 1578.)

A pound of man's flesh, taken from a man,
Is not so estimable, profitable neither,
As flesh of muttons, beefs, or goats.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice, 3.

Alcinous slew twelve sheep, eight white-tooth'd swine,
Two crook-naunch'd beeves. Chapman's Odyssey.

There was not any captain, but had credit for more victuals than we spent there; and yet they had of me fifty beeves among them. Sir Walter Raleigh's Apology.

On hides of beeves, before the palace gate,
Sad spoils of luxury! the suitors sate. Pope.

BEEF. † adj. [from the substantive, Dr. Johnson says; but it is only the substantive used adjectively, as Mr. Mason has observed; which is common enough in our language.] Consisting of the flesh of black cattle.

If you are employed in marketing, do not accept of a treat of a beef stake, and a pot of ale, from the butcher. Swift.

BEEF-EATER. † n. s. [from beef and eat, because the commons is beef when on waiting. Mr. Steevens derives it thus: Beef-eater may come from beaufetier, one who attends at the sideboard, which was anciently placed in a beaufet. The business of the beef-eaters was, and perhaps is still, to attend the king at meals. This derivation is corroborated by the circumstance of the beef-eaters having a hasp suspended to their belts for the reception of keys.] A yeoman of the guard.

BEEF-WITTED. adj. [from beef and wit.] Dull; stupid; heavy-headed.

Thou mongrel, beef-witted lord! Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

BEELD.* n. s. [Sax. behlidan, (Gen. xxix. 3.) to secure with a covering. Beeld is common in the north of England for shelter.] Protection; refuge.

I will or bear, or be myself, thy shield;

And, to defend thy life, will lose my own:

This breast, this bosom soft, shall be thy beeld

'Gainst storms of arrows. Fairfax, Tasso, xvi. 49.

BE'EMOL. n. s. This word I have found only in the example, and know nothing of the etymology, unless it be a corruption of bymodule, from by and modulus, a note; that is, a note out of the regular order.

There be intervenient in the rise of eight, in tones, two beemols, or half notes; so as, if you divide the tones equally, the eight is but seven whole and equal notes. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

BEEN. † [beon, Saxon.]

1. The participle preterite of To Be.

Enough that virtue fill'd the space between,
Prov'd by the ends of being to have been.

Pope.

2. The present tense plural of To Be. Obsolete.

Such earthly metals soon consumed beene.

Spenser, F. Q. i. vii. 33.

BEER. † n. s. [bir, Welsh, bier, Germ. beap, Sax. bar, Goth. barley.] Liquor made of malt and hops. It is distinguished from ale, either by being older or smaller.

Put them all together, they will scarce

Serve to beg single beer in. Braun, and Fl. Captain, ii. 1.

Try clarifying with almonds in new beer. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Flow, Welsted! flow, like thine inspirer, beer;

Though stale, nor ripe; tho' thin, yet never clear;

So sweetly mawkish, and so smoothly dull;

Heady, not strong; and foaming, though not full. Pope.

BEER-BARREL. n. s. A barrel which holds beer.

Why, of that loan, whereto he was converted, might they not stop a beer-barrel? Shakspeare, Hamlet.

BEERHOUSE.* n. s. [from beer and house.] The sold term for what is now alehouse.

What woman (even among the drunken Almshouses) is suffered to follow her in beer into the alehouse or beerhouse?

Gro. de's Delicate Diet for Drunkards, (1576).

BE'ESTINGS. See BRESTINGS.

BEE. n. s. [beta, Lat.] The name of a plant.

The species are; 1. The common white beet.

2. The common green beet. 3. The common red beet. 4. The turnep-rooted red beet. 5. The great red beet. 6. The yellow beet. 7. The Swiss or Chard beet. Miller.

BEETLE. n. s. [bytel, Saxon.]

1. An insect distinguished by having hard cases or sheaths, under which he folds his wings.

They are as shards, and he their beetle.

Shakspeare.

The poor beetle, that we tread upon,

His corporal sufferance finds a pang as great,

As when a giant dies.

Shakspeare.

Others come sharp of sight, and too provident for that which concerned their own interest, but as blind as beetles in foreseeing this great and common danger. Knollen, Hist. of the Turks.

B E F

A spot there was with hoary moss o'ergrown,
The clasping ivies up the ruin'd creep,
And there the bat and drowsy beetle sleep.

Garth.

The butterflies and beetles are such numerous tribes, that I believe, in our own native country alone, the species of each kind may amount to one hundred and fifty, or more. Ray.

2. A heavy mallet, or wooden hammer, with which wedges are driven, and pavements rammed.

If I do, fillip me with a three man beetle.

Shakspeare.

When, by the help of wedges and beetles, an image is cleit out of the trunk of some well-grown tree; yet, after all the skill of artificers to set forth such a divine block, it cannot, one moment, secure itself from being eaten by worms, or defiled by birds, or cut in pieces by axes. Stillingfleet.

TO BE'ETLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To jut out; to hang over.

What if it tempt you toward the flood, my lord?

Or to the dreadful summit of the cliff,

That beetle o'er his base into the sea?

Shakspeare.

Or where the hawk,

High in the beetling cliff his airy builds.

Thomson.

BE'ETLEBROW.* n. s. [from beetle and brow.] A prominent brow.

He had a beetle-brow,

A down-look, middle stature, with black hair.

Sir R. Fanshawe, Tr. of Pastor Fido, p. 175.

They make a wit of their insipid friend;

His blubber-lips and beetle-brows commid. Dryden, Jur. Sat. iii.

BE'ETLEBROWED. † adj. [from beetle and brow.] Having prominent brows. Dr. Johnson cites an example from Swift; but the expression is of great antiquity, as it occurs in the Visions of Pierce Plowman; and I think Dryden, in his adoption of beetle-brows, just cited, had not forgotten the passage.

He was beetle-browed and baberlypped also. Vis. of P. Plowman.

A beetle-browed sullen face makes a palace as smoaky as an Irish hut. Howell's Letters, ii. 25.

Enquire for the beetle-browed critick, &c.

Swift.

BE'ETLEHEADED. † adj. [from beetle and head.] Logger-headed; wooden headed; having a head stupid like the head of a wooden beetle. Hulot uses the phrase "a beetle-headed fellow," long before Shakspeare.

A whorson, beetle-headed, flap-ear'd knave. Shakspeare.

BE'ETLESTOCK. † n. s. [from beetle and stock.] The handle of a beetle.

To crouch, to please, to be a beetle-stock

Of thy great master's will. Spenser, M. Hubbard's Tale.

BE'ETRAVE. } A plant.

BE'ETRADISH. }

BE'EYES. n. s. [The plural of beef.] Black cattle; oxen.

One way, a band select from forage drives

A herd of beeyes, fair oxen, and fair kine,

From a fat meadow ground.

Milton, P. L.

Others make good the paucity of their breed with the length and duration of their days; whereof there want not examples in animals uniparous, first, in bisculous or cloven-hoofed, as camels; and beeyes, whereof there is above a million annually slain in England. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Beeyes, at his touch, at once to jelly turn,

And the huge boar is shrunk into an urn. Pope, Dunciad.

TO BEFA'LL. † v. n. [Sax. bepellan, participle be-fallen.] It befell, it hath befallen.]

1. To happen to: used generally of ill.

Let me know

The worst that may befall me in this case. Shakspeare.

Other doubt possesses me, lest harm

Befall thee, sever'd from me.

Milton.

This venerable person, who probably heard our Saviour's prophecy of the destruction of Jerusalem, drew his congregation out of those unparalleled calamities, which befall his countrymen. Addison on the Chr. Religion.

This disgrace has befallen them, not because they deserved it, but because the people lost new faces. Addison, Freeholder.

2. To happen to, as good or neutral.

B E F

Bion asked an envious man, that was very sad, what harm had befallen unto him, or what good had befallen unto another man? Bacon, Apophthegms.

No man can certainly conclude God's love or hatred to any person, from what befalls him in this world. Tillotson.

3. To happen ; to come to pass.

But since the affairs of men are still uncertain, Let's reason with the worst that may befall. Shakspeare.

I have reveal'd
This discord which befall, and was in heaven
Among the angelick powers. Milton, P. I.

4. It is used sometimes with to before the person to whom any thing happens : this is rare.

Some great mischief hath befallen
To that meek man. Milton, P. I.

5. To befall of: To become of; to be the state or condition of: a phrase little used.

Do me the favour to dilate at full,
What hath befall'n of them, and thee, till now. Shakspeare.

- To BEF'LT. v. a. [from be and fit.] To suit ; to be suitable to ; to become.

Blind is his love, and best befits the dark. Shakspeare.
Out of my sight, thou serpent ! — that name best

Befts thee, with him leagu'd ; thyself as false. Milton, P. L.

I will bring you where she sits,
Clad in splendour, us befts
Her deity. Milton, P. L.

Thou, what befts the new lord mayor,
Art anxiously inquisitive to know. Dryden.

- To BEFO'AM. * v. a. [from foam.] To cover with foam.

At last the dropping wings, befoam'd all o'er
With flaggy heaviness their master bore. Eusden, On. Met. iv.

- To BEFO'OL† v. a. [from be and fool.] To infatuate ; to fool ; to deprive of understanding ; to lead into error.

Go then, and befool yourselves, for confusedly opposing common sense and reason. Mountagu, App. to Cæs. p. 185.

To be so pitifully baffled and befooled. Hammond, Sermon. p. 567.

Men befool themselves infinitely, when, by venting a few sighs, they will needs persuade themselves that they have repented. South.

Jeroboam thought policy the best piety, though in nothing more befooled ; the nature of sin being not only to defile, but to infatuate. South.

- BEFO'RE. prep. [beforehand, Sax.]

1. Farther onward in place.

Their common practice was to look no further before them than the next line ; whence it will follow that they can drive to no certain point. Dryden.

2. In the front of ; not behind.

Who shall go
Before them in a cloud, and pillar of fire :
By day a cloud, by night a pillar of fire,
To guide them in their journey, and remove Behind them, while the obdurate king pursues. Milton.

3. In the presence of: noting authority or conquest.

Great queen of gathering clouds,
See we fall before thee !
Prostrate we adore thee. Dryden.

The Alps and Pyrenean sink before him. Addison.

4. In the presence of: noting respect.

We see that blushing, and the casting down of the eyes tell,
are more when we come before many. Bacon.

They represent our poet betwixt a farmer and a courtier, when he dress'd himself in his best habit, to appear before his patron. Dryden.

5. In sight of.

Before the eyes of both our armies here,
Let us not wrangle. Shakspeare.

6. Under the cognizance of: noting jurisdiction.

If a suit be begun before an archdeacon, the ordinary may license the suit to an higher court. Ayliffe.

7. In the power of: noting the right of choice.

The world was all before them, where to chuse
Their place of rest, and Providence their guide. Milton.

B E F

Give us this evening ; thou hast morn and night,
And all the year before thee for delight. Dryden.

He hath put us in the hands of our own counsel.
death, prosperity and destruction are before us. Life and Tillotson.

8. By the impulse of something behind.

Her part, poor soul ! seeming as burdened
With lesser weight, but not with lesser woe,
Was carried with more speed before the wind. Shakspeare.

Hurried by fate, he cries, and borne before
A furious wind, we leave the faithful shore. Dryden.

9. Preceding in time.

Particular advantages it has before all the books which have appeared before it in this kind. Dryden.

10. In preference to.

We should but presume to determine which should be the fittest till we see he hath chosen some one, which one we may then boldly say to be the fittest, because he hath taken it before the rest. Hooker.

We think poverty to be infinitely desirable before the torments of covetousness. Bp. Taylor.

11. Prior to ; nearer to any thing : as, the eldest son is before the younger in succession.

12. Superiour to : as he is before his competitors both in right and power.

BEFO'RE. adv.

1. Sooner than ; earlier in time.

Heav'nly born,
Before the hills appear'd, or fountain flow'd,
Thou with eternal wisdom didst converse. Milton.

Before two months their orb with light adorn,
If heav'n allow me life, I will return. Dryden.

2. In time past.

Such a plenteous crop they bore
Of purest and well winnow'd grain,
As Britain never new before. Dryden.

3. In sometime lately past.

I shall resume somewhat which hath been before said, touching the question beforegoing. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

4. Previously to ; in order to.

Before this elaborate treatise can become of use to my country, two points are necessary. Swift.

The peaceful citis of th' Ausonian shore,
Lull'd in her ease, and undisturb'd before,
Are all on fire. Dryden.

6. Already.

You tell me, mother, what I knew before,
The Phrygian fleet is landed on the shore. Dryden.

7. Farther onward in place.

Thou'rt so far before,
The swiftest wing of recompence is slow
To overtake thee. Shakspeare

BEFO'REHAND. adv. [from before and hand.]

1. In a state of anticipation, or preoccupation ; sometimes with the particle with.

Quoth Hudibras, I am beforehand
In that already, with your command. Hu.

Your soul has been beforehand with your body,
And drunk so deep a draught of promis'd bliss,
She slumbers o'er the cup. Dryden.

I have not room for many reflections ; the last cited author has been beforehand with me, in its proper moral. Addison.

2. Previously ; by way of preparation, or preliminary.

His profession is to deliver precepts necessary to eloquent speech ; yet so, that they which receive them, may be taught beforehand the skill of speaking. Hooker.

When the lawyers brought extravagant bills, Sir Roger used to bargain beforehand, to cut off a quarter of a yard in any part of the bill. Arbuthnot, Hist. of John Bull.

3. Antecedently ; aforesometimes.

It would be resisted by such as had beforehand resisted the general proofs of the gospel. Atterbury.

4. In a state of accumulation, or so as that more has been received than expended.

B E G

Stranger's house is at this time rich, and much beforehand;
for it hath laid up revenue these thirty-seven years. Bacon.

5. At first; before any thing is done.

What is a man's contending with insuperable difficulties, but the rolling of Sisyphus's stone up the hill, which is soon beforehand to return upon him again? L'Estrange.

BEFO'RETIME. adv. [from before and time.] Formerly; of old time.

Beforetime in Israel, when a man went to enquire of God, thus he spake. 1 Samuel, ix. 9.

To BEFO'RTUNE. v. n. [from be and fortune.] To happen to; to betide.

I give consent to go along with you;

Reeking as little what betideth me,

As much I wish all good befortune you. Shakspeare.

To BEFO'UL. v. a. [Sax. berýlan.] To make foul; to soil; to dirt.

To BEFRI'END. v. a. [from be and friend.] To favour; to be kind to; to countenance; to shew friendship to; to benefit.

2. To take any thing for granted, without evidence or proof.

We have not begged any principles or suppositions, for the proof of this; but taking that common ground, which both Moses and all antiquity present. Burnet.

To BEGET. v. a. begot, or begat; I have begotten, or begot. [bezettan, Saxon, to obtain; Goth. gela, and bigat, S. John, x. 9. See To GER.]

1. To generate; to procreate; to become the father of, as children.

But first come, ye fair hours, which were begot
In Jove's sweet paradise, of day and night,
Which do the seasons of the year allot. Spenser, Epithal.

I talk of dreams,
Which are the children of an idle brain,
Begot of nothing but vain phantasy. Shakspeare.

Who hath begotten me these, seeing I have lost my children, and am desolate? Isaiah, xlix. 21.

'Twas he the noble Claudian race begat. Dryden.

Love is begot by fancy, bred
By ignorance, by expectation fed. Glanville.

2. To produce, as effects.

If to have done the thing you gave in charge,
Begot you happiness, be happy then;
For it is done. Shakspeare.

My whole intention was to begot, in the minds of men, magnificent sentiments of God and his works. Cheyne.

His mother Martha by his father John. Spectator.

BEGE'TTER. n. s. [from beget.] He that procreates, or begets; the father.

For what their prowess gain'd, the law declares

Is to themselves alone, and to their heirs;

No share of that goes back to the begetter, Dryden.

But if the son fights well, and plunders better—

Men continue the race of mankind, commonly without the intention, and often against the consent and will of the beget-

ter. Locke.

BE'GGABLE.  adj.* [from beg.] That which may be obtained by begging.

He finds it his best way to be always craving, because he lights many times upon things that are disposed of for not beg- gable. Butler's Characters.

BE'GGAR. n. s. [from beg.] It is more properly written begger; but the common orthography is re- tained, because the derivatives all preserve the a, Dr. Johnson says. They certainly now ~~do~~, but formerly the principal derivative, beggary, was written beggery. Milton, Hammond, and other excellent writers so spelt it.]

1. One who lives upon alms; one who has nothing but what is given him.

He raiseth up the poor out of the dust, and lifteth up the beggar from the dunghill, to set them among princes. Sam.

We see the whole equipage of a beggar so drawn by Homer, as even to retain a nobleness and dignity. Broom.

2. One who supplicates for any thing; a petitioner; for which, beggar is a harsh and contemptuous term.

What subjects will precarious kings regard?

A beggar speaks too softly to be heard. Dryden.

3. One who assumes what he does not prove.

These shameful beggars of principles, who give this precarious account of the original of things, assume to themselves to be men of reason. Tillotson.

To BE'GGAR. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To reduce to beggary; to impoverish.

Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,
And beggar'd your's for ever. Shakspeare.

They shall spoil the clothiers wool, and beggar the present spinners. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

The miser
With heav'n, for twopence, cheaply wipes his score,
Lifts up his eyes, and hastes to beggar more. Gay.

2. To deprive.

Necessity, of matter beggar'd,
Will nothing stick our persons to arraign
In ear and ear. Shakspeare.

3. To exhaust.

For her person,
It beggar'd all description; she did lie
In her pavilion, cloth of gold, of tissue,
O'er-picturing Venus. Shakspeare.

4. To drive by impoverishing, with out.

A wicked administration may propose to beggar them out of their sturdiness. Bolingbroke, Diss. on Parties, L. 19.

BEGGARLINESS.† n. s. [from beggarly.] The state of being beggarly; meanness; poverty.

BEGGARLY. adj. [from beggar.] Mean; poor; indigent; in the condition of a beggar: used both of persons and things.

I ever will, though he do shake me off
To beggarly divorcement, love him dearly. Shakspeare.
A beggarly account of empty boxes. Shakspeare.

Who, that beheld such a bankrupt beggarly fellow as Cromwell entering the parliament house, with a thread bare torn cloak, and greasy hat, could have suspected, that he should, by the murder of one king, and the banishment of another, ascend the throne? South.

The next town has the reputation of being extremely poor and beggarly. Addison on Italy.

Corusodes, by extreme parsimony, saved thirty-four pounds out of a beggarly fellowship. Swift.

BEGGARLY. adv. [from beggar.] Meanly; despicably; indigently.

Touching God himself, hath he revealed, that it is his delight to dwell beggarly? and that he taketh no pleasure to be worshipped, saving only in poor cottages? Hooker.

BEGGARY. n. s. [from beggar.] Indigence; poverty in the utmost degree.

On he brought me into so bare a house, that it was the picture of miserable leppiness and rich beggary. Sidney.

While I am a beggar, I will rail,
And say there is no sin, but to be rich:
And being rich, my virtue then shall be,
To say there is no vice, but beggary. Shakspeare.

We must become not only poor for the present, but reduced, by further mortgages, to a state of beggary for endless years to come. Swift.

BEGILT.* part. adj. [from be and gild.] Gilded.

Six maids attending on her, attired with buckram bridelaces begilt, white sleeves, and stammel petticoats, drest after the cleanliest country guise. B. Jonson, Underwoods.

TO BEGIN. v. n. I began, or begun; I have begun. [beginnan, Sax. from be, or by to, and gan, gan, or zan, to go.]

1. To enter upon something new: applied to persons.

Begin every day to repent; not that thou shouldst at all defer it: but all that is past ought to seem little to thee, seeing it is so in itself. Begin the next day with the same zeal, fear, and humility, as if thou hadst never begun before. Bp. Taylor.

2. To commence any action or state; to do the first act, or first part of an act; to make the first step from not doing to doing.

They begin at the ancient men which were before the house. Ezekiel, ix. 6.

By peace we will begin. Shakspeare.

I'll sing of heroes and of kings;
Begin my muse. Cowley.

Of these no more you hear him speak;
He now begins upon the Greek:
These rang'd and show'd, shall, in their turns,
Remain obscure as in their urns. Prior.

Beginning from the rural gods, his hand
Was liberal to the powers of high command.

Rapt into future times, the bard begun,
A virgin shall conceive. Pope.

3. To enter upon existence; as, the world began; the practice began.

I am as free as nature first made man
Ere the base laws of servitude began,
When wild in woods the noble savage ran. Dryden.

4. To have its origin.

And thus the hard and stubborn ace of man,
From animated rock and flint began. Blackmore.
From Nimrod first the savage chase began;
A mighty hunter, and his game was man. Pope.

5. To take rise; to commence.

Judgement must begin at the house of God. 1 Peter, iv. 17.
The song begun from Jove. Dryden.

All began,
All ends in love of God, and love of man. Pope.

6. To come into act.

Now and then a sigh he stole,
And tears began to flow. Dryden.

TO BEGIN. v. a.

1. To do the first act of any thing; to pass from not doing to doing, by the first act.

Ye nymphs of Solyma, begin the song. Pope.
They have been awaked, by these awful scenes, to begin religion; and, afterwards, their virtue has improved itself into more refined principles, by divine grace. Watts.

2. To trace from any thing as the first ground.

The apostle begins our knowledge in the creatures, which leads us to the knowledge of God. Locke.

3. To begin with. To enter upon; to fall to work upon.

A lesson which requires so much time to learn, had need be early begun with. Government of the Tongue.

BEGIN.* n. s. Used by Spenser for beginning. Obsolete.

Let no whit thee dismay
The hard beginne that meets thee in the dore. Spenser, F. Q. iii. iii. 21.

BEGINNER. n. s. [from begin.]

1. He that gives the first cause, or original, to any thing.

Thus heaping crime on crime, and grief on grief,
To loss of love adjoining loss of friend,
I meant to purge both with a third mischief,
And, in my woe's beginner, it to end. Spenser, F. Q.

Socrates maketh Ignatius, the bishop of Antioch, the first beginner thereof, even under the apostles themselves. Hooker.

2. An unexperienced attempter; one in his rudiments; a young practitioner.

Palladius, behaving himself nothing like a beginner, brought the honour to the Iberian side. Sidney.

They are, to beginners, an easy and familiar introduction; a mighty augmentation of all virtue and knowledge in such as are entered before. Hooker.

I have taken a list of several hundred words in a sermon of a new beginner, which not one hearer could possibly understand. Swift.

BEGINNING. n. s. [from begin.]

1. The first original or cause.

Wherever we place the beginning of motion, whether from the head or the heart, the body moves and acts by a consent of all its parts. Swift.

2. The entrance into act, or being.

In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth. Genesis, i. 1.

3. The state in which any thing first is.

Youth, what man's age is like to be, doth show;
We may our end by our beginning know. Denham.

4. The rudiments, or first grounds or materials.

By viewing nature, nature's handmaid, art,
Makes mighty things from small beginnings grow:
Thus fishes first to shipping did impart,

Their tail the rudder, and their head the prow. Dryden.

The understanding is passive; and whether or not it will have these beginnings, and materials of knowledge, is not in its own power. Locke.

5. The first part of any thing.

The causes and designs of an action, are the beginning; the effects of these causes, and the difficulties that are met with in the execution of these designs, are the middle; and the unravelling and resolution of these difficulties, are the end. Schell is

BEGINNINGLESS.* adj. [from beginning.] is so; and to hath no beginning.

Melchisedek, in a typical or mystical .c. Vocab. 1514.] and endless in his existence.

To suppose one continued being oslived under her parents duration, neither self-existent and wn will, the foregoing having its existence founded in any directly absurd and contradictory. Cl.

B E G

To BEGIRD. † v. a. I begirt, or begirded. [I have begirt.
Sax. bezynpan, Goth. bigardans, S. Luke xvii. 8.]

1. To bind with a girdle.
2. To surround; to encircle; to encompass.

Begird the Almighty throne, Beseeching, or besieging Milton, P. L. ii. 213.

Or should she confident,
As sitting queen adorn'd on beauty's throne,
Descend, with all her winning charms begirt,
To enamour. Milton, P. L. v. 868.

At home surrounded by a servile crowd,
Prompt to abuse, and in detraction loud:
Abroad begirt with men, and swords, and spears;
His very state acknowledging his fears. Prior.

3. To shut in with a siege; to beleaguer; to block up.
It was so closely begirt before the king's march into the west, that the counsel humbly desired his majesty, that he would relieve it. Clarendon.

To BEGIRT. † v. a. [This is, I think, only a corruption of begird; perhaps by the printer, Dr. Johnson says; but he is mistaken; begirt being no corruption in excellent writers, as my examples from Mede and Milton prove.] To begird.

And, Lentulus, begirt you Pompey's house,
To seize his sons alive; for they are they B. Jonson.
Must make our peace with him.

Both significations suit well to an army; and the latter, that which beleaguers and begirts a city or fort besieged.

Mede on Daniel, p. 41.
Was it that he who came to abrogate the burden of the law, not the equity, should put this yoke upon a blameless person, to league himself in chains with a begirting mischief, not to separate till death Milton, Tetrachordon.

BEGLERBEG. † n. s. [Turkish.] The chief governour of a province among the Turks; or rather of provinces, as Mr. Mason has rightly observed.

Next to the first vizier are the several beglerbeks, having under their jurisdiction many provinces. Ricaut.

To BEGNAW. † v. a. [Sax. begnagan. Mr. Mason has inadvertently given this word as beknaw, charging Dr. Johnson with an omission, where his example from Shakspeare's K. Richard, cited by Mr. Mason to exemplify beknaw which has no real existence, illustrates the genuine word begnaw.]
To bite; to eat away; to corrode; to nibble.

His horse is stark spoiled with the staggers, begnawn with the bots, waid in the back, and shoulder-shotten.

Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.
The worm of conscience still begnaw thy soul.

BEGO'NE. † interject. Only a coalition of the words be gone, Dr. Johnson says. But it is the old participle also for gone; and we yet use "woe begone," i. e. far gone in woe; and in the dialect of Norfolk and Suffolk, begone is decayed or worn. Go away; hence; haste away.

I was a lusty one,
And faire, and riche, and yonge, and well begone.
Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Prol.

Begone! the goddess cries, with stern disdain;
Begone! nor dare the hallow'd stream to stain.
She fled, for ever banish'd from the train. Addison.

BEGORE. † part. adj. [from be and gore.] Smeared
Love is fore.

By ignorance, ten thousand monsters foule abhor'd
2. To produce, at gaping griesly, all begor'd.
If to have done the Spenser, F. Q. iv. xi. 3.

Beget you happiness, be
For it is done. participle passive of the verb beget.

My whole intention was wast begot of them. Eccles. vii. 28.
nificent sentiments of Gottiphatos the brave,

3. To produce, as acc. The ban slave. Dryde

B E G

To BEGRAVE. † [Teut. begraven, from grar, a grave.]
Frequently used by Gower.

1. To bury. Obsolete.

They arrive

Where that the body was begrave

With worship.

Gower, Conf. Am. b. 4.

2. To engrave. Obsolete also.

[He] stood upon a foote on highte
Of borned golde; and with great sleight
Of workmanship it was begrave.

Ibid. b. i.

To BEGREASE. † v. a. [from be and grease.] To soil or dawb with unctuous or fat matter. Minsheu.

To BEGRIME. † v. a. [from be and grime. See GRIME and GRIM.] To soil with dirt deep impressed; to soil in such a manner that the natural hue cannot easily be recovered.

They did endeavour to purge it [religion] of all such filth as you and your predecessors had begrimed it with.

Cronley's Deliberate Answer, &c. (1587) fol. 80.

Her name that was as fresh

As Dian's visage, is now begrin'd, and black

As my own face.

Shakspeare.

BEGRIMER. † n. s. [from begrime.] That which soils or spots a thing. Sherwood.

To BEGRUDGE. † v. a. [from be and grudge. See
To GRUDGE.] To envy.

None will have cause to begrudge the beauty or height of corner stones, when beholding them to beare a double degree of weight in the building. Standard of Equality, § 25.

To BEGUILE. v. a. [from be and guile.]

1. To impose upon; to delude; to cheat.

This I say, lest any man should beguile you with enticing words. Colossians, ii. 4.

The serpent me beguil'd, and I did eat! Milton, P. L.

Whosoever sees a man, who would have beguiled, and imposed upon him, by making him believe a lie, he may truly say, that is the man who would have ruined me. South.

2. To deceive; to evade.

Is wretchedness depriv'd that benefit,
To end itself by death? 'Tis yet some comfort,
When misery could beguile the tyrant's rage,
And frustrate his proud will. Shakspeare.

3. To deceive pleasantly; to amuse.

Sweet, leave me here awhile;
My spirits grow dull, and fain I would beguile
The tedious day with sleep. Shakspeare.

With these sometimes she doth her time beguile;
These do by fits her phantasy possess. Sir J. Daines.

To BEGUILTY. † v. a. [from be and guilty.] To render guilty.

By easy commutations of publick penance for a private pecuniary mulct, [thou] dost at once beguilty thine own conscience with sordid bribery, and embolden the adulterer to commit that sin again without fear, from which he hath once escaped without shame, or so much as valuable loss.

Bp. Sanderson, Sermons, p. 275.

BEGUIN. † n. s. [Fr. beguin, low Lat. beghina.
V. Du Cange.] A nun of a particular order, supposed to be so named from beguin, old Fr., a kind of coif, or head-dress; or begine, Germ. Matthew of Westminster says that the order of beguins was very common in Germany. Cotgrave says, that they "commonly be all old, or well in years," in V. BEGUIN. This word is given on account of bigot, which see.

Young wanton wenches, and beguins, nuns, and naughty priests.

World of Wonders, (1668) p. 184.

BEGUN. † The participle passive of begin, Dr.
Johnson says; but the example which he gives, proves it to be merely the preterperfect tense of begin. [Sax. begunne.]

But thou bright morning star, thou rising sun,
Which in these latter times has brought to light
Those mysteries, that, since the world began,
Lay hid in darkness and eternal night.

Sir J. Davies.

BEHA'LF. † n. s. [This word Skinner derives from half, and interprets it, for my half; as, for my part. It seems to me rather corrupted from behoof, profit; the pronunciation degenerating easily to behave; which, in imitation of other words so sounded, was written, by those who knew not the etymology, behalf. This remark of Dr. Johnson approaches nearly to the genuine Sax. behere, which escaped him.]

1. Favour; cause favoured; we say in behalf, but for the sake.

He was in confidence with those who designed the destruction of Strafford; against whom he had contracted some prejudice, in the behalf of his nation. Clarendon.

Were but my heart as naked to thy view,
Marcus would see it bleed in his behalf. Addison.
Never was any nation blessed with more frequent interpositions of Divine Providence in its behalf. Atterbury.

2. Vindication; support.

He might, in his presence, defy all Arcadian knights, in the behalf of his mistress's beauty. Sidney.

Rest the fiend,
Or in behalf of man, or to invade
Vacant possession, some new trouble raise. Milton.

Others believe, that by the two Fortunes, were meant prosperity or affliction; and produce, in their behalf, an ancient monument. Addison on Italy.

To BEHA'PPEN. * v. n. [from be and happen.] To happen to; to befall.

This is the greatest shame, and foulest scorn,
Which unto any knight bechappen may,
To lose the badge that should his deeds display.

Spenser, F. Q. v. xi. 52.

To BEHA'VE. † v. a. [Sax. See BEHALF. pel-behofen, well adorned. V. Lye in behoepen.] † to employ;

1. To carry; to conduct: used almost always with the reciprocal pronoun.

We behaved not ourselves disorderly among you. 2 Thess. iii. 7.
Manifest signs came from heaven, unto those that behaved themselves manfully. 2 Maccabees, ii. 21.

To their wills wedded, to their errors slaves,
No man, like them, they think, himself behaves. Denham.

We so live, and so act, as if we were secure of the final issue and event of things, however we may behave ourselves. Atterbury.

2. It seems formerly to have had the sense of, to govern; to subdue; to discipline: but this is not now used. In these passages, it is the Sax. behabban, from the Goth. haban, being the primitive sense of the word.

But who his limbs with labours, and his mind
Behaves with cares, cannot so easy miss. Spenser, F. Q.

With such sober and unnoted passion
He did behave his anger, ere 'twas spent,
As if he had but prov'd an argument. Shaksp. Tim. of Athens.

To BEHA'VE. v. n. To act; to conduct one's self. It is taken either in a good or a bad sense; as he behaved well or ill.

BEHA'VIOUR. n. s. [from behave.]

1. Manner of behaving one's self, whether good or bad; manners; carriage with respect to propriety.

Mopsa, curious in any thing but her own good behaviour, followed Zelmane. Sidney.

2. External appearance, with respect to grace.

He marked, in Dora's dancing, good grace and handsome behaviour. Sidney.

3. Gesture; manner of action, adapted to particular occasions.

Well witnessing the most submissive behaviour, that a thrall'd heart could express. Sidney.

When we make profession of our faith, we stand; when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we fall down; because the gesture of constancy becometh us best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility. Hooker.

One man sees how much another man is a fool, when he dedicates his behaviour to love. Shakspeare.

And he changed his behaviour before them, and feigned himself mad in their hands. 1 Samucl, xxi. 13.

4. Elegance of manners; gracefulness.

The beautiful prove accomplished, but not of great spirit; and study, for the most part, rather behaviour than virtue. Bacon.

He who adviseth the philosopher, altogether devoted to the Muses, sometimes to offer sacrifice to the altars of the Graces, thought knowledge imperfect without behaviour. Wotton.

5. Conduct; general practice; course of life.

To him, who hath a prospect of the state that attends men after this life, depending on their behaviour here, the measures of good and evil are changed. Locke.

6. To be upon one's behaviour. A familiar phrase, noting such a state as requires great caution; a state in which a failure in behaviour will have bad consequences.

Tyrants themselves are upon their behaviour to a superior power. L'Estrange, Fables.

To BEHE'AD. v. a. [from be and head.] To deprive of the head; to kill by cutting off the head.

His beheading he underwent with all christian magnanimity. Clarendon.

On each side they fly,
By chains connext, and, with destructive sweep,
Behead whole troops at once. Philips.

Mary, queen of Scots, was beheaded in the reign of queen Elizabeth. Addison on Italy.

To BEHE'L. * v. a. [from be and hell.] To torture as with the pains of hell.

Satan, Death, and Hell, were his inveterate foes, that either drew him to perdition, or did behead and wrack him with the expectation of them. Heuvel's Serm. (1658) p. 72.

BEHE'L'D. particip. passive, from behold; which see.

All hail! ye virgin daughters of the main!
Ye stream, beyond my hopes behold again! Pope, Odyssey.

BEHEMOTH. n. s. Behemoth, in Hebrew, signifies beasts in general, particularly the larger kind, fit for service. But Job speaks of an animal behemoth, and describes its properties. Bochart has taken much care to make it the hippopotamus, or river-horse. Sanctius thinks it is an ox. The Fathers suppose the devil to be meant by it. But we agree with the generality of interpreters, that it is the elephant.

Behold now behemoth, which I made with thee; he eateth grass as an ox. Job, xl. 15.

Behold! in plaited mail
Behemoth rears his head. Thomson.

BE'HEN. } n. s. Valerian roots. Also a fruit resembling the tamarisk, from which perfumers extract an oil. Dict.

BEHE'ST. † n. s. [Either from be and hæpe, Sax. a command: or from beheban, to behigh; which verb signifies, among other senses, to command; though not so noticed by Dr. Johnson. Behest is in the Prompt. Parv. rendered promissio; and to behigh, promitto, as also in the Ort. Vocab. 1514.] Command; precept; mandate.

Her tender youth had obediently lived under her parents behests, without fraying, out of her own will, the forechoosing of any thing. Sidney.

Such joy he had their stubborn hearts to quell,
And sturdy courage tame with dreadful awe,
That his behest they fear'd as a proud tyrant's law. Spenser, F. Q.
I, messenger from everlasting Jove,
In his great name thus his behest do tell. Fairfax, Tasso.

To visit oft these happy tribes,
On high behests his angels to and fro

In heaven God ever blest, and his divine
Behests obey, worthiest to be obey'd! Milton, P. L.

To BEH'IGHT.† v. a. pret. behot, part. behight. [Sax.
behetan, to promise.]

1. To promise: this word is obsolete.
Sir Guyon, mindful of his vow yplight,
Uprose from drowsy couch, and him address'd,
Unto the journey which he had behight. Spenser, F. Q. ii. iii. 1.

2. To entrust; to commit.
That most glorious house that glist'reth bright, —
Whereof the keys are to thy hand behight
By wise Fidelia. Spenser, F. Q. i. x. 50.

3. To call; to name; hight being often put in old authors for named or was named. See HIGHT.
But now aread, old father, why of late
Didst thou behight me born of English blood,
Whom all a faeries son do nominate? Spenser, F. Q. i. x. 64.

4. To command.
So taking courteous congè, he behight
Those gates to be unbarr'd; and forth he went.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. xi. 17.

5. To adjudge.
There it was judged, by those worthy wights,
That Satyrane the first day best had donne: —
The second was to Triamond behight. Spenser, F. Q. iv. v. 7.

6. To address; to speak to.
Whom soon as he beheld he knew, and thus behight.
Spenser, F. Q. v. iv. 25.

7. To inform; to assure.
In right ill array
She was, with storm and heat, I you behight.
Chaucer, Flower and Leaf.

8. To mean; to intend.
The author's meaning should of right be heard,
He knoweth best to what end he enditeth:
Words sometime bear more than the heart behiteth.
Mir. for Magistrates, p. 461.

9. To reckon; to esteem.
False faitour Scudamour, that hast by flight
And foule advantage this good knight dismayd,
A knight much better than thyself behight.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. i. 44.

BEH'IND.† prep. [Goth. hinder; Sax. beundan, hmdan.]

1. At the back of another.
Acomates hasted with harquebusiers, which he had caused his horsemen to take behind them upon their horses. Knolles.

2. On the back part; not before.
She came in the press behind, and touched his garment.
Mark, v. 27.

3. Towards the back.
The Benjamites look'd behind them. Judges, xx. 40.

4. Following another.
Her husband went with her along, weeping behind her.
Samuel, iii. 16.

5. Remaining after the departure of something else.
He left behind him, myself, and a sister, both born in one hour. Shakspeare.

Piety and virtue are not only delightful for the present, but they leave peace and contentment behind them. Tillotson.

6. Remaining after the death of those to whom it belonged.
What he gave me to publish, was, but a small part of what he left behind him. Pope.

7. At a distance from something going before.
Such is the swiftness of your mind,
That, like the eagle, it leaves our senses behind. Dryden.

8. Inferiour to another, having the posteriour place with regard to excellence.

After the overthrow of this first house of God, a second was erected; but with so great odds, that they wept, which beheld how much this latter came behind it. Hooker.

9. On the other side of something.
From light retir'd, behind his daughter's bed,
He, for approaching sleep, compos'd his head. Dryden.

BEH'IND. adv.
1. Out of sight; not yet produced to view; remaining.
We cannot be sure, that we have all the particulars before us; and that there is no evidence behind, and yet unseen, which may cast the probability on the other side. Locke.

2. Most of the former senses may become adverbial, by suppressing the accusative case; as, I left my money behind, or behind me.

BEH'INDHAND. adv. [from behind and hand.]
1. In a state in which rent or profit, or any advantage, is anticipated, so that less is to be received, or more performed, than the natural or just proportion.

Your trade would suffer, if your being behindhand has made the natural use so high, that your tradesmen cannot live upon his labour. Locke.

2. Not upon equal terms, with regard to forwardness.
In this sense, it is followed by with.

Consider, whether it is not better to be a half year behind- hand with the fashionable part of the world, than to strain beyond his circumstances. Spectator.

3. Shakspeare uses it as an adjective, but licentiously, for backward; tardy.

And these thy offices,
So rarely kind, are as interpreters
Of my behindhand slackness. Shakspeare.

To BEHOLD. v. a. pret. I beheld, I have beheld, or beholden. [behealdan, Saxon.] To view; to see; to look upon; to behold is to see, in an em-phatical or intensive sense.

Son of man, behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears. Ezekiel, xl. 4.

When Thessalians on horseback were beheld afar off, while their horses watered, while their heads were depressed, they were conceived by the spectators to be one animal.

Brown, Vulgar Errors.
Man looks aloft, and with erected eyes,
Beholds his own hereditary skies. Dryden.

At this the former tale again he told,
With thund'ring tone, and dreadful to behold. Dryden.

The Saviour comes by ancient bards foretold.
Hear him ye deaf, and all ye blind behold. Pope.

BEHOLD. interject. [from the verb.] See; lo: a word
by which attention is excited, or admiration noted.

Behold! I am with thee, and will keep thee. Genesis, xxviii. 15.
When out of hope, behold her! not far off,
Such as I saw her in my dream, adorn'd
With what all earth or heaven could bestow,
To make her amiable. Milton, P. L.

BEHOLDEN. particip. adj. [gehouden, Dutch; that is, held in obligation. It is very corruptly written beholding.] Obliged; bound in gratitude: with the particle to.

Horns, which such as you are fain to be beholden to your wives for. Shakspeare.

Little are we beholden to your love;
And little looked for at your helping hands. Shakspeare.

I found you next; in respect of bond both of near alliance, and particularly of communication in studies: wherein I must acknowledge myself beholden to you. Bacon.

I think myself mightily beholden to you for the reprehension you then gave us. Addison.

We, who see men under the awe of justice, cannot conceive, what savage creatures they would be without it; and how much beholden we are to that wise contrivance. Atterbury.

BEHO'LDER. n. s. [from behold.] Spectator; he that looks upon any thing.

Was this the face,
That, like the sun, did make beholders wink?
Shakspeare, K. Rich. II.

These beasts among
Beholders rude, and shallow to discern
Half what in thee is fair, one man except,
Who sees thee?
Milton, P. L.

Things of wonder give no less delight
To the wise Maker's, than beholder's sight.
The justling chiefs in rude encounters join,
Each fair beholder trembling for her knight.
Denham.

The charitable foundations in the church of Rome exceed all the demands of charity, and raise envy, rather than compassion, in the breasts of beholders.
Granville.

BEHO'LDING. adj. [corrupted from beholden.] Obligated.
See BEHOLDEN.

BEHO'LDING. n. s. Obligation.
Love to virtue, and not to any particular beholdings, hath expressed this testimony.
Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

BEHO'LDINGNESS. n. s. [from beholding, mistaken for beholden.] The state of being obliged.

The king invited us to his court, so as I must acknowledge a beholdingness unto him.
Sudney.

In this my doubt I seem'd loth to confess,
In that I seem'd to shun beholdingness. Donne, Poems, p. 159.

TO BEHO'NEY.* v. a. [from be and honey.] To sweeten with honey.
Sherwood.

BEHO'OF. † n. s. [Sax. beheofe, Germ. behuf, Su. be-hof. See also BEHALF.] That which behoves; that which is advantageous; profit; advantage.

Her Majesty may alter any thing of those laws, for her own behoof, and for the good of the people. Spenser on Ireland.

No mean recompence it brings
To your behoof: if I that region lost,
All usurpation thence expell'd, reduce
To her original darkness, and your sway.
Milton, P. L.

Wert thou some star, which, from the ruin'd roof
Of shak'd Olympus, by mischance didst fall;
Which careful Jove, in nature's true behoof,
Took up, and in fit place did reinstate.
Milton, Ode.

Because it was for the behoof of the animal, that, upon any sudden accident, it might be awakened, there were no shuts or stopples made for the ears.
Ray.

It would be of no behoof, for the settling of government, unless there were a way taught, how to know the person to whom belonged this power and dominion.
Locke.

BEHO'OVABLE.* adj. [from behoove.] So written by Minshew; by others, behovable; which see. Fit; expedient.

TO BEHO'OVE. v. n. [behojan, Saxon; it is a duty.] To be fit; to be meet; either with respect to duty, necessity, or convenience. It is used only impersonally with it.

For better examination of their quality, it behooveth the very foundation and root, the highest wellspring and fountain of them to be discovered.
Hooker.

He did so prudently temper his passions, as that none of them made him wanting in the offices of life, which it behoov'd or became him to perform.
Atterbury.

But should you lure the monarch of the brook,
Behooves you then to ply your finest art.
Thomson.

BEHO'OVEFUL. adj. [from behoof.] Useful; profitable; advantageous. This word is somewhat antiquated.

It is very behooveful in this country of Ireland, where there are waste deserts full of grass, that the same should be eaten down.
Spenser on Ireland.

Laws are many times full of imperfections; and that which is supposed behooveful unto men, proveth oftentimes most pernicious.
Hooker.

Madam, we have culled such necessities
As are behooveful for our state to-morrow.
Shakspeare.

It may be most behooveful for princes, in matters of grace, to transact the same publicly: so it is as requisite, in matters of judgement, punishment, and censure, that the same be tran-acted privately.

Clarendon.

BEHO'OVEFULLY. adv. [from behooveful.] Profitably;
usefully.

Tell us of more weighty dislikes than these, and that may more behoovefully import the reformation. Spenser on Ireland.

BEHO'T. [preterite, as it seems, of behight, to promise.]

With sharp intended sting so rude him smote,
That to the earth him drove as stricken dead,
No living wight would have him life behot.
Spenser, F. Q.

BEHO'VABLE.* adj. [from behoove.] Profitable; expedient; useful.

All spiritual graces behooveable for our soul. Homilies, ii. 227.

BEHO'VE.* n. s. [Sax. behojan.] Advantage; interest; convenience; behoof. Obsolete.

To further forth the fruit of my desire,
My friends devis'd this mean for my behoove.
Gascoigne's Poems, (1575,) p. 140.

I lothe that I did love;

In youth that I thought swete:

As time requires for my behoove

Methinks they are not mete. Old Ballad, referred to in Hamlet.

TO BEHO'VE.* v. n. [Sax. behojan.] This is the word now used for behoove, and was that of our ancient writers; though Dr. Johnson and Dr. Ash have not condescended even to notice behoove. The double o, indeed, is not analogous to the etymology.
See also BEHOVEFUL, BEHOVELY, and the subst.
BEHOVE.] To be fit; to be meet.

Thus it is writun, and thus it bihofte Christ to suffice.

Wicliffe, (1380,) S. Luke, xxiv. 46.

Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer.

Transl. (1578,) S. Luke, xxiv. 46.

Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer.

Transl. (1611,) S. Luke, xxiv. 46.

BEHO'VEFUL.* adj. [from behoove and full.] Fit; expedient.

That freedom of judgement, which was behooveful for the study of philosophy.
Bp. Sanderson, Sermon, p. 306.

BEHO'VELY.* adj. [from behoove.] Profitable. I cite this ancient adjective in confirmation of the orthography of behoove.

Whereof if thou wilt, that I tell,

It is behovely for to hear.

Gower, Conf. Am, b. 1.

TO BEHO'WL.* v. n. To howl at; a word, Dr. Ash says, not much used. The fact is, that the existence of this word is doubtful. It has been proposed and defended by the commentators on Shakspeare, beginning with Bishop Warburton, for the reading of beholds or beoulds in the following passage of Shakspeare, as it stands in the old copies; and modern editions read accordingly behowls. Hence Dr. Ash, I suppose, adopted behowl; for I know no other work in which the word is to be found; and the commentators themselves support it in its assumed position, only by observing the propriety of howl.

Now the hungry lion roars,

And the wolf behowls the moon;

Whilst the heavy ploughman snores,

All with weary task fordone. Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dr. v. 2.

TO BEJA'DE.* v. a. [from be and jade.] To tire.

If you have no mercy upon them, yet spare yourself, lest you bejade the good gallows, your own opiniatre wit.

Milton, Anim. upon the Rem. Defence.

TO BEJA'PE.* v. a. [from be and jape, a jest. See JAPE.] To laugh at; to deceive; to impose upon.
Obsolete.

[Thou] hast bejaped here duke Thesens.

Chaucer, Knight's Tale.

I shall bejaped ben a thousand time
More than that foole, of whose folly men rime.
Chaucer, Troil. Cr. i. 532.

BE'ING. † particip. [from be, beond, Sax. existing.]
Those, who have their hope in another life, look upon themselves as being on their passage through this. Alterbury.

BE'ING. n. s. [from be.]
1. Existence; opposed to nonentity.
Of him all things have both received their first being, and their continuance to be that which they are. Hooker.
Yet is not God the author of her ill,
Though author of her being, and being there. Davies.
There is none but he,
Whose being I do fear: and under him
My genius is rebuked. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
Thee, Father, first they sung, omnipotent,
Immutable, immortal, infinite,
Eternal king! Thee, Author of all being,
Fountain of light! Milton, P. L.

Merciful and gracious, thou gavest us being, raising us from nothing to be an excellent creation. Bp. Taylor, Guide to Devotion.
Consider every thing as not yet in being; then examine, if it must needs have been at all, or what other ways it might have been. Bentley.

2. A particular state or condition.
Those happy spirits, which ordain'd by fate
For future being, and new bodies wait. Dryden.
Heav'n from all creatures hides the book of fate;
From brutes what men, from men what spirits know
Or who could suffer being here below? Pope.
As now your own, our beings were of old,
And once inclos'd in woman's beauteous mould. Pope.
The person existing.

Ah, fair, yet false; ah, being form'd to cheat,
By seeming kindness, mixt with deep deceit Dryden.
It is folly to seek the approbation of any being, besides the supreme; because no other being can make a right judgement of us, and because we can procure no considerable advantage from the approbation of any other being. Addison, Spectator.

BE'ING. † conjunct. [from be.] Since. Dict.
Now, being death is nothing else but the privation or recession of life, and we are then properly said to die when we cease to live; being life consisteth in the union of the soul unto the body, from whence, as from the fountain, flow motion, sensation, and whatsoever vital perfection; death can be nothing else but the solution of that vital union. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 4.

BE'ING-PLACE. * n. s. [from being and place.] A place in which to be; a state of existence.

Before this world's great frame, in which all things
Are now contain'd, found any being-place. Spenser, Hymn of Heavenly Love.

BE IT SO. A phrase of anticipation, suppose it be so;
or of permission, let it be so.

My gracious duke,
Be't so she will not here, before your grace,
Consent to marry with Demetrius;
I beg the ancient privilege of Athens. Shakspeare.
To BEK'ISS. * v. a. [from be and kiss.] To salute.
She's sick o' the young shepherd that bekist her.
B. Jonson, Sad Shep. i. 6.

To BEKNA'VE. * v. a. [from be and knave.] To call knave.

May satire ne'er besool ye, or beknavc ye. Pope.
To BEKNO'W. * v. a. [from be and know.] To acknowledge; to confess. Obsolete.

No wight that excuseth himself wilfully of his sinne, may not be delivered of his sinne, till that he mekely beknoweth his sinne. Chaucer, Parson's Tale.

This messenger turmented was, till he,
Muste beknowe, and tellen plat and plain,
Fro night to night, in what place he had lain.
Ib. Man of Law's Tale.

To BELA'BOUR. † [from be and labour.] To beat; to thump: a word in low speech, Dr. Johnson says;
but used in a very serious poem, I may add.

What several madnesses in m n appear,
Orestes runs from fancy'd furies here;
Ajax belabours there an harmless ox,
And thinks that Agamemnon feels the knocks. Dryden.

He sees virago Nell belabour,
With his own staff, his peaceful neighbour. Swift.

The strong man,
By stronger arm belabour'd, gasps for breath. R. Blair, The Grave.

To BELA'CE. v. a. [Sea term.] To fasten; as to belace, a rope. Dict.

BELA'CED. * part. adj. [from be and lace.] Adorned with lace.

When thou in thy bravest
And most belaced servitude dost strut,
Some newer fashion dost usurp; and thou
Unto its antick yoke durst not but bow.
Beaumont's Psyche, 16. 10.

To BELA'M. * v. a. [from be and lam. See To LAMM, which Dr. Johnson notices.] Dr. Ash says, that belam is derived from a low word; but no more.
It is a common word in the North of England, and in the sense which is assigned to it in our old lexi-cographer, viz. To beat; to bar. V. Cotgrave in BATEMENT, and Sherwood in BELAMME.

BEL'AMY. n. s. [bel amie, Fr.] A friend; an intimate.
This word is out of use.

Wise Socrates
Pour'd out his life, and last philosophy,
To the fair Critias, his dearest belamy. Spenser, F. Q.

BELAMOUR. n. s. [bel amour, Fr.] Gallant; consort;
paramour: obsolete.

Lox lo, how brave she decks her bounteous bow'r,
With silken curtains, and gold coverlets,
Therein to shroud her sumptuous belamour. Spenser, F. Q.

To BELA'TE. * v. a. [from be and late.] To retard a person, so as to make him too late.

The action cannot waste,
Caution retard, nor promptitude deceive,
Slowness belate, nor hope drive on too fast.
Davenant's Gondibert, ii. 2.

BELA'TED. adj. [from be and late.] Benighted; out of doors late at night.

Fairy elves,
Whose midnight revels, by a forest side,
Or fountain, some belated peasant sees,
Or dreams he sees. Milton, P. L.

Or near Fleetditch's oozy brinks
Belated, seems on watch to lie. Swift,

BELA'TEDNESS. * n. s. [from belated.] Slowness; backwardness.

That you may see I am sometime suspicious of myself, and do take notice of a certain belatedness in me, I am the bolder to send you some of my nightward thoughts. Milton, Lett.

To BELA'VE. * [from be and lave. See To LAVE.] To wash. Cockeram.

To BELA'WGIVE. * v. a. [from be, law, and give. An unusual word.] To give a law to; to legislate for.

The Holy One of Israel hath belawgiven his own people with this very allowance. Milton, Doct. and Dis. of Divorce.

To BELA'Y. † v. a. [from be and lay; as, to waylay, to lie in wait, to lay wait for.]

1. To block up; to stop the passage.
The speedy horse all passages belay,
And spur their smoaking steeds to cross their way. Dryden.

2. To place in ambush. Dr. Johnson says; and, in proof of his assertion, cites a passage in Spenser, which he copied from a corrupted edition, and in which the word forces led him to a wrong definition. The true word in Spenser is forts, (see the edit. of Spenser, 1805, vol. 8. p. 124.) and the meaning of belay is to attack; to besiege; adopted by Spenser from our older poetry, and from Spenser by Sandys. The Scotch use bely also for to besiege.

About Thebes, where he laie,
When it of siege was belaine. Gower, Conf. Am. b. i.
Gainst such strong castles needeth greater might
Than those small forts which ye were wont belay. Spenser, Sonn. xiv.

So when Arabian thieves belaid us round,
And when by all abandon'd, Thee I found. Sandys, Hymn to God.

3. To decorate; to lay over.

All in a woodman's jacket he was clad
Of Lincolne greene, belay'd with silver lace. Spenser, F. Q. vi. ii. 5.

To BELAY a rope. [Sea term.] To splice; to mend a rope, by laying one end over another.

To BELCH.† v. n. [bealcan, Saxon; formerly written belk, bolke, or bealk. Dict. of Huloet, and of Barret.]

1. To eject the wind from the stomach; to eruct.

Full gorges belk, if not much rather spew,
Most fulsomely. Davies, Wittes Pilgrimage, sign. T. 1.

2. To issue out, as by eructation.

Behold, they belch out with their mouth; swords are in their lips. Psaln lix. 7.

The waters boil, and, belching from below,
Black sands as from a forceful engine throw. Dryden.

A triple pile of plumes his crest adorn'd,
On which with belching flames Chimæra burn'd. Dryden.

To BELCH.† v. a. To throw out from the stomach; to eject from any hollow place. It is a word implying coarseness; hatefulness; or horror.

They are all but stomachs, and we all but food;
They eat us hungerly, and, when they're full,
They belch us. Shakspeare.

The mouth of fools poureth out [in the margin belcheth] foolishness. Proverbs xv. 2.

The bitterness of it I now belch from my heart. Shakspeare.

Immediate in a flame,
But soon obscur'd with smoke, all heaven appear'd,
From those deep-throated engines belch'd. Milton, P. L.

The gates that now
Stood open wide, belching outrageous flame
Far into chaos, since the fiend pass'd through. Milton, P. L.

Rough as their savage lords who rang'd the wood,
And, fat with acorus, belch'd their windy food. Dryden.

There belcht the mingled streams of wind and blood,
And human flesh, his indigested food. Pope, Odyssey.

When I an amorous kiss design'd,
I belch'd an hurricane of wind. Swift.

BELCH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of eructation.

2. A cant term for malt liquour.

A sudden reformation would follow, among all sorts of people; porters would no longer be drunk with belch. Dennis.

BELCHING.* n. s. [from belch.] The act of eructation; "a bealking or breaking of wind upwards," Barret. Bishop Hall seems to use it in the sense of violently throbbing, in allusion, perhaps, to the painful efforts of those diseased persons, whom belching attacks.

Often belkings [are] a token of ill digestion. Barret, Alr.
What aches of the bones, what belking of the joints, what convulsion of the sinews! Bp. Hall, Balm of Gilead.

The symptoms are, a sour smell in their feces, belchings, and distensions of the bowels. Arbutnot on Aliments.

BELDAM.† n. s. [belle dame, which, in old French, signified probably an old woman, as belle age, old age.]

1. An old woman; generally a term of contempt, marking the last degree of old age, with all its faults and miseries, Dr. Johnson says. The only example which he gives, is that from Milton; which certainly implies no contempt, but merely great age. It is indeed often used by our old writers for the grand-mother; and we have, in our language, belsire for grandsire, corresponding with beldam for grandam.

The familiar examples, as of the mother, the beldame, the aunt, the sister, the cosyn, or of some other kinswoman or freinde, should be of more force and value.

Vives, Dut. of an Husband, tr. by Paynel, (about 1550.)
To shew the beldame daughters of her daughter.

Shakspeare, Rape of Lucrece.

The beldam and the girl, the grandsire and the boy.

Drayton, Polyolbion, S. 6.

Then sing of secret things that came to pass,
When beldam Nature in her cradle was. Milton, Vac. Ex.

2. A hag.

Miso his wife, so handsome a beldame, that only her face and her splay-foot have made her accused for a witch.

Sidney, Arcadia, B. 1.

Why, how now, Hecat, you look angerly?—
—Have I not reason, beldams as you are?

Saucy and overbold? Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The resty sieve wagg'd ne'er the more;

I weep for woe, the testy beldam swore. Dryden.

To BELEAGUER.† v. a. [belggeren, Dutch, gahukan, Goth. to shut up, to inclose.] To besiege; to block up a place; to lie before a town.

Their business, which they carry on, is the general concernment of the Trojan camp, then beleaguer'd by Turnus and the Latins.

Against beleaguer'd heav'n the giants move:
Hills pil'd on hills, on mountains mountains lie,
To make their mad approaches to the sky. Dryden, Ovid.

BELEAGURER.† n. s. [from beleaguer.] One that besieges a place. Sherwood.

To BELEAVE.* v. a. [from be and leave; an old English, as well as a Scottish, verb. See Jamieson's Dict. in BELEIF. Not disused in the time of Milton.] To leave.

Wondering at fortune's turns, and scarce is he Beleft, relating his own misery. May's Lucan, B. 8.

To BELEE.† v. a. [a term in navigation.] To place in a direction unsuitable to the wind. One vessel is said to be in the lee of another, when it is so placed that the wind is intercepted from it. This remark has been rendered subservient to the establishment of belee'd, by the commentators, as the genuine text of Shakspeare in Othello; belee'd being the reading of the old quarto; belee'd, that of the first folio, which Warburton wished to reject, but his successors have adopted. Iago, the speaker of the following lines, means that Cassio had got the wind of him.

He, sir, had the election:
And I,—of whom his eyes had seen the proof,
At Rhodes, at Cyprus; and on other grounds
Christian and heathen,—must be belee'd and calm'd
By debtor and creditor, this counter-caster. Shakspeare, Othello, i. 1.

BELEMN'TES. n. s. [from βέλος, a dart or arrow, because of its resemblance to the point of an arrow.] Arrowhead, or finger-stone, of a whitish and sometimes a gold colour.

To BELEPER.* v. a. [from be and leper.] To infect as with a leprosy.

You have a law, lords, that without remorse
Dooms such, as beleper'd with the curse
Of foul ingratitude, to death. Baum. and Fl. Laws of Candy.

Imparity, and church-revenue, rushing in, corrupted and belepered all the clergy with a worse infection than Gehazi's.

Milton, Eiconocl. Ch. 14.

BELFLOWER. n. s. [from belle and flower, because of the shape of its flower; in Latin campanula.] A plant.

There is a vast number of the species of this plant. 1. The tallest pyramidal bellflower. 2. The blue peach-leav'd bellflower. 3. The white peach-leaved bellflower. 4. Garden bellflower, with oblong leaves and flowers; commonly called Canterbury bells. 5. Canary bellflower, with orrach leaves and a tuberos root. 6. Blue bellflower, with edible roots, commonly called rampions. 7. Venus looking-glass bellflower, &c. Miller.

BELFOUNDER. n. s. [from bell and found.] He whose trade it is to found or cast bells.

Those that make recorders know this, and likewise bellfounders in fitting the tune of their bells. Bacon.

BELFRY.† n. s. [Belfroy, in French, is a tower; which was perhaps the true word, till those, who knew not its original, corrupted it to belfry, because bells were in it, Dr. Johnson says. But our belfry is not a corruption, but comes from the old French belfroit, or low Latin belfredus. V. Du Cange. And Roquefort in BERROL.] The place where the bells are rung.

Fetch the leathern bucket that hangs in the belfry; that is curiously painted before, and will make a figure. Gay.

BELGAR'D. n. s. [belle egard, Fr.] A soft glance; a kind regard: an old word, now wholly disused.

Upon her eyelids many graces sat,
Under the shadow of her even brows,
Working belgar'ds, and amorous retrait. Spenser, F. Q.

To BELIBEL.* v. a. [from be and libel.] To traduce; to libel; to slander.

The pope, hearing thereof, belibelled him [the emperor] more foully than ever before.

Fuller's Hist. of the Holy War, p. 163.

To BELIE. v. a. [from be and lie.]

1. To counterfeit; to feign; to mimic.

Which durst, with horses' hoofs that beat the ground,
And martial brass, belie the thunder's sound. Dryden.

The shape of man, and imitated beast

The walk, the words, the gesture could supply,
The habit mimic, and the mien belie. Dryden, Fables.

2. To give the lie to; to charge with falsehood.

Sure there is none but fears a future state;
And when the most obdurate swear they do not,
Their trembling hearts belie their boastful tongues. Dryden.

Paint, patches, jewels laid aside,

At night astronomers agree,

The evening has the day bely'd

And Phillis is some forty-three. Prior.

3. To calumniate; to raise false reports of any man.

Thou dost belie him, Piercy, thou beliest him:
He never did encounter with Glendower. Shakspeare.

4. To give a false representation of any thing.

Uncle, for heav'n's sake, comfortable words.—
—Should I do so, I should belie my thoughts. Shakspeare.

Tuscan Valerius by force o'ercame,
And not bely'd his mighty father's name. Dryden, Æneid.

In the dispute what'er I said,

My heart was by my tongue bely'd;

And in my looks you might have read,

How much I argu'd on your side. Prior.

5. To fill with lies. This seems to be its meaning here.

'Tis slander, whose breath
Rides on the posting winds, and doth belie
All corners of the world. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

BELIEF. n. s. [from believe.]

1. Credit given to something which we know not of ourselves, on account of the authority by which it is delivered.

Those comforts that shall never cease,

Future in hope, but present in belief.

Faith is a firm belief of the whole word of God, of his gospel, commands, threats, and promises. Wotton.

2. The theological virtue of faith, or firm confidence of the truths of religion.

No man can attain belief by the bare contemplation of heaven and earth; for that they neither are sufficient to give us as much as the least spark of light concerning the very principal mysteries of our faith. Wake.

3. Religion; the body of tenets held by the professors of faith.

In the heat of general persecution, whereunto christian belief was subject upon the first promulgation, it much confirmed the weaker minds, when relation was made how God had been glorified through the sufferings of martyrs. Hooker.

4. Persuasion; opinion.

He can, I know, but doubt to think he will;

Yet hope would fain subscribe, and tempts belief. Milton, S. A.

All treaties are grounded upon the belief, that states will be found in their honour and observance of treaties. Temple.

5. The thing believed; the object of belief.

Superstitious prophecies are not only the belief of fools, but the talk sometimes of wise men. Bacon.

6. Creed; a form containing the articles of faith.

BELIEVABLE.† adj. [from believe.] Credible; that which may be credited or believed. Sherwood.

To BELIEVE.† v. a. [gelyfan, Saxon, galubian, Gothick.]

1. To credit upon the authority of another, or from some other reason than our personal knowledge.

Adherence to a proposition, which they are persuaded, but do not know to be true, is not seeing, but believing. Locke.

Ten thousand things there are, which we believe merely upon the authority or credit of those who have spoken or written of them. Watts, Logic.

2. To put confidence in the veracity of any one.

The people may hear when I speak with thee, and believe thee for ever. Exodus, xix. 9.

To BELIEVE. v. n.

1. To have a firm persuasion of any thing.

They may believe that the Lord God of their fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, hath appeared unto thee. Exodus, vi. 5.

2. To exercise the theological virtue of faith.

Now God be prais'd, that, to believing souls,
Gives light in darkness, comfort in despair. Shakspeare.

For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. Romans, x. 10.

3. With the particle in; to hold as an object of faith.

Believe in the Lord your God, so shall you be established.

2 Chron. xx. 20.

4. With the particle upon; to trust; to place full confidence in; to rest upon with faith.

To them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name. St. John, i. 12.

5. I believe, is sometimes used as a way of slightly noting some want of certainty or exactness.

Though they are, I believe, as high as most steeples in England, yet a person, in his drink, fell down, without any other hurt than the breaking of an arm. Addison on Italy.

BELIEVER. n. s. [from believe.]

1. He that believes, or gives credit.

Discipline began to enter into conflict with churches, which, in extremity had been believers of it. Hooker.

2. A professor of christianity.

Infidels themselves did discern in matters of life, when believers did well, when otherwise. Hooker.

BEL

If he which writeth, do that which is forcible, how should he which readeth, be thought to do that, which, in itself, is of no force to work belief, and to save believers? Hooker.

Mysteries held by us have no power, pomp, or wealth, but have been maintained by the universal body of true believers, from the days of the apostles, and will be to the resurrection; neither will the gates of hell prevail against them. Swift.

BELIEVINGLY. adv. [from To believe.] After a believing manner.

BELIKE. adv. [from like, as by likelihood.]

1. Probably; likely; perhaps.

There came out of the same woods a horrible foul bear, which fearing, belike, while the lion was present, came furiously towards the place where I was. Sidney.

Lord Angelo, belike, thinking me remiss in my office, awakens me with this unwonted putting on. Shakspeare.

Josephus affirmeth, that one of them remained in his time; meaning, belike, some ruin or foundation thereof. Raleigh.

2. It is sometimes used in a sense of irony; as, It may be supposed.

We think, belike, that he will accept what the meanest of them would disdain. Hooker.

God appointed the sea to one of them, and the land to the other, because they were so great, that the sea could not hold them both; for else, belike, if the sea had been large enough, we might have gone a fishing for elephants.

Brerewood on Languages.

BELIKELY.* adv. [from belike.] Probably; still used in the north of England.

Having belikely heard some better words of me, than I could deserve. Bp. Hall, Specialties of his Life.

BELIVE.† adv. [belive, Sax. probably from bi and live, in the sense of vivacity; speed; quickness.] Speedily; quickly: a word out of use, Dr. Johnson says. But it is still common, I must add, in Westmoreland for presently; which sense, implying a little delay, like our expression of by and by, was formerly the general acceptation of the word; no doubt, from the Sax. belipan, to remain.

By that same way the direful dames to drive Their mournful chariot, fill'd with rusty blood, And down to Pluto's house are come belive. Spenser, F. Q.

BELL.† n. s. [bel, Saxon; supposed, by Skinner, to come from pelvis, Lat. a basin. See BALL.]

1. A vessel, or hollow body of cast metal, formed to make a noise by the act of a clapper, hammer, or some other instrument striking against it. Bells are in the towers of churches, to call the congregation together.

Your flock assembled by the bell, Encircled you to hear with reverence. Shakspeare.

Get thee gone, and dig my grave thyself, And bid the merry bells ring to thy ear, That thou art crowned, not that I am dead. Shakspeare.

Four bells admit twenty-four changes in ringing, and five bells one hundred and twenty. Holder, Elements of Speech.

He has no one necessary attention to any thing, but the bell, which calls to prayers twice a-day. Addison, Spectator.

2. It is used for any thing in the form of a bell, as the cups of flowers.

Where the bee sucks, there suck I, In a cowslip's bell I lie. Shakspeare, Tempest.

The humming bees that hunt the golden dew, In summer's heat on tops of lilies feed, And creep within their bells to suck the balmy seed. Dryden.

3. A small hollow globe of metal perforated, and containing in it a solid ball; which, when it is shaken, by bounding against the sides, gives a sound.

BEL

As the ox hath his yoke, the horse his curb, and the falcon his bells, so hath man his desires.

Shakspeare, As you like it.

4. Bell, book, and candle; the old phrase for execration, adopted from the directions given, in elder times, that sentence of excommunication against delinquents should be "throughout explained in order in English, with bells tolling, and candles lighted, that it may cause the greater dread." See Johnson's Ecclesiast. Laws, vol. 2. And note on Shakspeare's K. John, A. iv. S. 2.]

Bell, book, and candle shall not drive me back, When gold and silver beck me to come on.

Shakspeare, K. John.

Out with your beads, Curate; The devil's in your dish: bell, book, and candle!

Beaumont and Fl. Spanish Curate.

5. To bear the bell. To be the first; from the wether, that carries a bell among the sheep, or the first horse of a drove that has bells on his collar, Dr. Johnson says. But his solitary example from Hakewill explains neither assertion; and exhibits not the precise expression bear the bell. Some think, that a bell was formerly a common prize. In the reign of K. James I. the prize at a horse-race in Chester was a silver bell; and at York, a golden bell. See Lysons's Cheshire, p. 586. And Gent. Mag. vol. 50. p. 515. To bear away the bell is also found in our old writers, and has given rise to a conjecture that the expression may mean "carrying or winning the fair lady," belle. See Brand's Popular Antiq. But this is rather far-fetched; and the example, which I give from Howell, discountenances the conjecture. That from B. Riche justifies the opinion, that it comes from the sheep bearing the bell.

So Satyrane that day was judg'd to bear the bell.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. iv. 25.

My prickear'd eue, since thou dost bear the bell, And all thy mates do follow at thy call, Keepe still this lute, &c.

B. Riche, Adventures of Simonides, (1584,) P. i. sign. N. iij.

The ale bore away the bell among the doctors.

Howell's Letters, B. 1. § 2. L. 21.

The Italians have carried away the bell from all other nations, as may appear both by their books and works. Hakewill.

6. To shake the bells. A phrase, in Shakspeare, taken from the bells of a hawk.

Neither the king, nor he that loves him best, The proudest he that holds up Lancaster, Dares stir a wing, if Warwick shakes his bells. Shakspeare.

TO BELL. v. n. [from the noun.] To grow in buds or flowers, in the form of a bell.

Hops, in the beginning of August, bell, and are sometimes ripe. Mortimer's Husbandry.

BELL-FASHIONED. adj. [from bell and fashion.] Having the form of a bell; campaniform.

The thorn apple rises with a strong round stalk, having large bell-fashioned flowers at the joints. Mortimer's Husbandry.

BELLADONNA.* n. s. [Ital.] In botany, the deadly nightshade. This name is said by Ray to have been given to it by the Italians, because the ladies make a cosmetick of the juice, or distilled water, which they use to make their complexion fair and white.

BELLE.† n. s. [beau, belle, Fr.] A smart or gay young lady.

B E L

What motive could compel

A well-bred lord to assault a gentle belle?
O say, what stranger cause yet unexplor'd,
Could make a gentle belle reject a lord? Pope, Rape of the Lock.
My beans are now shepherds, and my belles wood-nymphs.
Tatler, No. 182.

BELLED.* [In heraldry.] Having bells affixed to it; as, a hawk rising, jessed and bell'd.

BELLES LETTRES. n. s. [Fr.] Polite literature. It has no singular.

The exactness of the other, is to admit of something like discourse, especially in what regards the belles lettres. Tatler.

BELLIBONE. n. s. [from bellus, beautiful, and bonus, good, Lat. belle & bonne, Fr.] A woman excelling both in beauty and goodness. A word now out of use.

Pan may be proud, that ever he begot
Such a bellibone,

And Syrinx rejoice, that ever was her lot

To bear such an one. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

BELLIED.* adj. [from belly.] Sometimes used in composition. See BIGBELLIED, CORBELLIED.

BELLIGERANT.† adj. [Lat. belligerans, belliger.]
BELLIGERQUS. } Waging war. Dict.

To BELLIGERATE.* v. n. [Lat. belligero.] To make war. Cockeram.

BELLIGERENT.* adj. This is the word most in use, as Mr. Mason has observed on the two preceding synonymous adjectives.

Père Bougeant's third volume will give you the best idea of the treaty of Munster, and open to you the several views of the belligerent and contracting parties. Id. Chesterfield.

BELLING.† n. s. [Sax. bellan, to roar. Belling is indeed only bellowing contracted, and it is sometimes written bellowing by those who describe the present term.] A hunting term, spoken of a roe, when she makes a noise in rutting time. Dict.

BELLIPOTENT. adj. [bellipotens, Lat.] Puissant; mighty in war. Dict.

BELLIQUE.* adj. [old Fr. bellique, militaire; from the Lat. bellicus.] Warlike; martial,

The bellicque Cesar, as Suetonius tells us, was noted for singularity in his apparel. Fellham's Resolves, ii. 52.

BELLITUDE.* n. s. [Lat. bellitudo.] Handsomeness; beauty. Obsolete. Cockeram.

To BELLOW. v. n. [bellan, Saxon.]

1. To make a noise as a bull.

Jupiter became a bull, and bellow'd; the green Neptune a ram, and bleated. Shakspeare.

What bull dares bellow, or what sheep dares bleat Within the lion's den? Dryden, Sp. Friar.

But now, the husband of a herd must be Thy mate, and bellowing sons thy progeny. Dryden.

2. To make any violent outcry.

He fasten'd on my neck, and bellow'd out,
As he'd burst heav'n. Shakspeare.

3. To vociferate; to clamour. In this sense it is a word of contempt.

The dull fat captain, with a hound's deep throat,
Would bellow out a laugh in a base note. Dryden.

This gentleman is accustomed to roar and bellow so terribly loud, that he frightens us. Tatler.

4. To roar as the sea in a storm; or as the wind; to make any continued noise, that may cause terror.

Till, at the last, he heard a dreadful sound,
Which through the wood loud bellowing did rebound. Spenser.

The rising rivers float the nether ground;
And rocks the bellowing voice of boiling seas rebound. Dryden.

B E L

BELLOW.* n. s. [from the verb.] Roar; as, the bellow of the wind or sea.

BELLLOWER.* n. s. [from bellow.] He who roars or bellows.

BELLOWING.* n. s. [from bellow.] Loud noise; roaring.

Captain Brown thundered out his farewell in a hundred great shot, whose echo not only made Gornbrook tremble, but seemed to rend the higher regions with their bellowings.

Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 111.

The beasts that haunt those springs,
Of whom I hear the dreadful bellowings.

Brown, Brit. Past. B. 1. S. 1.

BELLOWS.† n. s. [bilz, Sax. perhaps it is corrupted from bellies, the wind being contained in the hollow, or belly, Dr. Johnson says. But it is no corruption, being from the Goth. balgs, balgris. It has no singular; for we usually say, a pair of bellows; but Dryden has used bellows as a singular.]

1. The instrument used to blow the fire.

Since sighs into my inward furnace turned,
For bellows serve to kindle more the fire. Sidney.

One, with great bellows, gather'd filling air,
And, with forc'd wind, the fuel did enflame. Spenser, F. Q.

The smith prepares his hammer for the stroke,
While the lung'd bellows hissing fire provoke. Dryden.

The lungs, as bellows, supply a force of breath; and the aspera arteria is as the nose of bellows, to collect and convey the breath. Holder.

2. In the following passage, it is singular.

Thou neither, like a bellows, swell'st thy face,
As if thou wert to blow the burning mass
Of melting ore. Dryden.

BELLUINE.† adj. [belluinus, Lat.] Beastly; belonging to a beast; savage; brutal.

There have been the fearfillest distractions here, that ever happened upon any part of the earth; a belluin kind of immaturity never ranged so among men. Houell's Letters, iii. 15.

If human actions were not to be judged, men would have no advantage over beasts. At this rate, the animal and belluine life would be the best. Atterbury.

BELLY.† n. s. [balgs, Goth. balg, Dutch; bol, bola, Welsh.]

1. That part of the human body which reaches from the breast to the thighs, containing the bowels.

The body's members
Rebell'd against the belly; thus accus'd it;—
That only like a gulf it did remain,
Still cupboarding the viand, never bearing
Like labour with the rest. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

2. In beasts, it is used, in general, for that part of the body next the ground.

And the Lord said unto the serpent, Upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life. Genesis, iii. 14.

3. The womb: in this sense, it is commonly used judiciously or familiarly.

I shall answer that better, than you can the getting up of the negro's belly: the Moor is with child by you. Shakspeare.
The secret is grown too big for the pretence, like Mrs. Primly's big belly. Congreve, Way of the World.

4. That part of man which requires food, in opposition to the back, or that which demands clothes.

They were content with a licentious life, wherein they might fill their bellies by spoil, rather than by labour. Hayward.

• Whose god is their belly. Phil. iii. 19.

He that sows his grain upon marble, will have many a hungry belly before harvest. Arbutnot.

5. The part of any thing that swells out into a larger capacity.

B E L

Fortune sometimes turneth the handle of the bottle, which is easy to be taken hold of; and, after the belly, which is hard to grasp. Bacon, Orn. Rat.

An Irish harp hath the concave, or belly, not along the strings, but at the end of the strings. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

6. Any place in which something is enclosed.
Out of the belly of hell cried I, and thou heardest my voice. Jonah, ii. 2.

To BE'LLY. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell into a larger capacity; to harg out; to bulge out.

Thus by degrees day wastes, signs cease to rise,
For bellying earth, still rising up, denies
Their light a passage, and confines our eyes. Creesh, Manilius.

The power appears'd, with winds suffic'd the sail,
The bellying canvas strutted with the gale. Dryden.

Loud rattling shakes the mountains and the plain,
Heav'n bellies downwards, and descends in rain. Dryden.

'Midst these disports, forget they not to drench
Themselves with bellying goblets. Philips.

To BE'LLY.* v. a. To fill; to swell out.
Your breath with full consent bellied his sails. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

BE'LLYACHE.† [from belly and ache.] The cholick;
or pain in the bowels.

The belly-ache,
Caused by an inundation of pease-porridge!
Beaum. and Fl. Mors. Thomas.

BE'LLYBAND.* n. s. [from belly and bind.] The girth which fastens the saddle of a horse in harness, or gears. Sherwood.

BE'LLYBOUND. adj. [from belly and bound.] Diseased, so as to be costive, and shrunk in the belly.

BE'LLYCHEER.* n. s. [An old word in our language;
from belly and cheer, though it may also be thought a corruption of the Fr. belle chere. It has escaped the notice of our lexicographers.] Good cheer;
entertainment for the belly.

Belle-chere,
That he hath had ful often times here.
Chaucer, Shipman's Tale.

O cyries of Englands, whose glory standeth more in bellycheere, than in the serche of wysdome godlye!
Bale's Pref. to Leland's Journey.

Demure civility
Shall seem to say, Good brother, sister dear;
As for the rest, to snort in belly-cheer.

Senseless of divine doctrine, and capable only of loaves and bellycheer. Milton, Anima. Rem. Defence.

BE'LLY-FRETTING. n. s. [from belly and fret.]

1. [With farriers.] The chafing of a horse's belly with the foregirt.

2. A great pain in a horse's belly caused by worms.
Dict.

BE'LLYFUL. n. s. [from belly and full.]

1. As much food as fills the belly, or satisfies the appetite.

2. It is often used ludicrously for more than enough; thus, King James told his son that he would have his bellyful of parliamentary impeachments.

BE'LLYGOD. n. s. [from belly and god.] A glutton;
one who makes a god of his belly.

What infinite waste they made this way, the only story of Apicius, a famous bellygod, may suffice to shew.
Hakewill on Providence, p. 378.

BE'LLY-PINCHED. adj. [from belly and pinch.] Starved.

This night, wherein the cubdrawn bear would couch,
The lion, and the belly-pinched wolf;
Keep their fur dry; unbonnetted he runs. Shakspeare.

B E L

BE'LLYROLL. n. s. [from belly and roll.] A roll so called, as it seems, from entering into the hollows.

They have two small harrows that they clap on each side of the ridge, and so they harrow right up and down, and roll it with a bellyroll, that goes between the ridges, when they have sown it. Mortimer's Husbandry.

BE'LLYSLAVE.* n. s. [from belly and slave.] A slave to the appetites.

Beastly belly-slaves, which, void of all godliness or virtuous behaviour, not once but continually, day and night, give themselves wholly to bibbing and banqueting.

Homily against Gluttony and Drunkenness.
BE'LLYTIMBER. n. s. [from belly and timber.] Food;
materials to support the belly.

Where belly-timber, above ground
Or under, was not to be found. Hudibras.

The strength of every other member
Is founded on your belly-timber. Prior.

BE'LLYWORM.† n. s. [from belly and worm.] A worm that breeds in the belly.

Of belly-worms there be three usual sorts. 1. The round ones called teretes. 2. The flat ones called lati. 3. Those called ascarides; for ascarides is not the general name of all belly-worms. Ray, Dict. Trilingue.

BE'LMAN. n. s. [from bell and man.] He whose business it is to proclaim any thing in towns, and to gain attention by ringing his bell.

It was the owl that shriek'd, the fatal belman
Which gives the stern'st good night. Shakspeare.

Where Titian's glowing paint the canvas warm'd;
Now hangs the belman's song, and pasted here
The colour'd prints of Overton appear. Gay.

The belman of each parish, as he goes his circuit, cries out every night, Past twelve o'clock! Swift.

BE'LMETAL. n. s. [from bell and metal.] The metal of which bells are made; being a mixture of five parts copper with one of pewter.

Belmetal has copper one thousand pounds, tin from three hundred to two hundred pounds, brass one hundred and fifty pounds. Bacon, Phys. Rem.

Colours which arise on belmetal, when melted and poured on the ground in open air like the colours of water bubbles, are changed by viewing them at divers obliquities. Newton, Opt.

To BELO'CK.; v. a. [Sax. belocen.] To fasten, as with a lock, one of our oldest verbs.

And after of his own choys,
He took his death upon the croys;
And how in grave he was belocke,
And how that he hath hell broke. Gower, Conf. Am. b. 2.

This is the hand, which with a vow'd contract
Was fast belock'd in thine. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

BE'LOMACY. n. s. [from βελος and μακ.] Belomancy, or divination by arrows, hath been in request with Scythians, Alans, Germans, with the Africans and Turks of Algier. Brown, Vulgar Errors.

Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

B E L

6. To be referred to; to relate to.

He careth for things that belong to the Lord. 1 Corinth. vii. 32.
BELO'NGING. * n. s. [from belong.] Quality; endowment; faculty.

Thyself and thy belongings
 Are not thine own so proper, as to waste
 Thyself upon thy virtues, them on thee.
 Heaven doth with us, as we with torches do;
 Not light them for ourselves; for if our virtues
 Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike
 As if we had them not. Shakspeare, Meas. for Measure.

BELO'VED. participle. [from belove, derived of love.]
 It is observable, that though the participle be of very frequent use, the verb is seldom or never admitted; as we say, you are much beloved by me, but not, I belove you.] Loved; dear.

I think, it is not meet,
 Mark Anthony, so well belov'd of Cæsar,
 Should outlive Cæsar. Shakspeare.

In likeness of a dove
 The Spirit descended, while the Father's voice
 From heaven pronounc'd him his belov'd Son. Milton, P. R.

BELO'W. † prep. [from be and low.]

 electors of the empire, and but one degree below kings. Addison.

4. Inferiour in excellence.
 His Idylliums of Theocritus are as much below his Manilius, as the fields are below the stars. Felton.

5. Unworthy of; unbecoming.
 'Tis much below me on his throne to sit;
 But when I do, you shall petition it. Dryden.

BELO'W. adv.

1. In the lower place; in the place nearest the centre.

To men standing below on the ground, those that be on the top of Paul's, seem much less than they are, and cannot be known; but, to men above, these below seem nothing so much lessened, and may be known. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The upper regions of the air perceive the collection of the matter of the tempests and winds before the air here below; and therefore the obscuring of the smaller stars, is a sign of tempest following. Bacon, Ib.

His sultry heat infects the sky;
 The ground below is parch'd, the heav'ns above us fry. Dryden.

This said, he led them up the mountain's brow,
 And shew'd them all the shining fields below. Dryden.

2. On earth, in opposition to heaven.
 And let no tears from erring pity flow.
 For one that's bless'd above, immortaliz'd below. Smith.
 The fairest child of Jove,
Below for ever sought, and bless'd above. Prior.

3. In hell; in the regions of the dead: opposed to heaven and earth.

The gladsome ghosts in circling troops attend,
 Delight to hover near; and long to know
 What bus'ness brought him to the realms below. Dryden.
 "When suff'ring saints aloft in beams shall glow,
 And prosperous traitors gnash their teeth below. Tickell.

To BELO'WT. v. a. [from be and lowt, or lout, a word contempt.] To treat with opprobrious language;

 Within the belt of rule. Shakspeare.

Ajax slew himself with the sword given him by Hector, and Hector was dragged about the walls of Troy by the belt given him by Ajax. South.

Then snatch'd the shining belt, with gold inlaid;
 The belt Eurytion's artful hands had made. Dryden.

To BELT. * v. a. [from the subst.] To encircle; to enclose us with a belt.

These ramparts seem intended to have had some effect even on the eye. Being dug out of a bed of chalk, and belting the hills far and wide with white, more especially if we suppose some assistance from an artificial facing, they must have been visible at a vast distance. Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 67.

BE'LTWETHER. n. s. [from bell and wether.] A sheep which leads the flock with a bell on his neck.

Bemock the modest moon.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

To BEMOCK at. * To laugh at.

The elements

Of whom your swords are temper'd, may as well

Wound the loud winds, or with bemock'd at stabs

Kill the still-closing waters, as diminish

One dowe that's in my plume; my fellow ministers

Are like invulnerable.

Shakespeare, Tempest.

To BEMOIL. v. a. [be and moil, from mouiller, Fr.]

To bedrizzle; to bemire; to encumber with dirt and mire.

Thou shouldst have heard in how miry a place, how she was bemoiled, how she left her with the horse upon her.

Shakespeare.

To BEMONSTER. v. a. [from be and monster.] To make monstrous.

Thou chang'd, and self-converted thing! for shame,

Bemonster not thy feature.

B E N

BENCH. n. s. [benc, Sax. banc, Fr.]

1. A seat, distinguished from a stool by its greater length.

The seats and benches shone of ivory,

An hundred nymphs sat side by side about.

Spenser.

All Rome is pleas'd, when Statius will rehearse,

And longing crowds expect the promis'd verse;

His lofty numbers, with so great a gust,

They hear, and swallow with such eager lust:

But while the common suffrage crown'd his cause,

And broke the benches with their loud applause,

His muse had starv'd, had not a piece unread,

And by a player bought, supply'd her bread.

Dryden.

2. A seat of justice; the seat where judges sit.

To pluck down justice from your awful bench;

To trip the course of law.

Shakespeare.

Cyriac, whose grandsire on the royal bench

Of British Themis, with no mean applause,

Pronounc'd, and in his volumes taught our laws,

Which others at their bar so often wrench.

Milton.

3. The persons sitting on a bench; as, the whole bench voted the same way.

Fools to popular praise aspire,

Of publick speeches, which worse fools admire;

While, from both benches, with redoubl'd sounds,

The applause of lords and commoners abounds.

Dryden.

To BENCH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish with benches.

'Twas bench'd with turf, and goodly to be seen,

The thick young grass arose in fresher green.

Dryden.

Heaps of spent arrows fall, and strew the ground;

And helms, and shields, and rattling arms resound.

Dryden.

2. To direct to a certain point.

Octavius and Mark Anthony

Came down upon us with a mighty power,

Bending their expedition toward Philippi.

Shakespeare.

Why dost thou bend thy eyes upon the earth,

And start so often, when thou sitt'st alone?

Shakespeare.

Your gracious eyes upon this labour bend.

Fairfax.

To that sweet region was our voyage bent,

When winds and every warring element,

Disturb'd our course.

Dryden.

B E N

Then, with a rushing sound, the assembly bend,
Diverse, their steps; the rival rout ascend
The royal dome.

Pope.

3. With the particle down.

The Almighty Father from above,
From the pure empyrean where he sits
High thron'd above all highth, bent down his eye
His own works and their works at once to view.

Milton, P. L. iii. 58.

4. To apply to a certain purpose; to intend the mind.

Men will not bend their wits to examine, whether things, wherewith they have been accustomed, be good or evil. Hooker.
He is within, with two right reverend fathers,
Divinely bent to meditation. Shakespeare.
When he fell into the gout, he was no longer able to bend his mind or thoughts to any publick business. Temple.

beneaped, when the water does not flow high enough to bring her off the ground, over a bar, or out of a dock. Dict.

BENEATH. prep. [beneoð, Sax. beneden, Dutch.]

1. Under; lower in place: opposed to above.

Their woolly fleeces, as the rites requir'd,
He laid beneath him, and to rest retir'd. Dryden.
Ages to come might Ormond's picture know;
And palms for thee beneath his laurels grow. Prior.

2. Under, as overborne or overwhelmed by some pressure.

Our country sinks beneath the yoke;
It weeps, it bleeds, and each new day a gash
Is added to her wounds. Shakespeare.
And oft on rocks their tender wings they tear,
And sink beneath the burdens which they bear. Dryden.

3. Lower in rank, excellence, or dignity.

We have reason to be persuaded, that there are far more species of creatures above us, than there are beneath. Locke.

4. Unworthy of; unbecoming; not equal to.

He will do nothing that is beneath his high station, nor omit doing any thing which becomes it. Atterbury.

BENEATH. adv.

1. In a lower place; under.

I destroyed the Amorite before them; I destroyed his fruits from above, and his roots from beneath. Amos, ii. 9.
The earth which you take from beneath, will be barren and unfruitful. Mortimer.

2. Below, as opposed to heaven.

Any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath. Exodus, xx. 4.

Hell's horrid mansions, and the realms of death. Yalden.

BENEDICT. † adj. [benedictus, Lat.] Having mild and salubrious qualities: an old physical term.

It is not a small thing won in physick, if you can make rhubarb, and other medicines that are benedict, as strong purgers as those that are without some malignity. Bacon.

If the more benedict and benedict medicines will not work, nor stir us at all, we must prepare us a rougher receipt, or a stronger dose. Alp. Salmagundi, Serm. p. 110.

BENEDICTINE. * n. s. [from the name of the founder, Benedictus.] A monk of the order of Saint Benedict.

He not only augmented the number of colleges and professors in his universities, but erected, as he had promised, out of the revenues gotten hereby, [the dissolution of monasteries,] divers new bishopricks; whereof one at Westminster, one at Oxford, one at Peterborough, one at Bristol, one at Chester, and one at Gloucester; all remaining at this day, save that of Westminster; which, being revoked to its first institution by Queen Mary and Benedictines placed in it, was by Queen Elizabeth afterwards converted to a collegiate church, and a school for the teaching and maintenance of young scholars. Ld. Herbert, Hist. of Hen. VIII.

BENEDICTINE. * adj. Belonging to the order of St. Benedict.

Wherein Theobald, the successor of Corbeil, placed Benedictine monks. Weever's Fun. Monuments.

BENEDICTION. n. s. [benedictio, Lat.]

1. Blessing; a decretory pronouncement of happiness.

A sovereign shame so bows him; his unkindness,
That stript her from his benediction, turn'd her
To foreign casualties, gave her dear rights
To his dog-hearted daughters.

Shakspeare.

From him will raise
A mighty nation; and upon him shower.
His benediction so, that, in his seed,
All nations shall be blest.

Milton.

2. The advantage conferred by blessing.

Prosperity is the blessing of the Old Testament; adversity is the blessing of the New; which carrieth the greater benediction, and the clearer revelation of God's favour. Bacon.

3. Acknowledgments for blessings received; thanks.

Could he less expect
Than glory and benediction, that is, thanks? Milton.
Such ingenious and industrious persons are delighted in searching out natural rarities; reflecting upon the Creator of them his due praises and benedictions. Ray.

4. The form of instituting an abbot.

What consecration is to a bishop, that benediction is to an abbot; but in a different way: for a bishop is not properly such, till consecration; but an abbot, being elected and confirmed, is properly such before benediction. Ayliffe.

BENEFACCTION. n. s. [from benefacio, Lat.]

1. The act of conferring a benefit.

2. The benefit conferred; which is the more usual sense.

One part of the benefactions, was the expression of a generous and grateful mind. Atterbury.

BENEFACCTOR. n. s. [from benefacio, Lat.] He that confers a benefit; frequently he that contributes to some public charity: it is used with of, but oftener with to, before the person benefited.

Then swell with pride, and must be titled gods,
Great benefactors of mankind, deliverers,
Worshipp'd with temple, priest, and sacrifice. Milton.

From that preface he took his hint, though he had the baseness not to acknowledge his benefactor. Dryden.

I cannot but look upon the writer as my benefactor, if he conveys to me an improvement of my understanding. Addison.

Whoever makes ill returns to his benefactor, must needs be a common enemy to mankind. Swift.

BENEFACRESS. † n. s. [from benefactor.] A woman who confers a benefit.

Dr. Berkeley, one of her executors, perused these letters carefully, in order to fulfil the will of his benefactress.

Delany's Obs. on Ld. Orrery's Acc. of Swift, p. 123.

She was a benefactress to many monasteries. Warton, Hist. of Kildington, p. 30.

BENEFICE. † n. s. [from beneficium, Lat.]

1. Advantage conferred on another. This word is generally taken for all ecclesiastical livings, be they dignities or others. Comel.

And of the priest estoons 'gan to enquire,
How to a benefice he might aspire.
Much to himself he thought, but little spoke,
And, undepriv'd, his benefice forsook. Spenser.

2. Benefice, in the feudal language, signified an emolument and a duty; but it also formerly meant, generally speaking, benefit; and so Wickliffe gives for "partakers of the benefit," 1 Tim. vi. 2. "parteneris of benefice." Dryden.

BENEFICED. adj. [from benefice.] Possessed of a benefice, or church preferment.

The usual rate between the beneficed man and the religious person, was one moiety of the benefice. Ayliffe.

BENEFICENCE. † n. s. [old Fr. beneficence.] The practice of doing good; active goodness.

You could not extend your beneficence to so many persons; yet you have lost as few days as Aurelius. Dryden.

Love and charity extends our beneficence to the miseries of our brethren. Rogers.

BENEFICENT. adj. [from beneficus, beneficentior, Lat.] Kind; doing good. It differs from benign, as the act from the disposition; beneficence being kindness, or benignity exerted in action.

Such a creature could not have his origination from any less than the most wise and beneficent being, the great God. Hale.

But Phœbus, thou, to man beneficent, Delight'st in building cities. Prior.

BENEFICENTLY. * adv. [from beneficent.] In a beneficent manner.

BENEFICELESS. * adj. [from benefice and less.] Having no benefice.

That competency of means which our beneficeless precisians prate of. Sheldon, Mir. of Antichrist, p. 190.

BENEFICIAL. † adj. [Fr. beneficiel.]

1. Advantageous; conferring benefits; profitable; useful; with to before the person benefited.

Not any thing is made to be beneficial to him, but all things for him, to shew beneficence and grace in them. Hooker.

This supposition grants the opinion to conduce to order in the world, consequently to be very beneficial to mankind. Tillotson.

The war, which would have been most beneficial to us, and destructive to the enemy, was neglected. Swift.

Are the present revolutions in circular orbs, more beneficial than the other would be? Bentley.

2. Helpful; medicinal.

In the first access of such a disease, any decostruent, without much acrimony, is beneficial. Arbuthnot.

BENEFICIAL. n. s. An old word for a benefice.

For that the groundwork is, and end of all,
How to obtain a beneficial. Spenser, M. Hubb. Tale.

BENEFICIALLY. † adv. [from beneficial.] Advantageously; profitably; helpfully.

There is no literary or perhaps no practical useful point of knowledge, to which his literary researches could be more beneficially directed. Pownall on the Study of Antiquities, p. 68.

BENEFICIALNESS. n. s. [from beneficial.] Usefulness; profit; helpfulness.

Though the knowledge of these objects be commendable for their contentation and curiosity, yet they do not commend their knowledge to us, upon the account of their usefulness and beneficialness. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

BENEFICIARY. adj. [from benefice.] Holding something in subordination to another; having a dependent and secondary possession, without sovereign power.

The duke of Parma was tempted by no less promise, than to be made a feudatory, or beneficiary king of England, under the signory in chief of the pope. Bacon.

BENEFICIARY. † n. s.

B E N

1. He that is in possession of a benefice.

A benefice is either said to be a benefice with the cure of souls, or otherwise. In the first case, if it be annexed to another benefice, the beneficiary is obliged to serve the parish church in his own proper person.

2. A person beneficed by another.

His beneficiaries frequently made it their wonder, how the doctor should either know of them or their distress.

Fell's Life of Hammond, § 2.

BENEFICIENCY. * n. s. [Fr. beneficence.] Kindness; benignity; graciousness.

They [the ungrateful] discourage the inclinations of noble minds, and make beneficency cool unto acts of obligation, whereby the grateful world should subsist and have their consolation.

Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 17.

BENEFICIENT. * adj. [from beneficence.] The French have also the verb beneficier. V. Cotgrave.

As its tendency is necessarily beneficient, it is the proper object of gratitude and reward. A. Smith, Theor. of Hum. Sent.

BENEFIT. n. s. [beneficium, Lat.]

1. A kindness; a favour conferred; an act of love.

When noble benefits shall prove

Not well dispos'd, the mind grown once corrupt,
They turn to vicious forms.

Shakspeare.

Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits.

Psaln ciii. 2.

Offer'd life

Neglect not, and the benefit embrace,

By faith, not void of works.

Milton, P. L.

2. Advantage; profit; use.

The creature abateth his strength for the benefit of such as put their trust in thee.

Wisdom, xvi. 24.

3. [In law.] Benefit of clergy is an ancient liberty of the church, when a priest, or one within orders, is arraigned of felony before a secular judge, he may pray his clergy; that is, pray to be delivered to his ordinary, to purge himself of the offence objected to him: and this might be done in case of murder. The ancient law, in this point of clergy is much altered: for clerks are no more delivered to their ordinaries to be purged, but now every man, though not within orders, is put to read at the bar, being found guilty, and convicted of such felony as this benefit is granted for; and so burnt in the hand, and set free for the first time, if the ordinary's commissioner, or deputy, standing by, do say, Legit ut clericus; or otherwise suffereth death for his transgression.

Cowel.

To BENEFIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To do good to; to advantage.

What course I mean to hold,

Shall nothing benefit your knowledge.

Shakspeare.

He was so far from benefiting trade, that he did it a great injury, and brought Rome in danger of a famine.

Arbuthnot.

To BENEFIT. v. n. To gain advantage; to make improvement.

To tell you therefore what I have benefited herein, among old and renowned authors, I shall spare.

Milton on Educ.

To BENEGROE. * v. d. [from be and negro; an unusual but forcible word.] To make extremely dark.

And if at the coming and appearance of the humanity of Christ, the sun shall be benegroed in darkness, as a petty light at the coming of a greater; how if you cast an eye upon the life of God!

Hewyt, Sermons, (1638.) p. 79.

Surrounded with miseries, benegroed in more than Cimmerian, and that perpetual darkness too, &c.

Ibid. p. 109.

To BENEME, or BENEMPNE. * v. a. [from be and nempe, Sax. numan, neimnan, to name; pret. and pt. benempt, bynempt. Chaucer uses the verb nuc, for name, Squire's Tale, ver. 10632. Dr.

B E N

Johnson gives benempt as an adjective, when his example clearly proves it to be a verb; and defines it named, marked out, when it there means promised or given. The word in any sense is now obsolete.]

1. To name; to pronounce.

But say me, what is Alcind, he

That is so oft bynempt?

Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.

But, ere they did their utmost obsequy,

Sir Guyon, more affection to increase,

Bynempt a sacred vow, which none should ay release.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. i. 60.

2. To promise; to give.

Much greater gifts for guerdon thou shalt gayne,

Thah kid or cosset, which I thee bynempt.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. November.

BENEMPT. † See To BENEME.

BENEPLACITURE. * n. s. [from beneplacitum, Lat. good pleasure.] Will; choice.

Hath he by his holy penmen told us, that either of the other ways was more suitable to his beneplaciture?

Glanville, Pre-exist. of Souls, ch. 4.

To BENET. v. a. [from net.] To ensnare; to surround as with toils.

Being thus benetted round with villains,

Ere I could mark the prologue, to my bane

They had begun the play.

Shakspeare.

BENEVOLENCE. † n. s. [benivolentia, Lat. benivolence, old Fr.]

1. Disposition to do good; kindness; charity; good will.

If Sir John Falstaff have committed disparagements unto you, I am of the church, and will be glad to do my benevolence, to make atonements and compromises between you.

Shakspeare, Merry W. of Windsor.

Grasp the whole worlds of reason, life, and sense,

In one close system of benevolence.

Pope, Ess. on Man.

The good done; the charity given.

A kind of tax.

This tax, called a benevolence, was devised by Edward IV. for which he sustained much envy. It was abolished by Richard III.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

Milton, Apok. for Smeectymn.

BENJAMIN. n. s. A gum. See BENZOIN.

To BENIGHT. v. a. [from night.]

1. To involve in darkness; to darken; to shrowd with the shades of night.

He that has light within his own clear breast

May sit in the center, and enjoy bright day;

But he that hides a dark soul, and foul thoughts,

Benighted walks under the mid-day sun;

Himself is his own benighted.

Milton, Comus.

Those bright stars that did adorn our hemisphere, as those dark shades that did benight it, vanish.

Boyle.

B E N

A storm begins, the raging waves run high,
The clouds look heavy and benight the sky.
The miserable race of men that live
Benighted half the year, benumm'd with frosts,
Under the polar Bear.

Garth.

2. To surprise with the coming on of night.

Being benighted, the sight of a candle I saw a good way off, directed me to a young shepherd's house.

Philips.

Sidney.

Here some benighted angel, in his way,
Might ease his wings; and, seeing heaven appear
In its best work of mercy, think it there.

Dryden.

3. To debar from intellectual light; to cloud with ignorance.

But what so long in vain, and yet unknown
By poor mankind's benighted wit, is sought,
Shall in this age to Britain sure be shown.

Dryden.

BENIGN. adj. [benignus, Lat. It is pronounced without the g, as if written benine; but the g is preserved in benignity.]

1. Kind; generous; liberal; actually good. See BENEFICENT.

This turn hath made amends! Thou hast fulfill'd
Thy words, Creator bounteous and benign!
Giver of all things fair.

Milton.

So shall the world go on,
To good malignant, to bad men benign.

Milton.

We owe more to Heav'n than to the sword,
The wish'd return of so benign a lord.

Waller.

What Heav'n bestows upon the earth, in kind influences and benign aspects, is paid it back in sacrifice and adorations

South.

They who delight in the suffering of inferiour creatures, will not be very compassionate or benign.

Locke.

Diff'rent are thy names,
As thy kind hand has founded many cities,
Or dealt benign thy various gifts to men.

Prior.

2. Wholesome; not malignant.

These salts are of a benign mild nature, in healthy persons;
but, in others, retain their original qualities, which they discover in cachexes.

Arbuthnot.

BENIGN Disease, is when all the usual symptoms appear in the small-pox, or any acute disease, favourably, and without any irregularities, or unexpected changes.

Quincy.

BENIGNANT. * adj. [from benign.] Kind; gracious;
actually good.

Defend my heart, benignant Power,
From amorous looks and smiles;
And shield me, in my gayer hour,
From love's destructive wiles.

Maiden's Wish, Collect. of Eng. Songs, i. iv. 20.

If what has now been stated should be urged by the enemies of Christianity, as if its influence on the mind were not benignant, let it be remembered, that Johnson's temperament was melancholy, of which such direful apprehensions of futurity are often a common effect.

Boswell, Life of Johnson, iv. 314.

BENIGNITY. † n. s. [old Fr. benigneté.]

1. Graciousness; goodness.

It is true, that his mercy will forgive offenders, or his benignity co-operate to their conversions.

Brown.

Although he enjoys the good that is done him, he is unconcerned to value the benignity of him that does it.

South.

2. Actual kindness.

He which useth the benefit of any special benignity, may enjoy it with good conscience.

Hooker.

The king was desirous to establish peace rather by benignity than blood.

Hayward.

3. Salubrity; wholesome quality; friendliness to vital nature.

Bones receive a quicker agglutination in sanguine than in choleric bodies, by reason of the benignity of the serum, which sendeth out better matter for a callus.

Wiseman.

BENIGNLY. adv. [from benign.] Favourably; kindly; graciously.

B E N

'Tis amazement more than love,
Which her radiant eyes do move;
If less splendour wait on thine,
Yet they so benignly shine,
I would turn my dazzled sight
To behold their milder light.

Waller.

Oh truly good, and truly great!
For glorious as he rose, benignly so he set.

Prior.

BENISON. † n. s. [old Fr. benison, bonne priere; bené-ison, benediction. Lacombe.] Blessing; benediction: not now used, unless ludicrously.

We have no such daughter; nor shall ever see
That face of her's again; therefore, begone
Without our grace, our love, our benison. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Unmuffle, ye fair stars, and thou, fair moon,
That won'tst to love the traveller's benison. Milton, Comus.

BENNET. n. s. An herb; the same with avens.

BENT. † n. s. [from the verb To bend.]

1. The state of being bent; a state of flexure; curvity. Strike gently, and hold your rod at a bent a little. Walton's Angler.

2. Degree of flexure.

There are divers subtle inquiries concerning the strength required to the bending of bows; the force they have in the discharge, according to the several bents; and the strength required to be in the string of them.

Bp. Wilkins.

3. Declivity. [old Fr. pente, the slope of a hill. Dryden has adopted the word from Chaucer.]

A mountain stood,
Threatening from high, and overlook'd the wood:
Beneath the lowering brow, and on a bent,
The temple stood of Mars arripotent.

Dryden.

4. Utmost power, as of a bent bow.

Then let thy love be younger than thyself,
Or thy affection cannot hold the bent.

Shakspeare.

We both obey,
And here give up ourselves, in the full bent,
To lay our service freely at your feet.

Shakspeare.

5. Application of the mind; strain of the mental powers.

The understanding should be brought to the knotty parts of knowledge, that try the strength of thought, and a full bent of the mind, by insensible degrees.

Locke.

6. Inclination; disposition towards something.

O who does know the bent of women's fantasy!
To your own bents dispose you; you'll be found
Be you beneath the sky.

Shakspeare.

He knew the strong bent of the country towards the house of York.

Bacon.

Soon inclin'd to admit delight,
The bent of nature!

Milton, P. L.

The golden age was first; when man, yet new,
No rule but uncorrupted reason knew;

And, with a native bent, did good pursue.

Dryden.

Let there be propensity and bent of will to religion, and there will be the same sedulity and indefatigable industry.

South.

'Tis odds but the scale turns at last on nature's side, and the evidence of one or two senses gives way to the united bent and tendency of all the five.

Atterbury.

7. Determination; fixed purpose.

Their unbelief we may not impute unto insufficiency in the mean which is used, but to the wilful bent of their obstinate hearts against it.

Hooker.

Yet we saw them forced to give way to the bent, and current humour of the people, in favour of their ancient and lawful government.

Temple.

8. Turn of the temper, or disposition; shape, or fashion, superinduced by art.

Not a courtier,
Although they wear their faces to the bent
Of the king's look, but hath a heart that is Glad at the thing they scowl at.

Shakspeare.

Two of them have the very bent of honour.

Shakspeare.

Then thy straight rule set virtue in my sight,

The crooked line reforming by the right;

My reason took the bent of thy command,

Was form'd and polish'd by thy skilful hand.

Dryden.

9. Tendency; flexion; particular direction.

The exercising the understanding, in the several ways of reasoning, teacheth the mind suppleness, to apply itself more dexterously to bents and turns of the matter, in all its researches.

Locke.

10. A stalk of grass, called bent-grass. [Germ. bintz, from binden, to bind, a rush; so our bent may here be from band.]

His spear, a bent both stiff and strong,
And well ~~ripe~~ of two inches long;

The pile was of a horse-fly's tongue,

Whose sharpness naught reversed.

Drayton, Nymphid.

Then the flowers of the vines; it is a little dust, like the dust of a bent, which grows upon the cluster, in the first coming forth.

So stings a snake that to the fire is brought,

Which harmless lay with cold benum'd before.

Fairfax.

The winds blow moist and keen, which bids us seek

Some better shroud, some better warmth, to cherish

Our limbs benum'd.

Milton, P. L.

My sinews slaken, and an icy stiffness

Benums my blood.

Denham.

It seizes upon the vitals, and benums the senses; and where there is no sense, there can be no pain.

South.

Will they be the less dangerous, when warmth shall bring them to themselves, because they were once frozen and benumbed with cold?

L'Estrange.

2. To stupify.

These accents were her last: the creeping death

Benum'd her senses first, then stopp'd her breath.

Dryden.

BENUMMEDNESS. * n. s. [from benum. A very old Eng. substantive, occurring in Barret's Alvearie.]

The state of being benumbed.

Preternatural sleep is a committing a rape upon the body and mind, whereby the offensive superfluities, by their violent assaults, force the brain to a benumbedness for its destruction.

Smith's Old Age, p. 131.

When there is a benumbedness, or scaredness, upon the grand principle of spiritual sense, as it is expressed in Ephes. xix. 4. we come "to be past feeling," no wonder then if sin and Satan inflict blow after blow, in the most fatal manner, upon the soul.

South, Sermons, ix. 55.

This little berry some ycleep An hillock. W. Browne.

To BE'RRY. v. n. [from the noun.] To bear berries.

BE'RRY-BEARING Cedar. [cedrus baccifera, Lat.] The leaves are squamose, somewhat like those of the cypress. The katkins, or male flowers, are produced at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree. The fruit is a berry, inclosing three hard seeds in each. The wood is of great use in the Levant, is large timber, and may be thought the shittim-wood mentioned in the Scripture, of which many of the ornaments to the famous temple of Solomon were made. Miller.

BE'RRY-BEARING Orach. See MULBERRY BLIGHT.

BERT, Sax. beopt, is the same with our bright; in the Latin, illustris and clarus. So Ecbert, eternally famous, or bright; Sigbert, famous conquerour. And she who was termed by the Germans Bertha, was by the Greeks called Eudoxia, as is observed by Iquitprandus. Of the same sort were these, Phædrus, Epiphanius, Photius, Lampridius, Fulgentius, Illustris. Gibson's Camden.

BERTH. n. s. [with sailors.] See BIRTH.

BE'RTAM. n. s. [pyræthrum, Lat.] A sort of herb, called also bastard pellitory.

BE'RYL. n. s. [beryllus, Lat.] A kind of precious stone.

May the billows roul ashore The beryl and the golden ore. Milton.

The beryl of our lapidaries is only a fine sort of cornelian of a more deep bright red, sometimes with a cast of yellow, and more transparent than the common cornelian. Woodward.

To BESAI'NT. * v. a. [from be and saint.] To make a saint of.

As absurd, no doubt, is their canonizing, securing and besainting themselves in this life, upon every slight premature persuasion that they are in Christ. Hammond's Serm. p. 611.

Make antiquity A patron of black patches, and deny That peruke are unlawful, and besaint Old Jezebel for shewing how to paint.

John Hall's Poems, p. 3.

To BESCA'TTER.* v. a. [from be and scatter.] To throw loosely over.

Her goodly lockes adowne her backe did flow
Unto her waiste, with flowres bescattered.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. xi. 46.

To BESCO'RN.* v. a. [from be and scorn.] To mock at: to scorn.

Then was he bescorned, that onely should have been honoured in all things. Chaucer, Pars. Tale, ed. Urry, p. 195.

To BESCRACH.* v. a. [from be and scratch; one of our oldest verbs.] To tear with the nails, or with any thing pointed.

Nor she had nothing slow ybe
For to bescrachin of hir face,
And for to rent in many place
Hir clothes. Chaucer, Rom. of the Rose.
For sore he swat, and, runting through that same
Thick forest, was bescracht, and both his feet nigh lame.
Spenser, F. Q. iii. v. 3.

To BESCRAWL.* v. a. [from be and scrawl. See To SCRAWL.] To scribble over.

These wretched projectors of ours, that bescrawl their pamphlets every day with new forms of government for our church. Milton, Reason of Church Gov. i. 1.

To BESCRE'EN. v. a. [from screen.] To cover with a screen; to shelter; to conceal.

What man art thou, that thus bescreen'd in night,
So stumblest on my counsel! Shakespeare.

To BESCRIBBLE.* v. a. [from be and scribble. See To SCRIBBLE.] To write on.

That power the undiscerning canonist hath improperly usurped in his court-lect, and bescribed with a thousand trifling impertinences. Milton, Doct. and Dis. of Divorce, ii. 12.

To BESCU'MBER.* v. a. [from cumber.] To load with something useless or impertinent.

Did Block bescumber
Statutes' white suit, wi' the parchment lace there?
B. Jonson, Staple of News.
Mortimer's numbers
[The pedant] with much Esculine filth bescumbers.
Marsdon's Satires, iii. 9.

To BESE'E.* v. n. part. beseen. [Sax. bejeon.] To look; to mind. One of our oldest verbs.

I have synned betrayinge rightfull blood. And they saiden,
What to us? Bisee thee. [In our established version, Sie thou to that.] Wichffe, S. Matt. xxvii.

To BESE'ECII. v. a. pret. I besought, I have besought. [from jean, Sax. versocken, Dutch.]

1. To intreat; to supplicate; to implore: sometimes before a person.

I beseech you, Sir, pardon me; it is only a letter from my brother, that I have not all over-read. Shakespeare.
I beseech thee for my son Onesimus, whom I have begotten in my bonds. Philemon, 10.
I, in the anguish of my heart, beseech you
To quit the dreadful purpose of your soul. Addison.

2. To beg; to ask: before a thing.
But Eve fell humble, and besought
His peace, and thus proceeded in her plaint. Milton, P. I.
Before I come to them, I beseech your patience, whilst I speak something to ourselves here present. Spratt.

BES'ECH.* n. s. [from the verb.] Request.
Good madam, hear the suit that Edith urges
With such submiss beseeches. Beaum. and Fl. Bloody Brother.

BES'ECHER.* n. s. [from beseech.] The person who makes request or supplication.

Let no unkind, no fair beseechers kill. Shakespeare, Sonn. 135.
Thou art the God, have pity on thy humble beseechers.
Wh. Duty of Man, Pr. for the Peace of the Church.

To BESE'EK.* v. a. [Sax. jeacan. See To SEEK.] To request; to beseech. The old and genuine word for beseech.

We beseke you of mercie and socour:
Have mercie on our woe and our distresse.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale.
Recounting which, how would he sob and shriek!
And to be young again of Jove beseech.
Sackville's Induct. Mirour for Magistrates.

He, arriving with the fall of day,
Drew to the gate, and there with prayers meeke
And myld entreaty lodging did for her beseeke.
Spenser, F. Q. vi. iii. 37.

To BESE'EM. v. a. [beziemen, Dutch.] To become; to be fit; to be decent for.

What form of speech, or behaviour, beseeemeth us in our prayers to Almighty God? Hooker.
This oversight
Beseeem thee not, in whom such virtues spring. Fairfax.
Verona's ancient citizens
Cast by their brave beseeeming ornaments. Shakespeare.
What thoughts he had, beseeem not me to say;
Though some surmise he went to fast and pray. Dryden.

BESE'EMING.* n. s. [from beseeem.] Comeliness. Barret.

BESE'EMLY.* adj. [from beseeem.] Fit; becoming; decent.

See to their seats they hie with merry glee,
And in beseeemly order sitten there. Shenstone, Schoolmistress.

BESE'EN† particip. [from besee, Skinner. This word I have found only in Spenser, Dr. Johnson says. But see BESEE. In our older writers, this participle is besey; as "evil besey," ill besey; "richly besey," of a rich appearance. V. Tyrwhitt, Gloss. Chauc. Spenser uses it more than once.] Adapted; adjusted; becoming.

Then her they crowne their goddesse and their queene,
And decke with flowers thy altars well bescene.
Spenser, Hymn in Hon. of Love.
Forth came that ancient lord and aged queen,
Armed in antique robes down to the ground,
And sad habiliments, right well bescen. Spenser, F. Q.

To BESE'T.† v. a. pret. I beset; I have beset. [Goth. bisatjan, Mar. xii. 1. Sax. bejætan, bejæt.]

1. To besiege; to hem in; to inclose; as with a siege.

Follow him that's fled;
The thicket is beset, he cannot scape. Shakespeare.
Now, Cæsar, let thy troops beset our gates,
And bar each avenue——
Cato shall open to himself a passage. Addison.
I know thou look'st on me, as on a wretch
Beset with ills and cover'd with misfortunes. Addison.

2. To waylay; to surround.
Draw forth thy weapon, we're beset with thieves;
Rescue thy mistress. Shakespeare.

The only righteous in a world perverse,
And therefore hated, therefore so beset
With foes, for daring single to be just. Milton.
True fortitude I take to be the quiet possession of a man's self, and an undisturbed doing his duty, whatever evil besets, or danger lies in his way. Locke.

3. To embarrass; to perplex; to entangle without any means of escape.

Now, daughter Sylvia, you are hard beset. Shakespeare.
Thus Adam, sore beset, reply'd. Milton.
Sure, or I read her visage much amiss,
Or grief besets her hard. Rowe.
We be in this world beset with sundry uneasinesses, distracted with different desires. Locke.

4. To fall upon; to harass. Not used.
But they him spying, both with greedy force
At once upon him ran, and him beset
With strokes of mortal steel. Spenser, F. Q.

To BESHINE.* v. n. [from be and shine.] To shine upon. An unusual word.

He had a wyf,
That he lov'd as hertlich as his own lyf;
[She] was as fair a creature as sun might beshine.

Hist. of Bergh, Urry's Ch. p. 403.

To BESHREW.* v. a. The original of this word is somewhat obscure; as it evidently implies to wish ill, some derive it from beschryen, Germ. to enchant. Topsel, in his Book of Animals, deduces it from the shrew mouse, an animal, says he, so poisonous, that its bite is a severe curse. A shrew likewise signifies a scolding woman; but its origin is not known. This is Dr. Johnson's account of the etymology. But see SHREW. Beshrew is probably from the Sax. verb berýpepan, particip. berýppe, ensnared; the verb properly meaning to take by stratagem or snare. Mr. Tooke thinks beshrew to be the imperative of this verb, berýpepe, and to mean, be thou vexed, Div. of Purley, vol. ii. p. 210. To this I cannot accede. — "That they might take Jesus by subtilty," S. Matt. xxvi. 4. is in the Sax. maene berýppan. Be thou taken in some snare is, therefore, an explanation of better authority than Mr. Tooke's unsupported assertion; and is moreover illustrated, I think, by a passage in Gower, where beshrewed seems to mean full of subtilty, and is a just picture of hypocrisy.

This double hypocrisy,
With his devout apparancie,
A vylar set upon his face,
Whereof, toward the world's grace,
He seemeth to be right well thewed;
And yet his herte is all beshrewed.

Gower, Conf. Am. b. i.

1. To wish a curse to.

Nay, quoth the cock; but I beshrew us both,
If I believe a saint upon his oath. Dryden, Fables.

2. To happen ill to.

Beshrew thee, cousin, which did'st lead me forth
Of that sweet way I was in to despair. Shakspeare.
Now much beshrew my manners, and my pride,
If Hermia meant to say Lysander lied. Shakspeare.

To BESHUT.* v. a. [from be and shut.] To shut up. Obsolete.

They have my joie fully let,
Sith Bialacoil they have beshet
Fro me in prison wickedly. Chancer, Rem. R. 4488.

BESIDE.* prep. [from be and side.]

1. At the side of another; near.

Beside the hearse a fruitful palmtree grows,
Ennobled since by this great funeral. Fairfax.
He caused me to sit down beside him. Bacon.
At his right hand, Victory
Sat eagle-wing'd beside him hung his bow. Milton, P. L.
Fair Lavinia fled the fire
Before the gods, and stood beside her sire. Dryden.
Fair is the kingcup that in meadow blows;
Fair is the daisy that beside her grows. Gay, Pastorals.
Now under hanging mountains,
Beside the falls of fountains,
Unheard, unknown,
He makes his moan. Pope, Ode, St. Cecilia.

2. Over and above.

Doubtless, in man there is a nature found,
Beside the senses, and above them far. Sir J. Davies.
In brutes, besides the exercise of sensitive perception and imagination, there are lodged instincts antecedent to their imaginative faculty. Hale.
We may be sure there were great numbers of wise and learned men, beside those whose names are in the Christian records, who took care to examine our Saviour's history.

Addison on the Christian Religion.

Precepts of morality, besides the natural corruption of our tempers, are abstracted from ideas of sense.

Addison on Virg. Geor.

3. Not according to, though not contrary; as we say, some things are beside nature, some are contrary to nature.

The Stoicks did hold a necessary connexion of causes; but they believed, that God doth act præter & contra naturam, besides and against nature. Ep. Bramhall, against Hobbes.

To say a thing is a chance, as it relates to second causes, signifies no more, than that there are some events beside the knowledge, purpose, expectation, and power of second causes.

South.

Providence often disposes of things by a method beside, and above the discoveries of man's reason. South.

It is beside my present business to enlarge upon this speculation. Locke.

4. Out of; in a state of deviating from.

You are too wilful blame,
And, since your coming here, have done
Enough to put him quite beside his patience. Shakspeare.

Of vagabonds we say,
That they are ne'er beside their way. Hudibras.

These may serve as landmarks, to shew what lies in the direct way of truth, or is quite besides it. Locke.

5. Before a reciprocal pronoun, out of; as beside himself; out of the order of rational beings; out of his wits.

They be carried besides themselves, to whom the dignity of publick prayer doth not discover somewhat more fitness in men of gravity, than in children. Hooker.

Only be patient, till we have appeas'd
The multitude, beside themselves with fear. Shakspeare.

Festus said with a loud voice, Paul, thou art beside thyself: much learning doth make thee mad. Acts, xxvi. 24.

BESIDE.* adv.

1. More than that; over and above.

If Cassio do remain,
He hath a daily beauty in his life,
That makes me ugly; and, besides, the Moor
May unfold me to him; there stand I in peril. Shakspeare.
Besides, you know not, while you here attend,
Th' unworthy fate of your unhappy friend. Dryden.

That man that doth not know those things, which are of necessity for him to know, is but an ignorant man, whatever he may know besides. Tillotson.

Some wonder, that the Turk never attacks this treasury. But, besides that he has attempted it formerly with no success, it is certain the Venetians keep too watchful an eye. Addison.

2. Not in this number; out of this class; not included here.

The men said unto Lot, Hast thou here any besides?

Genesis, xix. 12.

Outlaws and robbers, who break with all the world beside, must keep faith among themselves. Locke.

All that we feel of it, begins and ends
In the small circle of our foes or friends;
To all beside as much an empty shade,
An Eugene living, as a Caesar dead. Pope.

And dead, as living, 'tis our author's pride
Still to charm those who charm the world beside. Pope.

3. Except.

We would have omniscience and all parts of divinity besides the holiness; yet alas, those without these would prove fatal acquiescences. Decay of Christian Piety, p. 349.

BESIDERY. n. s. A species of pear.

To BESIEGE. v. a. [from siege.] To beleaguer; to lay siege to; to beset with armed forces; to endeavour to win a town or fortress, by surrounding it with an army, and forcing the defendants, either by violence or famine, to give admission.

B E S

And he shall besiege thee in all thy gates, until thy high and fenced walls come down. Deuteronomy, xxviii. 52.

The queen, with all the northern earls and lords,
Intend here to besiege you in your castle. Shakespeare.

BESIEGER. n. s. [from besiege.] One employed in a siege.

There is hardly a town taken, in the common forms, where the besiegers have not the worse of the bargain. Swift.

To BESIT.* v. a. [from be and sit. See To SIT.]

To suit; to become. Not now in use; and ignorantly converted into besit by some editors of Spenser, who supposed the author not to know the language of his own and former times. Chaucer and Gower repeatedly use sit in this sense of become.

Me ill besits, that in derdoing arms
And honour's suit my vowed days do spend,
Unto thy bounteous baytes and pleasing charmes,
With which weake men thou witchest, to attend.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. vii. 10.

And that which is for ladies most *besit*ing,
To stint all strife, and foster friendly peace,
Was from those dames so farre and so unfitting,
As that, instead of praying them surcease,
They did much more their cruelty encrease. Ibid. iv. ii. 19.

To BESLA'VE.* v. a. [from be and slave.] To subjugate; to make a slave of.

He that hath once fixed his heart upon the face of an harlot, and hath beslaved himself to a bewitching beauty, casts off at once all fear of God, respect to laws, shame of the world, regard of his estate, care of wife, children, friends, reputation, patrimony, body, soul. Bp. Hall, Works, ii. 116.

Whom sad diseases have beslaved to drugs and diets.
Quarles, Judgement and Mercy.

It [covetousness] blinds justice, poisons charity, strangles conscience, beslaves the affections, betrays friendship, breaks all relations. Ibid.

To BESLIME.* v. a. [from be and slime.] To soil; to dawb.

Our try of writers may beslime his fame,
And give his action that adulterate name.
B. Jonson, Poetaster, Prol.

To BESLUBBER. v. a. [from slubber.] To dawb; to smear.

He persuaded us to tickle our noses with speargrass, and make them bleed; and then beslubber our garments with it, and swear it was the blood of true men. Shakespeare.

To BESMEAR.† v. a. [from smear. See To SMEAR.]

1. To bedawb; to overspread with something that sticks on.

He lay as in a dream of deep delight,
Besmeared with precious balm, whose virtuous might Did heal his wounds. Spenser, F. Q.

That face of his I do remember well;
Yet when I saw it last, it was besmeared
As black as Vulcan. Shakespeare.

First Moloch! horrid king! besmeared with blood
Of human sacrifice, and parents' tears.
Her fainting hand let fall the sword, besmeared
With blood. Denham.

Her gushing blood the pavement all besmeared. Dryden.

2. To soil; to foul.

My honour would not let ingratitude
So much besmeare it. Shakespeare.

Then should a great deal of good paper escape the misery of being besmeared by his pen.

Bp. Hall, Honour of the Married Clergy, ii. 14.

BESMEARER.* n. s. [from besmeare.] He which soils or besmeares any thing. Sherwood.

To BESMIRCH.† v. a. [from be and smirch. See To SMIRCH.] To soil; to discolour. Not in use.

B E S

Perhaps he loves you now,
And now no soil of cautel doth besmirch
The virtue of his will.

Shakespeare.

Our gayness, and our gilt are all besmirch'd
With many marching in the painful field. Shakespeare.

To BESMOK'E. v. n. [from smoke.]

1. To foul with smoke.

2. To harden or dry in smoke.

To BESMU'T.† v. a. [Goth. bismait, he anointed, S. John, ix. 11. Sax. bejmytan. Formerly written besmolre, from the Dutch besmodderen.] To soil or blacken with smoke or soot.

Alles besmotred with his habergeon. Chaucer, Canterb. T. Prol.

To BESNO'W.* v. a. [Sax. bejnuped, from jnipan, to snow.] To scatter in abundance like snow; to whiten as snow.

The presents every day ben newed,

He was with giftes al besnewed,

The people was of him so glad.

Gower, Con. Am. b. 6.

Another shall

Impearl thy teeth, a third thy white and small Hand shall besnow.— Carew, Poems, p. 95.

BESNU'FFED.* adj. [from snuff.] Smear'd with snuff.

Unwash'd her hands, and much besnuff'd her face.

Young, Satire 6.

BE'SOM. n. s. [bejm, bejma, Sax.] An instrument to sweep with.

Bacon commended an old man that sold besoms: a proud young fellow came to him for a besom upon trust; the old man said, Borrow of thy back and belly, they will never ask thee again; I shall dun thee every day. Bacon.

I will sweep it with the besom of destruction, saith the Lord of hosts. Isaiah, xiv. 22.

To BESORT. v. a. [from sort.] To suit; to fit; to become.

Such men as may besort your age,
And know themselves and you.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

BESO'RT. n. s. [from the verb.] Company; attendance; train.

I crave fit disposition for my wife,
With such accommodation and besort,
As levels with her breeding.

Shakespeare, Othello.

To BESOT. v. a. [from sot.]

1. To infatuate; to stupify; to dull; to take away the senses.

Swinish gluttony
Ne'er looks to heav'n amidst his gorgeous feast,
But, with besotted base ingratitude,
Craves and blasphemous his feeder. Milton, Comus.

Or fools besotted with their crimes,
That know not how to shift betimes.

Hudibras.

He is besotted, and has lost his reason; and what then can there be for religion to take hold of him by? South.

2. To make to doat, with on. Not much used.

Paris, you speak

Like one besotted on your sweet delights. Shakespeare.

Trust not thy beauty; but restore the prize,
Which he, besotted on that face and eyes,
Would rend from us. Dryden.

BESO'TTEDLY.* adv. [from besotted.] In a foolish, besotted manner.

After ten or twelve years' prosperous war and contestation with tyranny, basely and besottedly to run their necks again into the yoke which they have broken.

Milton, Ready Way to establish a Free Commonwealth.

BESO'TTEDNESS.* n. s. [from besotted.] Stupidity; infatuation.

God, when men sin outrageously and will not be admonished, gives over chastising them, perhaps by pestilence, fire, sword, or famine, which may all turn to their good; and takes up his severest punishments, hardness, besottedness of heart, and idolatry, to their perdition. Milton, of True Religion, &c. ad fin.

BESOU'GHT. † [part. passive of besech, and of beseek; which see.]

Hasten to appease
 The incensed Father, and the incensed Son,
 While pardon may be found, in time bessought. Milton.

To BESPA'NGLE. v. a. [from spangle.] To adorn with spangles; to besprinkle with something shining.

Not Berenice's locks first rose so bright,
 The heav'ns besspangling with dishevell'd light. Pope.

To BESPA'TTER. † v. a. [from spatter.]

1. To soil by throwing filth; to spot or sprinkle with dirt or water.

Those who will not take vice into their bosoms, shall yet have it bespatter their faces. Government of the Tongue.

BESPREDT.* part. of the Sax. berppengan; Dutch beprenghen. Besprinkled. Formerly written beprengyd, and noticed by Coles in his Dict. 1677.

My head bepredt with hoary frost I find. Spenser.

The water-nymphs, not farre, Lin-Teged that frequent,
 With brows bepredt with ooze, their locks with dew bepredt. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 9.

The savoury herb
 Of knot-grass dew bepredt. Milton, Comus, ver. 542.

To BESPRINKLE. † v. a. Dutch beprenkelen.]

To sprinkle over; to scatter over.

Herodotus imitating the father poet, whose life he had written, hath beprinkled his work with many fabulositities. Brown.

A purple flood
 Flows from the trunk, that welters in the blood;
 The bed beprinkles, and bedews the ground. Dryden.

BESPRINKLER.* n. s. [from beprinkle.] He that sprinkles any thing. Sherwood.

To BESPURT, or BESPURT.* v. a. [from be and spirt, which see.] To throw out scatteringly.

It will be nothing disagreeing from Christian meekness, to handle such a cue in a rougher accent, and to send home his haughtiness well bespurted with his own holy-water.

Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

To BESPURTTER. v. a. [from sputter.] To sputter over something; to dawb any thing by sputtering, or throwing out spittle upon it.

BEST. † adj. the superlative from good. [Goth. batista; bet, betepa, bett, bett, good, better, best, Saxon.]

1. Most good; that which has good qualities in the highest degree.

And he will take your fields, even the best of them, and give them to his servants. 1 Samuel, viii. 14.

When the best things are not possible, the best may be made of those that are. Hooker.

When he is best, he is little more than a man; and when he is worst, he is little better than a beast. Shakspeare.

B E S

I think it a good argument to say, the infinitely wise God hath made it so: and therefore it is best. But it is too much confidence of our own wisdom, to say, I think it best, and therefore God hath made it so. Locke.

An evil intention perverts the best actions, and makes them sins. Addison.

2. The best. The utmost power; the strongest endeavour; the most; the highest perfection.

I profess not talking: only this,

Let each man do his best. Shakspeare.

The duke did his best to come down. Bacon.

He does this to the best of his power. Locke.

My friend, said he, our sport is at the best. Addison.

3. To make the best. To carry to its greatest perfection; to improve to the utmost.

Let there be freedom to carry their commodities where they may make the best of them, except there be some special cause of caution. Bacon.

His father left him an hundred drachmas; Alnaschar, in order to make the best of it, laid it out in glasses. Addison.

We set sail, and made the best of our way, till we were forced, by contrary winds, into St. Remo. Addison.

BEST. adv. [from well.] In the highest degree of goodness.

He shall dwell in that place where he shall choose in one of thy gates, where it liketh him best. Deut. xxiii. 16.

BEST. † is sometimes used in composition, Dr. Johnson observes; but in the following and similar words it is arbitrary.

My best-beloved, and approved friend.

Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

These latter best-betrust spies had some of them further instructions, to draw off the best friends and servants of Perkin, by making remonstrances to them, how weakly his enterprize and hopes were built. Bacon, Hen. VII.

The best-condition'd and unwearied spirit
In doing courtesies. Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

By this law of loving even our enemies, the christian religion discovers itself to be the most generous and best-natured institution that ever was in the world. Tillotson.

Which might have aw'd the best-resolved of men.

Milton, S. A. v. 847.

His death (whose spirit lent a fire
Even to the dullest peasant in his camp,
Being bruited once, took fire and heat away
From the best-temper'd courage in his troops.

Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.

TO BESTA'IN. v. a. [from stain.] To mark with stains; to spot.

We will not line his thin bestained cloke
With our pure honour. Shakspeare.

TO BESTE'AD. † v. a. I bested; I have bested, and bestad. [from stead.]

1. To profit.

Hence vain deluding joys,
The brood of folly, without father bred,
How little you bestead,
Or fill the fixed mind with all your toys. Milton, Il Pens.

2. To treat; to accommodate. This should rather be bested.

They shall pass through it hardly bestead, and hungry. Isaiah, viii. 21.

3. To dispose.

What the foule evil hath thee so bestad?
Spenser, Shep. Cal. August.

BESTIAL. adj. [from beast.]

1. Belonging to a beast, or to the class of beasts.

His wild disorder'd walk, his haggard eyes,
Did all the bestial citizens surprize. Dryden.

2. Having the qualities of beasts; brutal; below the dignity of reason or humanity; carnal.

I have lost the immortal part of myself, and what remains is bestial. Shakspeare, Othello.

B E S

Moreover, urge his hateful luxury,

And bestial appetite, in change of lust. Shakspeare.

For those, the race of Israel oft forsook
Their living strength, and unfrequented loft
His righteous altar, bowing lowly down
To bestial gods. Milton, P. L.

The things promised are not gross and carnal, such as may court and gratify the most bestial part of us. Decay of Piety.

BESTIA'LITY. † n. s. [old Fr. bestialité.] The quality of beasts; degeneracy from human nature.

What can be a greater absurdity, than to affirm bestiality to be the essence of humanity, and darkness the centre of light?
Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scribl.

TO BE'STIALIZE.* v. a. [from bestial.] To make like a beast.

In all the true pleasures which ever fell to my lot, they [reason and reflection] had a considerable share; and where they are wanting, there is no such thing as pleasure of any kind for me; and humanity is debased and bestialized where it is otherwise. Phil. Letters on Physiognomy, (1751,) p. 87.

BESTIA'LLY. † adv. [from bestial.] Brutally; in a manner below humanity.

TO BESTI'CK. † v. a. preter. I bestuck, I have bestuck. [from stick.] To stick over with any thing; to mark any thing by infixing points or spots here and there.

Truth shall retire,

Bestuck with slanderous darts; and works of faith

Rarely be found. Milton, P. L.

I have gained a name bestuck, or, as I may say, bedecked with the reproaches and reviles of this modest confuter.

Milton, Apol. for Smeatymn.

TO BESTI'NK.* v. n. part. bestunk. To stink.

Sherwood.

TO BESTI'R. † v. a. [from stir.]

1. To put into vigorous action. It is seldom used otherwise than with the reciprocal pronoun.

As when men went to watch

On duty, sleeping found by whom they dread,
Rouse and bestir themselves ere well awake. Milton, P. I.

Bestirs her then, and from each tender stalk
Whatever earth, all-bearing mother yields,
She gathers. Milton, P. I.

But, as a dog that turns the spit,
Bestirs himself, and plies his feet
To climb the wheel, but all in vain,
His own weight brings him down again. Hudibras.

What aileth them, that they must needs bestir themselves to get in air, to maintain the creature's life? Req.

2. It is used by Shakspeare with a common word, Dr. Johnson says; and so it is in Ben. Jonson, with a word often vulgarly applied to it in modern times.

I am scarce in breath, my lord.—No marvel you have so bestirred your valour, you cowardly rascal! Shakspeare.

How should we bustle forward? Give some counsel

How to bestir our stumps i'these cross ways.

B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub.

BE'STNESS.* n. s. [from best.] The most excellent state of a thing.

Generally the bestness of a thing (that we may so call it) is best discerned by the necessary use.

Bp. Morton, Episcopacy Asserted, § 4.

TO BESTO'RM.* v. n. [from be and storm.] To rage; to storm.

All is sea besides,
Sinks under us, bestorms, and then devours.

Young, Night Th. 4.

TO BESTOW. † v. a. [Sax. berstandan, berstob, Dutch, bestedan.]

1. To give; to confer upon: commonly with upon.

All men would willingly have yielded him praise; but his nature was such as to bestow it upon himself, before any could give it. Sidney.

All the dedicate things of the house of the Lord, did they bestow upon Baalim. 2 Chron. xxiv. 7.

B E S

2. Sometimes with to.

Sir Julius Caesar, had, in his office, the disposition of the six clerks' places; which he had bestowed to such persons as he thought fit. Clarendon.

3. To give as charity or bounty.

Our Saviour doth plainly witness, that there should not be as much as a cup of cold water bestowed for his sake, without reward. Hooker.

And though he was unsatisfied in getting, Which was a sin; yet in bestowing, madam, He was most princely. Shakspeare.

Spain to your gift alone her Indies owes;

For what the pow'ful takes not, he bestows. Dryden.

You always exceed expectations: as if yours was not your own, but to bestow on wanting merit. Dryden.

4. To give in marriage.

Good reverend father, make my person yours; And tell me how you would bestow yourself. Shakspeare.

I could have bestowed her upon a fine gentleman, who extremely admired her. Tatler.

5. To give as a present.

Pure oil and incense on the fire they throw, And fat of victims which his friends bestow. Dryden.

6. To apply.

The sea was not the duke of Marlborough's element; otherwise the whole force of the war would infallibly have been bestowed there. Swift.

7. To lay out upon.

And thou shalt bestow that money for whatsoever thy soul lusteth after, for oxen, sheep, or for wine. Deut. xiv. 26.

8. To lay up; to stow; to place.

And when he came to the Tower, he took them from their hand, and bestowed them in the house. 2 Kings, v. 24.

BESTOWAL.* n. s. [from bestow.] Disposal.

BESTOWER.† n. s. [from bestow.] Giver; he that confers any thing; disposer.

They all agree in making one supreme God; and that there are several beings that are to be worshipped under him; some as the bestowers of thrones, but subordinate to the Supreme. Stillington.

Where benefits

Are ill conferr'd, as to unworthy men

That turn them to bad uses, the bestower

For wanting judgement how, and on whom, to place them,

Is partly guilty. Beaum. and Fl. Qu. of Corinth.

To BESTRA'DDLE.* v. a. To BESTRIDE, which see.

See also To STRADDLE.

BESTRAUGHT.† particip. [Of this participle I have not found the verb; by analogy we may derive it from bestract; perhaps it is corrupted from distract. Such is Dr. Johnson's remark. He might have found the part. bestract, however, in the old dictionaries of Minshew and Sherwood; in that of the former, with the interpretation "distractus mente," i. e. distracted; in that of the latter, "bestract or bestraught, distract or distraught." Our elder language exhibits also bestraughted in the sense of distracted.] Distracted; mad; out of one's senses; out of one's wits.

Bestraughted heads relief hath found

By musick's pleasant swete delights.

Paradise of Dainty Devises, (1576.) No. 53.

Ask Marian, the fat alewife, if she knew me not. What! I am not bestraught. Shakspeare

STREW.† v. a. particip. pass. bestrewed, or estrown. [Sax. berstyped. See To STREW.] To sprinkle over.

So thick bestrown,

Abject and lost lay these, covering the flood. Milton, P. L.

To BESTRIDE.† v. a. I bestrid, I have bestrid, or bestridden. [Sax. berstriban hoj; to bestride an horse.]

B E T

1. To stride over any thing; to have any thing between one's legs.

Why, man, he doth bestride the narrow world

Like a colossus. Shakspeare.

Make him bestride the ocean, and mankind

Ask his consent to use the sea and wind. Waller.

2. To step over.

That I see thee here,

Thou noble thing! more dances my rapt heart,

Than when I first my wedded mistress saw

Bestride my threshold. Shakspeare.

3. It is often used in the consequential sense for to ride on.

He bestrides the lazy pacing clouds,

And sails upon the bosom of the air. Shakspeare.

That horse, that thou so often hast bestrid:

That horse, that I so carefully have dress'd.

Venicians do not more unquietly ride,

Than did their lubber state mankind bestride. Dryden.

The bounding steed you pompously bestride,

Shares with his lord the pleasure and the pride. Pope.

4. It is used sometimes of a man standing over something which he defends: the present mode of war has put this sense out of use.

He bestrid

An'o'erpress'd Roman, and i' the consul's view

Slew three opposers: Tarquin's self he met,

And struck him on his knee. Shakspeare.

If thou see me down in the battle and bestride me, so; 'tis a point of friendship. Shakspeare.

He doth bestride a bleeding land,

Gasping for life, under great Bolingbroke. Shakspeare.

To BESTUD.† v. a. [from stud.] To adorn with studs, or shining prominences.

Her star-bestudded crown.

Drayton, Ep. of K. John to Matilda

The unsought diamonds

Would so emblaze the forehead of the deep,

And so bestud with stars, that they below

Would grow inur'd to light.

Milton, Comm.

To BESWIKE.* v. a. [Sax. berpican, to entice; Icelandic. sækiat. One of our oldest verbs, repeatedly used by Gower; in the following passage well applied to the Syrens.] To allure.

In women's voice they singe,

With notes of so great likynge,

Of such measure, of such musicke,

Whereof the shippes they beswike,

That passen by the costes there.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 1.

BET.† n. s. [peddian, to wager; ped, a wager, Sax. from which the etymologists derive bet. I should rather imagine it to come from betan, to mend, encrease, or mitter, as a bet encreases the original wager, Dr. Johnson says. What is meant by a bet encreasing the wager, I know not. The etymology might belong to bidan, to abide by, full as well as to betan; and perhaps the Goth. beita, to strive against, may not be disregarded.] A wager; something laid to be won upon certain conditions.

The hoary fool, who many days,

Has struggl'd with continu'd sorrow,

Renews his hope, and blindly lays

The desp'rate bet upon to-morrow.

His pride was in piquette,

Newmarket fame, and judgement at a bet. Pope.

To BET. v. a. [from the noun.] To wager; to stake at a wager.

He drew a good bow: and dead? John of Gaunt loved him well, and betted much upon his head. Shakspeare.

He flies the court for want of clothes,

Cries out 'gainst cocking, since he cannot bet. B. Jonson.

B E T

The god, unhappily engag'd,
Complain'd, and sigh'd, and cry'd, and fretted,
Lost every earthly thing he betted.

BET. The old preterite of beat.

He staid for a better hour, till the hammer had wrought and bet the party more pliant.

To BETA'KE. † v. a. [preter. I betook; part. pass. be- taken. [Sax. betæcan.]

1. To commit, or entrust, or deliver. This is the meaning of the Sax. word, is so given in our old lexicography, and is what Spenser intends (as he elsewhere repeatedly intends) in the following passage, which Dr. Johnson has cited to illustrate his erroneous definition of betake in the first instance, viz. to take or seize. The sense of deliver, or com- mit, is of the highest authority in our language.
See Chaucer, Canterb. Tales, ver. 3748. Wickliffe, S. Matt. xxvi. "What wolen ye give to me, and I schal bitake him to you?" See also Barret's Alv.
1580.

Then to his handes that writt he did betake,
Which he disclosing read. Spenser, F. Q. i. xii. 25.

Give them the threefold charity, which thou once demandest of Peter, what time thou didst betake unto him the charge of thy sleep. Wh. Duty of Man, Pr. for the Peace of the Church.

2. To have recourse to: with the reciprocal pronoun.
The adverse party betaking itself to such practices as men embrace, when they behold things brought to desperate extremities. Hooker.

Thou tyrant!
Do not repent these things; for they are heavier
Than all thy woes can stir: therefore betake thee
To nothing but despair.

The rest, in imitation, to like arms
Betook them, and the neighbouring hills up tore. Milton.

3. To apply: with the reciprocal pronoun.
With ease such fond chimeras we pursue,
As fancy frames for fancy to subdue;
But when ourselves to action we betake,
It shuns the mint, like gold that chymists make. Dryden.
As my observations have been the light whereby I have steered my course, so I betake myself to them again. Woodward.

4. To move; to remove. With the pronoun; understood in Spenser.
Then to her iron waggon she betakes,
And with her bears the foul well-favour'd witch.

Soft she withdrew; and, like a wood nymph light,
Orcad or Dryad, or of Delia's train,

Betook her to the groves Milton, P. L.

They both betook them several ways;
Both to destroy. Milton, P. L.

I observed to the windward of me a black cloud falling to the earth in long trails of rain, which made me betake myself for shelter to a house. Tatler, No. 218.

* BETA'UGHT. * pret. of betake, in the sense of commit or entrust. [Sax. betachte.] Obsolete.

In Hope I woul comfortid be;
For Love when he betaught her me,
Said that Hope, where so I go,
Should aie be reles to my wo. Chaucer, Rom. of the R. 4438.

That is, when Love committed or gave her to me.
Spenser uses betake in the same way, omitting to.

Into those theevish dens he went,
And thence did all the spoyle and treasures take,—
Of which the best he did his Love betake. F. Q. vi. xi. 51.

That is, did give to his Love.

To BETA'EM. v. a. [from teem.] To bring forth; to bestow; to give.

So would I, said th' enchanter, glad and fain
Beteem to you this sword, you to defend;—
But that this weapon's powre I well have kend,
To be contrary to the work that ye intend.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. viii. 19.

B E T

Rain, which I could well
Beteem them from the tempest of mine eyes.

Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dr.
BETEL. * n. s. An Indian shrub, growing like a vine, of great celebrity in the East; the leaf of which long has been, and is to this day, highly prized by the natives and others. The betel-mut is the produce of a different tree. See BETLE.

Opium, coffee, the root of betel, tears of poppy, and tobacco, condense the spirits. Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 312.

To BETHINK. † v. a. I bethought; I have bethought.
[Goth. bithagan, Sax. beðencan, beðoht.] To recal to reflection; to bring back to consideration, or recollection. It is generally used with the reciprocal pronoun, and of before the subject of thought.

They were sooner in danger than they could almost bethink themselves of change. Sidney.

I have bethought me of another fault. Shakspeare.

I, better bethinking myself, and misliking his determination, gave him this order. Balegh.

He himself,
Insatiable of glory, had lost all:
Yet of another plea bethought him soon. Milton, P. R.
The nets were laid, yet the birds could never bethink themselves, till hamper'd, and past recovery. L' Etrange.

Cherippus, then in time yourself bethink,
And what your rags will yield by auction sink. Dryden.
A little consideration may allay his heat, and make him be- think himself, whether this attempt be worth the venture. Locke.

To BETH'NK. * v. n. To consider.

Cease then, my tongue! and lend unto my mynd
Leave to bethinke how great that Beautie is,
Whose utmost parts so beautifull I fynd.

Spenser, Hymn of Heavenly Beauty.
BETHLEHEM. n. s. [See BEDLAM.] An hospital for lunaticks.

BETHLEHEMITE. * n. s. [See BEDLAMITE.] A lunatick; an inhabitant of a madhouse; also one of an order of friars so called.

BETHOUGHT. particip. [from bethink; which see.]

To BETHRAL. v. a. [from thrall.] To enslave; to conquer; to bring into subjection.

Ne let that wicked woman 'scape away,
For she it is that did my lord bethral. Spenser, F. Q. i. viii. 28.

To BETHUMP. v. a. [from thump.] To beat; to lay blows upon: a ludicrous word.

I was never so bethumpt with words,
Since first I call'd my brother's father dad. Shakspeare.

To BETIDE. * v. a. pret. It betided, or betid; part.
pass. betid, and betight, [from tid, Sax. See TIDE.] 'Dr. Johnson had not noticed the active verb, but had given both the following definitions, with their examples, (excepting that which gives betight, and was unknown to him,) as belonging to the verb neuter.

1. To happen to; to befall; to bechance, whether good or bad: with the person.

Said he then to the palmer, reverend sire,
What great misfortune hath betid this knight? Spenser, F. Q.
But say, if our deliverer up to heav'n
Must re-ascend, what will betide the few,
His faithful, left among the unfaithful herd,
The enemies of truth? Milton, P. L.

2. Sometimes it has to.

Neither know I,
What is betid to Cloten; but remain
Perplex in all. Shakspeare.

Why wearie we the gods with plaintes,
As if some evil were to her betight?

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Nov. v. 174.

To BETIDE. † v. n.

B E T

1. To come to pass; to fall out; to happen: without the person.

She, when her turn was come her tale to tell,
Told of a strange adventure that betided,
Betwixt the fox and th' ape by him misguided.

Spenser, M. Hubb. Tale.

In winter's tedious nights, sit by the fire
With good old folks, and let them tell thee tales
Of woful ages, long ago betid.

Shakspeare.

Let me hear from thee by letters,
Of thy success in love; and what news else
Betid here in absence of thy friend.

Shakspeare.

2. To become; to be the fate: with of.

If he were dead, what would betide of thee?

Shakspeare.

BETIDE. } adv. [from by and time; that is, by the BETIDES. } proper time.]

1. Seasonably; early; before it is late.

Send succours, lords, and stop the rage betime.

Shakspeare.

To measure life, learn thou betimes, and know

Toward solid good what leads the nearest way.

Milton, P. R.

2. Soon; before long time has passed.

While they are weak, betimes with them contend;

For when they once to perfect strength do grow,

Strong wars they make.

Spenser, F. Q.

He tires betimes, that spurs too fast betimes.

Shakspeare.

There be some have an over early ripeness in their year, which fadeth betimes: these are first, such as have brittle wits, the edge whereof is soon turned.

Bacon.

Remember thy Creator in the days of thy youth; that is,
enter upon a religious course betimes.

Tillotson.

Short is the date, alas! of modern rhymes:

And 'tis but just to let them live betimes.

Pope.

3. Early in the day.

He that drinks all night, and is hanged betimes in the morning, may sleep the sounder next day.

Shakspeare.

They rose betimes in the morning, and offered sacrifice.

And many an othir discevid have be
Of women, as it is known full wide,
And othir mo, that condin full wel preche.

Betrapped were, for aught that the proud reche.

Occleve, Letter of Cupide, ver. 252.

To BETRAY.† v. a. [Dr. Johnson merely gives the Fr. trahir. But we must seek the etymology elsewhere. Goth. wrahan, to accuse; Sax. betreozan, to accuse, to ensnare; Germ. betragen, triegen, from trug, deceit. Of similar application are treppan,
Sax. betrappen, Germ.]

1. To give into the hands of enemies by treachery, or breach of trust: with to before the person, otherwise into.

If ye be come to betray me to mine enemies, seeing there is no wrong in mine hands, the God of our fathers look thereon, and rebuke it.

1 Chronicles, xii. 17.

Jesus said unto them, The Son of man shall be betrayed into the hands of men.

St. Matthew, xvii. 22.

For fear is nothing else but a betraying of the succours which reason offereth.

Wisdom, xvii. 12.

He was not to be won, either by promise or reward, to betray the city.

Knolles.

2. To discover that which has been entrusted to secrecy.

3. To expose to evil by revealing something entrusted.

How [would'st thou] again betray me,

Bearing my words and doings to the lords!

Milton, S. A.

4. To make known something that were better concealed.

Be swift to hear, but be cautious of your tongue, lest you betray your ignorance.

Watts.

5. To make liable to fall into something inconvenient.

His abilities created him great confidence; and this was like enough to betray him to great errors.

King Charles.

The bright genius is ready to be so forward, as often betrays itself into great errors in judgement.

Watts.

6. To shew; to discover.

Ire, envy, and despair,

Which marr'd his borrow'd visage, and betray'd

Him counterfeit, if any eye beheld.

Milton, P. J.

The Veian and the Gabian tow'rs shall fall,

And one promiscuous ruin cover all;

Nor, after length of years, a stone betray

The place where once the very ruins lay.

Addison on Italy.

BETRAYER. n. s. [from betray.] He that betrays; a traitor.

The wise man doth so say of fear, that it is a betrayer of the forces of reasonable understanding.

Hooker.

You cast down your courage through fear, the betrayer of all succours which reason can afford.

Sir J. Hayward.

They are only a few betrayers of their country; they are to purchase coin, perhaps, at half price, and vend it among us to the ruin of the publick.

Swift.

To BETRI'M. v. a. [from trim.] To deck; to dress;
to grace; to adorn; to embellish; to beautify; to decorate.

Thy banks with pioned and twilled brims,

Which spongy April at thy best betrim's,

To make cold nymphs chaste crowns

Shakspeare.

To BETROTH. v. a. [from troth; betrouwen, Dutch.]

1. To contract to any one, in order to marriage; to affiance: used either of men or women.

He, in the first flower of my freshest age,

Betrothed me unto the only heir

Of a most mighty king, most rich and sage.

Spenser F. Q.

To her, my lord,

Was I betrothed, ere I Hermia saw.

Shakspeare.

My soul's publick promise she

Was sold then, and betroth'd to Victory.

Chapley.

2. To have as affianced by promise of marriage.

And what man is there that hath betrothed a wife, and hath not taken her? let him go and return into his house.

Deut. xx. 7.

B E T

3. To nominate to a bishoprick, in order to consecration.

If any person be consecrated a bishop to that church, whereunto he was not before betrotted, he shall not receive the habit of consecration, as not being canonically promoted. Ayliffe.

BETROT'TMENT. * n. s. [from betrotth.] The act of betrothing.

Sometimes setting out the speeches that pass between them, making as it were thereby the betrothment; otherwhiles declaring the mutual duties, one of them towards another, but specially that same great love of the bridegroom to his spouse.

Exposition of the Canticles, (1585,) p. 5.

To BETRUST. † v. a. [from trust.] To entrust; to put into the power of another, in confidence of fidelity.

He who is betruſted with the cure of our souls, should, besides other witnesses, be both present and active in, and at our domestick contracts of matrimony. Ep. Hall, Cusa of Conco.

Betruſt him with all the good, which our own capacity will allow us, or his sufficiency encourage us to hope for, either in this life, or that to come. Greene.

Whatsoever you would betruſt to your memory, let it be disposed in a proper method. Watts.

BETT. * adv. [Sax. bet, Teut. bet, better.] The old English word for better.

Bet is to dien than have indigence.

Chaucer, Man of Lawes Tale.

The happier duties, that I wout devise
To feede youth's fancy and the flocking fry, Delighten much; what I the bett thereby? Spenser, Shep. Cal.

BETTER. adj. The comparative of good. [bet, good, betepa, better, Sax.] Having good qualities in a greater degree than something else. See GOOD.

He has a horse better than the Neapolitan's; a better bad habit of frowning than the Count Palatine.

Shakspeare, Merchant of Venice.

I have seen better faces in my time,
Than stand on any shoulders that I see

Before me at this instant. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Having a desire to depart, and be with Christ; which is far better. Philippians, i. 23.

The BETTER.

1. The superiority; the advantage: with the particle of before him, or that, over which the advantage is gained.

The Corinthians that morning, as the days before, had the better. Sidney.

The voyage of Drake and Hawkins was unfortunate; yet, in such sort, as doth not break our prescription, to have had the better of the Spaniards. Bacon.

Dionysius, his countryman, in an epistle to Pompey, after an express comparison, affords him the better of Thucydides.

Brown, Vulg. Errours.

You think fit

2. To get the better of me, and you shall;
Since you will have it so—I will be yours. Southerne.

The gentleman had always so much the better of the satyrst, that the persons touched did not know where to fix their resentment. Prior.

2. Improvement; as, for the better, so as to improve it.

If I have altered him any where for the better, I must at the same time acknowledge, that I could have done nothing without him. Dryden.

BETTER. † adv. [comparative of well.]

1. Well, in a greater degree.

Then was it better with me than now. Hosca, ii. 7.

Better a mechanick rule were stretched or broken, than a great beauty were omitted. Dryden.

The better to understand the extent of our knowledge, one thing is to be observed. Locke.

He that would know the idea of infinity, cannot do better, than by considering to what infinity is attributed. Locke.

2. More; in greater degree or quantity; "It is true and better true, vero verius est," Vulg. Hormanni,

B E T

1530. sign. O. iiii. often used in familiar discourse; as, I gave better than ten pounds for it; it is better than half past twelve o'clock.

The pearle of price which Englishmen have sought
So farre abroad, and cost them there so deare,
Is now found out within our country here,
And better cheap amongst us may be bought.

Gascogne to Hollyband, The Freuche Littleton, (1581,) p. 7.

To teach us this lesson at the dearest rate, if we will not learn it better cheap. Abp. Sauerost, Serm. p. 130.

To BETTER. † v. a. [Sax. betpuan.]

1. To improve; to meliorate.

The cause of his taking upon him our nature, was to better the quality, and to advance the condition thereof. Hooker.

He is furnished with my opinion, which is bettered, with his own learning. Shakspeare.

Heir to all his lands and goods,
Which I have better'd, rather than decreased. Shakspeare.

But Jonathan, to whom both hearts were known,
With well-tun'd zeal, and with an artful care,
Restor'd, and better'd soon, the nice affair. Cowley.

The church of England, the purest and best reformed church in the world; so well reformed, that it will be found easier to alter than better its constitution. South.

The Romans took pains to hew out a passage for these lakes to discharge themselves, for the bettering of the air. Addison.

2. To surpass; to exceed.

The works of nature do always aim at that which cannot be bettered. Hooker.

He hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age; he hath, indeed, better bettered expectation, than you must expect of me to tell you. Shakspeare.

What you do
Still *better*s what is done; when you speak sweet.
I'd have you do it ever. Shakspeare.

3. To advance; to support.

The king thought his honour would suffer, during a treaty, to better a party. Bacon, Hen. VII.

BETTER. n. s. [from the adjective.] Superiour; one to whom precedence is to be given.

Their bettors would be hardly found, if they did not live among men, but in a wilderness by themselves. Hooker.

The courtesy of nations allows you my better, in that you are the first-born. Shakspeare.

That ye thus hospitably live,
Is mighty grateful to your bettors,
And makes e'en gods themselves your debtors. Prior.

I have some gold and silver by me, and shall be able to make a shift, when many of my bettors are starving. Swift.

BETTERING. * n. s. [Sax. betpuung.] The act of meliorating or improving.

BETTING. * n. s. [from To bet.] The act of betting, or proposing a wager. Sherwood.

BETTOR. n. s. [from To bet.] One that lays bets or wagers.

I observed a stranger among them of a genteeler behaviour than ordinary; but notwithstanding he was a very fair bettor, nobody would take him up. Addison, Spect.

BETTRY. † n. s. [Dr. Johnson says, this is "probably a cant word, signifying an instrument which does what is too often done by a maid within." It is certainly a cant word, called also a Bess in the Canting Dictionary of 1725, without reflecting, however, on the poor maids! Dr. Johnson was not aware that a jenny is another instrument of plunder, or he would have backed his unknown etymology by a reference also to Jane.] A small engine to force open the doors of houses. Canting Dict.

Record the stratagems, the arduous exploits, and the nocturnal scalades of needy heroes, describing the powerful betty, or the artful picklock. Arbuthnot, Hist. of John Bull.

BETUMBLLED. * part. adj. [from tumble.] Disordered; rolled about.

B E V

From her betumbled couch she starteth,
To find some desperate instrument of death.
Shakspeare, Rape of Lucrece.

BETWEEN.† prep. [betwēnan, betwīnan, Saxon; from the original word twā, two, or twegen, twain.]

1. In the intermediate space.

What modes

Of smell the headlong lioness between,
And hound sagacious on the tainted green? Pope.

2. From one to another; noting intercourse.

He should think himself unhappy, if things should go so between them, as he should not be able to acquit himself of ingratitude towards them both. Bacon, Hen. VII.

3. Belonging to two in partnership.

I ask, whether Castor and Pollux, with only one soul between them, which thinks and perceives in one what the other is never conscious of, are not two distinct persons? Locke.

4. Bearing relation to two.

If there be any discord or suits between them and any of the family, they are compounded and appeased. Baron, Atlantis.
Friendship requires, that it be between two at least; and there can be no friendship where there are not two friends. South.

5. Noting difference, or distinction of one from the other.

Their natural constitutions put so wide a difference between some men, that art would never master. Locke.

Children quickly distinguish between what is required of them, and what not. Locke.

6. Between is properly used of two, and among of more; but perhaps this accuracy is not always preserved.

7. Between, as well as betwixt, is sometimes used to denote participation; as, the colour is between green and yellow.

BETWIXT.† prep. [betwīx, Saxon, from the Goth.
twos, two. It has the same signification with between,
and is indifferently used for it.]

1. In the midst of two.

Hard by, a cottage chimney smokes,
From betwixt two aged oaks. Milton, I. Al.

Methinks, like two black storms on either hand,
Our Spanish army and your Indians stand;
This only place betwixt the clouds is clear. Dryden, Ind. Emp.

If contradicting interests could be mixt,
Nature herself has cast a bar betwixt. Dryden, Aurengz.

2. From one to another.

Five years since there was some speech of marriage betwixt myself and her. Shakspeare.

BEVEL.† n. s. In masonry and joinery, a kind of BEVEL. } square, one leg of which is frequently crooked, according to the sweep of an arch or vault. It is moveable on a point or centre, and so may be set to any angle. An angle that is not square, is called a bevel angle, whether it be more obtuse, or more acute, than a right angle.

Builder's Dict.

Their houses are very ill built, their walls bevel, without one right angle in any apartment. Swift.

To BEVEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut to bevel angle.

These rabbits are ground square; but the rabbits on the groundsel are bevelled downwards, that rain may the freelier fall off. Moxon.

BEVER. See BEAVER.

BEVER.† n. s. [Ital. bevere, to drink. In the Prompt. Parv. bever is called drynkyng time, Lat.
biberium. Huloet, in his old dictionary, calls it
"a drinking, or potation." Others, "a drinking between dinner and supper." It is still used, among workmen, for their repast, between dinner

VOL. I.

and the time of ending work.] A collation or refreshment between meals.

Mr. What, at your bever, gallants?
Mr. Will't please your ladyship to drink? 'tis of the new fountain water. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Re.

The bever being ended, and the table-cloths taken away.

Sheldon, Tr of D. Quixote, 1. 4. 11.

The French, as well men as women, besides dinner and supper, use breakfasts and bevers. Moryson's Itinerary.

To BEVER.† v. n. [Ital. bevere.] To partake of a bever.

Your gallants never sup, breakfast, or bever without me.

[appetite.] Brewer's Lingua, ii. 1.
BEVERAGE.† n. s. [from bevere, to drink, Ital. or rather from the old Fr. beverage.]

1. Drink; liquor to be drunk in general.

I am his cupbearer;

If from me he have wholesome beverage,
Account me not your servant. Shakspeare.

Grains, pulses, and all sorts of fruits, either bread or beverage, may be made almost of all. Brown, Vulg. Err.

A pleasant beverage he prepar'd before,
Of wine and honey mix'd. Dryden, Fob.

The coarse lean gravel on the mountain sides,
Scarce dewy beverage for the bees provides. Dryden, Virg.

Beverage, or water cyder, is made by putting the mure into a fat, adding water, as you desire it stronger or smaller. The water should stand forty-eight hours on it, before you press it; when it is pressed, tun it up immediately. Mortimer.

A treat upon wearing a new suit of clothes.

4. A treat at first coming into a prison, called also garnish.

BEVY.† n. s. [beva, Ital.]

1. A flock of birds.

They say, a bevy of larks, even as a covey of partridges, or an eye of pheasants. E. K. on Spenser's Shrp. Cal. April.

Bevy [is] a troop of ladies, quails, or of deer. Cockeram.

2. A company; an assembly; Dr. Johnson says.

But it seems to be applied exclusively to the fair sex.

And in the midst thereof upon the floor,

A lovely bevy of fair ladies sat,

Courted of many a jolly paramour. Spenser, F. Q.

O, but to satisfy this bevy of ladies,

Of which a brace, here, long'd to bid you welcome.

B. Jonson, New Inn.

A bevy of young lasses. Beaumont and Fl. Bloody Brother.

A heavenly bevy of sweet English dames.

Browne, Brit. Past. B. 2. S. 2.

A bevy of nimble Dryads.

Milton, Apol. for Smeectymnus.

They on the plain

Long had not walk'd, when, from the tents, behold

A bevy of fair women. Milton, P. L.

Nor rode the nymph alone,

Around a bevy of bright damsels shone. Pope.

To BEWAIL. v. a. [from weil.] To bemoan; to lament; to express sorrow for.

In this city he

Hath widow'd and unchilded many a one,

Which to this hour bewail the injury. Shakspeare.

Yet wiser Ennius gave command to all

His friends, not to bewail his funeral. Sir J. Denham.

I cannot but bewail, as in their first principles, the miseries and calamities of our children. Addison.

To BEWAIL. v. n. To express grief.

Thy ambition,

Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land

Of noble Buckingham, my father-in-law. Shakspeare.

BEWAILABLE.† adj. [from bewail.] That which may be lamented. Sherwood.

BEWAILING.† n. s. [from bewail.] Lamentation.

As if he had also heard the sorrowings and bewailings of every surviving soul. Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

To BEWAKE.† v. a. [from wake.] To keep awake.

I wote that night was well bewaked. Gower, Conf. Am. B.

B E W

To BEWARE.† v. n. [from be and ware, or that is, cautious: thus, in an old treatise, I have found, be ye ware. Dr. Johnson says. He might have added, 2 Tim. iv. 15. "of whom be thou ware also." See WARN. [Sax. beþapian, beþapianian; Germ. bewaren.]

1. To regard with caution; to be suspicious of danger from; generally the particle of goes before the thing which excites caution.

You must beware of drawing or painting clouds, winds and thunder, towards the bottom of your piece. Dryden.

Every one ought to be very careful to beware what he admits for a principle. Locke.

Warn'd by the sylph, oh, pious maid, beware!

This to disclose is all thy guardian can;

Beware of all, but most beware of man. Pope, Rape of the Lock.

2. It is observable, that it is only used in such forms of speech as admit the word be: thus we say, he may beware, let him beware, he will beware; but, not he did beware, or he has been ware. The following example from Ben Jonson, as Mr. Mason has also noticed, invalidates the preceding remark of Dr. Johnson.

These studies alter now in one, grown man:
His better'd mind seeks wealth and friendship; then Looks after honours, and bewares to act
What straightway he must labour to retract.

B. Jonson, Art of Poetry.

To BEWEEP.† v. a. [Sax. beþepan.] To weep over or upon; to bedew with tears.

Old fond eyes,
Beweept this cause again; I'll pluck ye out,
And cast you, with the waters that you lose,
To temper clay. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Larded all with sweet flowers,
Which beweept to the grave did go,
With true love showers. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Lo! how my hurts afresh beweept this wanted wight.
Mir. for Magistrates, p. 485.

To BEWEEP.* v. n. To weep; to make lamentation.

I do beweept to many simple gulls. Shakspeare, K. Rich. III.

To BEWET. v. a. [from wet.] To wet; to moisten; to bedew; to water.

His napkin, with his true tears all bewet,
Can do no service on her sorrowful cheeks. Titus Andronicus.

To BEWHORE.* v. a. [from whore.]

1. To corrupt with regard to chastity.

Were your's the loss,
Had you a daughter, [and] perhaps bewhor'd,
(For to what other end would come the thief?)
You'd play the miller then, be loud, and high.
Braun. and Fl. Maid in the Mill.

2. To pronounce a whore.

Alas! Iago, my lord hath so bewhor'd her.
Shakspeare, Othello.

To BEWILDER. v. a. [from wild.] To lose in pathless places; to confound for want of a plain road; to perplex; to entangle; to puzzle.

We parted thus; I homeward sped my way,
Bewilder'd in the wood till dawn of day. Dryden.

We no solution of our question find;
Your words bewilder, not direct the mind. Blackmore.

Our understanding traces 'em in vain,
Lost and bewilder'd in the fruitless search. Addison.

It is good sometimes to lose and bewilder ourselves in such studies. Watts.

To BEWINTER.* v. a. [from winter.] To make like winter.

Tears that bewinter all my year. Cowley.

B E W

To BEWITCH. v. a. [from witch.]

1. To injure by witchcraft, or fascination, or charms.

Look how I am bewitch'd; behold, mine arm
Is like a blasted sapling wither'd up. Shakspeare.
I have foresworn his company hourly this twenty years, and yet I am bewitch'd with the rogue's company. If the rascal has not given me medicines to make me love him, I'll be hang'd!

My flocks are free from love, yet look so thin;
What magick has bewitch'd the woolly dawns,
And what ill eyes beheld the tender lambs? Dryden, Virg.

2. To charm; to please to such a degree, as to take away the power of resistance.

Doth even beauty beautify,
And most bewitch the wretched eye. Sidney, b. ii.

The charms of poetry our souls bewitch;
The curse of writing is an endless itch. Dryden, Juv.

I do not know, by the character that is given of her works, whether it is not for the benefit of mankind that they were lost; they were filled with such bewitching tenderness and rapture, that it might have been dangerous to have given them a reading. Addison, Spect. No. 223.

BEWITCHER.* n. s. [from bewitch.] One who enchants or bewitches.

Were it not that I should be a bar to those bewitchers of beautie, I would wish ladies to be niggards of their countenances to those who are prodigal of their words and profane praises. Stafford's Niobe dissolved into a Nilus, p. 117.

BEWITCHERY.† n. s. [from bewitch.] Fascination; charm; resistless prevalence.

There is a certain bewitchery, or fascination in words, which makes them operate with a force beyond what we can naturally give an account of. South, Sermon. ii. 333.

The pinch of any present pain, or the bewitchery of some present pleasure. South, Sermon. vi. 327.

BEWITCHFUL.* adj. [from bewitch and full.] Alluring; bewitching.

There is, on the other side, ill more bewitchful to entice away. Milton, Lell.

BEWITCHING.* n. s. [from bewitch.] The act of bewitching. Sherwood.

BEWITCHINGLY.* adv. [from bewitch.] In an alluring manner.

All that time that his brains are turgid and full of this humour, he is wonderful eloquent, and bewitchingly taking. Hallywell's Account of Familism, p. 106.

BEWITCHMENT n. s. [from bewitch.] Fascination; power of charming.

I will counterfeit the bewitchment of some popular man, and give it bountifully to the desirers. Shakspeare.

BEWONDERED.* part. adj. [from wonder.] Amazed; filled with much wonder.

The other seeing his astonishment,
How he bewondered was. Fairfax, Tasso.

To BEWRAP.* v. a. [from wrap.] To cover over; to wrap round.

O wretched wight, bewrapt in webs of woe,
That still in dread wast tost from place to place!
Mir. for Magistrates, p. 32.

His sword, that many a pagan stout had shent,
Bewrapt with flowers hung idly by his side. Fairfax, Tasso.

To BEWRAY.† v. a. [pnezan, beþnezan, Saxon.]

1. To betray; to discover perfidiously.

Fair feeling words he wisely 'gan display,
And, for her humour fitting purpose, fain
To tempt the cause itself for to bewray. Spenser, F. Q.

Hide the outcasts; bewray not him that wandereth. Isaiah, xvi. 3.

2. To shew; to make visible: this word is now little in use, Dr. Johnson says. But this is the original meaning of the word; and I confirm this simple usage of it by examples added to those given by Dr. Johnson.

She saw a pretty blush in Philodea's cheeks beuray a modest discontentment.

Men do sometimes beuray that by deeds, which to count they are hardly drawn.

Next look on him that seems for counsel fit,

Whose silver locks beuray his store of days.

Thy speech beurayeth thee.

Look as a sweet rose fairly budding forth

Beurays her beauties to the enamour'd more.

Brown, Shepherd's Pipe, Eccl. 4.

BEWRA'YER. n. s. [from beuray.] Betrayer; discoverer; divulger.

When a friend is turned into an enemy, and a beurayer of secrets, the world is just enough to accuse the perfidiousness of the friend.

2b BEWRE'CK.* v. a. [from wreck.] Figuratively, from a wreck at sea, to ruin; to destroy.

Was I, or I parted thence, beureckt.

Mir. for Magistrates, p. 120.

BEWRO'UGHT.* part. [from wrought.] Worked.

Their maids and their nukes,

At dancings and wakes,

Had their napkins and posies,

And the wipers for their noses,

And their snooks all beuwrought

With his thread which they bought.

B. Jonson, Marquer.

BEY.* n. s. [Turkish, beg.] A governour of a Turkish province.

The several beglerbegs having under their jurisdiction many provinces, beys, agas, and others.

BEYOND.* prep. [bezeonb, bezeonban, of be and zau, to go; of which, zeonb is the participle passive; corresponding with our begone.]

1. Before; at a distance not yet reached.

What's fame? a fancy'd life in others breath,

A thing beyond us, ev'n before our death:

Just what you hear, you have.

Popc, Ess. on Man.

2. On the farther side of.

Neither is it beyond the sea, that thou shouldst say, Who shall go over the sea for us, and bring it unto us?

Deut. xxx. 13.

Now we are on land, we are but between death and life; for we are beyond the old world and the new.

We cannot think men beyond sea will part with their money for nothing.

Bacon.

3. Farther onward than.

He that sees a dark and shady grove,

Stays not, but looks beyond it on the sky.

Herbert.

4. Past; out of the reach of.

Beyond the infinite and boundless reach

Of mercy, if thou did'st this deed of death,

Art thou damn'd, Hubert.

Shakespeare, K. John.

Yet these declare

Thy goodness beyond thought, and pow'r divine.

The just, wise, and good God, neither does, nor can require of man any thing that is impossible, or naturally beyond his power to do.

Consider the situation of our earth; it is placed so conveniently, that plants flourish, and animals live; this is matter of fact, and beyond all dispute.

Bentley.

5. Above; proceeding to a greater degree than.

Timotheus was a man both in power, riches, parentage, goodness, and love of his people, beyond any of the great men of my country.

One thing, in this enormous accident, is, I must confess, to me beyond all wonder.

To his expences, beyond his income, add debauchery, idleness, and quarrels amongst his servants, whereby his manufactures are disturbed, and his business neglected.

As far as they carry conviction to any man's understanding, my labour may be of use: beyond the evidence it carries with it, I advise him not to follow any man's interpretation.

Locke.

6. Above in excellence.

His satires are incomparably beyond Juvenal's; if to laugh and rally, is to be preferred to railing and declaiming.

7. Remote from; not within the sphere of.

With equal mind, what happens, let us bear;

Nor joy, nor grieve too much for things beyond our care.

Drayden, Fables.

8. To go beyond, is to deceive; to circumvent.

She made earnest benefit of his jest, forcing him to do her such services, as were both cumbersome and costly; while he still thought he went beyond her, because his heart did not commit the idolatry.

That no man go beyond, and defraud, his brother in any matter.

BEYOND.* adv. At a distance; yonder.

Lo! where beyond he lyeth languishing,

Deadly engorged of a great wilde boar.

Spenser, F. Q. i. 38.

BEZANT, or BESANT.* n. s. [Fr. besant.] The current coin of old Byzantium, which was of gold.

Welfliffe uses besant for a piece of silver, St. Luke, xv. 8. But see BIZANTINE. Also the heraldick term for a round-let, and supposed to have been adopted as an armiorial bearing by those who were in the holy war.

BEZEL. n. s. That part of a ring in which the stone is fixed.

BEZOAR. n. s. [from pa, against, and zahar, poison,

Persick.] A medicinal stone, formerly in high esteem as an antidote, and brought from the East

Indies, where it is said to be found in the dung of an animal of the goat kind, called pazan; the stone being formed in its belly, and growing to the size of an acorn, and sometimes to that of a pigeon's egg. The peculiar manner of its formation, is now supposed to be fabulous. The name of this stone is applied to several chymical compositions, designed for antidotes; as mineral, solar, and jovial bezours.

Savary, and Chambers.

BEZOARDICK.* adj. [from bezoar.] Composed of bezoar.

When the disease [the plague] was young, it was mitigated with rob of elder; with crabs eyes; spirits of hartshorn; theriac and vinegar; bezoardick vinegar.

Student, ii. 344.

BEZOARDICKS.* n. s. [from bezoar.] Medicines compounded with bezoar.

The bezoardicks are necessary to promote sweat, and drive forth the putrified particles.

Floyer.

TO BEZZLE.* v. a. [old Fr. besler; beselé, besléz, embezzled, Kelham, Norm. Dict. This is the parent of our modern word embezzle, which Dr. Johnson strangely thinks to be a corruption of imbecil.]

To waste in riot.

They that spend their youth in loitering, bezzling, and harloting.

I have laid up a little for my younger son Michael, and thou think'st to bezzle that, but thou shalt never be able to do it.

Beaumont, and Fl. Kn. of the Burn, Pestle.

That divine part is sok'd away in sin,

In sensual lust, and midnight bezzling.

Marston, Scourge of Villainy.

Time will come,

When wonder of thy error will strike dumb

Thy bezel'd sense.

Marston, Malcontent.

BIA'NGULATED. adj. [from binus and angulus, Lat.]

BIA'NGULOUS. adj. Having two corners or angles.

Dict.

BIAS.* n. s. [biais, Fr. said to come from bihay,

an old Gaulish word, signifying cross, or thwart,

Dr. Johnson says; but may it not, with as much probability, be referred to the Gr. βία, impetus?

1. The weight lodged on one side of a bowl, which turns it from the straight line.

3 B 2

Madam, we'll play at bowls—

—'Twill make me think the world is full of rubs,
And that my fortune runs against the bias. Shakespeare.

2. Any thing which turns something to a particular course; or gives the direction to his measures.

You have been mistook;
But nature to her bias drew in that. Shakespeare.

This is that boasted bias of thy mind,
By which one way to darkness 'tis inclin'd. Dryden.

Morality influences men's lives, and gives a bias to all their actions. Locke.

Vit and humour, that expose vice and folly, furnish useful lessons. Raillery under such regulations, unbends the mind from severer contemplations, without throwing it off from its proper bias. Addison, Freeholder.

True nature gives us, let it check our pride,
The virtue nearest to our vice ally'd;
Reason the bias turns to good or ill. Pope, Ess. on Man.

3. Propension; inclination.
As for the religion of our poet, he seems to have some little bias towards the opinions of Wickliff. Dryden, Fab. Pref.

To Bi'as.† v. a. [from the noun.] To incline to some side; to balance one way; to prejudice.

O powerful Love! which Heaven or Nature
Writ in the heart of every creature!
Whose amiable violence,
And pleasing rapture of the sense,
Doth bias all things to that good,
Which we desire not under-tood.

Sir R. Phinshawe, Tr. of Pastor Fido, p. 40.

Were I in no more danger to be misled by ignorance, than I am to be biased by interest, I might give a very perfect account. Locke.

A desire leaning to either side, biases the judgement strangely; by indifference for every thing but truth, you will be excited to examine. Watts.

Bi'as. adv. It seems to be used adverbially in the following passage, conformably to the French, mettre une chose de biais, to give any thing a wrong interpretation.

Every action that hath gone before,
Whereof we have record, trial did draw
Bias and thwart, not answering the aim.
Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida.

In the following passage it seems to be an adjective. Swelled, as the bowl on the biased side.
This is not used.

Blow, villain, till thy sphered bias check
Outswell the colick of puffed Aquilon.
Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida.

Bi'as-DRAWING.* n. s. [from bias and draw.] Partiality.

In this extant moment, faith and troth,
Strain'd purely from all hollow bias-drawing,
Bids thee, with most divine integrity,
From heart of very heart, great Hector, welcome!

Shakespeare, Tr. and Cressida.

Bi'asNESS.* n. s. [from bias; old Fr. biaiseure.] An inclination or tendency to some side. Sherwood.

Bi'a.† n. s. [from bibere, to drink; because the bib doth receive the drink that the child slavers from the mouth, Minshew.] A small piece of linen put upon the breasts of children over their clothes.

We'll have a bib, for spoiling of your doublet.

Beaumont and Fl. The Captain.

I would fain know, why it should not be as noble a task, to write upon a bib and hanging-sleeves, as on the bullæ and pretextæ. Addison on Medals.

To BIB. v. n. [bibo, Lat.] To tipple; to sip; to drink frequently.

He playeth with bibbing mother Meroü, as though so named, because she would drink mere wine without water. Camden.

To appease a froward child, they gave him drink as often as he cried; so that he was constantly bibbing, and drank more in two or four hours than I did. Locke.

BIBA'CIOUS. adj. [bibas, Lat.] Addicted to drinking. Dict.

BIBA CITY. n. s. [bibacitas, Lat.] The quality of drinking much.

BIBBER.† n. s. [from To bib, old Fr. bibron.] A tippler; a man that drinks often.

Be not amongst wine-bibbers; amongst riotous eaters of flesh. Prov. xxiii. 20.

BIBBLE-BABBLE.* n. s. [A low expression, adopted from babble, and yet used in some places.] Prating; idle talk.

Malvollio, Malvollio, thy wits the heavens restore! endeavour thyself to sleep, and leave thy vain bibble-babble.

Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.

BIB'LE.† n. s. [from βιβλιον, a book; called, by way of excellence, The Book.]

1. The sacred volume in which are contained the revelations of God.

If we pass from the apostolic to the next ages of the Church, the primitive Christians looked on their Bibles as their most important treasure. Government of the Tongue.

We must take heed how we accustom ourselves to a slight and irreverent use of the name of God, and of the phrases and expressions of the holy Bible, which ought not to be applied upon every slight occasion. Watson.

In questions of natural religion, we should confirm and improve, or connect our reasonings by the divine assistance of the Bible. Watts.

2. Any great book. Obsolete. It is so used by Chaucer, and said by Mr. Tyrwhitt to be adopted from the French; but I am obliged to agree with Dr. Jamieson, in admitting that no such direct usage of the word offers itself.

To tellen all, wold passen any bible,
That o wher is. Chaucer, Chan. Ycomannes Tale.

All these armis that there weren.
That they thus on their cotis weren—
Men might make of 'hem a bible.

Chaucer, House of Fame. iii. 244.

BIB'LE-BEARING.* adj. [from bible and bear.] Carrying a bible; a very significant word to denote a hypocrite thus employing himself "to be seen of men."

A saint-seeming and bible-bearing hypocritical puritan.
Mountagu's Appeal to Cæsar, p. 43.

Bi'BLICAL.* adj. [from bible.] Relating to the Bible.

To make a biblical version faithful and exact, so that it may represent the true text of the original in the best manner, is very different from giving it "a shewy and modernized" appearance. Abp. Newcome, Ess. on the Transl. of the Bible, p. 220.

Augustine and Jerome corresponded upon biblical subjects infinitely less important. Porson to Travis, p. 305.

BIBLIO'GRAPHER. n. s. [from βιβλις, and γραφω, to write.] A man skilled in literary history, and in the knowledge of books; a transcriber. Dict.

BIBLIOGRA'PHICAL.* } adj. [from bibliography.] Re-BIBLIOGRA'PHICK. } lating to the knowledge of books.

BIBLIO'GRAPHY.* n. s. [Gr. βιβλιον and γραφω, Fr. bibliographie.] The science of a bibliographer; the knowledge of literary history.

BIBLIOMANIA.* n. s. [Gr. βιβλιον and μανια, Fr. bibliomanie.] The rage of possessing books; book-madness. The word, both in French and English, is modern; but the malady, if it may so be called, is encreasing; and he who wishes to notice the gradations of this rage, in order that he may avoid admission into a literary bedlam, or may know how to manage, without a keeper, his "willing chains and sweet captivity," cannot do better than consult the Reverend Mr. Dibdin's treatise, entitled Bibliomania.

BIBLIOMANIAC. * n. s. [from Bibliomania.

French, determining not to be behind-hand with us in this contest for insanity, have also the modern substantive, bibliomane. V. Morin, Gr. and Fr. Dict. Etymolog.] He who is smitten with a rage for books.

BIBLIOPOLIST. * n. s. [Gr. βιβλίον and πωλεῖν, Fr. libraire.] A bookseller.

BIBLIOTHECAL. adj. [from bibliotheca, Lat.] Belonging to a library. Dict.

BIBLIOTHECARY. * n. s. [Gr. βιβλίον and θήκη, Fr. bibliothécaire.] A librarian. This is no modern word.

Water Doctor James, the incomparably industrious and learned bibliothecary of Oxford.

Bp. Hall's Honour of the Married Clergy, i. 28.

BIBLIOTHEKE. * n. s. [Fr. bibliothèque.] A library. This is a very old word in our language.

He [Alcuinus] much commendeth a bibliothèque or library in Yorke. Bale's Conclvs. Leland's Journey.

We being present, the king asking him how many thousand volumes he had gotten together in his bibliothèque; he answered, that for the present he had no more than two hundred thousand. Donne, Hist. of the Septuagint, (1633,) p. 16.

BIBULOUS. adj. [bibulus, Lat.] That which has the quality of drinking moisture; spongy.

Strow'd bibulous above, I see the sands,

The pebbly gravel next, and gutter'd rocks. Thomson, Autumn.

BICAPSULAR. adj. [bicapsularis, Lat.] Having the seed vessel divided into two parts.

BICE. n. s. The name of a colour used in painting. It is either green or blue.

Take green bice, and order it as you do your blue bice, you may diaper upon it with the water of deep green. Peacham.

BICIPITAL. } adj. [biceps, bicipitis, Lat.]

BICIPITOUS. }

1. Having two heads.

While men believe bicipitous conformation in any species, they admit a genuiputation of principal parts. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. It is applied to one of the muscles of the arm.

A piece of flesh it exchanged from the bicipital muscle of either party's arm. Brown, Vulg. Err.

TO BICKER. † v. n. [bicre, Welsh, a contest.]

1. To skirmish; to fight without a set battle; to fight off and on. This is a very old Eng. verb, and is noticed in the Prompt. Parv. "bickerynge or fightinge, pugno, dimico."

Nor is it to be considered to the breaches of confederate nations, whose mutual interest is of such high consequence, though their merchants bicker in the East Indies.

Milton, of Ref. in Eng. b. 2.

2. To quiver; to play backward and forward.

And from about him fierce effusion rowl'd

Of smoke, and bickering flame, and sparkles dire. Milton, P. L.

An icy gale, oft shifting, o'er the pool,

Breathes a blue film, and, in its mid career,

Arrests the bickering stream.

Thomson, Winter.

BICKERER. * n. s. [from the verb.] A skirmisher.

Sherwood.

BICKERING. * n. s. [from bicker. This is an old Eng. substantive; two examples of which had been hitherto admitted among the illustrations of the verb.] Quarrel; skirmish.

They fell to such a bickering that he got a halting, and lost his picture. Sidney.

After many bickings betwixt the English and Scottish, a truce first, and afterwards a peace was concluded betwixt our king and king James. Robt. Hist. of Men. VII. p. 376.

In thy face

I see thy fury; if I longer stay,

We shall begin our ancient bickering.

Shakspeare.

A champion, fitter for a troop of pigmies, to trail a reed in their bickering with cranes, than to be committed with any reasonable or scholar-like antagonist.

Bp. Hall, Honour of the Married Clergy, iii. 18.

The bickering was doubtful and intricate, part on the water, part on the sands; not without loss of some eminent men on the English side. Milton, Hist. of Eng. b. 5.

Then was the war shivered, as it were, into small frays and *bickering*s. Milton, Hist. of Eng. b. 2.

BICKERMENT. * n. s. [from bicker.] Quarrel.

Artogall, arriving happily,

Did stay awhile their greedy bickermment,

Till he had questioned the cause of their dissent.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. 6.

BICKERN. n. s. [apparently corrupted from beakiron.]

An iron ending in a point.

A blacksmith's anvil is sometimes made with a pike or bickern, or beakiron, at one end. Moron.

BICO'RNE. } adj. [bicornis, Lat.] Having two

BICO'RNOUS. } horns.

We should be too critical, to question the letter Y, or bicornous element of Pythagoras; that is, the making of the horns equal. Brown, Vulg. Err.

BICORPORAL. adj. [bicorpor, Lat.] Having two bodies.

TO BID. † v. a. pret. I bid, bad, bade, I have bid, or bidden. [Goth. biudan, anabiudan, to bid, to command; biddan, Sax.]

1. To desire; to ask; to call; to invite.

I am bid forth to supper, Jessica;

There are my keys. Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

Go ye into the highways, and, as many as you shall find, bid to the marriage. Matt. xxii. 9.

We ought, when we are bidden to great feasts and meetings, to be prepared beforehand. Hakewill.

2. To command; to order: before things or persons.

Saint Withold footed thrice the wold,

He met the nightmare, and her ninefold,

Bid her alight, and her troth plight. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

He chid the sisters,

When first they put the name of king upon me,

And bade them speak to him. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Haste to the house of sleep, and bid the god,

Who rules the nightly visions with a nod,

Prepare a dream. Dryden, Fables.

Curse on the tongue that bids this general joy.

—Can they be friends of Antony, who revel

When Antony's in danger? Dryden, All for Love.

Thames heard the numbers, as he flow'd along,

And bade his willows learn the moving song. Pope.

Acquire a government over your ideas, that they may come when they are called, and depart when they are bidden. Watts.

3. To offer; to propose: as, to bid a price; [Dutch, bieden, to bid money for;] to promise.

—Come, and be true.—

—Thou bidst me to my loss: for true to thee

Were to prove false. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

When a man is resolute to keep his sins while he lives, and yet unwilling to relinquish all hope, he will embrace that profession which bids fairest to the reconciling those so distant interests. Decay of Piety.

As when the goddesses came down of old,

With gifts their young Dardanians judge they try'd,

And each bade high to win him to their side. Græville.

To give interest a share in friendship, is to sell it by inch of candle; he that bids most shall have it: and when it is mercenary, there is no depending on it. Collier on Friendship.

B I D

4. To proclaim; to offer; or to make known by some publick voice.

Our bans thrice bid, and at our wedding day
My kinsmen bought a French press'd, then forc'd away.

Gay, When ye come.

5. To pronounce, to declare.

You are retir'd.

If you were a feast alone, and not
The hostess of the meeting; pray you, bid
These unknown friends to welcome.

Shakspeare.

Divers as we passed by them, put their arms a little abroad;
Which is their gesture when they bid any welcome.

Bacon.

How, Didius, shall a Roman, sore repuls'd,

Greet your arrival to this distant isle?

How bid you welcome to these shatter'd legions? A. Philips.

6. To pronounce.

Myself and Oxford, with five thousand men,
Shall cross the seas, and bid false Edward battle.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Shall bid war to all that durst supply

The place of those her cruelty made die.

Waller.

The native cannibal, oppress with chains,

Yet braves his foes, reviles, provokes, disdains;

Of nature fierce, untameable, and proud,

He bids defiance to the gaping crowd,

And, spent at last, and speechless as he lies,

With fiery glances mocks their rage, and dies. Granville.

7. To pray. [Goth. bida, prayer. See BEAD.]

If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God-speed. 2 St. John, 10.

When they desired him to tarry longer with them, he consented not, but bade them farewell. Acts, xviii. 21.

8. To bid beads, is to distinguish each bead by a prayer.

By some haycock, or some shady thorn,

He bids his beads both even song and morn.

Dryden.

- BIDDALE. n. s. [from bid and alc.] An invitation of friends to drink at a poor man's house, and there to contribute charity.

Dict.

- BIDDEN. part. pass. [from To bid.]

1. Invited.

There were two of our company bidden to a feast of the family.

Bacon.

Madam, the bidden guests are come.

A. Philips.

2. Commanded.

Is these that early taint the female soul,

Instruct the eyes of young coquettes to roll,

Teach infants cheeks a bidden blush to know,

And little hearts to flutter at a beam. Pope, Rape of the Lock.

- BIDDER. † n. s. [Sax. bibber.] One who offers or proposes a price, Dr. Johnson says. But it formerly meant a commander, a prescriber of laws to others. V. Cotgrave and Sherwood.

He looked upon several dresses which hung there, exposed to the purchase of the best bidder. Addison, Spect.

- BIDDING. † n. s. [from bid.]

1. Command; order.

How, sayst thou, that Macduff denies his person

At our great bidding? Shakespeare, Macb.

At his second bidding, darkness fled,

Light shone, and order from disorder sprung. Milton, P. L.

2. [In commercial language.] The proposal of price for what is to be sold.

- TO BIDE. † v. a. [Goth. beidan, Sax. biban.] To endure; to suffer; commonly to abide.

Poornaked wretches, wheresoe'er you are,

That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm.

Shakspeare.

The wary Dutch this gathering storm foresaw,

And durst not bide it on the English coast,

Dryden.

- TO BIDE. v. n.

1. To dwell; to live; to inhabit.

All things to Thee shall bow of them that bide

In heaven, or earth, or under earth in hell,

Milton, P. L.

B I F

nual or biennial? Ray on the Creation.

- BIENNIALLY. * adv. [from biennial.] At the return of two years.

- BIER. † n. s. [from To bear, as feretrum, in Latin, from fero, Sax. barpe, old Fr. biere, a coffin.] A carriage or frame of wood, on which the dead are carried to the grave.

And now the prey of fowls he lies,

Nor wail'd of friends, nor laid on groaning bier. Spenser, F. Q.

They bore him barefac'd on the bier,

And on his grave rain'd many a tear. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

He must not float upon his watery bier

Unwept.

Milton, Lycidas.

Griefs always green, a household still in tears;

Sad pomps, a threshold throng'd with daily biers,

And liveries of black.

Dryden, Juv.

Make as if you hang'd yourself, they will convey your body out of prison in a bier. Arbuthnot, John Bull.

- BIER-BALK. * n. s. [from bier and balk. See BALK.]

The church-road for burials, along which the corpse is carried.

Where their ancestors left, of their land, a broad and sufficient bier-balk to carry the corps to the Christian sepulture;
how men pinch at such bier balks, which, by long use and custom, ought to be inviolably kept for that purpose.

Honilies, B. ii. 237.

- BI'ESTING. † n. s. [by'ting, Sax. probably from beists, Goth. leaven, S. Mark, viii. 15.] The first milk given by a cow after calving, which is very thick. Written also becstning, and becsting. See BEEST-INGS.

So may the first of all our fells be thine,

And both the becstning of our goats and kine.

B. Jonson, Masques.

And twice besides, her biestings never fail

To store the dairy with a brimming pail.

Dryden.

- BI'FIDATED. } Divided into two; split into two; opening with a cleft.

- BI'FOLD. adj. [from binus, Lat. and fold.] Twofold; double.

If beauty have a soul, this is not she;

If souls guide vows, if vows are sanctimony,

If sanctimony be the gods' deliv'ry,

B I G

If there be rule in unity itself,
This is not she; O madness of discourse!
That cause sets up with and against herself!

Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida.

BIFORM. * adj. [Lat. biformis, old Fr. biforme.] Having a double form.

From whose monster-teeming womb the Earth
Received, what much it mourn'd, a biform birth.

Crowall, Translat. of Ovid, Metam. 8.
BIFORMED. * adj. [biformis, Lat.] Compounded of two forms or bodies.

BIFORMITY. * n. s. [old Fr. biformité.] A double form; a twofold shape.

Strange things he spake of the biformity
Of the Dizotans; what mongrel sort
Of wights; how monstrous-shap'd they be;
And how that man and beast in one consort.

More, Song of the Soul, P. 3. C. 3. st. 70.

BIFRONTED. * adj. [Lat. bifrons.] Having two fronts.

For a case of vizards o'er his head,
That he may look bifronted as he speaks.

Woodward.

BIFURCATION. * n. s. [old Fr. bifurcation.] Division into two; opening into two parts.

The first catachrestical and far derived similitude, it holds with man; that is, in a bifurcation, or division of the root into two parts.

Bro. Vulg. Fr.

BIG. * adj. [This word Junius derives from βαρυς; Skinner from bug, which, in Danish, signifies the belly. Minshew says, it is contracted from the Dutch buycigh, i. e. great-bellied. "He looks very bug of it," i. e. big of it, is an old Eng. phrase. See Etym. Dict. 1691. V. Big. "A bug fellow" is also a bold, sawey fellow. See Ray's Eng. Words.]

1. Having comparative bulk, greater or less.
A troubled ocean, to a man who sails in it, is, I think, the bigger object that he can see in motion.

Spectator.

2. Greater bulk; large.
Both in addition and division, either of space or duration, when the idea under consideration becomes very big, or very small, its precise bulk becomes obscure and confused.

Locke.

3. Teeming; pregnant; great with young; with the particle with.

A bear big with young hath seldom been seen.

Bacon.

Big on yonder swelling bush,
Big with many a common rose,
The early bud began to blush.

Waller.

4. Sometimes with of, but rarely.
His gentle lady,
Big of this gentleman, our theme, deccas'd
As he was born.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

5. Without any particle.
Like a big at sight of loathsome meat
Ready to cast, I yawn, I sigh, and sweat.

Pope, Satire of Donne Versified.

6. Full of something; and desirous, or about, to give it vent.

The big th' important day,
Big with the life of Cato and of Rome.

Addison.

Big with knowledge of approaching woes,
The prince of augurs, Halithreses rose.

Pope.

Thy heart is big; get thee apart and weep.

Shakespeare, Julius Caesar.

8. Great in air and mien; proud; swelling; tumid; haughty; early.

B I G

How else, said he, but with a good bold face,
And with big words, and with a stately pace?
Spenser, M. Hubb. Tale.
To the meanness, or unknown in the court, seem somewhat solemn, coy, big, and dangerous to look, talk, and answer.

If you had looked big, and spit at him, had have you.
Shakespeare, Titus's Tale.

In his prosperous season, he fell under the reproach of a man of big looks, and of a mean and abject spirit. Clar.
Or does the man? th' moon look big,

Or wear a huger periwig,
Than our own native lunatics.

Hud.

Of governments that once made such a noise, and looked so big in the eyes of mankind, as being founded upon the deepest counsels, and the strongest force; nothing remains of them but a name.

South.

Thou thyself, thus insolent in state,
Art but perhaps some country magistrate,
Whose power extends no farther than to speak
Big on the bench, and scanty weights to break.

To grant big Thraso valour, Phornio sense,
Should indignation give, at least offence.

Garth.

9. Great in spirit; lofty; brave.

What art thou? have not I
An arm as big as thine? a heart as big?
Thy words I grant, are bigger: for I wear not
My dagger in my mouth.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

BIG. * n. s. A particular kind of barley; a common word in Yorkshire and Cumberland.

To Big. * [Sax. byggan.] To build. See BIGGIN.

BIGAM. * n. s. [old Fr. bigame, Lat. bigamus, one twice married, Cotgrave. Lat. bis, and Gr. γᾰμῖν.]

Some parts thereof teach us ordinances of some apostle, as the law of bigamy, or St. Paul's ordaining, that a bigam should not be a deacon or priest.

Bp. Pencock, in the Life of him by Lewis, p. 226.

No bigami, that is, none that had been twice married, or such as married widows were capable of it, [the benefit of clergy] because such could not receive orders.

Burnet, Hist. Reform. ii. 354.

BIGAMIST. * n. s. [bigamus, low Lat.] One that has committed bigamy. See BIGAMY.

By the papal canons, a clergyman, that has a wife, cannot have an ecclesiastical benefice; much less can a bigamist have such a benefice, according to that law.

And so it shall appear plainly, that their false god Vulcan is not very hard to unmask, that he was a mortal man, and one of the sons of the other Lamech, the prime bigamist and corrupter of marriage.

Donne, Hist. of the Septuagint, p. 201.

BIGAMY. * n. s. [bigamia, low Lat.] See BIGAM.

1. The crime of having two wives at once.

Randal determined to commence a suit against Martin, for bigamy and incest.

Arbutnot and Pope.

2. [In the canon law.] The marriage of a second wife, or of a widow, or a woman already debauched; which, in the church of Rome, were considered as bringing a man under some incapacities for ecclesiastical offices.

We have spoken of bigamy or twice marrying, that they also are excluded from the ministerie, whiche have married a widow.

Martin on the Marriage of Priests, 1554. sign. a. b.

3. The state of being twice married. Dr. Johnson had confounded the following passage of Shakespeare with the first definition of bigamy, where it means polygamy, a crime; when it here means only marrying either two virgins successively, or once marrying a widow. It is called "loathed bigamy" by the poet, because it was esteemed, and had been pronounced by a canon, infamous.

A beauty-waning and distressed widow—
Seduced the pitch and height of all his thoughts
To base declension and loath'd bigamy.

Shakespeare, R. III. III.

B I G

The duke being in years, and without heir, though as now unmarried, by his old wife's decease of late: but the Jew's labour hard that he so remain perswading him, that bigamy is not so acceptable an estate to him.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

My nurse, for I had one, because I'm cold, Divorc'd herself, the cause being in me. That I can take no new in matrimony. Donne's Poems, p. 172.

BELIED. † adj. [from big and belly.]

regnant; with child; great with young.

When we have laugh't to see the sails conceive, now bigbellied with the wanton wind. Shakspeare.

Children and bigbellied women require antidotes somewhat more grateful to the palate. Harvey.

So many well-shaped innocent virgins are blocked up, and waddle up and down like bigbellied women. Addison.

We pursued our march, to the terror of the market people, and the miscarriage of half a dozen bigbellied women. Addison.

2. Having a large belly, or protuberance.

Now shalt thou never see the salt beset

With a big-bellied gallion flagonet. Bp. Hall's Satires, B. 6. S. 1.

He [William Rufus] was in stature somewhat below the usual size, and big-bellied. Swift, Hist. of Eng. Reign of W. II.

B'CHONED.* adj. [from big and bone.] Having large bones; stout; very strong.

Seven big-boned villains—armed with bloody minds and deadly bow-strings. Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 180.

Big-bon'd, and large of limbs, with sinews strong. Dryden, Pal. and Arcite.

B'GCORNED.* adj. [from big and corn.] Having large grains.

The strength of big-corn'd powder.

Dryden, Ann Mirab. st. 149.

BEGGIN. † n. s. [beguin, Fr. from the cap worn by the nuns, called Beguins, as some assert; though others think that the nuns were so called from wearing this kind of cap.]

1. A cap like one of those worn by children.

Sleep now!

Yet not so sound, and half so deeply sweet,

As he, whose brow with homely beggin bound, Snores out the watch of night. Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

A beggin he had got about his brain, For in his headpiece he felt a sore pain.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. May, v. 241.

You that have been a courtier from the beggin to the night-cap. B. Jonson, Epicene.

2. A building. [Sax. byzzan, to build, Sued. byggia; whence the old verb, to bigge, in Chaucer and Wicliffe.] This is yet a common word in the North of England: the town of Newbiggin signifies newbuilt or newbuilding.

BIGHT. n. s. It is explained by Skinner, the circumference of a coil of rope.

B'GLY. adv. [from big.] Tumidly; haughtily; with a blustering manner.

Would'st thou not rather choose a small renown,

To be the may'r of some poor paltry town;

Than to look, and barbarously to peak;

To round false weights, and scanty measures break? Dryden.

B'GNAMED.* adj. [from big and name.] Having a great or famous name.

Go, take physick; doat upon

Some big-nam'd composition;

The oraculous doctor's mystick bills,

Certain hard words made into pills. Crashaw's Poems, p. 108.

B'GNESS. n. s. [from big.]

1. Bulk; greatness of quantity.

The panic be laid below, and about the bottom of a root,

I cause the root to grow to an excessive bigness. Bacon.

was surprised at the bigness and uncouth deformity of the monster. L'Estrange's Fables.

B I G

The brain of any other animal of his body, is much larger than begin bigness three oxen's brains.

Ray on the Creation.

Size

greater or smaller, comparative bulk.

Several sorts of rays in the vibrations of several bignesses, which, according to their bignesses, excite sensations of several colours; and the ear, according to their bignesses, excites sensations of several sounds. Newton's Opticks.

B'GOT. † n. s. [The etymology of this word is unknown; but it is supposed, by Camden and others, to take its rise from some occasional phrase. Dr. Johnson says. Bullokar, in his old English Expositor, says, that "the word came into England out of Normandy, where it continued to this day in the sense of an hypocrite, and also a scrupulous or superstitious person." Cotgrave likewise gives bigot as an old Norman word, signifying as much as the French expression de par Dieu, and the English for God's sake; made good French, he adds, and meaning exactly what Bullokar has stated. Barbazan thinks it a corruption of Visigoth. Mr. Malone is of the same opinion, and produces the word by the process of Visigot, Bisigot, Bigot; the v and b being a common change in old French. It appears that Bigots mean a barbarous people, in an old French romance, cited by Roquefort in his Gloss. de la Lang. Rom. But Roquefort seems to side with those who pretend that the word is from the Germ. by Gott, i. e. by the Deity. It is to be traced, in my opinion, to the low Lat. begutta, one of the appellations of the nuns called beguins. V. du Cange in V. Beguini. The abbreviation into bigot is easy; and the application of devoted, which has been given to bigot, certainly belongs to the beguin. It looks as if Speght, the old editor of Chaucer, considered beguin and bigot as synonymous; for he explains them as superstitious hypocrites. Nor has Francis Thynne, in his remarks on Speght in 1599, disjoined these words, but has considered them together. See Illustr. of Gower and Chaucer, 1810, p. 42.] A man unreasonably devoted to a certain party; prejudiced in favour of certain opinions; a blind zealot. It is used often with to before the object of zeal; as, a bigot to the Cartesian tenets.

Who ever is so impertinent a bigot, as to find fault, when the hills and dales of crooked and unequal bodies are made to meet without a miracle by some iron bodies, or some benign bolsterings? Bp. Taylor, Artific. Handson, p. 60.

Religious spite, and pious spleen bred first

This quarrel, which so long the bigots nurse.

In philosophy and religion, the bigots of all parties are generally the most positive. Tate.

B'GOT.* adj. [from the substantive.] Bigoted.

The same fortune once happened to Moliere, on the occasion of his Tartuffe, which notwithstanding afterwards has seen the light in a country more bigot than ours, and is accounted amongst the best pieces of that poet.

Dryden, B. of Limberham.

B'GOTED. † adj. [old Fr. bigotté, from bigotter, to make superstitious. Cotgrave.] Blindly prepossessed in favour of something; irrationally zealous; with to.

Bigoted to this idol, we disclaim

Rest, health, and ease, for nothing but a name.

Presbyterian merit, during the reign of that weak, bigoted, and ill-advised prince, will easily be computed. Garth, Swift.

BI'GOTEDLY.* adv. [from bigoted.] In the manner of a bigot; pertinaciously; superstitiously.

BI'GOTRY. n. s. [from bigot.]

1. Blind zeal; prejudice; unreasonable in favour of party or opinions: with the particle too.

Were it not for a bigotry to our own sects, we could hardly imagine, that so many absurd, wicked, and bloody principles, should pretend to support themselves by the gospel. Watts.

2. The practice or tenet of a bigot.

Our silence makes our adversaries think we persist in those bigotries, which all good and sensible men despise. Pope.

BI'GSOUNDING.* adj. [from big and sound.] Having a pompous sound.

Big-sounding sentences, and words of state.

By Hall's Satires, B. i. S. 3.

BI'GSWOOLN.† adj. [from big and swoln.] Turgid; ready to burst.

Scarce can I refrain

The execution of my big-swoln heart

Upon that Clifford, that cruel child-killer.

Shakspeare, K. Hen. VI. P. III.

The big-swoln waves in the Iberian stream.

Drayton's Polyolbion, S. 1.

Might my big-swoln heart

Vent all its griefs, and give a loose to sorrow. Addison, Cato.

BI'G-UDDERED. adj. [from big and udder.] Having large udders; having dugs swelled with milk.

Now driv'n before him, through the arching rock,
Came, tumbling heaps on heaps, the unnumber'd flock,
Big-uddered ewes, and goats of female kind. Pope, Odyssey.

BI'LANDER. n. s. [belandre, Fr.] A small vessel of about eighty tons burden, used for the carriage of good. It is a d of hoy, manageable by four or five men, and has masts and sails after the manner of a hoy. They are used chiefly in Holland, as being particularly fit for the canals.

Savary, and Tervoux.

Like bilanders to creep

Along the coast, and land in view to keep.

Dryden.

BI'LBERRY.† n. s. [from biliz, Sax. a bladder, and berry; according to Skinner; vitis idaea. Or from the Sa. blubarr, a blackberry, or whortleberry.] A small shrub; and a sweet berry of that shrub: whortleberry.

Cricket, to Windsor chimneys shalt thou leap;

There pinch the maids as blue as bilberries. Shakspeare.

BI'LBO.† n. s. [corrupted from Bilboa, where the best weapons are made.] A rapier; a sword.

To be compassed like a good bilbo, in the circumference of a peck, hilt to point, heel to head. Shakspeare.

And in their country's right, at Cressy, those that stood,
And that at Poitiers bath'd their bilboes in French blood.

Drayton, Polyolbion, S. 16.

A bilboa-blade that bends

With every pass he makes. Baum, and F. Tamer tamed.

BI'LBOES.† n. s. A sort of stocks, or wooden shackles for the feet, used for punishing offenders at sea. Dr. Johnson might have added, that they are so called from being fabricated at Bilboa. Great quantities of them were shipped on board the Spanish Armada; and some of them are yet to be seen in the Tower of London.

Methought I lay,

Worse than the mutines in the bilboes.

Shakspeare.

BILBOQUET.* n. s. [Fr.] The toy called a cup and ball.

BILE. n. s. [bilis, Lat.] A thick, yellow, bitter liquor, separated in the liver, collected in the gall-bladder, and discharged into the lower end of the duodenum, or beginning of the jejunum, by the common duct. Its use is to sheathe or blunt the acids of the chyle; because they, being entangled with its sulphurs, thicken it so, that it cannot be sufficiently diluted by the succus pancreaticus, to enter the lactal vessels.

In its progression, soon the labour'd chyle
Receives the confluent rills of bitter bile;
Which, by the liver sever'd from the blood,
And striving through the gall pipe, here unload
Their yellow streams.

Black.

BILE.† n. s. [bile, Sax. a sore, perhaps from bile, Lat. This is generally spelt boil; but, I think, less properly, Dr. Johnson says. Our o' tionaries it byle, and bile. See Huloet, pt. 3c.] A sore angry swelling.

But yet thou art my flesh, my blood, my daughter;

Or, rather, a disease that's in my flesh;

Thou art a bile in my corrupted blood.

Shakspeare.

Those biles did run—say so—did not the genital run?
were not that a botchy sore?

Shakspeare.

A furunculus is a painful tubercle, with a broad basis, arising in a cone. It is generally called a bile, and is accompanied with inflammation, pulsation, and tension.

Worm.

BILGE. n. s. The compass or breadth of a ship's bottom. See TO BULGE.

Skinner.

TO BILGE. v. n. [from the noun.] To spring a leak; to let in water, by striking upon a rock: a sea term; now bulge.

Skinner.

BI'LARY. adj. [from bilis, Lat.] Belonging to the bile.

Voracious animals, and such as do not chew, have a great quantity of gall: and some of them have the bilary duct inserted into the pylorus.

Arbuthnot.

BI'LINGS-GATE. n. s. [A cant word, borrowed from Bilingsgate in London, a place where there is always a crowd of low people, and frequent brawls and foul language.] Ribaldry; foul language.

There stript, fair rhetoric languish'd on the ground,

And shameful bilingsgate her robes adorn.

Pope, Dunciad.

BIL'NGUOUS. adj. [bilinguis, Lat.] Having, or speaking two tongues.

BI'LIOUS. adj. [from bilis, Lat.] Consisting of bile; partaking of bile.

Why bilious juice a golden light puts on,

And flood of chyle in silver currents run.

Garth.

When the taste of the mouth is bitter, it is a sign of a redundancy of a bilious alkali.

Arbuthnot.

BIL'VE.* adv. [In our old language.] The same as belive, which see.

TO BILK.† v. a. [derived by Lye and Srenius from the Gothic, bilaitan, which is from the old Goth. bila, to fail.] To cheat; to defraud, by running in debt, and avoiding payment.

Bilk'd stationers for yeomen stood prepar'd.

Dryden.

What comedy, what farce can more delight,

Than grinning hunger, and the pleasing sight

Of your bilk'd hopes?

Dryden, Fab.

BILL. n. s. [bile, Sax. See BAIL.] The beak of a fowl.

Their bills were thwarted crossways at the end, and, with these they would cut an apple in two at one snap.

Carson.

It may be tried, whether birds may not be made to have greater or longer bills, or greater or longer talons.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

In his bill

An olive leaf he brings, pacifick sign

Milton, P. L.

No crowing cock does there his wiles display,
Nor with his horny bill provoke the day.

Dryden, Fab.

BILL. n. s. [bille, Sax. epibille, a two edged axe.]

1. A kind of hatchet with a hooked point, used in country work, as a hedging bill; so called from its resemblance in form to the beak of a bird of prey.

Standing troops are servants arm'd, who use the lance and sword, as other servants do the sickle, or the bill, at the command of those who entertain them. Temple.

1. A kind of weapon anciently carried by the foot; a battle axe.

Yea distaff women manage rusty bills;
Against the seat both young and old rebel. Shakespeare.

BILL. † n. s. [old Fr. billie.] Formerly all long writings, whether letters or not, were called bills; and shorter ones billets.]

A written paper of any kind.

He does receive Particular addition from the bill
That writes them all alike. Shakespeare.

2. An account of money.

Ordinary expence ought to be limited by a man's estate, and ordered to the best, that the bills may be less than the estimation abroad. Bacon.

3. A law presented to the parliament, not yet made an act.

No new laws can be made, nor old laws abrogated or altered, but by parliament; where bills are prepared, and presented to the two houses. Bacon.

How now for mitigation of this bill,
Urg'd by the commons? doth his majesty
Incline to it, or no? Shakespeare.

4. An act of parliament.

There will be no way left for me to tell you that I remember you, and that I love you, but that one, which needs no open warrant, or secret conveyance; which no bills can preclude, nor no kings prevent. Atterbury to Pope.

5. A physician's prescription.

Like him that took the doctor's bill,
And swallow'd it instead o' th' pill. Hudibras.
The medicine was prepar'd according to the bill. L'Estrange.
Let them, but under your superiours, kill,
When doctors first have sign'd the bloody bill. Dryden.

6. An advertisement.

And in despair, their empty pit to fill,
Set up some foreign monster in a bill. Dryden.

7. [In law.] 1. An obligation, but without condition or forfeiture for nonpayment. 2. A declaration in writing, that expresseth either the grief and the wrong, that the complainant hath suffered by the party complained of; or else some fault, that the party complained of hath committed against some law. This bill is sometimes offered to justices errants in the general assizes; but most to the lord chancellor. It containeth the fact complained of, the damages thereby suffered, and petition of process against the defendant for redress. Coxw.

The fourth thing very maturely to be consulted by the jury, is, what influence their finding the bill may have upon the kingdom. Swift.

8. A bill of mortality. An account of the numbers that have died in any district.

Most who took in the weekly bills of mortality, made little other use of them, than to look at the foot, how the burials encreased or decreased. Graunt.

So liv'd our sires, ere doctors learn'd to kill,
And multiply'd with theirs the weekly bill. Dryden.

9. A bill of fare. An account of the season of provisions, or of the dishes at a feast.

It may seem somewhat difficult to make out the bills of fare for some of the forementioned suppers. Arbutnot.

10. A bill of exchange. A note ordering the payment of a sum of money in one place, to some person assigned by the drawer or remitter, in consideration of the value paid to him in another place.

comfortable sentences are bills of exchange, upon the which we lay our cares down, and receive provisions. Bp. Taylor, Rule of living holy.

All that a bill of exchange can do, is to direct to whom money is due, or taken up upon credit, in a foreign country, shall be paid. Locke.

11. A bill of lading. An account of goods delivered on board a ship.

To BILL. v. n. [from bill, a beak.] To caress, as doves by joining bills; to be fond.

Doves, they say, will bill, after their pecking, and their murmuring. Ben Jonson, Cataline.

Still amorous, and fond, and billing,
Like Philip and Mary on a shilling. Hudibras.

They tread, they tread; Aleyone compress'd,
Seven days sits brooding on her floating nest. Dryden.

He that bears th' artillery of Jove,
The strong pounc'd eagle; and the billing dove. Dryden.

To BILL. v. a. [from bill, a writing.] To publish by an advertisement: a cant word.

His masterpiece was a composition that he billed about under the name of a sovereign antidote. L'Estrange.

BILLET. n. s. [billet, French.]

1. A small paper; a note.

When he found this little billet, in which was only written Remember Caesar, he was exceedingly confounded. Clarendon.

2. A ticket directing soldiers at what house to lodge.

3. Billet doux, or a soft billet; a love letter.

'Twas then, Belinda! if report say true,
Thy eyes first open'd on a billet doux. Pope.

4. [Bilot, Fr.] A small log of wood for the chimney.

Let us then calculate, when the bulk of a fagot or billet is dilated and rarified to the degree of fire, how vast a place it must take up. Digby on Bodies.

Their billet at the fire was found. Prior

To BILLET. † v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To direct a soldier by a ticket, or note, where he is to lodge.

Retire thee; go where thou art billeted:
Away, I say. Shakespeare, Othello.

2. To quarter soldiers, or to lodge other persons.

They remembered him of charging the kingdom, by billeting soldiers. Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

Some thousands of the Irish papists were in several parts billeted upon us. Milton's Euonochastis, ch. 10.

The counties throughout the kingdom were so incensed, and their affections poisoned, that they refused to suffer the soldiers to be billeted upon them. Clarendon.

3. Simply, to dispose; to lodge.

The violence of the storm on St John's night threw down the battlements over the room where your Grace's Manuscripts are billeted, but did no more hurt. Laud, (Letter to him.) ii. 183.

BILLIARDS. † n. s. Without a singular. [billard, Fr. of which that language has no etymology; and therefore they probably derived from England both the play and the name, which is corrupted from balyards, yards or sticks with which a ball is driven along a table. Thus Spenser: "Balyards much unfit, and shuttlecocks misseeming manly wit," M. Hubbard's Tale. Such is Dr. Johnson's observation on this word. But his remark on the Fr. etymology, in the first place, is erroneous; for billard is from bille, a ball, just as campagnard is from campagne, and as many more French words are formed. In this determination Mr. Malone agrees with me. Balyard, in the next place, is not the genuine reading of Spenser; it is balliards, as Burton and other old authors write the word; and therefore the application of yard is forced. See BALLIARDS.] A game at which a ball is forced against another on a table.

Let it alone; let's to billiards. Shakespeare.

Even nose and cheek, withal,
Smooth as is the billiard ball. B. Jonson, Underwoods.

Some are forced to bound or fly upwards, almost like ivory balls meeting on a billiard table. Boyle.

When the ball obeys the stroke of a billiard stick, it is not any action of the ball, but bare passion. Locke.

BILLION.* n. s. [Fr.] A million of millions. Cotgrave.

BILLOW.* n. s. [bilge, Germ. boje, Dan. probably of the same original with bilz, Sax. a bladder; which is the Goth. balgs.] A wave swoln, and hollow.

From whence the river Dee, as silver cleen,
His tumbling billows roll with gentle rore. Spenser, F. Q.

Billows sink by degrees, even when the wind is down that first stirred them. Wotton.

Chasing Nereus with his trident throws
The billows from the bottom. Denham.

But when loud billows lash the sounding shore,
The hoarse rough verse should like the torrent roar. Pope.

To BILLOW. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell, or roll, as a wave.

The billowing snow, and violence of the show'r,
That from the hills disperse their dreadful store,
And o'er the vales collected ruin pour. Prior.

BILLOW-BEATEN.* adj. [from billow and beat.]

Tossed by billows: a fine and forcible compound.

He, — sitting in his own sublimed height,
Surveys and weighs the billow-beaten fate
Of towering statists. *Jordan's Divinity and Morality in Poetry, * 3. b.*

BILLOWY. adj. [from billow.] Swelling; turgid; wavy.

And whitening down the mossy-tinctur'd stream,
Descends the billowy foam. Thomson, Spring.

BILMAN.* n. s. [from bill and man.] He who uses a bill: Hulot calls the bill-man "a mower." Formerly applied to troops carrying this weapon. See BILL.

In rush'd his bilmen. Mir. for Magistrates, p. 427.

BIN.* Used in our old language for BE and BEEN. Been, ben, bin. See BEEN.

BIN. n. s. [binne, Sax.] A place where bread, or corn, or wine, is repositd.

The most convenient way of picking hops, is into a long square frame of wood, called a bin. Mortimer.

As when from rooting in a bin,
All powder'd o'er from tail to chin,
A lively maggot sallies out,
You know him by his hazel snout. Swift.

BINARY.* adj. [old Fr. binnaire, from binus, Lat.] Two; dual; double.

BINARY Arithmetick. A method of computation proposed by Mr. Leibnitz, in which, in lieu of the ten figures in the common arithmetick, and the progression from ten to ten, he has only two figures, and uses the simple progression from two to two. This method appears to be the same with that used by the Chinese four thousand years ago. Chambers.

BINARY.* n. s. The constitution of two.

To make two, or a binary, which is the first number, add but one unto one. Fotherby's Alchemastix, p. 307.

In nature are two supreme principles,
As, namely, unity and binary. Davies, Willes Pilgrimage, G. 4. b.

The union of the passive and active principle in the creation of this material heaven, is the second day's work; and the binary denotes the nature thereof. More, Conject. Cabbal. p. 26.

To BIND.* v. a. pret. I bound; particip. pass. bound, or bounden, [bindan, Goth. bindan, Sax.]

1. To confine with bonds; to enchain.

Wilt thou play with him as with a bird? or, wilt thou bind him for thy maidens? Job, xli. 5.

2. To gird; to enwrap; to involve.

Who hath bound the waters in a garment? Proverbs, xxx. 4.

3. To fasten to any thing; to fix by circumsolution.

Thou shalt bind this line of scarlet thread in the window, which thou didst let us down by. Joshua, ii. 18.

Keep my commandments, and live; and my law, as the apple of thine eye. Bind them upon thy fingers, write them upon the table of thine heart. Proverbs, vii. 34.

4. To fasten together.

Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles, to burn them. St. Matthew, xiii. 20.

5. To connect closely or inseparably.

His life is bound up in the lad's life. Gen. xlv. 30.

6. To cover a wound with dressings and bandages: with up.

When he saw him, he had compassion on him, and went to him, and bound up his wounds. St. Luke, x. 34.

Having filled up the bared cranium with our dressings, we bound up the wound. Wiscman.

7. To oblige by stipulation, or oath.

If a man vow a vow, or swear an oath to bind his soul with a bond, he shall not break his word. Numbers, xxx. 2.

Swear by the solemn oath, that binds the gods. Pope.

8. To oblige by duty or law; to compel; to constrain.

Though I am bound to every act of duty,
I am not bound to that, all slaves are free to. Shakespeare.

Duties expressly required in the plain language of Scripture, ought to bind our consciences more than those which are but dubiously inferred. Watte.

9. To oblige by kindness.

10. To confine; to hinder: with in, if the restraint be local; with up, if it relate to thought or act.

Now I'm cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound in
To saucy doubts and fears. Shakespeare.

You will sooner, by imagination, bind a bird from singing, than from eating or flying. Bacon.

Though passion be the most obvious and general, yet it is not the only cause that binds up the understanding, and confines it, for the time, to one object, from which it will not be taken off. Locke.

In such a dismal place
Where joy ne'er enters, which the sun ne'er cheers,
Bound in with darkness, overspread with damps. Dryden.

11. To hinder the flux of the bowels; to make costive.

Rhubarb hath manifestly in it parts of contrary operations; parts that purge, and parts that bind the body. Bacon.

The whey of milk doth loose, the milk doth bind. Herbert.

BIRDLIKE.* adj. [from bird and like.] Resembling a bird.

For when I see, how they do mount on high,
Waving their out-tretch'd wings at liberty;
Then do I think, how bird-like in a cage
My life I lead, and grief can never at ease.

Nichols, Adv. for Magistrates, p. 653.

BIRDLIME. n. s. [from bird and lime.] A glutinous substance, which is spread upon twigs, by which the birds that light upon them are entangled.

Birdlime is made of the bark of holly; they pound it into a tough paste, that no fibres of the wood be left; then it is washed in a running stream, till no mores appear, and put up to ferment, and scummed, and then laid up for use: at which time they incorporate with it a third part of nut oil, over the fire. But the bark of our lantene, or way-faring shrub, will make very good birdlime.

Chambers.

Holly is of so viscous a juice, as they make birdlime of the bark of it. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

With stores of gather'd glue, contrive
To stop the vents and crannies of their hive;
Not birdlime, or Idean pitch produce
A more tenacious mass of chimney juice. Dryden.

I'm ensnar'd;

Heaven's birdlime wraps me round, and plues my wings. Dryden.

The woodpecker, and other birds of this kind, because they prey upon flies which they catch with their tongue, have a couple of bags filled with a viscous humour, as if it were a natural birdlime, or liquid glue. Grew.

BIRDLIMED.* adj. [from birdlime.] Figuratively, spread to ensnare.

That, he'd with bites of rustick, makes a front. Pope.

He fought at thousands, what with better wit
You purchase as you want, and bit by bit. Pope.

His majesty has power to grant a patent for stamping round bite of copper, to every subject he bath. Swift.

3. A Spanish West Indian silver coin, valued at seven-pence halfpenny.

4. I bit the better of worse. In the smallest degree.
There are few that I now all the tricks of these lawyers; for much I can see, your case is not a bit clearer than it was seven years ago. Arbuthnot.

To BIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To put the bridle upon a horse.

BITCH. n. s. [bicca, biece, Sax.]

1. The female of the canine kind; as, the wolf, the dog, the fox, the otter.

And at his feet a bitch wolf-suck did yield
To two young babes. Spenser.

I have been credibly informed, that a bitch will nurse, play with, and be fond of young foxes, as much as, and in place of her puppies. Locke.

2. A name of reproach for a woman.

If you'll call a dog, and her a bitch. Pope.
John had not run a madding so long, had it not been for an extravagant bitch of a wife. Arbuthnot.

To BITE. v. a. pret. I bit, part. pass. I have bit, or bitten, [bitan, Sax. bita, Sued.]

1. To crush, or pierce with the teeth.

My very enemy's dog,
Though he had bit me, should have stood that night Against my fire. Shakspeare.

Such smiling rogues as these,
Like rats, oft bite the holy cords in twain,
Too intricate to unloose. Shakspeare.

These are the youths that thunder at a playhouse, and fight for bitten apples. Shakspeare.

The winning way we'll follow;
We'll bit, that men may bite fair.

Beaumont and Fl. Wildgoose Chase.

He falls; his arms upon his body sound,
And with his bloody teeth he bites the ground. Dryden.
There was lately a young gentleman bit to the bone, who has now indeed recovered. Tatler, No. 62.

Their foul mouths have not opened their lips without a fal-lity; though they have shewed their teeth as if they would bite off my nose. Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scrib.

2. To give pain by cold.

Here feel we the icy phang,
And churlish chiding of the winter's wind;
Which when it bites and blow, upon my body,
Even till I shrink with cold, I smile. Shakspeare.
Full fifty years harness'd in rugged steel,
I have endur'd the biting winter's blast,
And the severer heats of parching summer. Rouse, Amb. Stepm.

3. To hurt or pain with reproach.

Each poet with a different talent writes;
One praises, one instructs, another bites. Roscommon.

4. To cut; to wound.

I've seen the day, with my good biting faulchion,
I would have made them skip. Shakspeare.

5. To make the mouth smart with an acrid taste, from the old usage of it, in the general sense, to cause to smart.

No ointment that would cleanse or bite.
Chaucer, C. T. Prol. 633.

It may be the first water will have more of the scent, as more fragrant; and the second more of the taste, as more bitter, or biting. Bacon.

6. To cheat; to trick; to defraud: a low phrase.

Asleep and naked as an Indian lay,
An honest factor stole a gem away;
He pledg'd it to the knight; the knight had wit,
So kept the diamond, and the rogue was bit. Pope.

If you had allowed half the fine gentlemen to have conversed with you, they would have been strangely bit, while they thought only to fall in love with a fair lady. Pope.

BITE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The seizure of any thing by the teeth.

Does he think he can endure the everlasting burnings, or arm himself against the bites of the never-dying worm? South.
Nor so days parching heat, that splits the rocks,
Are half so harmful as the greedy flocks;
Their venom'd bite, and scurs indented on the stock. Dryden, Virgil's Georgicks.

2. The act of a fish that takes the bait.

I have known a very good fisher angle diligently four or six hours for a river carp, and not have a bite. Walton's Angler.

3. A cheat; a trick; a fraud: in low and vulgar language.

Let a man be never so wise,
He may be caught with sober lies;
For take it in its proper light,
'Tis just what coxcombs call a bite. Swift.

4. A sharper; one who commits frauds.

BITER. n. s. [from bite.]

you may therefore easily believe him to be a bold biter.
Walton's Angler.

3. A tricker; a deceiver.

A biter is one who tells you a thing, you have no reason to disbelieve in itself, and perhaps has given you, before he bit you, no reason to disbelieve it for his saying it; and, if you give him ere lit, laughs in your face, and triumphs that he has deceived you. He is one who thinks you a fool, because you do not think him a knave. Spectator, No. 504.

BITING.* n. s. [from bite.]

1. The act of biting.

Then the bitings of grasshoppers and flies killed; neither was there found any remedy for their life; for they were worthy to be punished by such. Wisdom, xvi. 9.

2. The act of wounding with censure or reproach.

As long as I give them as good hold upon me, they must pardon me my bitings. Donne's Progress of the Soul, Epist.

BITINGLY.* adv. [from bite.] jeeringly; sarcastically. Bullokar's old vocabulary has this adverb,
"To taunt bitingly."

Some more bitingly called it the impress or emblem of his entry into his first bishoprick, viz. not at the door, but the window. Harrington's Br. View of the Church, p. 28.

His [Cicero's] weakness and deficiency the poet Juvenal, in his satire, derideth very bitingly. Fotherby's Atheomastix, p. 191.

BITTER.† adj. [biter, Saxon, from the Goth.
bitirs.]

1. Having a hot acrid, biting taste, like wormwood.

Bitter things are apt rather to kill than engender putrefac-tion. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Though a man in a fever should, from sugar, have a bitter taste, which, at another time, produces a sweet one; yet the idea of bitter, in that man's mind, would be as distinct from the idea of sweet, as if he had tasted only gall. Locke.

2. Sharp; cruel; severe.

Friends now fast sworn,
Unseparable, shall within this hour,
On a dissension of a doit, break out
To bitterest enmity. Shakspeare.

Husbands, love your wives, and be not bitter against them.

Colossians, iii. 19.

The word of God, instead of a bitter, teaches us a charitable zeal.

Spratt.

3. Calamitous; miserable.

I will make it as the mourning of an only son, and the end thereof as a bitter day.

Amos, viii. 10.

Noble friends and fellows, whom to leave

Is only bitter to me, only dying;

Go with me, like good angels, to my end.

Shakspeare.

A dire induction am I witness to;

And will to France, hoping the consequence

Will prove as bitter, black, and tragical.

Shakspeare.

And shun the bitter consequence; for know,

The day thou eat'st thereof, my sole command

Transgress, inevitably thou shalt die.

Milton, P. L.

Tell him, that if I bear my bitter fate,

'Tis to behold his vengeance for my son.

Dryden.

4. Painful; inclement.

The fowl the borders fly,

And shun the bitter blast, and wheel about the sky.

Dryden.

5. Sharp; reproachful; satirical.

Go with me,

And, in the breath of bitter words, let's smother

My damned son.

Shakspeare.

6. Mournful; afflicted.

Wherefore is light given unto him that is in misery, and life unto the bitter in soul?

Job, iii. 20.

7. In any manner, unpleasing or hurtful.

Bitter is an equivocal word; there is bitter wormwood, there are bitter words, there are bitter enemies, and a bitter cold morning.

Watts, Logic.

BITTER. * n. s.

1. Any thing bitter.

A little bitter mingled in our cup leaves no relish of the sweet.

Bitterly hast thou paid, and still art paying

That rigid score.

Milton, S. A.

3. Sharply; severely.

His behaviour is not to censure bitterly the errors of their zeal.

Spratt.

BITTERN. n. s. [bulour, Fr.] A bird with long legs, and a long bill, which feeds upon fish; remarkable for the noise which he makes, usually called bumping. See BITTOUR.

The poor fish have enemies enough, besides such unnatural fishermen as otters, the cormorant, and the bittern.

Walton.

So that scarce

The bittern knows his tune, with bill ingulphed,

To shake the sounding marsh.

Thomson.

BITTERN. n. s. [from bitter.] A very bitter liquor, which drains off in making of common salt, and used in the preparation of Epsom salt.

Quincy.

BITTERNESS. † n. s. [Sax. biteþneþre.]

1. A bitter taste.

ML. I.

The idea of whiteness, or bitterness, is in the mind, exactly answering that power which is in any body to produce it there.

Locke.

2. Malice; grudge; hatred; implacability.

The bitterness and animosity between the commanders was such, that a great part of the army was marched.

Clarendon.

3. Sharpness; severity of temper.

His sorrows have so overwhelm'd his wits,

Shall we be thus afflicted in his wrecks,

His fits, his frenzy, and his bitterness?

Shakspeare.

Pierpoint and Crew appeared now to have contracted more bitterness and sourness than formerly, and were more reserved towards the king's commissioners.

Clarendon.

4. Satire; piquancy; keenness of reproach.

Some think their wits have been asleep, except they dart out somewhat piquant, and to the quick: men ought to find the difference between saltiness and bitterness.

Bacon.

5. Sorrow; vexation; affliction.

There appears much joy in him, even so much, that joy could not show itself modest enough, without a badge of bitterness.

Shakspeare.

They shall mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only son, and shall be in bitterness for him, as one that is in bitterness for his first-born.

Zech. xii. 10.

Most pursue the pleasures, as they call them, of their natures, which begin in sin, are carried on with danger, and end in bitterness.

Wake, Prep. for Death.

I oft, in bitterness of soul, deplor'd

My absent daughter, and my dearer lord.

Pope, Odys. ev.

BITTERSWEET. n. s. [from bitter and sweet.] The name of an apple, which has a compound taste of sweet and bitter.

It is but a bittersweet at best, and the fine colours of the serpent do by no means make amends for the smart and poison of his sting.

South.

When I express the taste of an apple, which we call the bittersweet, none can mistake what I mean.

Watts.

BITTERVETCH. n. s. [ervum, Lat.] A plant.

BITTERWORT. n. s. [gentiana, Lat.] An herb.

BITTOUR. † n. s. [bulour, Fr. bittore, Ital. from the Lat. bootaurus, Minshew thinks, because "boat ut taurus," he makes a noise like a bull.] The name of a bird, commonly called the bittern; but perhaps as properly bittour. It is, in some places, called a butter-bump. See BITTERN.

Then to the waters brink she laid her head;

And, as a bittour bumps within a reed,

To thee alone, O lake, she said, I tell.

Dryden.

BITUME. n. s. [from bitumen.] Bitumen. See BITUMEN.

Shakspeare, Pericles.

BITUMEN. n. s. [Lat.] A fat unctuous matter dug out of the earth, or scummed off lakes, as the Asphaltis in Judaea, of various kinds: some so hard as to be used for coals; others so glutinous as to serve for mortar.

Savary.

It is reported, that bitumen mingled with lime, and put under water, will make as it were an artificial rock, the substance becometh so hard.

Bacon.

The fabrick seem'd a work of rising ground,

With sulphur and bitumen cast between.

Dryden.

Bitumen is a body that readily takes fire, yields an oil, and is soluble in water.

Woodward.

BITUMINOUS. † adj. [Fr. bitumineux, from bitumen.]

Having the nature and qualities of bitumen; compounded of bitumen.

Naphtha, which was the bituminous mortar used in the walls of Babylon, grows to an entire and very hard matter, like a stone.

Bacon.

B L A

The fruitage fair to sight, like that which grew Near that bituminous lake, where Sodom flam'd. Milton, P. L.
BIVA'VE. adj. [from binus and valva, Lat.] Having two valves or shutters; a term used of those fish that have two shells, as oysters: and of those plants whose seed pods open their whole length, to discharge their seeds, as pens.

In the cavity lies loose the shell of some sort of bivalve, larger than could be introduced in at those holes. Woodward.
BIVA'LVULA. adj. [from bivalve.] Having two valves.

BI'VIOUS.* adj. [Lat. bivius.] That leadeth different ways.

fifteen pounds, which the king offereth upon high festival days; it is yet called a bizantine, which anciently was a piece of gold coined by the emperours of Constantinople. Camden.

To BLAB. v. a. [blabbercn, Teut.]

1. To tell what ought to be kept secret; it usually implies rather thoughtlessness than treachery; but may be used in either sense.

The gaudy, blabbing, and remorseful day,
Is crept into the bosom of the sea. Shakspeare.

Thy dues be done, and none left out,
Ere the blabbing eastern scout,
The nice morn on the Indian steep,
From her cabin'd loophole peep. Milton, Comus.

Nature has made man's breast no windores,
To publish what he does within doors;
Nor what dark secrets there inhabit,
Unless his own rash folly blab it. Hudibras.

Sorrow nor joy can be disguis'd by art,
Our foreheads blab the secrets of our heart. Dryden.

It is unlawful to give any kind of religious worship to a creature; but the very induces of the fathers cannot escape the index expurgatorius, for blabbing so great a truth Stillfleet.

Nor whisper to the tattling reeds
The blackest of all female deeds;
Nor blab it on the lonely rocks,
Where echoes sits, and list'ning mocks. Swift.

2. To tell: in a good sense: not used.

That delightful engine of her thoughts,
That blabb'd them with such pleasing eloquence,
Is torn from forth that pretty hollow cage. Shakspeare.

To BLAB. v. n. To tattle; to tell tales.

Your mate I'll be;
When my tongue blabs, then let mine eyes not see. Shakspeare.

BLAB. n. s. [from the verb.] A telltale; a thoughtless babbler; a treacherous betrayer of secrets.

The secret man heareth many confessions; for who will open himself to a blab, or babbler? Bacon.

To have reveal'd
Secrets of man, the secrets of a friend,
Contempt and scorn of all, to be excluded
All friendship, and avoided as a blab. Milton, S. A.

Whoever shews me a very inquisitive body, I'll shew him a blab, and one that shall make privacy as publick as a proclamation. L'Estrange.

I should have gone about shewing my letters, under the charge of secrecy, to every blab of my acquaintance. Swift.

BLA'BBER. n. s. [from blab.] A tatter; a telltale.
Sherwood.

To BLA'BBER. v. n.
1. To whistle to a horse. Skinner.

B L A

2. To falter; to fib; to tell tales; Minshew and Cotgrave; both of whom derive it from the old Fr.
baboyer; but it is from the Teut. blabbercn, to talk foolishly.

BLA'BBERLIPPED. Skinner. See BLOBBERLIPPED.

BLACK. † adj. [blac, Sax.]

1. Of the colour of night.

In the twilight in the evening, in the black and dark night.

Aristotle has problems which enquire why the sun make man black, and not the fire; why it whitens wax, yet black the skin? Proverbs, vii. 9.
Brown.

2. Dark.

The heaven was black with clouds and wind, and there was a great rain. I Kings, xviii. 45.

3. Cloudy of countenance; sullen.

She hath abated me of half my train;
Look'd black upon me. Shakspeare.

4. Horrible; wicked; atrocious.

Either my country never must be freed,
Or I consenting to so black a deed. Dryden.

5. Obscure; mysterious. To this definition of black belongs the application of it to necromancy, as Minshew terms "the black art;" which is yet an expression not omitted in enumerating the many things which a conjurer is supposed to know!

Deceitful magick told the Earl of Gowry, the Earl of Gowry should be king of Scotland;—the enigmatical black art bears Fairfax in hand, that the Viscount of—— shall be king of England. Archdeacon Arnway's Tab. of Moderation, p. 107.

6. Dismal; mournful.

A dire induction am I witness to;
And will to France, hoping the consequence
Will prove as bitter, black, and tragical. Shakspeare.

7. Black and Blue. The colour of a bruise; a stripe.

Mistress Ford, good heart, is beaten black and blue, that you cannot see a white spot about her.

Shakspeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

And, wing'd with speed and fury, flew
To rescue knight from black and blue. Hudibras.

BLACK-BROWED. adj. [from black and brow.] Having black eyebrows; gloomy; dismal; threatening.

Come, gentle night; come, loving, black-brow'd night,
Give me my Romeo. Shakspeare.

Thus when a black-brow'd gust begins to rise,
White foam at first on the curl'd ocean fries,
Then roars the main, the billows mount the skies. Dryden.

BLACK-BRYONY. n. s. [tamnus, Lat.] The name of a plant.

BLACK-CATTLE. Oxen, bulls, and cows.

The other part of the grazier's business is what we call black- cattle, produces hides, tallow, and beef, for exportation. Swift.

BLACK-EARTH. n. s. It is every where obvious on the surface of the ground, and what we call mould.

Woodward.

BLACK-EYED.* adj. [from black and eye.] Having black eyes.

I must resign
My black-ey'd maid, to please the powers divine. Dryden, Iliad 1.

BLACK-FACED.* adj. [from black and face.] Having a dark or black face.

This black-fac'd night, desire's foul nurse.
Shakspeare, Ven. and Adonis.

BLACK-GUARD. † adj. [from black and guard.] A cant word amongst the vulgar; by which is implied a dirty fellow; of the meanest kind, Dr. Johnson says; and he cites only the modern authority of Swift. But the introduction of this word into our language belongs not to the vulgar, and is more than a century prior to the time of Swift. Mr. Malone agrees with me, in exhibiting the two first of the following examples. The black guard is evidently designed to imply a fit attendant on the devil.

* They are taken for no better than rakehells or the devil's black guard. Stanishurst's Descript. of Ireland, ch. 8.

As the blessed angels are ministring spirits, so the devil and his black-guard are the meanes and instruments which God hath used and employed in all times,—eyther for the tryal of the godly, or chastisement of the wicked.

H. Howard's Defensative, &c. (1583.)

One o' the black-guard had his hand in my vestry, and was groping of me as nimbly as the Christmas cut-purse.

B. Johnson, Masques at Court.

I was alone among a coachfull of women, and those of the electors duchesse chamber forsoothe, which you would have said to have been of the black guard.

Moryson's Itinerary, part 1. p. 13.

Let a black-guard boy be always about the house, to send on your errands, and go to market for you on rainy days. Swift.

BLACK-JACK.* n. s. The leathern cup of elder times. See JACK.

He runs to the black-jack, fills his flaggon, spreads the table, and serves up dinner. Milton, Colasterion.

I drink my porter out of a leathern black-jack. Student, ii. 258.

BLACK-LEAD. n. s. [from black and lead.] A mineral found in the lead mines, much used for pencils; it is not fusible, or not without a very great heat.

You must first get your black-lead sharpened finely, and put fast into quills, for your rude and first draught. Peacham.

BLACK-MAIL. n. s. A certain rate of money, corn, cattle, or other consideration, paid to men allied with robbers, to be by them protected from the danger of such as usually rob or steal. Cowel.

BLACK-MOUTHED.* adj. [from black and mouth.] Using foul language; scurrilous.

He will readily grant, that if the dead rise not, then his preaching is vain, and their faith is also vain; then Christian religion is all artifice and delusion; the dream of enthusiasts, the project of politicians, the craft of priests, or whatever else the most black-mouth'd atheists charged it with.

Killingbeck's Serm. p. 118.

BLACK-MONDAY.* n. s. A day recorded in the history of this country by that name.

Black-Monday is Easter-Monday, and was so called on this occasion: In the 34th of Edw. III. the 14th of April, and the morrow after Easter-day, king Edward, with his host, lay before the city of Paris, which day was full dark of mist and hail, and so bitter cold, that many men died on their horses' backs with the cold. Wherefore, unto this day, it hath been called the Black-Monday.

Stowe, Hist. of Eng.

It was not for nothing that my nose fell a bleeding on Black-Monday last. Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

BLACK-PEOPLED.* adj. [from black and people.] Having people of a black colour.

The admiring queen, wing'd with thy fame,
From her black-peopled empire came.

Sandys, Christ's Passion, p. 23.

BLACK-PUDDING. n. s. [from black and pudding.] A kind of food made of blood and grain.

Through they were lin'd with many a piece
Of ammunition bread and cheese,
And fat blackpuddings, proper food
For warriors that delight in blood.

Hudibras.

BLACK-ROD. n. s. [from black and rod.] The usher belonging to the order of the garter; so called from the black rod he carries in his hand. He is of the king's chamber, and likewise usher of the parliament.

Cowel.

BLACK-VISAGE.* adj. [from black and visage.]

Having a black appearance.

Hurry amain from our black-visag'd shows;
We shall affright their eyes.

Marston's Antonio and Melida, Prol.

BLACK.† n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A black colour.

Black is the badge of liell,

The hue of dungeons, and the scowl of night. Shakspeare.

For the production of black, the corpuscles must be less than any of those which exhibit colours. Newton.

2. Mourning.

We never bethink ourselves, or consult of moderate diet, but in blacks and moorning, when our folly and intemperance hath cast us into some disease.

Hales's Sermons, at the Close of his Remains, p. 21.

How like a silent stream shaded with night,

And gliding softly with our windy sighs,

Moves the whole frame of this solemnity!

Tears, sighs, and blacks, filling the similit.

Massinger's and Field's Fatal Dowry.

Rise, wretched widow, rise; nor, undeplor'd,

Permit my ghost to pass the Stygian ford:

But rise, prepar'd in black, to mourn thy perish'd lord. Dryden.

3. A blackamoor.

4. That part of the eye which is black.

It suffices that it be in every part of the air, which is as big as the black or sight of the eye. Digby.

5. A stain.

Defiling her white lawn of chastity

With ugly blacks of lust.

Rowley, All's Lost by Lust.

TO BLACK.† v. a. [Sax. blacian.] To make black; to blacken.

Blacking over the paper with ink, not only the ink would be quickly dried up, but the paper, that I could not burn before, we quickly set on fire. Boyle.

Then in his fury black'd the raven o'er,

And bid him prate in his white plumes no more. Addison.

BLA'CKAMOOH. n. s. [from black and Moor.] A man by nature of a black complexion; a negro.

They are no more afraid of a blackamoor, or a lion, than of a nurse, or a cat. Locke.

BLA'CKBERRIED Heath. [empetrum, Lat.] The name of a plant.

BLA'CKBERRY.† n. s. [Sax. blacbeþian.] The fruit of the bramble.

The policy of these crafty sneering rascals, that stale old mouse-eaten cheese Nestor, and that same dogfox Ulysses, is not proved worth a blackberry. Shakspeare.

Then sad he sung the Children in the Wood;

How blackberries they pluck'd in desarts wild,

And fearless at the glittering fauchion smil'd. Gay.

BLA'CKBERRY Bush. n. s. [rubus, Lat.] A species of bramble.

BLA'CKBIRD. n. s. [from black and bird.] The name of a bird.

The crib was down, the blackbird caught.

Swift.

BLA'CKCOCK.* n. s. The heath-cock: the black game, common in the North of England and in Scotland.

After dinner, we went out with guns, to try if we could find any blackcock. Boswell, Tour to the Hebrides.

TO BLA'CKEN.† v. a. [Sax. blacian.]

1. To make of a black colour.

Bless'd by aspiring winds, he finds the strand

Blacken'd by crowds.

Prior.

While the long fun'erals blacken all the way.

Pope.

2. To darken; to cloud.

That little cloud that appear'd at first to Elijah's servant, no bigger than a man's hand, but presently after grew, and spread, and blackened the face of the whole heaven. South.

3. To defame; or make infamous.

B L A

Let us blacken him, let us blacken him, what we can, said that miscreant Harrison, of the blessed king, upon the wording and drawing up his charge against his approaching trial. South.
The morals blacken'd, when the writings 'scape,
The libell'd person, and the pictur'd shape. Pope.
To BLA'CKEN. v. n. To grow black or dark.

The hollow sound
Sung in the leaves, the forest shook around,
Air blacken'd, roll'd the thunder, groan'd the ground. Dryden.
BLA'CKENER.* n. s. [from blacken.] He who blackens any thing. Sherwood.

BLA'CKISH.† adj. [from black.] Somewhat black.
As the stream of brooks they pass away; which are blackish
by reason of the ice, and wherein the snow is hid. Job vi. 16.
Part of it all the year continues in the form of a blackish
oil. Boyle.

BLA'CKLY.* adv. [from black.]

1. Darkly, in colour.
Lastly stood War, in glittering arms yclad,
With visage grim, stern looks, and blackly lued.
Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Magistrates.

2. Atrociously.
Deeds so blackly grim and horrid.
Felltham's Resolves, B. ii. R. 31.

BLA'CKMOOR. n. s. [from black and Moore.] A negro.

The land of Chus makes no part of Africa; nor is it the habitation of blackmoors; but the country of Arabia, especially the Happy and Stony. Brown, Vulg. Err.

More to west
The realm of Baechus to the blackmoor sea. Milton, P. R.

BLA'CKNESS. n. s. [from black.]

1. Black colour.
Blackness is only a disposition to absorb, or stifle, without reflection; most of the rays of every sort that fall on the bodies. Locke.

There would emerge one or more very black spots, and, within those, other spots of an intenser blackness. Newton.
His tongue, his prating tongue, had chang'd him quite,
To sooty blackness from the purest white. Addison.

2. Darkness.
His faults in him seem as the spots of heav'n,
More fiery by night's blackness. Shakspeare.

3. Atrociousness; horribleness; wickedness.

BLA'CKSMITH. n. s. [from black and smith.] A smith that works in iron; so called from being very smutty.

The blacksmith may forge what he pleases. Howell.
Shut up thy doors with bars and bolts; it will be impossible for the blacksmith to make them so fast, but a cat and a whore-master will find a way through them. Spectator.

BLA'CKTAIL. n. s. [from black and tail.] A fish; a kind of perch, by some called ruffs, or popes. See POPE. Dict.

BLA'CKTHORN.† n. s. [from black and thorn.] The same with the sloe. See PLUM, of which it is a species.

Love shall, in that tempestuous shower,
Her brightest blossoms like the blackthorn show;
Weak friendship prospers by the power
Of fortune's sun: I'll in her winter grow.

Habington's Castara, p. 98.

BLA'DDER. n. s. [bladder, Saxon; blader, Dutch.]

1. That vessel in the body which contains the urine.
The bladder should be made of a membranous substance, and extremely dilatible for receiving and containing the urine, till an opportunity of emptying it. Ray.

2. It is often filled with wind, to which allusions are frequently made.

That huge great body which the giant bore,
Was vanquish'd quite, and of that monstrous mass
Was nothing left, but like an empty bladder was. Spenser, F. Q.

B L A

A bladder but moderately filled with air, and strongly tied, being held near the fire, grew exceeding turgid and hard; but being brought nearer to the fire, it suddenly broke, with so loud a noise as made us for a while after almost deaf. Boyle.
3. It is usual for those that learn to swim, to support themselves with blown bladders.

I have ventur'd,
Like little wanton boys, that swim on bladders,
These many summers, in a sea of glory;
But far beyond my depth: my highblown pride
At length broke under me. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

4. A blister; a pustule.

BLA'DDER-NUT. n. s. [staphylodendron, Lat.] A plant.

BLA'DDER-SENA. n. s. [colutea, Lat.] The name of a plant.

BLA'DDERED.* adj. [from bladder.] Swollen like a bladder.

They affect greatness in all they write, but it is a bladdered greatness, like that of the vain man whom Seneca describes;—an ill habit of body, full of humours, and swelled with dropsy. Dryden, Dedic. of the Æneid.

BLADE.† n. s. [blæb, bled, Sax. part. from blepan, or blopan; French, bled, low Lat. bladus.] The spire of grass before it grows to seed; the green shoots of corn which rise from the seed. This seems to me the primitive signification of the word blade; from which, I believe, the blade of a sword was first named, because of its similitude in shape; and, from the blade of a sword, that of other weapons or tools.

There is hardly found a plant that yieldeth a red juice in the blade or ear, except it be the tree that beareth sanguis draconis. Bacon.

Send in the feeding flocks betimes, t' invade
The rising bulk of the luxuriant blade. Dryden.

If we were able to dive into her secret recesses, we should find that the smallest blade of grass, or most contemptible weed, has its particular use. Swift.

Hung on every spray, on every blade
Of grass, the myriad dewdrops twinkle round. Thomson.

BLADE.† n. s. [blatte, Germ. blad, Dutch.]

1. The sharp or striking part of a weapon or instrument, distinct from the handle. It is usually taken for a weapon, and so called probably from the likeness of a sword blade to a blade of grass. It is commonly applied to the knife.

He sought all round about, his thirsty blade
To bathe in blood of faithless enemy. Spenser, F. Q.

She knew the virtue of her blade, nor would Pollute her sabre with ignoble blood. Dryden.

Be his this sword, whose blade of brass displays
A ruddy gleam; whose hilt a silver blaze. Pope.

2. A brisk man, either fierce or gay, called so in contempt. So we say mettle for courage. Fuller puns upon the word, always fond of an opportunity to be facetious.

Sure I am, however at this time they might turn edge, they had been formerly true blades for his holiness, [the pope].

You'll find yourself mistaken, Sir, if you'll take upon you to judge of these blades by their garbs, looks, and outward appearance. L'Estrange.

Then turning about to the hangman, he said,
Dispatch me, I pri'thee, this troublesome blade. Prior.

BLADE of the Shoulder.} n. s. The bone called by BLADEBONE.} anatomists the scapula, or scapular bone.

He fell most furiously on the broiled relics of a shoulder of mutton, commonly called a bladebone. Pope.

To BLADE. v. a. [from the noun.] To furnish, or fit with a blade.

BLA'DED. adj. [from blade.] Having blades or spires.

Her silver visage in the watery glass,
Decking with liquid pearl the bladed grass. Shakespeare.
As where the lightning runs along the ground,
Nor bladed grass, nor bearded corn succeeds,
But scales of scurf and putrefaction breeds. Dryden.

BLA'DESMITH. n. s. [from blade and smith, faber gladiorum.] A sword cutler. Hulot.

BLAIN. n. s. [blezene, Sax. bleync, Dutch, from the Iceland. blina, a pustule.] A pustule; a botch; a blister.

It shall become small dust in all the land of Egypt, and shall be a boil breaking forth with blains upon man and beast. Exod. ix. 9.

Itches, blains,
Sow all the Athenian bosoms, and the crop
Be general leprosy. Shakespeare.
Botches and blains must all his flesh imboss,
And all his people. Milton, P. L.

Whene'er I hear a rival nam'd,
I feel my body all inflam'd;
Which breaking out in boils and blains,
With yellow filth my linen stains. Swift.

BLA'MABLE. adj. [old Fr. blasmable.] Culpable; faulty.

Virtue is placed between two extremes, which are on both sides equally blamable. Dryden.

BLA'MABLENESS. n. s. [from blamable.] Fault; the state of being liable to blame; culpableness; faultiness.

Scripture—mentioneth its sometimes freer use, than at other, without the least blamableness.

Whitlock, Manners of the English, p. 503.
If he had not freedom of will to determine himself towards good and evil, as he pleased, he must then be under a fatal necessity of doing whatsoever he should happen to do; and then as he could give no proof of his temper and inclination, so there could be no such thing as acceptableness to God when he did well, nor blamableness when he did otherwise.

Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conference, P. III.

BLA'MABLY. adv. [from blamable.] Culpably; in a manner liable to censure.

A process may be carried on against a person, that is maliciously or blamably absent, even to a definitive sentence. Ayliffe.

To BLAME. v. a. [blamer, Fr.]

1. To censure: to charge with a fault: it generally implies a slight censure.

Our pow'r
Shall do a court'sy to our wrath, which men
May blame, but not controul. Shakespeare.

Porphyrus, you too far did tempt your fate;
'Tis true, your duty to me it became;
But praising that, I must your conduct blame. Dryden.

Each finding, like a friend,
Something to blame, and something to commend. Pope.

2. To blame has usually the particle for before the fault.

The reader must not blame me for making use here all along of the word sentiment. Locke.

3. Sometimes, but rarely, of.

Tomareus he blam'd of inconsiderate rashness, for that he would busy himself in matters not belonging to his vocation.

Knolles, History of the Turks.

4. To blemish; to bring reproach upon.

When he saw his faire Priscilla by,
He deeply sigh'd, and groan'd inwardly,
To think of this ill state in which she stood;
To which she for his sake had weetingly
Now brought herself, and blam'd her noble blood. Spenser, F. Q. vi. iii. 11.

BLAME. n. s. [old Fr. blasme.]

1. Imputation of a fault. *

In arms, the praise of success is shared among many; yet the blame or misadventures is charged upon one. Hayward.

They lay the blame on the poor little ones, sometimes passionately enough, to divert it from themselves. Locke.

2. Crime; that which produces or deserves censure.

Who would not judge us to be discharged of all blame, which are content to have no great fault, even by their very word and testimony, in whose eyes no fault of ours hath ever hitherto been accustomed to seem small. Hooker.

I unspeak mine own detraction; here abjure
The taints and blames I laid upon myself,

For strangers to my nature. Shakespeare.

3. Hurt. Not now in use.

Therewith upon his crest,
With rigour so outrageous he smit,
That a large share it hew'd out of the rest,
And glancing down his shield, from blame him fairly blest. Spenser, F. Q.

4. There is a peculiar structure of this word, in which it is not very evident whether it be a noun or a verb, but I conceive it to be the noun, Dr. Johnson says: To blame, in French, à tort; culpable; worthy of censure. But it is an adverbial mode of speech; so, to seek means without knowledge; and thus, to blame means without excuse. See To SEEK, adv.

You were to blame, I must be plain with you,
To part so slightly with your wife's first gift. Shakespeare.

I do not ask whether they were mistaken; but, whether they were to blame in the manner? Stillington.

Now we should hold them much to blame,
If they went back before they came. Prior.

BLA'MEFUL. adj. [from blame and full.] Criminal; guilty; meriting blame.

Is not the causer of these timeless deaths
As blameful as the executioner? Shakespeare.

Bluntwitted lord, ignoble in demeanour,
If ever lady wrong'd her lord so much,
Thy mother took into her blameful bed
Some stern untutor'd churl. Shakespeare.

Thy blameful lines, bespotted so with sin,
Mine eyes would cleanse, ere they to read begin.
• Drayton, Epist. Matilda to K. John.

BLA'MELSS. adj. [from blame.]

1. Guiltless; innocent; exempt from censure or blame.

She found out the righteous, and preserved him blameless unto God. Wisdom, x. 3.

The flames ascend on either altar clear,
While thus the blameless maid address'd her pray'r. Dryden.

Such a lessening of our coin will deprive great numbers of blameless men of a fifth part of their estates. Locke.

2. Sometimes it is used with of.

We will be blameless of this thine oath. Joshua, ii. 17.

BLA'MELESSLY. adv. [from blameless.] Innocently; without crime.

It is the wilful opposing explicit articles, and not the not believing them when not revealed, or not with that conviction, against which he cannot blamelessly, without pertinacy, hold out, that will bring danger of ruin on any. Hammond.

BLA'MELESSNESS. n. s. [from blameless.] Innocence; exemption from censure.

Having resolved, with him in Homer, that all is chargeable on Jupiter and fate, they infer, with him, the blamelessness of the inferior agent. Hammond.

BLA'MER. n. s. [from blame.] One that blames or finds fault; a censurer.

In me you've bellowed a pagan muse,
And denizond a stranger, who, mistaught
By blamers of the times they marr'd, hath sought Virtues in corners. Donne, Poems, p. 159.

BLA'ME WORTHY. adj. [from blame and worthy.] Culpable; blamable; worthy of blame or censure.

B L A

Or esteemeth such an one blame-worthy.

Martin on the Marriage of Priests, (1554.) sign. Kk. iii. 6.
Although the same should be blame-worthy, yet this age hath forborn to incur the danger of any such blame. Hooker.
That the sending of a divorce to her husband was not blameworthy, he affirms because the man was heinously vicious.

Milton, Doct. and Dis. of Divorce, ii. 22.

The disturbance and fear, which often follow upon a man's having done an injury, arise from a sense of his being blameworthy.

Butler, Anal. of Rel. P. i. ch. 3.

BLAMEWORTHINESS. * n. s. [from blame-worthy.] What is deserving blame.

Praise and blame express what actually are; praiseworthi-ness and blame-worthiness, what naturally ought to be the sentiments of other people with regard to our character and conduct.

A. Smith, Theory of Mor. Sent. P. 3. ch. 2.

To BLANCH. † v. a. [blanchir, Fr.]

1. To whiten; to change from some other colour to white.

You can behold such sights,
And keep the natural ruby of your cheeks,
When mine are blanch'd with fear. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

A way of whitening was cheaply may be of use; and we have set down the practice of tradesmen who blanch it. Boyle.

And sin's black dye seems blanch'd by age to virtue. Dryden.

2. To strip or peel such things as have husks.

Their suppers may be bisket, raisins of the sun, and a few blanch'd almonds. Wise-man.

3. To slur; to balk; to pass over; to shift away.
Not now in use, Dr. Johnson says; and he cites the authority only of Bacon. Other good authors use it; and probably the modern vulgar expression,
"to blink (i. e. to evade) the question," is a corruption of to blanch the question.

The judges thought it dangerous to admit ifs and ands, to qualify treason; whereby every one might express his malice, and blanch his danger. Bacon, Hen. VII.

You are not transported in an action that warms the blood and is appearing holy, to blanch, or take for admitted, the point of lawfulness. Bacon, Holy War.

The doctors of that church have their colourable pretences, wherewith to blanch over these errors.

Bp. Sanderson's Sermons, p. 242.

I suppose you will not blanch Paris in your way.

Sir H. Wotton, Lett. to Milton.

A man horribly cheats his own soul, who upon any pretence, or under any temptation whatsoever, forsakes or blanches the true principles of religion.

Goodman's Wint. Ev. Conference, P. 3.

To BLANCH. † n. To evade; to shift; to speak soft.

Optimi consulari mortui; books will speak plain, when counsellors blanch. Bacon.

BLANCHER. n. s. [from blanch.] A whitener. Dict.

BLAND. adj. [blandus, Lat.] Soft; mild; gentle.

In her face excuse

Came prologue, and apology to prompt;
Which, with bland words at will, she thus address'd.

Milton, P. L.

An even calm

Perpetual reign'd, save what the zephyrs bland
Breath'd o'er the blue expanse. Thomson.

To BLAND. * [Mr. Mason introduces this word as a verb from the adjective; but the word, in the example, is the adjective itself used adverbially. Mr.
Mason has garbled the passage, by giving only the line in which bland occurs. Such a verb, however, would be useful, as meaning to soothe.]

Loath that foul blot, that hellish fierbrand,
Disloill lust, fair beauty's foulest blame,
That base affection, which your ears would bland
Commend to you by love's abused name.

Spenser, Hymn in Hon. of Beauty.

BLANDA'TION. * n. s. [from blanditia, Lat.] A piece of flattery.

B L A

One had flattered Longchamp, Bishop of Ely, with this blaudation. Camden, Remains.

BLANDILOQUENCE. * n. s. [Lat. blandiloquentia.] This word is found in our lexicography of a century since, and is admitted into foreign dictionaries which illustrate our language. Fair and flattering speech; courteous language; compliment.

Gloss. Anglicana Nova, (1707).

To BLANDISH. † v. a. [blandir, Fr. from blandior, Lat.]
To smooth; to soften. I have met with this word in no other passage than that of Milton, Dr. Johnson says. He might have found it, however, in our old lexicography. Bullokar's and Sherwood's dictionaries both give it: It is indeed one of our most ancient verbs.

Thou wert wont to hurtlen and dispisen her with many words, whan she was blandishyng and present, &c.

Chaucer, Boeth. l. 2. pros. prima.

In this psalme he spekith of Christ and his follewis blandishyng to us. Lewis, Hist. Tr. of the Bible, p. 13.

She, blandishing, by Dunsmore drives along.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. xiii.

Must'ring all her wiles,

With blandish'd parleys, feminine assaults,
Tongue-batteries, she surceas'd not day nor night,
To storm me over-watch'd, and wear'd out. Milton, S. A.

BLANDISHER. * n. s. [old Fr. blandisseur.] One who blandishes. Colgrave and Sherwood.

BLANDISHING. * n. s. [from blandish.] Expression of kindness; blandishment.

Flat enemies are honest harmless things,
Because they tell us what we have to fear;
But double-hearted friends, whose blandishings
Tickle our ears but sting our bosoms, are Those dangerous Syrens, whose sweet maiden face
Is only mortal treason's burnish'd glass.

Beaumont's Psyche, C. 6. st. 3.

BLANDISHMENT. † n. s. [old Fr. blandissement.]

1. Act of fondness; expression of tenderness by gesture.

The little babe up in his arms he hent,
Who, with sweet pleasure and bold blandishment,
'Gan smile. Spenser, F. Q.

Each bird and beast behold
Approaching two and two; these cower'ing low
With blandishment. Milton, P. L.

2. Soft words; kind speeches.

He was both well and fair spoken, and would use strange sweetness and blandishment of words, where he desired to effect or persuade any thing that he took to heart. Bacon.

3. Kind treatment; caress.

Him Dido now with blandishment detains;
But I suspect the town where Juno reigns. Dryden.

In order to bring those infidels within the wide circle of whiggish community, neither blandishments nor promises are omitted. Swift.

BLANK. † adj. [blanc, Fr. derived by Menage from Albianus, thus: Albianus, albianicus, bianicus, biancus, bianco, blanicus, blancus, blanc; by others, from blanc, which, in Danish, signifies shining; in conformity to which, the Germans have blanker, to shine, Dr. Johnson says; and they have also the adjective blanc, white; the Saxons, blæcan; and the English, bleach, to whiten.]

1. White.

To the blanc moon

'Her office they prescrib'd: to th' other five
Their planetary motions. Milton, P. L.

2. Without writing; unwritten; empty of all marks.

Our substitutes at home shall have blank charters,
Whereto, when they know that men are rich,
They shall subscribe them for large sums of gold. Shakspeare,

Upon the debtor side, I find innumerable articles; but, upon the creditor side, little more than blank paper. Addison.

3. Pale; confused; crushed; dispirited; subdued; depressed.

There without such bow, or sign of joy,
Solicitous and blank, he thus began. Milton, P. L.

Adam, soon as he heard
The fatal trespass done by Eve, amaz'd,
Astonied stood, and blank, while horror chill
Ran through his veins, and all his joints relax'd. Milton, P. L.

But now no face divine contentment wears;
'Tis all blank sadness, or continual fears. Pope.

4. Without rhyme; where the rhyme is blanched, or missed. See To BLANCH, to balk.

The lady shall say her mind freely, or the blank verse shall halt for it. Shakspeare.

Long have your ears been fill'd with tragick parts;
Blood and blank verse have harden'd all your hearts. Addison, Prol. to the Drummer.

Our blank verse, where there is no rhyme to support the expression, is extremely difficult to such as are not masters in the tongue. Addison on Italy.

BLANK. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A void space on paper.

I cannot write a paper full as I used to do; and yet I will not forgive a blank of half an inch from you. Swift.

2. A lot, by which nothing is gained; which has no prize marked upon it.

If you have heard your general talk of Rome,
And of his friends there, it is lots to blanks
My name hath touch'd your ears. Shakspeare.

In fortune's lottery lies
A heap of blanks, like this, for one small prize. Dryden.

The world the coward will despise,
When life's a blank, who pulls not for a prize. Dryden.

3. A paper from which the writing is effaced.

She has left him
The blank of what he was;
I tell thee, cunnie, she has quite unmann'd him. Dryden.

4. A paper unwritten; any thing without marks or characters.

For him, I think not on him; for his thoughts,
Would they were blanks, rather than fill'd with me. Shakspeare.

Obusion to do what is necessary,
Seal a commission to a blank of danger. Shakspeare.

For the book of knowledge fair,
Presented with an universal blank
Of nature's works, to me expung'd and ras'd. Milton, P. L.

Life may be one great blank, which, though not blotted with sin, is yet without any characters of grace or virtue. Rogers.

5. The point to which an arrow is directed; so called, because, to be more visible, it was marked with white. Now disused.

Slender,
Whose whisper o'er the world's diameter,
As level as the cannon to his blank,
Transports its poison'd shot. Shakspeare.

6. Aim; shot. Not used.

The harlot king
Is quite beyond my aim; out of the blank
And level of my brain. Shakspeare.

I have spoken for you all my best,
And stood within the blank of his displeasure,
For my free speech. Shakspeare.

7. Object to which any thing is directed.

See better, Lear, and let me still remain
The true blank of thine eye. Shakspeare.

To BLANK. v. a. [from blank; blanchir, Fr.]

1. To damp; to confuse; to dispirit.

Each opposite, that blanks the face of joy,
Meet what I would have well, and it destroy. Shakspeare.

Dagon must stoop, and shall ere long receive
Such a discomfit, as shall quite despoil him
Of all these boasted trophies won on me,
And with confusion blank his war-hippers. Milton, S. A.

If the atheist, when he died, should find that his soul remains, how will this man be amazed and blanked? Tillotson.

2. To efface; to annul.

All former purposes were blanked, the governour at a bay, and all that charge lost and cancelled. Spenser on Ireland.

BLANKET. n. s. [blanchette, Fr.]

1. A woollen cover, soft, and loosely woven, spread commonly upon a bed, over the linen sheet, for the procurement of warmth.

Nor heav'n peep through the blanket of the dark,
To cry, hold! hold! Shakspeare.

The abilities of man must fall short on one side or other, like too scanty a blanket when you are a-bed; if you pull it upon your shoulders, you leave your feet bare; if you thrust it down upon your feet, your shoulders are uncovered. Temple.

Himself among the storied chiefs he spies,
As from the blanket high in air he flies. Pope.

2. A kind of pear, sometimes written blanquet.

To BLANKET. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with a blanket.

My face I'll grime with filth;
Blanket my loins; tie all my hair in knots. Shakspeare.

2. To toss in a blanket, by way of penalty or contempt.

I'll send for him to my lodging, and have him blanketed when thou wilt, man. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

Let 'em be cudgell'd out of doors by our grooms. We'll have our men blanket 'em i' the hall. B. Jonson, Epicoene.

BLANKETING.* n. s. [from the verb.] Tossing in a blanket.

Ah, oh! he cry'd, what street, what lane, but knows
Our purgings, pumpings, blanketings, and blows? Pope.

BLANKLY. adv. [from blank.] In a blank manner; with whiteness; with paleness; with confusion.

To BLARE. v. n. [blaren, Dutch, blaar Gael. a cry. In Lincolnshire, to blare is to low as oxen. In Suffolk, blare, which means also, to cry like a child.] To bellow; to roar. Skinner.

To BLASPHEME. v. a. [blasphemo, low Lat., old Fr. blasphemer.]

1. To speak in terms of impious irreverence of God.

Thou didst blaspheme God and the king 1 Kings, xxi. 10.
The name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles through you. Rom. ii. 24.

2. To speak evil of.

The truest issue of thy throne,
By his own interdiction stands accus'd,
And does blaspheme his breed. Shakspeare.

Those who from our labours heap their board,
Blaspheme their feeder, and forget their lord. Pope.

To BLASPHEME. v. n. To speak blasphemy.

Liver of blaspheming Jew. Shakspeare.
I punished them oft in every synagogue, and compelled them to blaspheme. Acts, xxvi. 11.

BLASPHEMER. n. s. [from blaspheme.] * A wretch that speaks of God in impious and irreverent terms.

Who was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious. 1 Timothy, i. 13.

Even that blasphemer himself would inwardly reverence his reprover, as he in his heart really despises him for his cowardly base silence. South.

Deny the curst blasphemer's tongue to rage,
And turn God's fury from an impious age. Tickell.

Should each blasphemer quite escape the rod,
Because the insult's not to man, but God. Pope.

BLASPHEMING.* n. s. [from blaspheme.] The act of blasphemy.

Those desperate atheisms, those Spanish renouncings, and Italian blasphemings, have now so prevailed in our Christian camps, that, if any restrain them, he shall be upbraided as no soldier. Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

BLASPHEMOUS.† adj. [from blaspheme.] It is usually spoken with the accent on the first syllable, but used by Milton with it on the second, Dr. Johnson says. Milton adopted the accent from the elder poets; for Sidney and Spenser both use it on the second syllable; or it might be the common accent in Milton's time. Sherwood, his contemporary, gives the adjective, in his dictionary, thus; blasphemous or blasphematory. Spenser also accents blasphemy on the second syllable.] Impiously irreverent with regard to God.

O man, take heed how thou the gods dost move,
To cause full wrath, which thou can'st not resist;
Blasphemous words the speaker vain do prove. Sidney, h. ii.

And dar'st thou to the Son of God propound,
To worship thee accurst; now more accurst
For this attempt, bolder than that on Eve,
And more blasphemous? Milton, P. R.

A man can hardly pass the streets, without having his ears grated with horrid and blasphemous oaths and curses. Tillotson.
That any thing that wears the name of a christian, or but of man, should venture to own such a villainous, impudent, and blasphemous assertion in the face of the world, as this! South.

BLASPHEMOUSLY. adv. [from blaspheme.] Impiously;
with wicked irreverence.

Where is the right use of his reason, while he would blasphemously set up to controul the commands of the Almighty? Swift.

BLASPHEMY. n. s. [from blaspheme.]

Blasphemy, strictly and properly, is an offering of some indignity, or injury, unto God himself, either by words or writing. Ayliffe.

But that my heart's on future mischief set,
I would speak blasphemy, ere bid you fly;
But fly you must. Shakespeare.

Intrinsic goodness consists in accordance, and sin in contrariety, to the secret will of God; or else God could not be defined good, so far as his thoughts and secrets, but only superficially good, as far as he is pleased to reveal himself, which is perfect blasphemy to imagine. Hammond.

BLAST. n. s. [from blæyt, Sax. blasen, Germ. to blow.]

1. A gust or puff of wind.

They that stand high, have many blasts to shake them;
And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces. Shakespeare.
Welcome, then,

Thou unsubstantial air, that I embrace;
The wretch that thou hast blown unto the worst,
Owes nothing to thy blasts. Shakespeare.

Perhaps thy fortune doth controul the winds,
Doth loose or bind their blasts in secret cave. Fairfax.

Three ships were hurry'd by the southern blast,
And on the secret shelves with fury cast. Dryden.

2. The sound made by blowing any instrument of wind musick.

In peace there's nothing so becomes a man,
As modest stillness and humility;
But when the blast of war blows in our ears,
Then imitate the action of the tyger. Shakespeare.

He blew his trumpet—the angelick blast
Fill'd all the regions. Milton, P. I.

The Veline fountains, and sulphureous Nar,
Shake at the baleful blast, the signal of the war. Dryden.

Whether there be two different goddesses called Fame, or one goddess sounding two different trumpets, it is certain, villainy has as good a title to a blast from the proper trumpet, as virtue has from the former. Swift.

3. The stroke of a malignant planet; the infection of any thing pestilential: from the verb To blast.

By the blast of God they perish. Job, iv. 9.

To BLAST. † v. a. [Sax. blæytan, pret. blæyt.]

1. To strike with some sudden plague or calamity.

You nimble lightnings, dart your blinding flames
Into her scornful eyes! infect her beauty,
You fensuck'd fogs, drawn by the powerful sun,
To fall and blast her pride. Shakespeare.

Oh! Portius, is there not some chosen curse,
Some hidden thunder in the store of heaven,

Red with uncommon wrath, to blast the man,
Who owes his greatness to his country's ruin! Addison.

2. To make to wither.

Upon this blasted heath you stop our way. Shakespeare.
And behold seven thin ears, and blasted with the east wind, sprung up after them. Genesis.

She that like lightning shin'd, while her face lasted,
The only snow resembles, which lightning had blasted. Waller.

To his green years your censures you would suit,
Not blast that blossom, but expect the fruit. Dryden.

Agony unmix'd, incessant gall
Corroding every thought, and blasting all Love's paradise. Thomson.

3. To injure; to invalidate; to make infamous. [So, in the old French, blastanger is to insult, to blame, to condemn; and blastange, or blastinge, the substantive of the same import. V. Roquefort, Gloss.
de la Lang. Rom.]

He shews himself weak, if he will take my word, when he thinks I deserve no credit; or malicious, if he knows I deserve credit, and yet goes about to blast it. Stillingfleet.

4. To cut off; to hinder from coming to maturity.

This commerce, Jehoshaphat king of Judea endeavoured to renew; but his enterprize was blasted by the destruction of vessels in the harbour. Arbutnot.

5. To confound; to strike with terrour.

Trumpeters,
With brazen din, blast you the city's ears;
Make mingle with your rattling tabourines. Shakespeare.

BLASTER.* n. s. [from blast.] One who strikes as with a blast.

I am no blaster of a lady's beauty.

Beaumont, and Fl. Rule a Wife.

Foul canker of fair virtuous action,

Vile blaster of the freshest blooms on earth!

Marston's Scourge of Villainy, To Detraction.

BLASTMENT. n. s. [from blast.] Blast; sudden stroke of infection. Not now in use.

In the morn, and liquid dew of youth,
Contagious blastments are most imminent. Shakespeare.

BLATTANT. adj. [blattant, Fr.] Bellowing as a calf.

You learn'd this language from the blatant beast. Dryden.

To BLATCH.* See To BLOTCH.

BLATERATION. † n. s. [blateratio, Lat.] Noise; senseless roar. Colcs.

BLATERO'ON.* n. s. [from the Teut. verb, blateren, to prate, to talk idly.] A babler.

I trusted T. P. with a weighty secret, conjuring him that it should not take air and go abroad; which was not done according to the rules and religion of friendship, but it went out of him the very next day. — I will endeavour to lose the memory of him: — I hate such blateroons.

Howell, Letters, ii. 75.

To BLATTER. † v. n. [Lat. blatero, Teut. blateren, to talk idly. In the North of England, to blather is to talk nonsense.] To roar; to make a senseless noise. It is a word not now used.

She rode at peace, through his only pains and excellent endurance, however envy list to blatter against him.

Spenser on Ireland.

BLAY. n. s. [alburnus.] A small white river fish;
called also a bleak.

BLAZE. † n. s. [Goth. blys, a flame; blaze, a torch, Saxon.]

1. A flame; the light of the flame: blaze implies more the light than the heat.

— The main blaze of it is past; but a small thing would make it flame again. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

As for the blazes, if in any part of this kingdom any such be now used at this time, [Christmas.] I know no other beginning or occasion of them than that flames of fire may have been used as expressions of joy among us, as bonfires have always been. Hammond on the Festivals of the Church.

Thy throne is darkness in th' abyss of light,
A blaze of glory that forbids the sight.
What groans of men shall fill the martial field!
How fierce a blaze his flaming pile shall yield!
What funeral pomp shall floating Tiber see!

Dryden.

2. Publication; wide diffusion of report.
For what is glory but the blaze of fame,
The people's praise, if always praise unmixt?

Milton, P. R.

3. Blaze is a white mark upon a horse, descending from the forehead almost to the nose. [Germ.]
Farrier's Dict.

To BLAZE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To flame; to shew the light of the flame.
Thus you may long live an happy instrument for your king and country; you shall not be a meteor, or a blazing star, but stella fixa; happy here, and more happy hereafter.
The third fair morn now blaz'd upon the main,
Then glossy smooth lay all the liquid plain.

Bacon.

Pope.

2. To be conspicuous.

To BLAZE. v. a.

1. To publish; to make known; to spread far and wide.
The noise of this fight, and issue thereof, being blaz'd by the country people to some noblemen therabouts, they came thither.
My words, in hopes to blaze a stedfast mind,
This marble chose, as of like temper known.
Thou shalt live, till we can find a time
To blaze your marriage, reconcile your friends,
Beg pardon of thy prince, and call thee back.
When beggars die, there are no comets seen;
The heavens themselves blaze forth the death of princes.

Sidney.

Sidney.

Shakspeare.

Shakspeare.

But he went out, and began to publish it much, and to blaze abroad the matter.

Mark, i. 45.

Such musick worthiest were to blaze
The peerless highth of her immortal praise,
Whose lustre leads us.

Milton, Arcades.

Far beyond
The sons of Anak, famous now and blaz'd,
Fearless of danger, like a petty god
I walk'd about.

Milton, S. A.

Whose follies, blaz'd about, to all are known,
And are a secret to himself alone.

Granville.

But, mortals, know, 'tis still our greatest pride
To blaze those virtues which the good would hide.

Pope.

2. To blazon; to give an account of ensigns armorial in proper terms. This is not now used.
Braggadocchio — did shew his shield,
Which bore the sun brode blaz'd in a golden field.

Spenser, F. Q. v. iii. 14.

This, in ancient times, was called a tierce; and you should then have blaz'd it thus: he bears a tierce, sable, between two tierces, or.

Peacham.

BLAZER. n. s. [from blaze.] One that spreads reports.

Utterers of secrets he from thence debarr'd,
Babblers of folly, and blazers of crime;
His larum-bell might loud and wide be heard,
When cause requir'd, but never out of time;
Early and late it rung, at evening and at prime.

Spenser, F. Q.

To BLAZON. v. a. [blasonner, Fr.]

1. To explain, in proper terms, the figures on ensigns armorial.

King Edward gave to them the coat of arms, which I am not herald enough to blazon into English.

Addison.

2. To deck; to embellish; to adorn.

She blazons in dread smiles her hideous form
So lightning gilds the unrelenting storm.

Garth.

3. To display; to set to show.

VOL. I.

O thou goddess,

Thou divine nature! how thyself thou blazon'st
In these two princely boys! they are as gentle
As zephyrs blowing below the violet,
Not wagging his sweet head.

Shakspeare, Cymb.

4. To celebrate; to set out.

One that excels the quirk of blazoning pens,
And in the essential vesture of creation,
Does bear all excellency.

Shakspeare, Othello.

5. To blaze about; to make publick.

What's this but libelling against the senate,
And blazoning our injustice every where?

Tit. Andron.

BLAZON. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The art of drawing or explaining coats of arms.
Proceed unto blazons that are given in arms, and teach me what I ought to observe in their blazon.

Peacham.

2. Show; divulgation; publication.

But this eternal blazon must not be
To ears of flesh and blood.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

3. Celebration; proclamation of some quality.

I am a gentleman — I'll be sworn thou art;
Thy tongue, thy face, thy limbs, action, and spirit;
Do give thee five-fold blazon.
Men con over their pedigrees, and obtrude the blazon of their exploits upon the company.

Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

Collier.

BLAZONER.* [old Fr. blasonneur.] A herald; also an evil speaker.

Cotgrave.

When turtles tread, and rooks and daws;
And maidens bleach their summer smocks.

Shakspeare.

Should I not seek

The clemency of some more temp'rate clime
To purge my gloom; and, by the sun refin'd,
Bask in his beams, and bleach me in the wind?

Dryden.

To BLEACH. v. n. To grow white; to grow white in the open air.

The white sheet bleaching in the open field.

Shakspeare.

For there are various penances enjoind;
And some are hung to bleach upon the wind;
Some plung'd in waters.

Dryden.

The deadly winter seizes, shuts up sense; —
Lays him along the snows a stiffen'd corse,
Stretch'd out, and bleaching in the northern blast.

Thomson.

BLEACHER.* n. s. [from bleach, Germ. bleicher.] A bleacher of clothes. Sherwood. A whitener of thread, cloth, cotton, &c. or, as he is also called, a whitster. See WHITSTER.

bleme, white, Fr. Skinner; or rather from an old
 Fr. verb blesmer. See BLEMISH, in Kelham, Norm.
Dict. blesmys, v. a. broken.]
1. To mark with any deformity.

B L E

Likelier that my outward face might have been disguised, than that the face of so excellent a mind could have been thus blemished. Sidney.

2. To defame; to tarnish, with respect to reputation.

Not that my verse would blemish all the fair; But yet if some he bad, 'tis wisdom to beware. Dryden.

Those, who, by concerted defamations, endeavour to blemish his character, incur the complicated guilt of slander and perjury. Addison.

BLEMISH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A mark of deformity; a scar; a diminution of beauty.

As he hath caused a blemish in a man, so shall it be done to him again. Leviticus, xxiv. 20.

Open it so from the eyelid, that you divide not that; for, in so doing, you will leave a remediless blemish. Wiseman's Surgery.

2. Reproach; disgrace; imputation.

That you have been earnest, should be no blemish or discredit at all unto you. Hooker.

And if we shall neglect to propagate these blessed dispositions, what others can undertake it, without some blemish to us, some reflection on our negligence? Spur.

None more industriously publish the blemishes of an extraordinary reputation, than such as lie open to the same censures; raising applause to themselves, for resembling a person of an exalted reputation, though in the blameable parts of his character. Addison.

3. A soil; turpitude; taint; deformity.

First shall virtue be vice, and beauty be counted a blemish, Ere that I leave with song of praise her praise to solemnize. Sidney.

Live thou, and to thy mother dead attest, That clear she died from blemish criminal. Spenser, F. Q.

Is conformity with Rome a blemish unto the church of England, and unto churches abroad an ornament? Hooker.

Not a hair perish'd: On their sustaining garments not a blemish, But fresher than before. Shakspeare.

Evadne's husband! 'tis a fault To love, a blemish to my thought. Waller.

That your duty may no blemish take, I will myself your father's captive make. Dryden.

A life in all so blemishless. Eltham's Tassaria, xxxvii.

BLEMISHMENT. n. s. [old Fr. blemissement, Kelham's Norm. Dict.] Disgrace.

The one seeketh the reformation of him, whom he impeacheth; the other worketh, as much as may be, his ignominy and blemishment. Bp. Morton's Discharge, p. 193.

For dread of blame, and honour's blemishment. Spenser, F. Q. iv. ii. 36.

To BLEND. v. n. To shrink; to start back; to give way; not used, Dr. Johnson says; and he cites the authority only of Shakspeare. It is not, however, peculiar to him; and an excellent writer of modern times authorises its present use. Dr. Johnson offers no etymology. It resembles to blink so nearly, as to shew that it is a corruption of that word. Iceland. blinka, Germ. blinkeln, Dan. blincken, to twinkle with the eye; hence to blink, and in our northern language blend; whence to blend, to start as quickly as the twinkle of an eye. Teut. blencke. See BLEND.

I'll observe his looks; I'll tent him to the quick; if he but blend, I know my course. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Patience herself, what goddess ere she be, Doth lesser blend at sufferance than I do. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

B L E

Hold you ever to our special drift; Though sometimes you do blend from this to that, As cause doth minister. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

I know his people Are of his own choice men, that will not totter, Nor blend much as a bullet. Ben Jonson, Fl. Pilgrim.

[They] were not afraid steadily to look in the face of that aring and dazzling influence, at which the eyes of eagles blend. Burke, Speech on American Taxation.

To BLEND. v. a. To hinder; to obstruct. Not used.

The rebels besieged them, winning the even ground on the top, by carrying up great trusses of hay before them, to blend the defendants sight, and dead their shot. Carver.

BLEND. n. s. [Teut. blencke.] A start.

These blendes gave my heart another youth. Shakspeare, Sonnet 110.

BLENDER. n. s. [from blend.] That which may frighten, or cause to start.

The good husband, when he hath sown his ground, setteth up cloughtes, or thredes, which some call thayles, some blendars, or other like shews, to scare away birds. Sir T. Elyot's Governour, fol. 73.

I feel the old man's master'd by much passion, And too high rackt, which makes him o'ershoot all His valour should direct at, and hurt those That stand by but as blendars. Beaum. and Fl. Love's Pilgrimage, ii. 1.

To BLEND. v. q. preter. I *blend*d; anciently, blent. [blendan, Saxon.]

1. To mingle together.

'Tis beauty truly blent, whose red and white Nature's own sweet and cunning hand hath laid on. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

The mistion taught by the ancients is too slight or gross; for bodies mixed according to their hypothesis, would not appear such to the acute eyes of a lynx, who would discern the elements, if they were no otherwise mingled, than but blended but not united. Boyle.

He had his calmer influence, and his mien Did love and majesty together blend. Dryden.

The grave, where even the great find rest, And blended lie the oppressor and the oppress'd. Pope.

2. To confound.

The moon should wander from her beaten way, the times and seasons of the year blend themselves by disorder and confused mixture. Hooker.

Then shall the new year's joy forth freshly send, Into the glooming world, his gladsome ray; And all these storms, which now his beauty blend, Shall turne to calms, and tymely cleare away. Spenser, Sonnet 1xii.

3. To pollute; to spoil; to corrupt. This signification was anciently much in use, but is now wholly obsolete.

Regard of worldly muck doth foully blend, And low abase, the high heroick spirit. Spenser, F. Q.

The whilst thy kingdom from thy head is rent, And thy throne royal with dishonour blend. Spenser, M. Hubb. Tale.

4. To blind. [Sax. blendian.] The first of the following examples has been given by Dr. Johnson under the preceding definition; but it clearly belongs to this; of which definition, however, no notice occurs in Dr. Johnson's work.

Which when he saw, he burnt with jealous fire, The eye of reason was with rage blend. Spenser, F. Q.

O horrible enchantment, that did him so blend. Spenser, F. Q.

What hath thy eye-sight blend? Fairfax, Tasso.

BLENDER. n. s. [from To blend.] The person that mingles. Sherwood.

BLENT. The obsolete participle of blend. See BLEND.

To BLESS.† v. a. preterite and participle, blessed or blest. [bleſſian, Saxon.]

1. To make happy; to prosper; to make successful.

The quality of mercy is not strain'd;
It droppeth as the gentle rain of heaven
Upon the place beneath. It is twice blest;
It blesseth him that gives, and him that takes. Shakspeare.

Had I but died an hour before this chance,
I had liv'd a blessed time: for, from this instant,
There's nothing serious in mortality. Shakspeare.

This kingdom enjoyed the greatest calm, and the fullest measure of felicity, that any people, in any age, for so long time together, have been blessed with. Clarendon.

Happy this isle, with such a hero blest;
What virtue dwells not in his loyal breast? Waller.

In vain with folding arms the youth assay'd
To stop her flight, and strain the flying shade;
But she return'd no more, to bless his longing eyes. Dryden.

O hospitable Jove! we thus invoke,
Bless to both nations this auspicious hour. Dryden.

2. To wish happiness to another; to pronounce a blessing upon him.

And this is the blessing wherewith Moses the man of God blest the children of Israel, before his death. Deut. xxxiii. 1.

3. To consecrate by a prayer.

He blest, and brake, and gave the loaves. St. Matt. xiv. 19.

4. To praise; to glorify for benefits received; to celebrate.

Unto us there is one only guide of all agents natural, and he both the creator and worker of all in all, alone to be blessed, adored, and honoured by all for ever. Hooker, i. § 3.

But blest be that great pow'r, that bath us blest'd
With longer life than earth and heav'n can have. Davies.

5. It seems, in one place of Spenser, to signify the same as to reave; to brandish; to flourish. This signification is taken from an old rite of our Romish ancestors, who blessing a field directed their hands in quick succession to all parts of it, Dr. Johnson says. But this is certainly a mistaken account here. Spenser means by the verb bliss, to blaze, from the Goth. blys. See BLAZE and BRAND. The ancients formed their swords in imitation of a flaming fire. Milton describes Hell as illuminated by the sudden blaze of the drawn and brandished swords of the fallen angels. See also G. Douglas, Gloss. blesis for blazes.

Whom when the prince to battle new addrest,
And threat'ning high his dreadful stroke did see,
His sparkling blade about his head he blest,
And smote off quite his right leg by the knee. Spenser, F. Q.

BLESS us.* interj. An exclamation of surprise.

Cries the stall-reader, Bless us! what a word on
A title-page is this. Milton, Sonn. xi.

BLESSED.† particip. adj. [from To bless.]

1. Happy; enjoying felicity.

Blessed are the barren. St. Luke, xxiii. 29.

2. Holy and happy; happy in the favour of God.

All generations shall call me blessed. St. Luke, i. 48.

3. Happy in the joys of heaven.

Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord. Revelations, xiv. 13.

4. Having received the benediction of another.

All parts perform'd, and all her children blest'd.
Pope, Epil. to Satires.

BLESSED Thistle. [cnicus, Lat.] The name of a plant.

BLESSEDLY. adv. [from blessed.] Happily.

This accident of Clitophon's taking, had so blessedly procured their meeting. Sidney.

BLESSEDNESS.† n. s. [from blessed.]

1. Happiness; felicity.

Many times have I, leaning to yonder palm, admired the blessedness of it, that it could bear love without the sense of pain. Sidney.

His overthrow heap'd happiness upon him;
For then, and not till then, he felt himself,
And found the blessedness of being little. Shakspeare.

2. Sanctity.

Earthlier happy is the rose distill'd,
Than that, which, withering on the virgin thorn,
Grows, lives, and dies in single blessedness. Shakspeare.

3. Heavenly felicity.

It is such an one, as, being begun in grace, passes into glory, blessedness, and immortality. South.

4. Divine favour.

Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin.
Cometh this blessedness then upon the circumcision only, or upon the uncircumcision also? Rom. iv. 8, 9.

BLESSER. n. s. [from bless.] He that blesses, or gives a blessing; he that makes any thing prosper.

When thou receivest praise, take it indifferently, and return it to God, the giver of the gift, or blessor of the action.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

BLESSING.† n. s. [Sax. blætunz.]

1. Benediction; a prayer by which happiness is implored for any one.

Not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing; but, contrariwise, blessing. 1 Pet. iii. 9.

2. A declaration by which happiness is promised in a prophetic and authoritative manner.

The person that is called, kneeleth down before the chair, and the father layeth his hand upon his head, or her head, and giveth the blessing. Bacon.

3. Any of the means of happiness: a gift; an advantage; a benefit.

In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria, even a blessing in the midst of the land. Isaiah, xix. 24.

Nor are his blessings to his banks confin'd,
But free, and common, as the sea and wind. Denham.

Political jealousy is very reasonable in persons persuaded of the excellency of their constitution, who believe that they derive from it the most valuable blessings of society. Adairson.

A just and wise magistrate is a blessing as extensive as the community to which he belongs: a blessing which includes all other blessings whatsoever, that relate to this life. Atterbury.

4. Divine favour.

My pretty cousin,
Blessing upon you! Shakspeare.

I had most need of blessing, and Amen
Stack in my throat. Shakspeare.

Honour thy father and mother, both in word and deed, that a blessing may come upon thee from them. Eccles. iii. 8.

He shall receive the blessings from the Lord. Psaln xxix. 5.

5. The Hebrews, under this name, often understood the presents which friends make to one another;
in all probability, because they are generally attended with blessings and compliments both from those who give, and those who receive. Calmet.

And Jacob said, receive my present at my hand; take, I pray thee, my blessing that is brought to thee. Genesis, xxxiii. 10.

BLEST. preterite and participle. [from bless.] See BLESSED.

Peace to thy gentle shade, and endless rest!
Blest in thy genius, in thy love too blest! Pope.

BLEW. The preterite from blow.

The rest fled into a strong tower, where, seeing no remedy, they desperately blew up themselves, with a great part of the castle, with gunpowder. Knelles.

BLEYME. n. s. An inflammation in the foot of a horse, between the sole and the bone.

Farrier's Dict.

BLIGHT.† n. s. [The etymology unknown, Dr. Johnson says. It is probably from the Sax. blætan, to blow, blæte, a blast, and, by corruption, blight.
In the dictionary of Coles a blight is defined a blast.]

1. Mildew; according to Skinner; but it seems taken by most writers, in a general sense, for any cause of the failure of fruits.

I complained to the oldest and best gardeners, who often fell into the same misfortune, and esteemed it some blight of the spring. Temple.

2. Any thing nipping, or blasting.

When you come to the proof once, the first blight of frost shall most infallibly strip you of all your glory. L'Estrange.

To BLIGHT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To corrupt with mildew.

This vapour bears up along with it any noxious mineral steams; it then blasts vegetables, blights corn and fruit, and is sometimes injurious even to men. Woodward.

2. In general, to blast; to hinder from fertility.

My country neighbours do not find it impossible to think of a lame horse they have, or their blighted corn, till they have run over in their minds all beings. Locke.

But lest harsh care the lover's peace destroy,
And roughly blight the tenderbuds of joy,
Let reason teach. Lyttelton.

To BLIN. * v. a. [Sax. blinnan, to stop, or leave off; Welsh, blin, tired, weary, from blino, to tire. This word is yet in use, in the north of England. And B. Jonson, in his Sad Shepherd, uses it as a substantive, "withouten blin," i. e. without ceasing, A. ii. S. 6. This old verb is supposed by some to be the parent of our word blind.] To cease, or stop. Obsolete.

For nathemore for that spectacle bad
Did th' other two their cruel vengeancee blin.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. xii. 80.

BLIND. † adj. [Goth. blinda, blinds; Sax. blind. Supposed by Mr. Horne Tooke to be the past part. of the old Eng. verb blin, to stop. But blind is also an old German word.]

1. Deprived of sight; wanting the sense of seeing; dark. The blind man that governs his steps by feeling, in defect of eyes, receives advertisement of things through a staff. Digby.

Those other two equal'd with me in fate,
So were I equal'd with them in renown!

Blind Themys, and blind Maonides;
And Ceresias, and Phineas, prophets old. Milton, P. L.

2. Intellectually dark; unable to judge; ignorant: with to before that which is unseen.

All authors to their own defects are blind;
Hadst thou, but Janus like, a face behind,
To see the people, what splay mouths they make;
To mark their fingers pointed at thy back. Dryden.

3. Sometimes of.

Blind of the future, and by rage misled,
He pulls his crimes upon his people's head. Dryden.

4. Unseen; out of the publick view; private: generally with some tendency to some contempt or censure.

To grievous and scandalous inconveniencies they make themselves subject, with whom any blind or secret corner is judged a fit house of common prayer. Hooker.

5. Not easily discernible; hard to find; dark; obscure; unseen.

There be also blind fires under stone, which flame not out;
but oil being poured upon them, they flame out. Bacon.

Where else
Shall I inform my unacquainted feet
In the blind mazes of this tangle'd wood? Milton, Com.

How have we wander'd a long dismal night,
Led through blind paths by each deluding light. Roscommon.

Part creeping under ground, their journey blind,
And climbing from below, their fellows meet. Dryden.

So mariners mistake the promis'd gust,
And, with full sails, on the blind rocks are lost. Dryden.

A postern door, yet unobserv'd and free,
Join'd by the length of a blind gallery,
To the king's closet led. Dryden.

6. Blind Vessels. [with chymists.] Such as have no opening but on one side.

To BLIND. † v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make blind; to deprive of sight.

You terrible lightnings, dart your blinding flames
Into her scornful eyes! Shakespeare.

Of whose hand have I received any bribe to blind mine eyes therewith? and I will restore it. Samuel, xii. 3.

A blind guide is certainly a great mischief; but a guide that blinds those whom he should lead, is undoubtedly a much greater. South.

2. To darken; to obscure to the eye.

So whirl the seas, such darkness blinds the sky,
That the black night receives a deeper dye. Dryden.

3. To darken the understanding.

This my long-suffering and my day of grace
They who neglect and scorn, shall never taste,
But hard'nd, blind'nd, be blinded more. Milton, P. L.

4. To obscure to the understanding.

The state of the controversy between us he endeavour'd, with all his art, to blind and confound. Stallingfleet.

5. To eclipse.

Thrsil her beauty all the rest did blind,
That she alone seem'd worthy of my love.
P. Fletcher, Pisc. Eclog. 6.

BLIND. † n. s.

1. Something to hinder the sight.

Hardly any thing in our conversation is pure and genuine;
civility casts a blind over the duty, under some customary words. L'Estrange.

2. Something to mislead the eye, or the understanding.

These discourses set an opposition between his commands and decrees; making the one a blind for the execution of the other. Decoy of Piety.

3. A hiding place.

So, when the watchful shepherd, from the blind,
Wounds with a random shaft the careless hind.
Dryden, Æneid, 4.

To BLINDFOLD. v. a. [from blind and fold.] To hinder from seeing, by blinding the eyes.

When they had blindfolded him, they struck him on the face.
Luke.

BLINDFOLD. adj. [from the verb.] Having the eyes covered.

And oft himself he chanc'd to hurt unwares,
Whilst reason, blent through passion, nought descried,
But, as a blindfold bull, at random fares,
And where he hits, nought knows, and where he hurts, nought cares. Spenser, F. Q.

Who blindfold walks upon a river's brim,
When he should see, has he deserv'd to swim? Dryden.

When lots are shuffled together, or a man blindfold casts a dye, what reason can he have to presume, that he shall draw a white stone rather than a black? South.

The women will look into the state of the nation with their own eyes, and be no longer led blindfold by a male legislature.
Addison, Freeholder.

BLINDLY. † adv. [Sax. blunðlice.]

1. Without sight.

Avarice, pride, falsehood, lie undiscerned and blindly in us, even to the age of blindness. Browne, Chr. Mor. P. 2. sect. 15.

2. Implicitly; without examination.

The old king, after a long debate,
By his imperious mistress blindly led,
Has given Cydaria to Orbellan's bed. Dryden.

How ready zeal for interest and party, is to charge atheism on those, who will not, without examining, submit, and blindly swallow their nonsense. Locke.

3. Without judgement or direction.

How seas and earth, and air, and active flame,
Fell through the mighty void; and, in their fall,
Were blindly gather'd in this goodly ball. Dryden.

BLINDMAN'S BUFF. † n. s. A play in which some one is to have his eyes covered, and hunt out the rest of the company. Originally written blindman-buff.

I am led up and down like a tame ass; my light's out,
And I grope up and down like blind-man-buff.

Beaum. and Fl. Little Thief.

Disguis'd in all the mask of night,
We left our champion on his flight;
At blindman's buff to grope his way,
In equal fear of night and day.

Hudibras.

He imagines I shut my eyes again; but surely he fancies I play at blindman's buff with him; for he thinks I never have my eyes open.

Stillingfleet.

BLINDNESS. † n. s. [Sax. blindnesse.]

1. Want of sight.

I will smite every house of the people with blindness.
Zechariah, xii. 4.

2. Ignorance; intellectual darkness.

All the rest as born of savage brood,
But with base thoughts are into blindness led,
And kept from looking on the lightsome day.
Nor can we call it choice, when what we chuse,
Folly and blindness only could refuse.
When over we would proceed beyond these simple ideas, we fall presently into darkness and difficulties, and can discover nothing further but our own blindness and ignorance.

Spenser.

Denham.

Locke.

BLINDNETTLE. n. s. [scrofularia.] A plant.

BLINDSIDE. n. s. [from blind and side.] Weakness;
foible; weak part.

He is too great a lover of himself; this is one of his blind- sides; the best of men, I fear, are not without them.

Sayl.

BLINDWORM. n. s. [cecilia, from blind and worm.]
A small viper, called likewise a slow worm; believed not to be venomous.

You spotted snakes, with double tongue,
Thorny hedgehogs, be not seen;
Newts and blindworms, do no wrong;
Come not near our fairy queen.

Shakespeare.

The greater slow worm, called also the blindworm, is commonly thought to be blind, because of the littleness of his eyes.

Grew.

To BLINK. † v. n. [blincken, Danish; blinka, Iceland. to twinkle. See To BLENCH.]

1. To wink, or twinkle with the eyes.

So politick, as if one eye
Upon the other were a spy;
That to trepan the one to think
The other blind, both strove to blink.

Hudibras.

2. To see obscurely.

What's here! the portrait of a blinking ideot.

Shakespeare.

Sweet and lovely wall,
Shew me thy chink, to blink through with mine eye.

Shakespeare, Midsum. Night's Dream.

His figure such as might his soul proclaim;
One eye was blinking, and one leg was lame.

Pope.

BLINK. * n. s. [Dan. blink, a glance. See To BLINK.]

A glimpse; a twinkle; a slight view; a glance.

The amorous blinks flee to and fro,
With sugred words that make a show.

Turbervile's Songs and Sonets, (1570.)

This is the first blink that ever I had of him: I have heard fame of his wonderfull works, and held it happiness enough for me to have seen his face; and doth he take notice of my person, of my name?

Bp. Hall, Works, ii. 108.

BLINKARD. † n. s. [from blink.]

1. One that has bad eyes.

He that hath such eies that the liddes cover a great parte of the apple; as, a blinkard, or he that looketh asquint.

Barrel's Alvearie.

Brainless blinkards that blow at the cole.

Skelton's Poems, p. 28.

2. Something twinkling.

In some parts we see many glorious and eminent stars, in others few of any remarkable greatness, and, in some, none but blinkards, and obscure ones.

Hakewill's Apology, p. 237.

BLISS. n. s. [blisse, Sax. from blīdrian, to rejoice.]

1. The highest degree of happiness; blessedness; felicity: generally used of the happiness of blessed souls.

A mighty Saviour hath witnessed of himself, I am the way;
the way that leadeth us from misery into bliss.

Hooker.

Dim sadness did not spare

That time celestial viages; yet mix'd
With pity, violated not their bliss.

Milton, P. L.

With me

All my redeem'd may dwell, in joy and bliss.

Milton, P. L.

2. Felicity in general.

Condition, circumstance is not the thing;

Bliss is the same in subject or in king.

Pope.

BLISSFUL. adj. [from bliss and full.] Full of joy;
happy in the highest degree.

Yet swimming in that sea of blissful joy,

He nought forgot.

Spenser, F. Q.

The two saddest ingredients in hell, are deprivation of the blissful vision, and confusion of face.

Hammond.

Reaping immortal fruits of joy and love,
Uninterrupted joy, unrivall'd love,

In blissful solitude.

Milton, P. L.

So peaceful shalt thou end thy blissful days,
And steal thyself from life by slow decays.

Pope.

First in these fields I try the silvan strains,
Nor blush to sport in Windsor's blissful plains.

Pope.

BLISSFULLY. † [from blissful.] Happily.

Sherwood.

BLISSFULNESS. † n. s. [from blissful.] Happiness;
fulness of joy.

God is all-sufficient, and incapable of admitting any access-sion to his perfect blissfulness.

Barrow, Sermon viii.

BLISSLESS. * adj. [from bliss and less.] Without bliss;
wanting happiness.

Fruitless for ever may this garden be,
Barren the earth, and blissless whosoever
Imagines not to keep it unmanur'd!

Hawkins, Old Eng. Dram. ii. 109.

To BLISSOM. v. n. To caterwaul: to be lustful. Dict.

BLIST. * In our old language, used for bless'd or blest.

BLIST. * pret. Used for wounded, [from the Fr.
blesser, to cut, wound, or hurt,] by Spenser; and altered from bliss, Mr. Mason thinks; asserting however, at the same time, that neither bless nor bliss occur in this sense. Spenser, however, is supported in the usage of blist by a writer soon after his time, which seems to shew that blist is the true word. Obsolete.

The villain —

— With his club him all about so blist,

That he which way to turne him scarcely wist.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. viii. 13.

They blist my shoulders with their pines in such sort, as they wholly depriv'd me of my sight and the force of my feet together.

Shelton, Tr. of Don Quixote, i. iii. 1.

BLISTER. n. s. [bluyster, Dutch.]

1. A pustule formed by raising the cuticle from the cutis, and filled with serous blood.

In this state she gallops night by night,
O'er ladies' lips, who strait on kisses dream,
Which oft the angry Mab with blisters plagues,
Because their breaths with sweetmeats tainted are.

Shakespeare.

I found a great blister drawn by the garlick, but had it cut, which run a good deal of water, but filled again by next night.

Temple.

2. Any swelling made by the separation of a film or skin from the other parts.

Upon the leaves there riseth a tumour like a blister.

Bacon.

To BLISTER. v. n. [from the noun.] To rise in blisters.

B L O

- If I prove honeymouth, let my tongue blister,
And never to my red look'd anger be
The trumpet any more. Shakespeare.
Embrace thy knees with loathing hands,
Which blister when they touch thee. Dryden.
TO BLISTER. v. a.
1. To raise blisters by some hurt, as by a burn, or rubbing.
Look, here comes one, a gentlewoman of mine,
Who falling in the flaws of her own youth,
Hath blister'd her report. Shakespeare.
2. To raise blisters with a medical intention.
I blister'd the legs and thighs; but was too late; he died howling. Wiseman.
BLITE.* n. s. [In botany, blitum.] A genus of plants. Ash.
BLITHE.* adj. [blide, Sax. bleiths, Goth. 'kind, merciful.] Gay; airy; merry; joyous; sprightly; mirthful.
We have always one eye fixed upon the countenance of our enemies; and, according to the blithe or heavy aspect thereof, our other eye sheweth some other suitable token either of dislike or approbation. Hooker.
Then sigh not so, but let them go,
And be you blithe and bonny. Shakespeare.
For that fair female troop thou saw'st, that seem'd
Of goddesses, so blithe, so smooth, so gay;
Yet empty of all good. Milton, P. L.
To whom the wily adder, blithe and glad;
Empress! the way is ready, and not long. Milton, P. L.
And the milkmaid singeth blithe,
And the mower whets his scythe. Milton, L. A.
Should he return, that troop so blithe and bold,
Precipitant in fear, would wing their flight. Pope.
BLITHEFUL.* adj. [from blithe and full.] Gay. Minsheu.
BLITHELY.* adv. [Sax. blithlice. Written by one of our oldest poets, blithly.] In a blithe manner.
For many beyn of such manere
That tals and rymys wll blithly here. Robert of Gloucester.
BLITHESS.* n. s. [Sax. blithnyre.] The quality of being blithe.
BLITHESOME. adj. [from blithe.] Gay; cheerful.
Frosty blasts deface
The blithesome year: trees of their shrivell'd fruits
Are widow'd. Philips.
TO BLOAT. v. a. [probably from bloat, which see.] To swell, or make turgid with wind: it has up, an intensive particle.
His rude essays
Encourage him, and bloat him up with praise,
That he may get more bulk before he dies. Dryden.
The strutting petticoat smooths all distinctions, levels the mother with the daughter. I cannot but be troubled to see so many well-shaped innocent virgins bloated up, and waddling up and down like bigbellied women. Addison.
TO BLOAT. v. n. To grow turgid.
If a person of a firm constitution begins to bloat, from being warm grows cold, his fibres grow weak. Arbuthnot.
BLOAT. adj. Swelled with intemperance; turgid.
The bloat king. Shakespeare, Ham.
BLOATEDNESS. n. s. [from bloat.] Turgidness; swelling; tumour.
Lazitude, laziness, bloutedness, and scorbutical spots, are symptoms of weak fibres. Arbuthnot.
BLOBBER.* n. s. [from blob; a word used in some counties for a bubble, Dr. Johnson says; but in the example, which he gives, blobber means the sea-animal called a blubber, the urlica marina. See BLUBBER. These swimmeth also in the sea a round slimy substance, called a blobber, reputed noisome to the fish. Carew.
BLOBBERLIP. n. s. [from blob, or blobber, and lip.] A thick lip.

B L O

- They make a wit of their insipid friend,
His blobberlips and beetlebrows commend. Dryden, Juv. Sat. iii.
BLOBBIPPED. adj. Having welled or thick lips.
A blobberlipped shell, seemeth to be a [of mussel. Grew.
His person deformed to the highest deg; flat nosed, and blobberlipped. Estrange.
BLOCK.* n. s. [block, Dutch; bloc, Fr.]
1. A heavy piece of timber, rather thick than long.
You can spy a little mote in another man's eye, that cannot see a great block in your own. Abp. Cranmer, Answ. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 201.
2. A mass of matter.
Homer's apotheosis consists of a groupe of figures, cut in the same block of marble, and rising one above another. Addison.
3. A massy body.
Small causes are sufficient to make a man uneasy, when great ones are not in the way; for want of a block, he will stumble at a straw. Swift.
4. A rude piece of matter: in contempt.
When, by the help of wedges and beetles, an image is cleft out of the trunk of some tree, yet, after the skill of artificers to set forth such a divine block, it cannot one moment secure itself from being eaten by worms. Stillingfleet.
5. The piece of wood on which hats are formed.

Being hurried headlong with the southwest blor.
Mir. for Mag. p. 838.

BLOSSOM. n. s. [blojme, Sax.] The flower that grows on any plant, previous to the seed or fruit.
We generally call those flowers blossoms, which are not much regarded in themselves, but as a token of some following production.

Cold news for me:
Thus are my blossoms blasted in the bud,
And caterpillars eat my leaves away. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
Merrily, merrily, shall I live now,
Under the blossom that hangs on the bough. Shakspeare, Temp.
The pulling off many of the blossoms of this fruit tree, doth make the fruit fairer. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
To his green ears your censure you would suit,
Not blast the blossom, but expect the fruit. Dryden.

To BLOSSOM. † v. n. [Sax blorjman.] To put forth blossoms.

This is the state of man: to day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hope; to-morrow, blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.
Although the figtree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines, yet will I rejoice in the Lord. Hab. iii. 17.
When I was new blossom'd, I did fear
Myself unworthy of Miranda's spring.

Beaum. and Fl. Kn. of Malta.
The want of rain at blossoming time, often occasions the dropping off of the blossoms for want of sap. Mortimer.

You that are king,
Have caus'd him, by new act of parliament,
To blot out me, and put his own son in. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.
Even copious Dryden wanted, or forgot,
The last and greatest art, the art to blot. Pope.
A man of the most understanding will find it impossible to make the best use of it, while he writes in constraint, perpetually softening, correcting, or blotting out expressions. Swift.

2. To efface; to erase.

O Bertram, oh! no more my foe but brother:
One act like this blots out a thousand crimes. Dryden.
These simple ideas, offered to the mind, the understanding can no more refuse, nor alter, nor blot out, than a mirror can refuse, alter, or obliterate, the images which the objects produce. Locke.

3. To make black spots on a paper; to blur.

Heads overfull of matter, be like pens overfull of ink, which will sooner blot than make any fair letter. Ascham.
O sweet Portia!
Here are a few of the unpleasantst words
That ever blotted paper. Shakspeare, Mer. of Ven.

4. To disgrace; to disfigure.

Unknot that threatening unkind brow;
It blots thy beauty, as frost bites the meads,
Confounds thy fame. Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.
He hath been blotted by some to be an epitomist.
Translators of the Bible to the Reader.
My guilt thy growing virtues did defame;
My blackness blotted thy unblemish'd name. Dryden, JEn.
For mercy's sake restrain thy hand,
Blot not thy innocence with guiltless blood. Rowe.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsomeness, p. 35.

BLOW.† n. s. [blowe, Dutch, from blaewen, or blowen, Teut. to strike.]

1. The act of striking.

2. A stroke.

A most poor man, made tame to fortune's blows,

Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,

Am pregnant to good pity. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

A woman's tongue,

That gives not half so great a blow to the ear,

As will a chesnut. Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

Words of great contempt, commonly finding a return of equal scorn, blows were fastened upon the most pragmatical of the crew. Clarendon.

3. The fatal stroke; the stroke of death.

Assuage your thirst of blood, and strike the blow. Dryden.

4. An act of hostility; blows are used for combat or war.

Be most abated captives to some nation

That won you without blows.

Unarm'd if I should go,

What hope of mercy from this dreadful foe,

But woman-like to fall, and fall without a blow. Pope.

5. A sudden calamity; an unexpected evil.

The virgin daughter of my people is broken with a very grievous blow. Jerem. xiv. 17.

To all but thee in fits he seem'd to go,

And 'twas my ministry to deal the blow.

Paruel.

6. A single action; a sudden event.

Every year they gain a victory, and a town; but if they are once defeated, they lose a province at a blow. Dryden.

7. The act of a fly, by which she lodges eggs in flesh.

I much fear, lest with the blows of flies,

His brass inflicted wounds are fill'd. Chapman, Iliad.

Blow.* n. s. [from the Sax. blowan, to bloom.] Bloom; and sometimes figuratively used: as, in the full bloom of honour.

He believed he could shew me such a blow of tulips, as was not to be matched in the whole country. Tutler, No. 218.

To BLOW.† v. n. pret. blew; particip. pass. blown. [Sax. blapan, blopian, to blow as the wind blows.]

1. To make a current of air.

At his sight the mountains are shaken, and at his will the south wind bloweth. Eccles. xliii. 16.

Fruits, for long keeping, gather before they are full ripe, and in a dry day, towards noon, and when the wind bloweth not south; and when the moon is in decrease. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

By the fragrant winds that blow

O'er the Elysian flowers. Pope, St. Cecilia.

2. This word is used sometimes impersonally with it.

It blew a terrible tempest at sea once, and there was one seaman praying. L'Estrange.

If it blows a happy gale, we must set up all our sails, though it sometimes happens, that our natural heat is more powerful than our care and correctness. Dryden.

3. To pant; to puff; to be breathless.

Each aking nerve refuse the lance to throw,
And each spent courser at the chariot blow.

Ethereal trumpet from on high can blow. Milton, P. L.

B L O

There let the pealing organ blow,

To the full-voic'd quire below.

Milton, Il Pens.

6. To sound, or play musically by wind.

The priests shall blow with the trumpets.

Joshua, vi. 4.

7. To blow over. To pass away without effect.

Storms, though they blow over divers times, yet may fall at last. Bacon, Essays.

When the storm is blown over,

How blest is the swain,

Who begins to discover

An end of his pain.

Granville.

But those clouds being now happily blown over, and our sun clearly shining out again, I have recovered the relapse.

Denham.

8. To blow up. To fly into the air by the force of gunpowder.

On the next day, some of the enemy's magazines blew up; and it is thought they were destroyed on purpose by some of their men. Tutler, No. 59.

To BLOW. v. a.

1. To drive by the force of the wind; with a particle to fix the meaning.

Though you unty the winds,

Though bladed corn be lodg'd, and trees blown down,

Though castles topple on their warders heads.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Fair daughter, blow away those mists and clouds,

And let thy eyes shine forth in their full lustre.

Denham.

These primitive heirs of the christian church, could not so easily blow off the doctrine of passive obedience. South.

I have created the smith that bloweth the coals. Isaiah, liv. 16.

A fire not blown shall consume him.

Job, xx. 26.

3. To swell; to puff into size.

No blown ambition doth our arms incite,

But, love, dear love, and our ag'd father's right.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

4. To form into shape by the breath.

Spherical bubbles, that boys sometimes blow with water, to which soap hath given a tenacity. Boyle.

5. To sound an instrument of wind musick.

Blow the trumpet among the nations. Jeremiah, li. 27.

Where the bright seraphim, in burning row,

Their loud uplifted angel trumpets blow.

Milton, Ode.

6. To warm with the breath.

When isicles hang by the wall,

And Dick the shepherd blows his nail,

And Tom bears logs into the hall,

And milk comes frozen home in pail.

Shakspeare.

7. To spread by report.

But never was there man of his degree,

So much esteem'd, so well belov'd as he:

So gentle of condition was he known,

That through the court his courtesy was blown.

Dryden.

8. To blow out. To extinguish by wind or the breath.

Your breath first kindled the dead coal of war,

And brought in matter, that should feed this fire:

And now 'tis far too huge to be blown out,

With that same weak wind which enkindled it. Shakspeare.

Moon, slip behind some cloud, some tempest rise,

And blow out all the stars that light the skies.

Dryden.

9. To blow up. To raise or swell with breath.

A plague of sighing and grief! it blows a man up like a bladder. Shakspeare.

Before we had exhausted the receiver, the bladder appeared as full as if blown up with a quill.

Boyle.

It was my breath that blew this tempest up,

Upon your stubborn usage of the pope.

Shakspeare.

An empty bladder gravitates no more than when blown up, but somewhat less; yet descends more easily, because with less resistance. Grew.

10. To blow up. To inflate with pride.

B L O

Blown up with the conceit of his merit, he did not think he had received good measure from the king. Bacon.

11. To blow up. To kindle.

His presence soon blows up the unkindly fight,
And his loud guns speak thick like angry men. Dryden.

12. To blow up. To move by affatus.

When the mind finds herself very much inflamed with devotion, she is too much inclined to think that it is blown up with something divine within herself. Addison.

13. To blow up. To burst with gunpowder; to raise into the air.

The captains hoping by a mine, to gain the city, approached with soldiers ready to enter upon blowing up of the mine. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

Their chief blown up in air, not waves spir'd,
To which his pride presum'd to give the law. Dryden.

Not far from the said well, blowing up a rock, he formerly observed some of these. Woodward.

14. To infect with the eggs of flies. I know not how this sense belongs to the word.

I would no more endure
This wooden slavery, than I would suffer
The flesh-fly blow my mouth. Shakspear

Rather at Nilus' mud
Lay me stark naked, and let the water-flies
Blow me into abhorring. Shakspear

15. To blow upon. To make stale.

I am wonderfully pleased, when I meet with any passage in an old Greek or Latin author, that is not blown upon, and which I have never met with in any quotation. Addison.

He will whisper an intrigue that is not yet blown upon by common fame. Addison.

To BLOW. v. n. [blopan, Saxon.] To bloom; to blossom.

We lose the prime to mark how spring
Our tended plants, how blows the citron grove,
What drops the myrrh, and what the balmy reed. Milton, P. L.

This royal fair
Shall, when the blossom of her beauty's blown,
See her great brother on the British throne. Waller.

Fair is the kingcup that in meadow blows,
Fair is the daisy that beside her grows. Gay, Past.

For thee Idume's spicy forests blow,
And seeds of gold in Ophir's mountains glow. Pope.

To BLOW.* v. a. To cause to blossom.

For these Favonius here shall blow
New flowers. B. Jonson, Mask at Highgate.

Iris there with humid bow
Waters the odorous banks, that blow
Flowers of more mingled hue
Than her purfled scarf can shew. Milton, Com. v. 993.

BLOW'ER.* n. s. [from blow.]

1. A melter of tin.

Add his care and cost in buying wood, and in fetching the same to the blowing-house, together with the blowers, two or three months extreme and encreasing labour. Carew.

2. He that bloweth what produces sound; as an organ-blower.

An instrument over-winded is tuned wrong,
Blame none but the blower, on him it is long.
Skelton's Poems, p. 291.

3. That which draws up the fire in a stove or chimney; usually made of iron or tin.

At spancounter or blowpoint, but shall pay Toll to some courtier. Danne.

BLOWTH.* n. s. [from blow, that which bloweth.] Bloom, or blossom.

Ambition and covetousness being but green, and newly grown up, the seeds and effects were as yet but potential, and in the blowth and bud. Raleigh.

BLOWZE.* n. s. A ruddy fat-faced wench, Dr. Johnson says; but nothing more. Hall, in his Satires, writes the word blowesse, and the author of Titus Andronicus connects it with blossom; which may direct us for the etymology to blow; either in the sense applied to Shakspeare's Mrs. Page, on an accidental occasion, "sweating, and blowing, and looking wildly;" or in the meaning of to swell out, like a blossom. Mock pastoral has adopted Blowzindas, and Blowzabels, in modern times, as its heroines.

Nor list I sonnet of my mistress' face,
To paint some blowesse with a borrow'd grace.

Bp. Hall's Satires, i. 1.

Sweet blowse, you are a beautiful blossom sure!

Tu. Andron. iv. 2.

I had rather marry a fair one, and put it to the hazard, than be troubled with a blowze. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 631.

BLOWZY. adj. [from blowze.] Sun burnt; high coloured.

To BLUB.* v. a. [This is another variation of the old word bleb, which we also find in blob. See BLEB.] To swell.

Mir. for Magistrates, p. 112.

BLU'BBER. n. s. [See BLOB.] The part of a whale that contains the oil.

BLU'BBER.* n. s. [from blub. See BLEB, and BLOBBER. The swollen appearance of the animal accounts for the name.] A denomination given by our navigators to the utlica marina, or sea-nettle. Philos. Trans. No. 349. In blobber, the example from Carew shews the word to be very old in our language.

To BLU'BBER. v. n. [from the noun.] To weep in such a manner as to swell the cheeks.

Even so lies she,

Blubb'ring and weeping, weeping and blubb'ring.

Shakspeare, Romeo and Juliet.

A thief came to a boy that was blubbering by the side of a well, and asked what he cried for.

L'Estrange.

Soon as Glumdalclitch miss'd her pleasing care,
She wept, she blubber'd, and she tore her hair. Swift.

To BLU'BBER. v. a. To swell the cheeks with weeping.

Fair streams represent unto me my blubber'd face; let tears procure your stay. Sidney.

The wild wood gods arriv'd in the place,

There find the virgin doleful, desolate,

With ruffled raiment, and fair blubber'd face,

As her outrageous foe had left her late.

Spenser, F. Q.

Tir'd with the search, not finding what she seeks,
With cruel blows she pounds her blubber'd cheeks. Dryden.

B L U

used as an offensive weapon.

BLUE. † adj. [blæp, Sax. bleu, Fr. old Fr. bloi, blou; low Lat. blaius, blutum.] One of the seven original colours.

There's gold, and here,
My blue lips to kiss; a hand that kings
Have lipst and tumbled kissing. Shakspeare.

Where fires thou find'st unrak'd, and hearths unswept,
There pinch the maids as blue as bilberry. Shakspeare.

O coward conscience! how dost thou afflict me?
The lights burn blue. — Is it not dead midnight!
Cold fearful drops stand on my trembling flesh. Shakspeare.

Why does one climate, and one soil endure
The blushing poppy with a crimson hue;
Yet leave the lily pale, and tinge the violet blue? Prior.

There was scarce any other colour sensible, besides red and blue; only the blues, and principally the second blue, inclined a little to green. Newton.

BLUEBOTTLE. n. s. [cyanus; from blue and bottle.]

1. A flower of the bell shape; a species of bottle- flower.

If you put bluebottles, or other blue flowers, into an ant-hill, they will be stained with red: because the ants thrust their stings, and instil into them their stinging liquor. Raj.

2. A fly with a large blue belly.

Say, sire of insects, mighty Sol,
A fly upon the chariot-pole
Cries out, What blue-bottle alive
Did ever with such fury drive? Prior.

With prayers, the blue-ey'd progeny of Jove. Dryden.

BLUE-HAIRED. adj. [from blue and hair.] Having blue hair.

This place,
The greatest and the best of all the main,
He quarters to his blue-hair'd deities. Milton, Com.

BLUE'LY. † adv. [from blue.] With a blue colour.

Their colours' changeable variety,
First clear and white, then yellow, after red,
Then *blue*ly pale, then duller still, till after dead.
More, Infinity of Worlds, St. 94.

This squire he dropp'd his pen full soon,
While as the light burnt *blue*ly. Swift.

BLUE'NESS. † n. s. [from blue.]

1. The quality of being blue.

In a moment our liquor may be deprived of its blueness, and restored to it again, by the affusion of a few drops of liquours.
Boyle on Colours.

2. Applied to a wound, or bruise, means the livid appearance of it.

The blueness of a wound cleanseth away evil. Prov. xx. 30.
Nothing but the blueness o' your wounds to boast on.
Feltham, Sermon on Eccl. ii. 11.

BLUE-VEINED.  adj.* [from blue and vein.] Having blue streaks or veins.

These blue-vein'd violets whereon we lean.
Shakspeare, Ven. and Adonis.

BLUFF. † adj.

1. Big; surly; blustering.

Like those whom stature did to crowns prefer,
Black-brow'd and bluff, like Homer's Jupiter. Dryden.

2. Not pointed; obtuse. So a bluff-headed ship, in our naval language, is opposed to one that is sharp- headed.

B L U

There is also at Cabo Corso a publick Fetish, the guardian of them all; and that is the rock Tabra, a bluff peninsular prominence that juts out from the bottom of the cliff the castle stands on, making a sort of cover for landing, but so unsafe, as frequently to expose the boats and people to danger, the sea breaking over with great force. Atkins, Voyage, p. 102.

BLU'FFNESS.  n. s.* [from bluff.] Surliness.

A remarkable bluffness of face, a loud voice, and a masculine air. The World, No. 188.

BLU'ISH. adj. [from blue.] Blue in a small degree.

Side sleeves and skirts, round underborne, with a bluish tinsel. Shakspeare.

At last, as far as I could cast my eyes
Upon the sea, somewhat, methought, did rise
Like bluish mist. Dryden.

Here, in full light, the russet plains extend,
There, wrapt in clouds, the bluish hills ascend. Pope.

BLU'ISHNESS. n. s. [from blue.] A small degree of blue colour.

I could make, with crude copper, a solution without the bluishness, that is wont to accompany its vulgar solutions. Boyle.

To BLU'NDER. † v. n. [blunderen, Dutch; perhaps from blind. Serenius gives the old Goth. blundur, sleep.]

1. To mistake grossly; to err very widely; to mistake stupidly. It is a word implying contempt.

It is one thing to forget matter of fact, and another to blun- der upon the reason of it. L' Etrange.

The grandees and giants in knowledge, who laughed at all besides themselves, as barbarous and insignificant, yet blun- dered, and stumbled, about their principal concern. South.

2. To flounder; to stumble.

He, who now to sense, now nonsense leaning,
Means not, but blunders round about a meaning. Pope.

To BLU'NDER. † v. a.

1. To mix foolishly or blindly.

He seems to understand no difference between titles of respect and acts of worship; between expressions of esteem and devotion; between religious and civil worship; for he blunders and confounds all these together; and whatever proves one, he thinks, proves all the rest. Stillingfleet.

2. To make to blunder or confound.

To shuffle and digress so as by any means whatsoever to blunder an adversary. Dillon on the Resurrect. p. 63.
To darken or blunder the cause. Ibid. p. 211.

BLU'NDER. n. s. [from the verb.] A gross or shameful mistake.

It was the advice of Schomberg to an historian, that he should avoid being particular in the drawing up of an army, and other circumstances in the day of battle; for that he had observed notorious blunders and absurdities committed by writers not conversant in the art of war. Addison.

It is our own ignorance that makes us charge those works of the Almighty, as defects or blunders, as ill-contrived or ill-made.
Derham, Phys. Theol.

BLU'NDERBUSS. n. s. [from blunder.] A gun that is charged with many bullets, so that, without any exact aim, there is a chance of hitting the mark.

There are blunderbusses in every loop-hole, that go off on their own accord, at the squeaking of a fiddle. Dryden.

BLU'NDERER. n. s. [from blunder.] A man apt to commit blunders; a blockhead.

Another sort of judges will decide in favour of an author, or will pronounce him a mere blunderer, according to the company they have kept. Watts.

BLU'NDERHEAD. n. s. [from blunder and head.] A stupid fellow.

At the rate of this thick-skulled blunderhead, every plow-jobber shall take upon him to read upon divinity. L' Etrange.

BLU'NDERINGLY.  adv.* [from blunder.] In a blundering manner.

B L U

You observe of the Easterns, that they have done what they did in that kind rather ignorantly, supinely, or blunderingly, than out of a premeditated design to cover falsehood.

Lewis, Dissert. prefat. Hist. of E. Bibles, p. ix.

BLUNT. † adj. [etymology uncertain, Dr. Johnson says. But Kilian, in his Teut. Dict. in plomp, asserts that word to be the parent of our blunt. The Teut. word means dull, stupid, leaden. Minshew mentions also the Dutch plomb, from the Lat. plumberis, leaden. The Swedes use plump in the same way.]

1. Dull on the edge or point; not sharp.

Thanks to that beauty, which can give an edge to the bluntest sword. Sidney, b. i.

If the iron be blunt, and he do not whet the edge, then must he put to more strength. Ecclesiastes, x. 10.

deserting him, he relapsed into paleness and languor.

Harvey on Consumptions.

To BLUSTER. † v. n. [supposed from biast, Sax. blæjt, bloejt.]

1. To roar as a storm; to be violent and loud.

Earth his uncouth mother was,

Spenser, F. Q.

And blustering Æolus his boasted sire.

So now he storms with many a sturdy stoure;

So now his blustering blast each coast doth scour. Spenser, F. Q.

Can man such follies utter, and be wise;

Which bluster from the tempest of thy mind,

As if thy breast enclos'd the eastern wind. Sandys, Job, p. 23.

2. To bully; to puff; to swagger; to be tumultuous.

My heart's too big to bear this, says a blustering fellow: I'll destroy myself. Sir, says the gentleman, here's a dagger at your service: so the humour went off. L' Etrange.

Either he must sink to a downright confession, or must huff and bluster, till perhaps he raise a counter-storm.

Government of the Tongue.

Virgil had the majesty of a lawful prince, and Statius only the blustering of a tyrant. Dryden.

There let him reign the jailor of the wind;

With hoarse commands his breathing subjects call,

And boast and bluster in his empty hall.

Dryden.

B O A

To BLUSTER. * v. a. To blow down.

Do the Chaldeans and Sabæans feloniously drive away the herds of Job; doth the devil, by a tempestuous gust bluster down the house, and rob him of his children?

Seasonable Sermon, p. 26.

BLUSTER. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Roar of storms; tempest.

The skies look grim,
And threaten present blusters.

B-mi, Bianca, take him for thy lord.

Shakespeare.

Bo. † interj. A word formerly of terroure; from Bo, an old northern captain, of such fame, that his name was used to terrify the enemy.

Temple.

It is now used as a word only to scare children.

The northern captain will suffer no great loss, if the etymology be transferred from his redoubted name to the Dutch bauw, a spectre.

I'll rather put on my flashing red nose, and my flaming face, and come wrapped in a calf's-skin, and cry ba, bo! I'll fray the scholar, I warrant thee. Robin Goodfellow, in Wily Beguiled.

BO'AR. † n. s. [bap, Saxon; beer, Dutch.] The male swine; the wild boar.

To fly the boar, before the boar pursues,

Were to incense the boar to follow us.

Shakespeare.

The boar out of the wood doth waste it.

Psaln lxxx. 13.

She sped the boar away;

His eyeballs glare with fire, suffus'd with blood;

His neck shuts up a thickest thorny wood;

His bristled back a trench impal'd appears.

Dryden.

BO'AR-SPEAR. † n. s. [Sax. bap-spepa.] A spear used in hunting the boar.

And in her hand a sharp boar-spear she held,

And at her back a bow and quiver gay,

Spenser, F. Q.

Stuff'd with steel-headed darts.

Echion threw the first, but miss'd his mark,

And struck his boar-spear on a maple bark.

Dryden.

BOARD. † n. s. [bawrd, Goth. bopb, Saxon; so written by Gower, viz. board.]

1. A piece of wood of more length and breadth than thickness.

With the saw they sundred trees in boards and planks.

Releigh.

Every house has a board over the door, whereon is written the number, sex, and quality of the persons living in it. Temple.

Go now, go trust the wind's uncertain breath,

Remov'd four fingers from approaching death;

Or seven at most, when thickest is the board.

Dryden.

2. A table. [from burdd, Welsh.]

Soon after which, three hundred lords he slew,

Of British blood, all sitting at his board.

Spenser, F. Q.

In bed he slept not, for my urging it;

At board he fed not, for my urging it.

Shakspeare.

I'll follow thee in funeral flames, when dead,

My ghost shall thee attend at board and bed.

Sir J. Denham.

Cleopatra made Antony a supper, which was sumptuous and royal; howbeit there was no extraordinary service upon the board.

Hakewill on Providence.

May ev'ry god his friendly aid afford;

Pat guard thy flock, and Ceres bless thy board.

Prior.

3. Entertainment; food.

And, like their manners, churlish in their speech,

Their lodging hard, their board to be abhorr'd.

Both better acquainted with affairs, than any other who sat then at that board.

Clarendon.

5. An assembly seated at a table; a court of jurisdiction.

I wish the king would be pleas'd sometimes to be present at that board; it adds a majesty to it.

Bacon.

6. The deck or floor of a ship: on board signifies in a ship.

Now board to board the rival vessels row,

The billows lave the skies, and ocean groans below.

Dryden.

Our captain thought his ship in so great danger, that he confessed himself to a capuchin, who was on board.

Addison.

He ordered his men to arm long poles with sharp hooks, wherewith they took hold of the tackling, which held the mainward to the mast of their enemy's ship; then, rowing their own ship, they cut the tackling, and brought the mainyard by the board.

Arbutnot on Coma.

- To BOARD.† v. a. [from the noun. Written also board and bord.]

1. To enter a ship by force; the same as to storm, used of a city.

I boarded the king's ship: now on the beak,

Now in the waste, the deck, in every cabin,

I flam'd amazement.

Shakspeare.

He not inclin'd the English ship to board,

More on his guns relies than on his sword,

From whence a fatal volley we receiv'd;

It miss'd the duke; but his great heart it griev'd.

Waller.

Arm, arm, she cry'd, and let our Tyrians board

With our's his fleet, and carry fire and sword.

Denham.

2. To attack, accost, or make the first address to another; aborder quelqu'un, Fr. See To ABORD.

Sure, unless he knew some strain in me, that I knew not myself, he would never have boarded me in this fury.

Shakspeare.

They learn what associates and correspondents they had, and how far every one is engaged, and what new ones they meant afterwards to try or board.

Bacon, Henry VII.

3. To lay or pave with boards.

Having thus boarded the whole room, the edges of some boards lie higher than the next board; therefore they peruse the whole floor; and, where they find any irregularities, plane them off.

Mason's Mechanical Exercises.

- To BOARD. v. n. To live in a house, where a certain rate is paid for eating.

That we might not part,

As we at first did board with thee,

Now thou wouldst taste our misery.

Herbert.

We are several of us, gentlemen and ladies, who board in the same house; and, after dinner, one of our company stands up, and reads your paper to us all.

Spectator.

- To BOARD. v. a. To place as a boarder in another's house.

Bo'ARDABLE.*adj. [from To board.] Approachable.

Sherwood.

BOARD-WAGES. n. s. [from board and wages.] Wages allowed to servants to keep themselves in victuals.

What more than madness reigns,

When one short sitting many hundreds drains,

And not enough is left him, to supply

Board-wages, or a footman's livery!

Dryden, Jan.

- Bo'ARDER.† n. s. [from board.] A tabler; one that eats with another at a settled rate.

Sherwood.

I would not see thy cruel nails

Pluck out his poor old eyes; nor thy fierce sister,

In his anointed flesh stick boarish fangs.

Shakspeare.

- To BOAST.† v. n. [bastio, Welsh, to boast.]

1. To brag; to display one's own worth, or actions, in great words.

Let not him that putteth on his harness, boast himself as he that putteth it off.

1 Kings, xx. 11.

The spirits beneath,

Whom I seduc'd, boasting I could subdue

The Omnipotent.

Milton, P. L.

2. To talk ostentatiously.

For I know the forwardness of your mind, for which I boast of you to them of Macedonia.

1 Cor. ix. 2.

3. It is used commonly with off.

My sentence is for open war, off wiles

More inexpert I boast not.

Milton, P. L.

4. Sometimes with in.

Ezek. xxxv. 13.

- To BOAST.† v. a.

1. To brag of; to display with ostentatious language.

For if I have boasted any thing to him of you, I am not ashamed.

2 Cor. vii. 14.

Neither do the spirits damn'd

Lose all their virtue, lest bad men should boast

Their specious deeds.

Milton, P. L.

If they vouchsafed to give God the praise of his goodness; yet they did it only, in order to boast the interest they had in him.

Atterbury.

2. Sometimes with off.

O Ferdinand,

Do not smile at me, that I boast her off,

For thou shalt find she will outstrip all praise,

And make it halt behind her.

Shakspeare, Tempest.

3. To magnify; to exalt.

They that trust in their wealth, and boast themselves in the multitude of their riches.

Psaln xlii. 6.

B O A

Confounded be all them that serve graven images, that boast themselves of idols. Psalm xcvi. 7.

BOAST. † n. s. [Welsh bôst, a boast.]

1. An expression of ostentation; a proud speech.

Thou that makest thy boast of the law, through breaking the law dishonourest thou God? Rom. ii. 23.

The world is more apt to find fault than to commend; the boast will probably be censured, when the great action that occasioned it, is forgotten. Spectator, No. 255.

2. A cause of boasting; an occasion of pride; the thing boasted.

Not Tyro, nor Mycene, match her name,
Nor great Alcmena, the proud boasts of fame. Pope, Odys.

BO'ASTER. n. s. [from boast.] A bragger; a man that vaunts any thing ostentatiously.

Complaints the more candid and judicious of the chymists themselves are wont to make of those boasters, that confidently pretend, that they have extracted the salt or sulphur of quicksilver, when they have disguised it by additaments, wherewith it resembles the concretes. Boyle.

No more delays, vain boaster! but begin;

I prophesy beforehand I shall win:

I'll reach you how to brag another time. Dryden.

He the proud boasters sent, with stern assault,

Down to the realms of night. Philips.

BO'ASTFUL. † adj. [from boast and full.] Ostentatious; inclined to brag.

Steed threatens steed, in high and boastful neighs

Piercing the night's dull ear. Shakspeare, K. Hen. V.

Boastful, and rough, your first son is a 'squire;

The next a tradesman, meek, and much a liar. Pope.

BO'ASTING.* n. s. [from boast.] An expression of ostentation.

But now ye rejoice in your boastings. All such boasting is evil. St. James, iv. 16.

BO'ASTINGLY. adv. [from boasting.] Ostentatiously.

We look on it as a pitch of impiety, boastingly to avow our sins; and it deserves to be considered, whether this kind of confessing them, have not some affinity with it.

Dean of Pury.

BO'ASTIVE.* adj. [from boast.] Presumptuous; assuming.

Should the seditious Power,
Vain-glorious, empty his boastive urn
O'er the rough rock, how must his fellow stream
Deride the tinklings of the boastive rill!

Shenstone, Economy, P. I.

BO'ASTLESS.* adj. [from boast and less.] Simple; without ostentation; not desirous to be talked of.

But to the generous, still improving mind,

That gives the hopeless heart to sing for joy,

Diffusing kind beneficence around,

Boastless, as now descends the silent dew,

To him the long review of order'd life,

Is inward rapture, only to be felt.

Thomson, Summer.

BOAT. n. s. [bat, Saxon.]

1. A vessel to pass the water in. It is usually distinguished from other vessels, by being smaller and uncovered, and commonly moved by rowing.

I do not think that any one nation, the Syrian excepted, to whom the knowledge of the ark came, did find out at once the device of either ship or boat, in which they durst venture themselves upon the seas.

Raleigh, Essays.

An effeminate scoundrel in a boat!

Whose utmost daring is to cross the Nile,

In painted boats, to fright the crocodile.

Tate, Juv.

2. A ship of a small size, as, a passage boat, packet boat, advice boat, &c.

BOAT'ION. n. s. [from boat, Lat.] Roar; noise; loud sound.

An ill-bred boatman, rough as waves and wind.

Dryden.

Prior.

BO'ATSWAIN. † n. s. [Sax. batepan; pronounced and sometimes written, corruptly, bateson; as in the Transl. of Boccacini, 1626, p. 60.] An officer on board a ship, who has charge of all her rigging, ropes, cables, anchors, sails, flags, colours, pendants, &c. He also takes care of the long-boat and its furniture, and steers her either by himself or his mate. He calls out the several gangs and companies to the execution of their watches, works, and spells; and he is also a kind of provost-marshal, seizes and punishes all offenders, that are sentenced by the captain, or court-martial of the whole fleet.

Harris.

Sometimes the meanest boatswain may help to preserve the ship from sinking.

Howell, Pre-eminence of Parliament.

To BOB. † v. a. [of uncertain etymology; Skinner deduces it from bobo, foolish, Span.]

1. To cut. Junius. Whence bobtail.

After exclusion [of frogs] from the spawn, in it [the water] are all the joints articulated, and metamorphosed into another shape; from apodes to quadrupedes, from tailed to bobbed.

Robinson's Endoza, (1658) p. 130.

2. To beat; to drub; to strike.

If any man hapned [while Nero played and sung] by long sitting to sleepe, or by any other countenance to shew himself to be weary, he was sodeinly bobbed on the face by the servants of Nero, for that purpose attending.

Sir T. Elgot's Governour, fol. 19. b.

I'll not be bobb'd i' the nose with every bobtail.

Diet.

To BODE. v. a. [bodian, Sax.] To portend; to be the omen of. It is used in a sense of either good or bad.

This bodes some strange eruption to our state.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

You have opposed their false policy, with true and great wisdom; what they boded would be a mischief to us, you are providing, shall be one of our principal strengths. Sprat, Sermon.

It happen'd once, a boding prodigy!

A swarm of bees that cut the liquid sky,

Upon the topmost branch in clouds alight.

Dryden.

If fiery red his glowing globe descends,

High winds and furious tempests he portends:

But if his cheeks are swoln with livid blue,

He bodes wet weather by his watry hue.

Dryden.

To BODE. v. n. To be an omen; to foreshew.

Sir, give me leave to say, whatever now

The omen prove, it boded well to you.

Dryden.

BODE.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. An omen. Not now in use.

The jealous swan, against his death that singeth;

The owl eke, that of death the bode ybringeth,

Chaucer, Assemb. of Fowls, v. 343.

2. Delay or stop. [from To bide. Obsolete.]

Withoutin bode his hertè she obeid.

Chaucer, Annel. and Arc. v. 120.

BO'DEMENT. n. s. [from bode.] Portent; omen; prognostick.

This foolish, dreaming, superstitious girl

Makes all these bodements. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

Macbeth shall never vauquishit be, until

Great Birnam wood to Dunsinane's high hill

Shall come against him —

That will never be:

Sweet bodements, good.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To BODGE.* v. n. [a word in Shakspeare, which is perhaps corrupted from boggle, Dr. Johnson says. But our old lexicography considers bodge and botch as synonymous. V. Huloet in bodge, who adds bodger also as a botcher. If we take bodge therefore, as botch is taken, in the sense of bungle, there will appear no corruption of the poet.] To boggle; to stop; to fail.

With this we charg'd again; but out! alas,

We bodg'd again; as I have seen a swan,

With bootless labour, swim against the tide.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

BODGE.* n. s. A botch.

Because it followeth in the same place, nor will it be a bodge in this, I cannot omit the consequence of this disheartening leveller.

Whitlock, Manners of the English, p. 437.

BO'DICE. n. s. [from bodies.] Stays; a waistcoat quilted with whalebone, worn by women.

Her bodice half way she unlac'd,

About his arms she slyly cast

The silken band, and held him fast.

Prior.

This consideration should keep ignorant nurses and bodice makers from meddling.

Locke.

BO'DIED.* adj. [from body.] Having a body.

He is deformed, crooked, old, and sere,

Ill-fac'd, worse-bodied, shapeless every where.

Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

What! take a young and tender bodied lady,

And expose her to those dangers, and those tumults?

A sickly lady too?

Beaum. and Fl. Rule a Wife.

Thou that in frames eternity dost bind,

And art a written and a body'd mind. Lovelace, Luc. P. p. 65.

BO'DILESS. adj. [from body.] Incorporeal; having no body.

B O D

They bodiless and immaterial are,
And can be only lodg'd within our minds.
This is the very coinage of our brain,
This bodiless creation cecstasy
Is very cunning in.

Davies.

Shakespeare.

These are but shadows,
Phantoms bodiless and vain,
Empty visions of the brain.

Swift.

BO'DILINESS. * n. s. [from bodily.] Corporality.

Minshew.

BO'DILY. adj. [from body.]

1. Corporeal: containing body.

What resemblance could wood or stone bear to a spirit void
Of all sensible qualities, and bodily dimensions? South.

2. Relating to the body, not the mind.

Of such as resorted to our Saviour Christ, being present on earth, there came not any unto him with better success, for the benefit of their souls everlasting happiness, than they whose bodily necessities gave occasion of seeking relief. Hooker.

Virtue atones for bodily defects; beauty is nothing worth without a mind. L'Estrange.

As clearness of the bodily eye doth dispose it for a quicker sight; so doth freedom from lust and passion, dispose us for the most perfect acts of reason. Fullarton.

I would not have children much beaten for their faults, because I would not have them think bodily pain the greatest punishment. Locke.

3. Real; actual.

Whatever hath been thought on in this state,
That could be brought to bodily act, ere Rome
Had circumvention. Shakespeare.

BO'DILY. adv. Corporeally; united with matter.

originally signified the height or stature of a man.]

1. The material substance of an animal, opposed to the immaterial soul.

All the valiant men aro-e, and went all night, and took the body of Saul, and the bow and his sword, from the wall.

1 Sam. xxxi. 1

Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on.

St. Matthew, vi. 2

B O D

By custom, practice, and patience, all difficulties and hardships, whether of body or of fortune, are made easy.

L'Estrange.

2. Matter; opposed to spirit.

3. A person: a human being: whence somebody and nobody.

Surely, a wise body's part it were not, to put out his fire, because his foolish neighbour, from whom he borrowed wherewith to kindle it, might say, were it not for me, thou wouldst freeze. Hooker, iv. § 9.

A deflowered maid!

And by an eminent body, that calld for'd

The law against it!

Shakespeare.

'Tis a passing shame,

That I, unworthy body as I am,

Should censure thus on lovely gentlemen.

Shakespeare.

No body seeth me; what need I to fear? the Most High will not remember my sins. Eccles. xxiii. 18.

All civility and reason obliged every body to submit.

Clarendon.

Good may be drawn out of evil, and a body's life may be saved, without having any obligation to his preserver.

L'Estrange.

4. Reality; opposed to representation: a scriptural sense.

A shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ.

Coloss. ii. 17.

5. A collective mass: a joint power.

tainty, that life and death have divided between them the whole body of mankind. Hooker, v. § 49.

There were so many disaffected persons of the nobility, that there might a body start up for the king. Clarendon.

When pigmies pretend to form themselves into a body, it is time for us, who are men of figure, to look about us.

Addison, Guardian.

6. The main army; the battle; distinct from the wings, van and rear.

The van of the king's army was led by the general and Wilnot; in the body was the king and the prince; and the rear consisted of one thousand foot, commanded under colonel Thelwell. Clarendon.

7. A corporation; a number of men united by some common tie.

I shall now mention a particular, wherein your whole body will be certainly against me, and the laity, almost to a man, on my side. Swift.

Nothing was more common than to hear that reverend body charged with what is inconsistent, despised for their poverty, and hated for their riches. Swift.

8. The main part; the bulk: as, the body, or hull, of a ship; the body of a coach; the body of a church;
the body, or trunk, of a man; the body, or trunk,

Answ. to Congreve's Answ. on Collier, (1698.)

BOGGLE, or BOGGLE.  n. s.* [Celt. bag, a goblin; Welsh bogelu, to alight; bugul, fear. It is sometimes written bugle or bogil, with bo added to it; whence the corrupt vulgar word, a bugaboo. A bugle or boggle is, to this day, a common word in the North of England for a ghost.] A bugbear; a spectre; a goblin.

To BOGGLE. † v. n. [from bogil, Dutch, a spectre; a bugbear; a phantom, Dr. Johnson says. But it does not appear that the Dutch have the word bogil. It is from the Celtic. See the substantive BOGLE.]

1. To start; to fly back; to fear to come forward.

You boggle shrewdly; every feather starts you. Shakspeare.
We start and boggle at every unusual appearance, and cannot endure the sight of the bugbear. Glanville.

Nature, that rude, and in her first essay,
Stood boggling at the roughness of the way;
Us'd to the road, unknowing to return,
Goes boldly on, and loves the path when worn. Dryden.

2. To hesitate; to be in doubt.

And never boggle to restore
The members you deliver o'er,
Upon demand. Mulibras.

The well-shaped changeling is a man that has a rational soul, say you; make the ear a little longer, and more pointed, and the nose a little flatter than ordinary, and then you begin to boggle. Locke.

B O I

BO'ILERY. n. s. [from To boil.] A place at the salt-works where the salt is boiled.

BOISTEROUS. † adj. [Dutch byster, furious; Dr. Johnson says. It belongs etymologically perhaps to the Welsh bryst, brystus, fierce, savage; and our word was formerly boistons. Wicliffe and Chaucer both use boistons for boisterous. The latter has also the adverb boistously.]

1. Violent; loud; roaring; stormy.

By a divine instinct, men's minds mistrust

Ensuing danger; as by proof we see

The waters swell before a boisterous storm. Shakspeare.

As when loud winds a well grown oak would rend

Up by the roots, this way and that they bend

His reeling trunk, and with a boist'rous sound

Scatter his leaves, and strew them on the ground. Waller.

2. Turbulent; tumultuous; furious.

Spirit of peace,

Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself

Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,

Into the harsh and boist'rous tongue of war? Shakspeare.

His sweetness won a more regard

Unto his place, than all the boist'roust moods

That ignorant greatness practiseth.

B. Jonson.

God, into the hands of their deliverer,

Puts invincible night

To quell the mighty of the earth, the oppressor.

The brute and boisterous force of violent men. Milton, S. A.

BOLIS. n. s. [Latin.]

Bolis is a great fiery ball, swiftly hurried through the air, and generally drawing a tail after it. Aristotle calls it capra. There have often been immense balls of this kind. Muschenbroeck.

To BOLL.† v. n. [Su. Goth. bulna; Dan. bulner; and our own word was written formerly bolnyn, V. Prompt. Parv. "bolnyn, tumco." Bolned, puffed up, Wicliffe, Coloss. ii. 18. Bollen, swelled, Coles's Dict.

B O L

1677. Dan. bullen.] To rise into a roundish form; simply, to swell; as in the old and genuine copies of Shakspeare, where blown and swollen have been proposed or substituted for boln, i. e. bollen. This word, applied to flax, means the globule which contains the seed. The round seed-vessels of flax are said to be called in Lower Saxony bollen.

And the flax and the barley was smitten: for the barley was in the ear, and the flax was bolled. Exodus, ix. 31.

Here one man's hand lean'd on another's head, — Here one, being throng'd, bears back, all boln and red. Shakspeare, Rape of Lucrece.

BOLL. n. s. [from the verb.] A round stalk or stem; as, a boll of flax.

BOLSTER.† n. s. [Goth. bolster, a heap of hay; bol, a couch; bolþre, Sax. bolster, Dutch.]

1. Something laid on the bed to raise and support the head; commonly a bag filled with down or feathers.

Perhaps some cold bank is her bolster now, Or 'gainst the rugged bark of some broad elm Leans her unpillow'd head. Milton, Com.

This arm shall be a bolster for thy head; I'll fetch clean straw to make a soldier's bed. Gay.

2. A pad, or quilt, to hinder any pressure, or fill up any vacancy.

Up goes her hand, and off she slips The bolsters that supply her hips. Swift.

3. A pad, or compress, to be laid on a wound. The bandage is the girt, which hath a bolster in the middle, and the ends tacked firmly together. Wiseman.

4. [In horsemanship.] The bolsters of a saddle are those parts raised upon the bows, to hold the rider's thigh. Farrier's Dict.

5. [In naval language.] Bolsters are small bags or pads, which preserve the stays of the ship as it rocks at sea, from being chafed by the motion of the masts.

To BOLSTER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To support the head with a bolster.

2. To afford a bed to.

Mortal eyes do see them bolster, More than their own. Shakspeare, Othello.

3. To hold wounds together with a compress. The practice of bolstering the cheeks forward, does little service to the wound, and is very uneasy to the patient. Sharp.

4. To support; to hold up; to maintain. This is now an expression somewhat coarse and obsolete.

We may be made wiser by the publick persuasions grafted in men's minds, so they be used to further the truth, not to bolster error. Hooker, iii. p. 4.

Let the lawyer forbear to set his tongue to sale for the bolstering out of unjust causes. Hobbes.

It was the way of many to bolster up their crazy, detestable consciences with confidences. Solih.

BOLSTERED.* adj. [from bolster.] Swelled out.

Three pair of stays bolstered below the left shoulder.

Teller, No. 245.

BOLSTERER.* n. s. [from bolster.] A supporter; a maintainer.

That which is commonly reported of great robberies, may fitly serve to satisfy the bolsterers of such lewdness.

Bp. Bancroft, Dangerous Positions, iv. 12.

BOLSTERING.* n. s. [from bolster.] A prop; a support.

Crooked and unequal bodies are made to meet, without a miracle, by some iron bodies, or some benign bolsterings.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsomeness, p. 6c.

BOLT.† n. s. [Gr. βολη, from βאלω; Goth. boltt; Welsh, boltt; Dutch, boult, bolt.]

1. An arrow; a dart shot from a crossbow.
Yet mark'd I where the bolt of Cupid fell;
It fell upon a little western flower;
Before, milk-white, now purple with love's wound, Shakespeare.
The planted bolt against the nymph he drest;
But, with the sharp, transfix'd Apollo's breast. Dryden.
2. Lightning; a thunderbolt.
Sing'd with the flames, and with the bolts transfix'd,
With native earth your blood the monsters mix'd. Dryden.
3. Bolt upright; that is, upright as an arrow.
Brush iron, native or from the mine, consisteth of long striae, about the thickness of a small knitting needle, bolt upright, like the bristles of a stiff brush. Cicero.
As I stood bolt upright upon one earl, one of the ladies burst out. Addison.
4. The bar of a door, so called from being straight like an arrow; we now say, shoot the bolt, when we speak of fastening or opening a door.
'Tis not in thee, to oppose the bolt
Against my coming in. Shakespeare.
5. An iron to fasten the legs of a prisoner. This is I think corrupted from bought, or link, Dr. Johnson says. But the Goth. boltt is a fetter.
Away with him to prison; lay bolts enough upon him.
Shakespeare.
6. A sieve. See To BOLT; to sift. And BOLTER.
Where be the French petticoats,
And girdles, and hangers? — Here, 't is the trunk;
And the bolts of lawn. B. Jonson, Alchemist.
- To BOLT*.† v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To shut or fasten with a bolt.
The bolted gates flew open at the blast;
The storm rush'd in, and Arcite stood aghast. Dryden.
2. To blurt out, or throw out precipitantly.
I hate when vice can bolt her arguments,
And virtue has no tongue to check her pride. Milton, Com.
3. To fasten, as a bolt, or pin; to pin; to keep together.
That I could reach the axle where the pin-are,
Which bolt this frame, that I might pull them out. B. Jonson.
4. To fetter; to shackle.
It is great
To do that thing that ends all other deeds,
Which shackles accidents, and bolts up change. Shakespeare.
5. To sift; or separate the parts of any thing with a sieve; (Ulter, Fr. butter, old Fr. See BOLTER, and BUTLER.)
He now had bolted all the flour. Spenser, F. Q.
In the bolting and sifting of fourteen years of power and favour, all that came out could not be pure meal. Wotton.
I cannot bolt this matter to the brain,
As Bradwardin and holy Austin can. Dryden.
6. To examine by sifting; to try out; to lay open.
It would be well bolted out, whether great refractions may not be made upon reflections, as upon direct beams. Bacon.
The judge, or jury, or parties, or the council, or attorneys, propounding questions, beats and bolts out the truth much better than when the witness delivers only a formal series. Hale.
Time and nature will bolt out the truth of things, through all disguises. L'Estrange.
7. To purify; to purge. This is harsh.
The fanned snow
That's bolted by the northern blast twice o'er, Shakespeare.
- To BOLT*.† v. n. To spring out with speed and suddenness; to start out with the quickness of an arrow.
Mercy — a virgin fair and lovely; her garments green and orient; a crown of gold upon her head; the tears of compassion bolting at her eyes; pity and ruth sitting in her face.
Dr. J. White's Sermon, (1615,) p. 72.
This Puck seems but a dreaming dolt,
Still walking like a ragged colt,
And off out of a bush doth bolt,
Of purpose to deceive us. Drayton, Nymphidia.

They erected a fort, and from thence they bolted like beasts of the forest, sometimes into the forest, sometimes into the wood- and fastnesses, and sometimes back to their den. Bacon.

As the house was all in a flame, out bolts a mouse from the run, to save herself. L'Estrange.

I have reflected on those men who, from time to time, have shot themselves into the world. I have seen many successions of them; some bolting out upon the stage with vast applause, and other, hissed off. Dryden.

The birds to foreign seats repair'd,
And beasts that bolted out and saw the forest bar'd. Dryden.

BOLT-ROPE. n. s. [from bolt and rope.] The rope on which the sail of a ship is sewed and fastened.

Sea Dict.

BOLTER.† n. s. [old Fr. butter, a sieve.]

1. A sieve to separate meal from bran or husks; or to separate finer from coarser parts.

Dowlas, filth, dowlas: I have given them away to bakers wives, and they have made bolters of them. Shakespeare.

With a good strong chopping-knife mince the two capons, bones and all, as small as ordinary minced meat; put them into a large neat bolter. Bacon, Natural History.

When superciliously he sifts
Through coarsest bolter others gifts. Hudibras, i. iii.

2. A kind of net.

These hakes, and divers others of the fore-cited, are taken with thread, and some of them with the bolter, which is a spiller of a bigger size. Cicero.

To BOLTER.* v. a. [probably from the verb bolt, to well; the sense of bolter implying concretion or accumulation. In the midland part of England, as in Leicestershire and Warwickshire, boltered is applied to any thing clotted, or to a bump raised: as, when cream is coagulated; or when a boy has a broken head, and his hair is matted together with blood: or when a horse has been hard-riden in dirty roads, and the wound of the spur is covered with mire and blood.] To besmear.

Ay, now I see, 'tis true;
For the blood-bolter'd Banquo smiles upon me,
And points at them for his. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

BOLTHEAD. n. s. A long strait-necked glass vessel, for chymical distillations, called also a matrass, or receiver.

This spirit abounds in salt, which may be separated, by putting the liquor into a bolthead, with a long narrow neck. Jingle.

BOLTING-HOUSE. n. s. [from bolt and house.] The place where meal is sifted.

The jade is returned as white, and as powdered, as if she had been at work in a bolting-house. Dennis's Letters.

BOLTING-HUTCH.* n. s. [from bolt and hutch.] The bin or tub for the bolted meal.

That bolting-hutch of beastliness, that swollen parcel of dropsies, Shakespeare, 2. Hen. IV. P. I.

This passing fine sophistical bolting-hutch.
Milton, Anonack. Rem. Defence.

BOLTING-TUB.* n. s. [from bolt and tub.] A tub to sift meal in.

The larders have been search'd,
The bake-houses, and bolting-tub, the ovens.
B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

BO'LSPRIT.† n. s. A mast running out at the head Bo'wsprit. } of a ship, not standing upright, but aslope. The but-end of it is generally set against the foot of the foremast; so that they are a stay to one another. The length without board is sufficient to let its sails hang clear of all incumbrances. If the boltsprit fail in bad weather, the foremast cannot hold long after. Bowsprit is perhaps the right spelling. Sea Dictionary.

B O M

Sometimes I'd divide,
And burn in many places; on the topmast,
The yard, and bolspit, would I flame distinctly. Shakespeare.
Bolus. n. s. [Gr. βολη.] A form of medicine, in which the ingredients are made up into a soft mass, larger than pills, to be swallowed at once.
Keep their bodies soluble the while by clysters, lenitive bo-luses of cassia and manna, with syrup of violets. Wiseman.
By poets we are well assur'd,
That love, alas! can ne'er be cur'd;
A complicated heap of ills,
Despising boluses and pills. Swift.
BOMB. † n. s. [Teut. bomme, a drum; Dutch, bom-men, to sound; Gr. βομβειν, Lat. bombus.]

1. A loud noise.
An upper chamber being thought weak, was supported by a pillar of iron, of the bigness of one's arm in the midst; which,
if you had struck, would make a little flat noise in the room,
but a great bomb in the chamber beneath. Bacon.
2. A hollow iron ball, or shell, filled with gunpowder, and furnished with a vent for a fusce, or wooden tube, filled with combustible matter; to be thrown out from a mortar, which had its name from the noise it makes. The fusce, being set on fire, burns slowly till it reach the gunpowder, which goes off at once, bursting the shell to pieces with incredible violence; whence the use of bombs in besieging towns. The largest are about eighteen inches in diameter. By whom they were invented is not known, and the time is uncertain, some fixing it to 1538, and others to 1495. Chambers.

The loud cannon missive iron pours,
And in the slaughtering bomb Gradivus roars. Rowe.

3. The stroke upon a bell, often called the bome of the bell.

To BOMB.  v. n.* [Dutch, bommen.] To sound; to emit a noise.

But tympanites, (which we call the drum,)
A wind, bombs in her belly; must be unbraced.

B. Jonson, Magnetick Lady.

What over-charged piece of melancholy
Is this, breaks in between my wishes thus,
With bombing sighs? B. Jonson, Masques.

To BOMB. v. a. [from the noun.] To fall upon with bombs; to bombard.

Our king thus trembles at Namur,

Whilst Villeroi, who ne'er afraid is,

To Bruxelles marches on secure,

To bomb the monks, and scare the ladies. Prior.

BOMB-CHEST.  n. s.* [from bomb and chest.] A kind of chest filled usually with bombs, and sometimes only with gunpowder, placed under ground, to tear and blow it up in the air, with those who stand on it.

Chambers.

MB-KETCH. † n. s. A kind of ship, strongly built, BOMB-VESSEL. † to bear the shock of a mortar, when bombs are to be fired into a town.

Nor could an ordinary fleet, with bomb-vessels, hope to succeed against a place that has in its arsenal galleys and men of war. Addison on Italy.

BOMBARD. † n. s. [bombarda, Lat.]

1. A great gun; a cannon. Now obsolete
They planted in divers places twelve great bombards, wherewith they threw huge stones into the air, which, falling down into the city, might break down the houses. Knolles.

2. A barrel, or large vessel for holding liquour. Obsolete.

That wolv'n parcel of dropsies, that huge bombard of sack.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. IV. P. I.

The poor cattle yonder are passing away the time with cheat loaf, and a bombard of broken beer. B. Jonson, Masques.

VOL. I.

B O M

To BOMBARD. v. a. [from the noun.] To attack with bombs.

A medal is struck on the English failing in their attempts on Dunkirk, when they endeavoured to blow up a fort, and bombard the town. Addison.

BOMBARDIER. n. s. [from bombard.]

whose employment it is to shoot bonibs.

The bombardier tosses his ball sometimes into the midst of a city, with a design to fill all around him with terour and combustion. Trotter.

BOMBARDMENT. n. s. [from bombard.] An attack made upon any city, by throwing bombs into it.

Genoa is not yet secure from a bombardment, though it is not so exposed as formerly. Addison.

BOMBAST. † n. s. [bombasin, Fr. from bombycin, silken, Lat.] A slight silken stuff, for mourning.
Formerly used for cotton also, as the French still use the word. See BOMBAST.

The materials [of Persian paper] are not rags or skins, but bombasie or cotton-wool, coarse, and requiring much toil to perfect. Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 298.

The pawnbroker tells me, that he has several suits of rich brocade, from ladies of quality, lately pawned with him, so able them [during the present mourning] to buy crapes and bombazines. The Student, n. 258.

BOMBAST. † n. s.

1. A stuff of soft loose texture used formerly to swell the garment, and thence used to signify bulk or shew without solidity. Written also corruptly bun-bast. See BUMBAST. [Ital. bombugia, from the Gr. βομβη.]

Here comes lean Jack, here comes bare-bone.

How now, my sweet creature of bumbast?

Shakespeare, K. Hen. IV. P. I.

Cotton is no less observable. The tree is slender but strait, a yard high and like a briar.—At the top it divides itself into several branches, each of which is charged with many balls that contain the bumbast: the shape thereof is round and equal to a walnut. Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 366.

A bumbast or bolstered garment.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsomeness, p. 44.

2. Fustian; big words, without meaning.

Not pedants motley tongue, soldiers bombast,
Mountebanks drug-tongue, nor the terms of law,
Are strong enough preparatives to draw
Me to hear this.

Donne, Poems, p. 130.

Are all the flights of heroick poetry to be concluded bombast, unnatural, and mere madness, because they are not affected with their excellencies? Dryden.

BOMBAST. adj. [from the substantive.] High sounding; of big sound without meaning.

He, as loving his own pride and purpose,
Evades them with a bombast circumstance,
Horribly stuff'd with epithets of war.

Shakespeare.

To BOMBAST.  v. a.* [from the noun.] To inflate:
to puff up.

Then strives he to bombast his feeble lines

With far-fetch'd phrase.

Bp. Hall, Satires, i. 4.

For Leontinus Gorgias, that bombasted sophister, the greatness of his learning was rather in the people's false opinion and ascription, than in his own true possession.

Pothorby's Atheomastix, p. 190.

Albeit they, no doubt, thought the entertainment was noble, we thought never any strangers were bombasted with such a triumph. Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 119.

BOMBASTICK.  adj.* [from bombast.] The more modern adjective instead of bombast; of great sound with little meaning; ranting. Kersey in his Dict. 1702, has "a bombastick style."

Bombastick phrases, solecisms, absurdities, and a thousand monsters of a scholastick brood, were set on foot. Shaftesbury.

BOMBASTRY.  n. s.* [from bombast.] Swelling words without much meaning; fustian.

B O N

Bombast and buffoonery, by nature lofty and light, soar highest of all. Swift, Introd. Tale of a Tub.

BOMBILATION. † n. s. [bombilo, Lat. To hum like a bee. And in this sense bombilation was also used. See Coles's Dict. 1677.] Sound; noise; report.

How to abate the vigour, or silence the bombilation of guns, a way is said to be by borax and butter, mixt in a due proportion, which will almost take off the report, and also the force of the charge. Brown, Vulgar Errours.

BOMBYCINOUS. † adj. [bombycinus, Lat.] Silken; made of silk. Coles.

BO'MBYX. * n. s. [Gr. βομβυξ.] The name by which the silkworm is known.

BONA FIDE. * [Lat.] An expression still common; and given in our old lexicography, two centuries since; "really, truly, without deceit or fraud." Bullokar.

BONA ROBA. † n. s. [Ital. buona roba, a fine gown.] A shewy wanton. The common phrase for such, in Shakespeare's time. See Florio's Ital. Dict. We knew where the bona robas were.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.
Here comes the lady:
A bouncing bona roba! B. Jonson, New Inn.

BONA'IR. * adj. [Fr. bonnaire. This is also an old English word, which our ancient lexicography has not omitted. Bullokar cites it, and refers to debonair.] Complaisant; yielding; obedient. Obsolete.

I, N. take thee N. to my wedded housbande, to have and to holde, fro this day forwarde, for better, for wors, for richer, for poorer, in sikenesse and hele, to be bonere and buxum, &c.

Salsbury Manual, (1490,) fol. xxxviii. b.
BONASUS. n. s. [Lat.] A kind of buffalo, or wild bull.

BO'NCHIEF. * n. s. [Fr. bon chef. This is a very uncommon word, but proper, as opposed to mischief; the latter being referrible to the Lat. malè cadere, the former to bonè cadere.] Good consequence.

If I consent to do after your will for bonchief or mischief that may befall unto me in this life, I were worthy to be cursed.

Thorpe's Exam. in For. 1407.
BONCHRETIEN. † n. s. [French.] A species of pear, so called, probably, from the name of a gardener.

Here you have your bon christian pear and bergamot in perfection. Howell's Lett., i. ii. 8.

BOND. n. s. [bond, Sax. bound; it is written differently, in many of its senses, bond, or band. See BAND.]

1. Cords, or chains, with which any one is bound.

There left me, and my man, both bound together;
Till, gnawing with my teeth my bonds asunder,
I gain'd my freedom. Shakespeare.

2. Ligament that holds any thing together.

Let any one send his contemplation to the extremities of the universe, and see what conceivable hoops, what bond he can imagine to hold this mass of matter in so close a pressure together. Locke.

3. Union; connexion: a workman's term.

Observe, in working up the walls, that no side of the house, nor any part of the walls, be brought up three feet above the other, before the next adjoining wall be wrought up to it, so that they may be all joined together, and make a good bond. Mortimer's Husbandry.

4. [In the plural.] Chains; imprisonment; captivity.

Whom I perceived to have nothing laid to his charge worthy of death, or of bonds. Acts, xxiii. 29.

5. Cement of union; cause of union; link of connexion.

Wedding is great Juno's crown;
blessed bond of board and bed! Shakespeare.

B O N

Love cools, brothers divide, and the bond is cracked 'twixt son and father. Shakespeare, King Lear.

6. A writing of obligation to pay a sum, or perform a contract.

Go with me to a notary, seal me there
Your single bond. Shakespeare.

What if I ne'er consent to make you mine;
My father's promise ties me not to time;
And bonds without a date, they say, are void. Dryden.

7. Obligation; law by which any man is obliged.

Unhappy that I am! I cannot heave
My heart into my mouth: I love your majesty
According to my bond, no more nor less. Shakespeare.

Take which you please, it dissolves the bonds of government and obedience. Locke.

BOND. adj. [from bind, perhaps for bound; from ge-bonzen, Sax.] Captive; in a servile state.

Whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free. 1 Cor. xii. 13.

BO'NDAGE. n. s. [from bond.]

1. Captivity; imprisonment; state of restraint.

You only have overthrown me, and in my bondage consists my glory. Sidney.

Say, gentle princess, would you not suppose
Your bondage happy, to be made a queen?—
—To be a queen in bondage, is more vile
Than is a slave in base servility. Shakespeare.

Our cage
We make a choir, as doth the prison'd bird,
And sing our bondage freely. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

The king, when he design'd you for my guard,
Resolv'd he would not make my bondage hard. Dryden.

2. Obligation; tie of duty.

If she has a struggle for honour, she is in a bondage to love; which gives the story its turn that way. Pope.

He must resolve by no means to be enslaved, and brought under the bondage of observing oaths, which ought to vanish when they stand in competition with eating and drinking, or taking money. South.

BO'NDMAID. n. s. [from bond, captive, and maid.] A woman slave.

Good sister, wrong me not, nor wrong yourself,
To make a bondmaid and a slave of me. Shakespeare.

BO'NDMAN. n. s. [from bond and man.] A man slave.

Amongst the Romans, in making of a bondman free, was it not wondered wherefore so great ado should be made? the master to present his slave in some court, to take him by the hand, and not only to say, in the hearing of the publick magistrate, I will that this man become free; but, after those solemn words uttered, to strike him on the cheek, to turn him round, the hair of his head to be shaved off, the magistrate to touch him thrice with a rod; in the end, a cap and a white garment given him. Hooker.

O freedom! first delight of human kind;
Not that which bondmen from their masters find. Dryden.

BO'NDSERVANT. n. s. [from bond and servant.] A slave; a servant without the liberty of quitting his master.

And if thy brother, that dwelleth by thee, be waxen poor, and be sold unto thee, thou shalt not compel him to serve as a bondservant. Leviticus, xxv. 39.

BO'NDSERVICE. n. s. [from bond and service.] The condition of a bondservant; slavery.

Upon those did Solomon levy a tribute of bonds-service. 2 Kings, ix. 21.

BO'NDSLAVE. n. s. [from bond and slave.] A man in slavery; one of servile condition who cannot change his master.

Love enjoined such diligence, that no apprentice, no bondslave, could ever be, by fear, more ready at all commands than that young princess was. Sidney.

All her ornaments are taken away; of a freewoman she is become a bondslave. 1 Macc. ii. 11.

Commonly the bondslave is fed by his lord, but here the lord was fed by his bondslave. See J. Davies.

Bo'NDSMAN. n. s. [from bond and man.]

1. A slave.

Carnal greedy people, without such a precept, would have no mercy upon their poor bondsmen and beasts. Derham.

2. A person bound, or giving security for another.

Bo'NDSWOMAN. n. s. [from bond and woman.] A woman slave.

My lords, the senators
Are sold for slaves, and their wives for bondswomen.
B. Jonson, Catiline.

Bo'NDWOMAN.* n. s. [from bond and woman.] She who is a slave.

We are not children of the bondwoman, but of the free.
Gal. iv. 31.

The fugitive bond-woman, with her son
Outcast Nebaioth. Milton, P. R. ii. 308.

BONE. † n. s. [bm, Saxon.]

1. The solid parts of the body of an animal made up of hard fibres, tied one to another by small transverse fibres, as those of the muscles. In a fetus they are porous, soft, and easily discerned. As their pores fill with a substance of their own nature, so they increase, harden, and grow close to one another. They are all spongy, and full of little cells, or are of a considerable firm thickness, with a large cavity, except the teeth; and where they are articulated, they are covered with a thin and strong membrane, called the periosteum. Each bone is much bigger at its extremity than in the middle, that the articulations might be firm and the bones not easily put out of joint. But, because the middle of the bone should be strong, to sustain its allotted weight, and resist accidents, the fibres are there more closely compacted together, supporting one another; and the bone is made hollow, and consequently not so easily broken, as it must have been had it been solid and smaller. Quincy.

Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold. Macbeth.
There was lately a young gentleman bit to the bone. Tatler.

2. A fragment of meat; a bone with as much flesh as adheres to it.

Like Æsop's hounds, contending for the bone,
Each pleaded right, and would be lord alone. Dryden.

3. To be upon the bones. To attack:

Puss had a month's mind to be upon the bones of him, but was not willing to pick a quarrel. L'Estrange.

4. To make no bones. To make no scruple: a metaphor taken from a dog, who readily swallows meat that has no bones.

Knowing (according to the old rule of Thales) that he who hath not stuck at one villanie, will easily swallow another; perjury will easily downe with him that hath made no bones of murder. Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc.

5. Bones. A sort of bobbins, made of trotter bones, for weaving bonelace.

And the free maids that weave their threads with bones.
Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

6. Bones. Dice.

But then my study was tossing the dice,
And dext'rously to throw the lucky sice:
To shun ames ace that swept my stakes away;
And watch the box, for fear they should convey False bones, and put upon me in the play. Dryden.

To BONE, v. a. [from the noun.] To take out the bones from the flesh; as, the cooks boned the veal.

BONE-ACHE.* n. s. [from bone and ache.] Pain in the bones.

Now the rotten diseases of the south, the guts, griping, ruptures, catarrhs, — incurable bone-ache, and the rivelled ice-simple of the letter, take and take again such preposterous discoveries! Shakspeare, Tr. and Cressida.

A lord that is a leper,
A knight that has the bone-ache, of a squire
That has both these, you make 'em smooth and sound.
B. Jonson, Alchemist.

Here's cure for bone-ache, fever lurdens,
Unlawful or untimely burdens. Sir T. Overbury, Songs.

Bo'NED.* adj. [from bone.] Boney; large; strong.

Marcus, we are but shrubs, no cedars we;
No big-bon'd men, fram'd of the Cyclops' size.
Titus Andron. iv. 3.

Big-bon'd and large of limbs, with sinews strong,
Broad-shoulder'd, and his arms were round and long.
Dryden, Pal. and Arcite.

Bo'NELACE. † n. s. [from bone and lace; the bobbins with which lace is woven being frequently made of bones.] Flaxen lace, such as women wear on their linen.

She cuts cambrick at a thread, weaves bonelace, and quilts balls. Beaum. and Fl. Scornful Lady.

The things you follow, and make songs on now, should be sent to knit, or sit down to bobbins or bonelace. Tatler.

We destroy the symmetry of the human figure, and foolishly contrive to call off the eye from great and real beauties, to childish gewgaw ribbands and bonelace. Spectator.

Bo'NELESS. adj. [from bone.] Wanting bones.

I would, while it was smiling in my face,
Have plucked my nipple from his boneless gums,
And dasth the brains out. Shakspeare.

To Bo'NESET. v. n. [from bone and set.] To restore a bone out of joint to its place; or join a bone broken to the other part.

A fractured leg set in the country by one pretending to bone-setting. Wicam's Surgery.

Bo'NESETTER. n. s. [from boneset.] A surgeon; one who particularly professes the art of restoring broken or luxated bones.

At present my desire is to have a good bonesetter. Denham.

BONE'TTA.* n. s. A sea fish.

Sharks, dolphins, bonettas, albicores, and other sea-tyrants. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 39.

Bo'NFIRE. † n. s. [Sometimes written boone-fire, incorrectly; frequently bone-fire, with reason; and the etymology has been assigned by Lye to boon and fire, i. e. a fire made of materials obtained by begging; and to the Fr. bon, good, and fire, by Skinner and Dr. Johnson. But our old literature will confirm, I think, the orthography of bone-fire, and shew that its primitive meaning is a fire made of bones. Sax. bael-fȳp, the fire which consumed the dead, made by a change of letters of the same organ baen-fȳp, whence our bone-fire. Hickes. "Bone-fyre: it was sometimes used as a ceremony to burn dead men's bones; in manner of an exequie; now it is otherwise." Huloet. "In worship of St. John, the people waked at home, and made three manner of fires: One was of clean bones, and no wood; and that is called a bone-fire. Another is clean wood, and no bones; and that is called a wood-fire, for people to sit and wake thereby. The third is made of wood and bones, and is called St. John's fire." Quatuor Sermones, 1499, fol. c. vi. The primitive use of the word gradually sunk into its present meaning, a great fire, or blaze.] A fire made for some publick cause of triumph or exultation.

This city would make a marvellous bone-fire;
'Tis old dry timber, and such wood has no fellow.

Ring ye the bells to make it wear away,
And bonfires make all day. Spenser.

B O N

How came so many bonfires to be made in Queen Mary's days? Why, she had abused and deceived her people. South.

Full soon by bonfire, and by bell,
We learnt our liege was passing well.

Gay.

BO'NGRACE. † n. s. [bonne grace, Fr.] A forehead-cloth, or covering for the forehead, Dr. Johnson says, from Skinner. It seems to have resembled what is now called a parasol: "A bongrace, or such like, to keep away the sun," Barret's Alv. 1580. And, in this sense, our old poets use it.

[My face] was spoiled for want of a bongrace when I was young.

Beaum. and Fl. The Captain.

I have seen her beset all over with emeralds and pearls, ranged in rows about her cawl, her peruke of hair, her bongrace, and chaplet.

Hutchins on Providence.

BONHOMMES. * n. s. [Fr. bons hommes, from the Lat. boni homines, good men.] A religious order, of which there were two convents or houses in this country; one at Ashridge, in Bucks; the other at Edington, in Wilts.

Tanner and Kennet.

BO'NIFY. * v. a. [old Fr. bonifier, Cotgrave; from the Lat. bonus and facio, whence the low Lat. bonifatus, enjoying good; and an old Engl. word, not worthy of revival, "bonifate, having good luck," Coles's Dict. 1677.] To convert into good.

This must be acknowledged to be the greatest of all arts, to bonifie evils, or tincture them with good.

Cudworth.

BO'NITY. * n. s. [Lat. bonitas, Fr. bonté.] Goodness. Not in use.

Ash from Scot.

BON MOT. * n. s. [Fr.] A jest; a witty reply.

The jokes, bon mots, the little adventures, which may do very well in one company, will seem flat and tedious when related in another.

Chesterfield.

BONNET. n. s. [bonnet, Fr.] A covering for the head; a hat; a cap.

Go to them with this bonnet in thy hand,
And thus far having stretch'd it, here be with them,
Thy knee bussing the stones; for, in such business,
Action is eloquence.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

They had not probably the ceremony of vailing the bonnet in their salutations; for, in medals, they still have it on their heads.

Addison.

BONNET. [In fortification.] A kind of little ravelin, without any ditch, having a parapet three feet high, anciently placed before the points of the salient angles of the glacis.

BONNET à prestre, or priest's cap, is an outwork, having at the head three salient angles, and two inward.

BO'NNETS. † [Fr. bonnette, fem. gen. Teut. bonet.]

In the sea language, small sails set on the courses on the mizzen, mainsail, and foresail of a ship, when these are too narrow or shallow to clothe the mast, or in order to make more way in calm weather.

Chambers.

To BO'NNET. * v. n. [old Fr. bonnetter, "to put his cap unto," Cotgrave.] To pull off the bonnet; to make obeisance.

His ascent is not by such easy degrees as those, who, having been supple and courteous to the people, bonnetted without any further deed to heave them at all into their estimation and report.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

BO'NNIBEL. * n. s. [Fr. bonne and belle.] A fair or handsome girl.

I saw the bounding, bellibone;

Hey, ho, bonibell!

Spenser, Shep. Cal. August.

Trust her not, you bonnybell;

She will forty leasings tell.

B. Jonson, Entertainments.

BO'NNILASS. * n. s. [from bonny and lass.] A beautiful maid.

12

B O O

As the bonnilass pass'd by,
She ro'd at me with glauncing eye.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. August.

Homely spoken for a fair maid or bonnylass.

B. K. of Spenser's Pastorals.

BO'NNILY. adv. [from bonny.] Gayly; handsomely; plumply.

BO'NNINESS. n. s. [from bonny.] Gayety; handsomeness; plumpness.

BO'NNY. † adj. [from bon, bonne, Fr. It is a word now almost confined to the Scottish dialect, Dr. Johnson says; but it is certainly still very common in the North of England for pretty; and is sometimes used, like the Welsh bonedd, boneddig, for gentle; and for unaffected, pleasing.]

1. Handsome; beautiful.

Match to snatch I have encounter'd him,
And made a prey for carrion kites and crows,
Ev'n of the bonny beast he lov'd so well.

Shakespeare.

Thus wail'd the louts in melancholy strain,
Till bonny Susan sped across the plain.

Gay.

2. Gay; merry; frolicksome; cheerful; blithe.

Then sigh not so, but let them go,
And be you blithe and bonny.

Shakespeare.

3. It seems to be generally used in conversation for plump.

BONNY-CLABBER. † n. s. [Irish baine, milk, and clabar, mire.] A word used in Ireland for sour buttermilk.

It is against my freehold, my inheritance,
To drink such balderdash, or bonny-clabber.

B. Jonson, New Inn, i. 2.

We scorn for want of talk, to jabber

Of parties o'er our bonny-clabber;

Nor are we studious to enquire,

Who votes for maors, who for hire.

Swift.

BONUM MAGNUM. n. s. A species of plum.

BO'NY. † adj. [from bone.]

1. Consisting of bones.

Or think this ragged bony name to be
My ruinous anatomy.

Donne, Poems, p. 20.

At the end of this hole is a membrane, fastened to a round bony limb, and stretched like the head of a drum; and therefore, by anatomists, called tympaanum.

Ray.

2. Full of bones.

3. Strong; having large bones.

Burning for blood, bony, and ghaut, and grim,
Assembling wolves in raging troops descend.

Thomson, Winter, v. 394.

BONZES. * n. s. Priests of Japan, Tonquin, and China.

This temple was of more than ordinary structure, and the bonzes numerous.

Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 374.

BO'BOY. † n. s. [a word of no certain etymology; Henshaw thinks it a corruption of bull-beef ridiculously; Skinner imagines it to be derived from bobo, foolish, Span. Junius finds bowbard to be an old Scottish word for a coward, a contemptible fellow; from which he naturally deduces booby; but the original of bowbard is not known. Such is Dr. Johnson's statement. Others derive it from the Gr. βορβας. The Germ. bube, however, seems to be the original; which, according to Wachter, signified first a boy, then a servant, and at length a worthless fellow; bobby, an awkward boy.]

1. A dull, heavy, stupid fellow; a lubber.

But one exception to this fact we find,

That booby Phaon only was unkind,

An ill-bred boatman, rough as waves and wind.

Brior.

Young master next must rise to fill him wine,
And starve himself to see the booby dine.

King.

2. A bird so called.

Some bookies perched upon the yard-arm of our i suffered our men to take them; an animal so very becomes a proverb. Sir T. Herbert, Travels

BOOK. † n. s. [booka, Goth. or boc, Sax. suppos from boc, a beech; because they wrote on beechen boards, as liber in Latin, from the rind of a tree.]

1. A volume in which we read or write.

See a book of prayer in his hand;
True ornaments to know a holy man. Shakspeare.

Receive the sentence of the law for sins,
Such as by God's book are adjudg'd to death. Shakspeare.

In the coffin that had the books, they were found as fresh as if they had been but newly written; being written on parchment, and covered over with watch candles of wax. Hacon.

Books are a sort of dumb teachers; they cannot answer sudden questions, or explain present doubts: this is properly the work of a living instructor. Watts.

2. A particular part of a work.

The first book we divide into sections; whereof the first is these chapters past. Burnet's Theory.

3. The register in which a trader keeps an account of his debts.

This life
Is nobler than attending for a bauble;
Prouder, than rustling in unpaid-for silk;
Such gain the cap of him that makes them fine,
Yet keeps his book uncross'd. Shakspeare.

The good old way among the gentry of England, to maintain their pre-eminence over the lower rank, was by their bounty, munificence, and hospitality; and it is a very unhappy change, if, at present, by themselves or their agents, the luxury of the gentry is supported by the credit of the trader. This is what my correspondent pretends to prove out of his own books, and those of his whole neighbourhood. Tatler, No. 180.

4. In books. In kind remembrance.

I was so much in his books, that, at his decease, he left me the lamp by which he used to write his lucubrations. Addison.

5. Without book. By memory; by repetition; without reading.

Sermons read they abhor in the church; but sermons without book, sermons which spend their life in their birth, and may have publick audience but once. Hooker.

To BOOK. † v. a. [Sax. bocian.]

1. To register in a book.

I beseech your grace, let it be booked with the rest of this day's deeds; or I will have it in a particular ballad else, with mine own picture on the top of it. Shakspeare.

He made wilful murder high treason; he caused the marchers to book their men, for whom they should make answer. Davies on Ireland.

2. To have a knowledge of books. Obsolete.

She was well kepte, she was well looked,
She was well taught, she was well boked. Gower, Conf. Am. b. 8.

BOOK-KEEPER. * n. s. [from book and keep.] He who holds a book, into which others may look. It is now used only for the man who enters in a book the names of persons or parcels to be conveyed to particular places.

Here, brother, you shall be the book-keeper;
This is the argument of that they shew. Kyd's Spanish Tragedy.

BOOK-KEEPING. n. s. [from book and keep.] The art of keeping accounts, or recording pecuniary transactions, in such a manner, that at any time a man may thereby know the true state of the whole, or any part, of his affairs, with clearness and expedition. Harris.

BOOKBINDER. † n. s. [from book and bind.] A man whose profession it is to cover books.

Some [manuscripts] they solde to the grossers and sope-sellers, and some they sent over sea to the bookbinders.
Bale's Pref. to Leland's Journey.

BO'OKCASE. * n. s. [from book and case.] Formerly, a reference to cases ruled in law. V. Hulse. Now, merely a case for holding books.

BO'OKFUL. adj. [from book and full.] Full of notions gleaned from books; crowded with undigested knowledge.

The bookfull blockhead, ignorantly read,
With loads of learned lumber in his head,
With his own tongue still edifies his ears.
And always list'ning to himself appears. Pope.

BO'OKISIL. † adj. [from book.] Given to books; acquainted only with books. It is generally used con-temptuously, Dr. Johnson says; but there are exceptions of good authority.

I'll make him yield the crown,
Whose bookish rule hath pull'd fair England down. Shakspeare.
I'm not bookish, yet I can read waiting-gentlewoman in the 'scape. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Xantippe follows her namesake; being married to a bookish man, who has no knowledge of the world. Spectator.

Those that have had all the advantages of bookish education.
Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. p. 45.

This bookish disease, let it make me as much poor as it will,
it shall never make me the less just.

More, Pref. to his Philosophical Poems.

BO'OKISHLY. * adv. [from bookish.] In a way devoted to books.

While she [Christina, Queen of Sweden] was more bookishly given, she had it in her thoughts to institute an order of Panassus. Thurlow's State-Papers, ii. 104.

BO'OKISINESS. † n. s. [from bookish.] Much application to books; over studiousness.

Do you not see, say they, how threadbare, slighted, contemned, and almost starved their [scholars] bookishness keepeth them? Whitlock's Manners of the English, p. 180.

There are some with whom bookishness is a disease: for by overmuch reading they surcharge their minds, and so digest nothing. Goodman's Wint. Ev. Conf. p. 46.

BO'OKLAND. * n. s. [Sax. bocland, Dutch boeckland.]
Bookland, or charter-land, which was held by deed under certain rents and services, in effect differed nothing from free socage lands. Blackstone.

BO'OKLEARNED. adj. [from book and learned.] Versed in books, or literature: a term implying some slight contempt.

Whate'er these booklearn'd blockheads say,
Solon's the veriest fool in all the play. Dryden.

He will quote passages out of Plato and Pindar, at his own table, to some booklearned companion, without blushing. Swift.

BO'OKLEARNING. n. s. [from book and learning.] Skill in literature; acquaintance with books: a term of some contempt.

They might talk of booklearning what they would; but he never saw more uneasy fellows than great clerks. Sidney.

Neither does it so much require booklearning and scholarship, as good natural sense, to distinguish true and false, and to discern what is well proved, and what is not. Burnet's Theory.

BO'OKLESS. * adj. [book and less.] Not given to books; unbookish; disdaining the use of books;
wanting books.

Why with the cit,
Or bookless churl, with each ignoble name,
Each earthly nature, deign'st thou to reside? Shenstone, Economy, P. i.

See how mean, how low
The bookless, saunt'ring youth, proud of the scut
That dignifies his cap, his florish'd belt
And rusty couples gingling by his side. Somerville, Chace, B. i.

BO'OKMAKING. * n. s. [from book and make.] The art of making books.

He [Adam Smith] had bookmaking so much in his thoughts, and was so chary of what might be turned to account in that way, that he once said to Sir Joshua Reynolds, that he made it a rule, when in company, never to talk of what he understood.

Boswell, Life of Johnson, iv. 24.

BOOKMAN. † n. s. [from book and man.] A man whose profession is the study of books.

* This civil war of wits were much better us'd
On Navarre and his bookmen; for here 'tis abus'd. Shakespeare.
The things we talk of all this while, how like soever they may look to a bookman's business, yet are such of themselves as kings and princes have found their states concerned in.

Gregory's Posthuma, p. 328.

BOOKMATE. n. s. [from book and mate.] School-fellow.

This Armado is a Spaniard that keeps here in court, a phantasm, a monarch, and one that makes sport To the prince and his bookmates.

Shakespeare.

BOOKOATH. * n. s. [from book and oath.] The oath made on the book; a word yet used among the vulgar. I put thee now to thy book-oath: deny it, if thou canst.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.

BOOKSELLER. n. s. [from book and sell.] He whose profession it is to sell books.

He went to the bookseller, and told him in anger, he had sold a book in which there was false divinity.

Walton.

BOOKWORM. n. s. [from book and worm.]

1. A worm or mite that eats holes in books, chiefly when damp.

My lion, like a moth or bookworm, feeds upon nothing but paper, and I shall beg of them to diet him with wholesome and substantial food.

Guardian.

2. A student too closely given to books; a reader without judgement.

Among those venerable galleries and solitary scenes of the university, I wanted but a black gown, and a salary, to be as mere a bookworm as any there.

Pope, Letters.

BO'OLY. n. s. [An Irish term.]

All the Tartarians, and the people about the Caspian Sea, which are naturally Scythians, live in hordes; — being the very same that the Irish boodies are, driving their cattle with them, and feeding only on their milk and white meats.

Spenser on Ireland.

BOOM. † n. s. [from boom, a tree, Dutch; which is from the old Goth. bom.]

1. [In sea language.] A long pole used to spread out the clue of the studding sail; and sometimes the clues of the mainsail and foresail are boomed out.

2. A pole with bushes or baskets, set up as a mark to show the sailors how to steer in the channel, when a country is overflown.

Sea Dictionary.

3. A bar of wood laid across a harbour, to keep off the enemy.

As his heroick worth struck envy dumb,
Who took the Dutchman, and who cut the boom.

Dryden.

To BOOM. v. n. [from the noun. A sea term.]

1. To rush with violence; as a ship is said to come booming, when she makes all the sail she can.

Dict.

2. To swell and fall together.

Booming o'er his head

The billows clos'd; he's number'd with the dead.

Young.

Forsook by thee, in vain I sought thy aid,
When booming billows clos'd above my head.

Pope.

BO'OMKIN. * n. s. See BUMKIN.

BOON. † n. s. [from bene, Sax. a petition; baen, boon, Iceland.] A gift; a grant; a benefaction; a present.

Vouchsafe me for my need but one fair look:

A smaller boon than this I cannot beg,
And less than this, I dare, you cannot give.

Shakespeare.

That courtier, who might every morning whisper him in the ear, I say nothing, asked no unprofitable suit for himself.

Bacon.

The blust'ring fool has satisfy'd his will,
His boon is giv'n; his knight has gain'd the day,
But lost the prize.

Dryden, Fables.

What rhetorick didst thou use,
To gain this mighty boon? she pities me!

Addison, Cato.

BOON. † adj. [from, Fr.]

1. Gay; merry: as, a boon companion. This is rather a low sense of the word, and is the only one which Dr. Johnson gives.

Satiat' at length,

And heighten'd as with wine, jocund and boon,
Thus to herself she pleasingly began.

Milton, P. L.

I know the infirmity of our family; we play the boon companion, and throw our money away in our cups.

Arbutnot.

At 12 of the clock every day they dined together at a cook's house within the tower, and sometimes had Jennings, a boon blade, among them.

Life of A. Wood, p. 205.

2. Kind; bountiful.

Flowers worthy of Paradise, which not nice Art

In beds and curious knots, but Nature boon

Pour'd forth profuse on hill, and dale, and plain.

Milton, P. L. iv. 242.

All that boon Nature could luxurious pour

Of high materials.

Thomson's Liberty, P. ii.

BOOR. † n. s. [beer, Dutch; gebupe, Sax.; Goth. bur, a cottage; bure, a country fellow.] A ploughman; a country fellow; a lout; a clown.

The bare sense of a calamity is called grumbling; and if a man does but make a face upon the boor, he is presently a male-content.

L'Estrange.

He may live as well as a boor of Holland, whose cares of growing still richer waste his life.

Temple.

To one well-born, th' affront is worse and more,

When he's abus'd and baffl'd by a boor.

Dryden.

BO'ORISH. † adj. [from boor.] Clownish; rustick; untaught; uncivilized.

Therefore, you clown, abandon, which is, in the vulgar, leave the society, which, in the boorish, is, company of this female.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

A gross and boorish opinion.

Milton, Doct. and Dis. of Divorce, i. 9.

No lusty neatherd thither drove his kine,

No boorish hogherd fed his rooting swine.

Brown, Brit. Past. ii. 1.

BO'ORISHLY. adv. [from boorish.] In a boorish manner; after a clownish manner.

BO'ORISHNESS. n. s. [from boorish.] Clownishness; rusticity; coarseness of manners.

BOOSE. † n. s. [bojz, Sax.; baus, Su.] A stall for a cow or an ox.

To BOOT. † v. a. [boeten, to profit, Dutch; bot, in Saxon; is recompence, repentance, or fine paid by way of expiation; but the Goth. botjan, or botan, to profit, is the parent of our word, from bot, reparation.]

1. To profit; to advantage: it is commonly used in these modes, it boots, or what boots it.

It shall not boot them, who derogate from reading, to excuse it, when they see no other remedy; as if their intent were only to deny that aliens and strangers from the family of God are won, or that belief doth use to be wrought at the first in them, without sermons.

Hooker.

For what I have, I need not to repeat;

And what I want, it boots not to complain.

Shakespeare.

If we shut

The purpos'd end, or here lie fixed all,

What boots it us these wars to have begun?

Fairfax.

What boots the regal circle on his head,

That long behind he trails his pompous robe?

Pope.

2. To enrich; to benefit.

And I will boot thee with what gift beside,

That modesty can beg.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.

Boot. † n. s. [from the verb; old Fr. also bote, help, advantage.]

1. Profit; gain; advantage; something given to mend the exchange.

My gravity,
Wherein, let no man hear me, I take pride,
Could I, with boot, change for an idle plume,
Which the air beats for vain. Shakspeare.
Is it any boot to bid a man hold fast our once recovered liberty? Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 28.

2. To boot. With advantage; over and above; besides. But Dr. Johnson might have noted, that this is rather the infinitive of the verb.

Canst thou, O partial sleep, give thy repose
To the wet seaboy, in an hour so rude;
And, in the calmest and the stillest night,
With all appliances, and means to boot,
Deny it to a king? Shakspeare.

Man is God's image; but a poor man is Christ's stamp to boot: both images regard. Herbert.
He might have his mind and manners formed, and be instructed to boot in several sciences. Locke.

3. It seems, in the following lines of Shakspeare, used for booty, or plunder, Dr. Johnson says; which indeed was not an unusual signification of it; and in fact means, according to Dr. Johnson's second definition of the verb, an unlawful way of enriching or benefiting.

Others, like soldiers, armed in their stings
Make boot upon the summer's velvet buds. Shakspeare.

The cry whereof entering the hollow cave
Eftsoones brought forth the villaine, as they ment,
With hope of her some wishfull boot to have.

Their chiefest boot is th' adversary's head;
They end not war till th' enemy be dead. Spenser, F. Q. v. ix. 10.

Set on by villains that make boot of all men,
The peers of France are pillage there, they shot at us.
Mir. for Magistrates, p. 275.
Baun. and Fl. Lover's Progress.

BOOT. † n. s. [bottas, Armorick; botes, a shoe, Welsh; botte, French.]

1. A covering for the leg, used by horsemen.

That my leg is too long—
—No; that it is too little.—
—I'll wear a boot, to make it somewhat rounder. Shakspeare.
Shew'd him his room, where he must lodge that night,
Pull'd off his boots, and took away the light. Milton.
Bishop Wilkins says, he does not question but it will be as usual for a man to call for his wings, when he is going a journey, as it is now to call for his boots. Addison, Guardian.

2. A kind of rack for the leg, formerly used in Scotland for torturing criminals.

He was put to the torture, which, in Scotland, they call the byots; for they put a pair of iron boots close on the leg, and drive wedges between these and the leg.
Burnet, Hist. of his own Time, an. 1666.

Boor of a Coach. † The space between the coachman and the coach.

The horses, being young, took some affrightment, and running away so furiously, that one of them tore all his belly open upon the corner of a beer-cart; my nephew, who in this mean while adventured to leap out, [of the coach,] seemeth to have hung on one of the paws of the boor.

Sir H. Wotton, Rem. p. 417.

To Boot. v. a. [from the noun.] To put on boots.

Boot, boot, master Shallow; I know the young king is sick for me: let us take any man's horses. Shakspeare.

BooT-CATCHER. n. s. [from boot and catch.] The person whose business at an inn is to pull off the boots of passengers.

The ostler and the boot-catcher ought to partake. Swift.

BooT-HoSE. n. s. [from boot and hose.] Stockings to serve for boots; spatterdashes.

His kicquey with a linen stock on one leg, and a boot-hose on the other, gartered with a red and blue lace. Shakspeare.

BooT-TREE. n. s. [from boot and tree.] Two pieces of wood, shaped like a leg, to be driven into boots, for stretching and widening them.

Bo'OTED. † adj. [old Fr. boter, to put boots on.] In boots; in a horseman's habit.

The ill man rides through all confidently; he is coated and booted for it. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

A booted judge shall sit to try his cause,
Not by the statute, but by martial laws. Dryden.

BoOTH. † n. s. [boed, Dutch; bwth, Welsh; buth, Gael. a hut; both, Irish.] A house built of boards, or boughs, to be used for a short time.

The clothiers found means to have all the quest made of the northern men, such as had their booths in the fair. Camden.

Much mischief will be done at Bartholomew fair, by the fall of a booth. Swift.

Bo'OTLESS. † adj. [Sax. botleas.]

1. Useless; unprofitable; unavailing; without advantage.

When those accursed messengers of hell
Came to their wicked man, and gan to tell
Their bootless pains, and ill succeeding night. Spenser.

God did not suffer him, being desirous of the light of wisdom, with bootless expence of travel, to wander in darkness. Hooker.

Bootless speed,
When cowardice pursues, and valour flies. Shakspeare.
Let him alone;

I'll follow him no more with bootless pray'rs:
He seeks my life. Shakspeare.

2. Without success.

Doth not Brutus bootless kneel?
Thrice from the banks of Wye,
And sandy bottom'd Severn, have I sent Him bootless home, and weather beaten back. Shakspeare.

Bo'OTLESSLY. * adv. [from bootless.] Uselessly, to no purpose.

Good nymph, no more; why dost thou bootlessly
Stay thus tormenting both thyself and me?
Fanshawe, Past. Fid. p. 133.

Bo'OTV. n. s. [buvt, Dutch; butin, Fr.]

1. Plunder; pillage; spoils gained from the enemy.

One way a band select from forage drives
A herd of beeves, fair oxen, and fair kine,
Their booty. Milton.

His conscience is the hue and cry that pursues him; and when he reckons that he has gotten a booty, he has only caught a Tartar. L'Estrange.

For, should you to extortion be inclin'd,
Your cruel guilt will little booty find. Dryden.

2. Things gotten by robbery.

If I had a mind to be honest, I see, Fortune would not suffer me; she drops booties in my mouth. Shakspeare.

3. To play booty. To play dishonestly, with an intent to lose. The French use, Je suis botté, when they mean to say, I will not go.

We understand what we ought to do; but when we deliberate, we play booty against ourselves: our consciences direct us one way, our corruptions hurry us another. L'Estrange.

I have set this argument in the best light, that the ladies may not think that I write booty. Dryden.

BoPE'P. n. s. [from bo and peep. See Bo.] The act of looking out, and drawing back as if frightened, or with the purpose to fright some other.

Then they for sudden joy did weep,
And I for sorrow sung,
That such a king should play bopeep,
And go the fools among. Shakspeare.

B O R

Rivers,
That serve instead of peaceful barriers,
To part th' engagements of their warriors,
Where both from side to side may skip,
And only encounter at bopeep.

There the dev plays bopeep, puts out his horns to do mischief, then shrinks them back for safety. Dryd.

BORACHIO. † n. s. [borracho, Span. bouracho, Fr. "The Spanish borachoe, or bottle commonly of a pig's skin, with the hair inward, dressed inwardly with rosin and pitch to keep wine or liquor sweet. Fr. borâche." Minshew. Dr. Johnson explains it a drunkard, by an example from Congreve; which, however, serves only to shew that the cask was what the speaker alludes to. Other writers confirm this meaning.] A bottle, or cask.

Dead wine, that stinks of the borrachio.

Dryden, Pers. Sat. 5.
As soon as the servant had done speaking, she made haste, (says the text,) and took two hundred loaves, and two bottles, (that is, two skins or borrachios,) of wine.

Delany, Life of David, i. 18.
How you stink of wine! D'ye think my niece will ever endure such a borachio! you're an absolute borachio. Congreve.

BO'RABLE. adj. [from bore.] That may be bored.

BO'RAGE. n. s. [from borago, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

BO'RAMEZ. n. s. The Scythian lamb, generally known by the name of Agnus Scythicus.

Much wonder is made of the boramez, that strange plant-animal, or vegetable lamb of Tartary, which wolves delight to feed on; which hath the shape of a lamb, affordeth a bloody juice upon breaking, and liveth while the plants be consumed about it. Brown, Vulg. Err.

BORAX. n. s. [borax, low Lat.] An artificial salt, prepared from sal ammoniac, nitre, calcined tartar, sea salt, and alum, dissolved in wine. It is principally used to solder metals, and sometimes an uterine ingredient in medicine. Quincy.

BO'RBORYGM. * n. s. [old Fr. borborigme, Cotgrave. Gr. βορβορύγμος.] A term in medicine, for a rumbling noise in the guts.

Gloss. Anglic. Nov. (1707.)

BO'RDEL. } n. s. [bordeel, Teut. bordel, Armorick.]

BO'RDELLO. } A brothel; a bawdy-house.

From the bordello it might come as well,

The spital, or pethatch.

B. Jonson.
Making even his own house a stew, a bordel, and a school of lewdness, to instil vice into the unwary ears of his poor children. South.

BO'RDELER. * n. s. [from bordel; a word used both by Chaucer and Gower for a keeper of a bawdy house. Chaucer also uses bordel-women for strumpets.] The keeper of a brothel. Obsolete.

Thais out of his barge he hent,

And to the bordeler her sold. Gower, Conf. Am. b. 8.

BORDER. † n. s. [bard, Germ. bord, Fr. bord, Sax.]

1. The outer part or edge of any thing.

They have looking-glasses, bordered with broad borders of crystal, and great counterfeit precious stones. Bacon.

B O R

The light most strike on the middle, and extend its greatest clearness on the principal figures; diminishing by degrees, as it comes nearer and nearer to the borders. Dryden.

2. The march or edge of a country; the confine.

If a prince keep his residence on the border of his dominions, the remote parts will rebel; but if he make the centre his seat, he shall easily keep them in obedience. Spenser.

Those outlaws, as I may call them, who roamed upon the borders. Patrick, Comment. on Genesis, xlv. 34.

3. The outer part of a garment, generally adorned with needle-work, or ornaments.

4. A bank raised round a garden, and set with flowers; a narrow rank of herbs or flowers.

There he arriving, round about doth fly
From bed to bed, from one to other border,
And takes survey, with curious busy eye,
Of every flower and herb there set in order. Spenser.

All with a border of rich fruit-trees crown'd,
Whose loaded branches hide the lofty mound:
Such various ways the spacious alleys lead,
My doubtful muse knows not what path to tread. Waller.

The place was covered with a wonderful profusion of flowers, that without being disposed into regular borders, and parterres, grew promiscuously. Tatler, No. 161.

5. [In heraldry.] Written also bordure. Formerly the mark of distinguishing one part of a family from the other, descended of one family and from the same parents.

To Bo'RDER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To confine upon; to touch something else at the side or edge: with upon.

It bordereth upon the province of Croatia, which, in time past, had continual wars with the Turks garrisons. Knolles.
Virtue and honour had their temples bordering on each other, and are sometimes both on the same coin. Addison.

2. To approach nearly to.

All wit, which borders upon profaneness, and makes bold with those things to which the greatest reverence is due, deserves to be branded with folly. Tillotson.

To Bo'RDER. † v. a. See To IMBORDER.

1. To adorn with a border of ornaments. [Old Fr. brulez, bordered, edged.]

Rivulets, bordered with the softest grass enamelled with various flowers. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, i. 372.

2. To reach; to touch; to confine upon; to be contiguous to.

Sheba and Raamah are those parts of Arabia, which border the sea called the Persian gulf. Raleigh.

3. To keep within bounds.

That nature, which contemns its origin, cannot be bord'rd certain in itself. Shakspeare, X. Lear.

Bo'RDERER. † n. s. [from border.]

1. He that dwells on the borders, extreme parts, or confines; he that dwells next to any place.

They of those marches, gracious sovereign!

Shall be a wall sufficient to defend

Our inland from the pilfering borderers. Shakspeare.

An ordinary horse will carry two sacks of sand; and, of such, the borderers on the sea do bestow sixty at least in every acre; but most husbands double that number. Carew.

The easiest to be drawn
To our society, and to aid the war:

The rather for their seat, being next bord'ers

On Italy; and that they abounded with horse. B. Jonson.

The king of Scots in person, with Perkin in his company, entered with a great army, though it chiefly consisted of borderers, being raised somewhat suddenly. Bacon.

Volga's stream

Sends opposite, in shaggy armour clad,

Her borderers; on mutual slaughter bent,

They send their countries. Philips.

2. He that approaches near to another.

B O R

The poet is the nearest borderer upon the orator, and expresseth all his virtues, though he be tied more to numbers.

B. Jonson, Discourses.

A poet is the very next borderer unto an orator.

Ezherby's Althea, p. 191.

BO'RDRAGING. * n. s. [Probably from border and rage, i. e. to make a furious incursion on the borders of a country.] This word Dr. Johnson has cited as an example of the verb neuter, to bordrage, in the following lines of Spenser; where it is evidently a verbal noun; and Mr. Mason has cited bordring from the verb. [Of the verb bordrage proof is yet to be sought.] An incursion on the borders of a country.

Who [Constantine]—

Long time in peace his realm established,
Yet oft annoy'd with sondry bordragings
Of neighbour Scots, and foreign scatterlings
With which the world did in those dayes abound.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. x. 63.

To BORE. v. a. [bo'pian, Sax.].

1. To pierce in a hole.

I'll believe as soon,

This whole earth may be bor'd; and that the moon
May through the centre creep.

Shakspeare.

Mulberries will be fairer, if you bore the trunk of the tree through, and thrust, into the places bored, wedges of some hot trees.

Bacon.

But Capys, and the graver sort, thought fit

The Greeks suspected present to commit

To seas or flames; at least, to search and bore

The sides, and what that space contains t' explore.

Denham.

2. To hollow.

Take the barrel of a long gun perfectly bored, and set it upright, and take a bullet exactly fit for it; and then if you suck at the mouth of the barrel never so gently, the bullet will come up so forcibly, that it will hazard the striking out your teeth.

Digby.

3. To make by piercing.

These diminutive caterpillars are able, by degrees, to pierce or bore their way into a tree, with very small holes; which, after they are fully entered, grow together.

Ray.

4. To pierce; to break through.

Consider, reader, what fatigues I've known,

What riots seen, what bustling crouds I bor'd,

How oft I cross'd where carts and coaches roar'd.

Gay.

To BORE. v. n.

1. To make a hole.

A man may make an instrument to bore a hole an inch wide, or half an inch, not to bore a hole of a foot.

Wilkins.

2. To push forward towards a certain point.

Those milk paps,

That through the window bars bore at men's eyes,

Are not within the leaf of pity writ.

Shakspeare.

Nor southward to the raining regions run;

But boring to the west, and hovering there,

With gaping mouths they draw prolifick air.

Dryden.

To BORE. v. n. [with farriers.] Is when a horse carries his nose near the ground.

Dict.

BORE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The hole made by boring.

Into hollow engines long and round,

Thick ramn'd, at th' other bore with touch of fire

Dilated, and infuriate.

Milton, P. L.

2. The instrument with which a hole is bored.

So shall that hole be fit for the file, or square bore.

Moxon.

3. The size of any hole; the cavity; the hollow.

We took a cylindrical pipe of glass, whose bore was about a quarter of an inch in diameter.

Boyle.

Our careful monarch stands in person by,

This new-cast cannon's firmness to explore;

The strength of big-corn'd powder loves to try,

And ball and cartridge sorts for every bore.

Dryden.

It will best appear in the bores of wind instruments; there—fore cause pipes to be made with a single double, and so on, to a sextuple bore; and mark what tone every one giveth.

VOL. I.

B O R

Bacon.

BORE. * n. s. [probably from To bear, bore or borne.]

A tide swelling above another tide.

The victorious tenth wave shall ride, like the bore, victorious over all the rest.

Burke on a Regicide Peace.

BORE. The preterite of bear.

The father bore it with undaunted soul,

Like one who durst his destiny controul;

Yet with becoming grief he bore his part,

Resign'd his son, but not resign'd his heart.

Dryden.

'Twas my fate

To kill my father and pollute his bed,

By marrying her who bore me.

Dryden.

That to his lays wild beasts danc'd borees.

Swift, Ovidiana, Ed. Barret, No. ii.

BO'RER. n. s. [from bore.] A piercer; an instrument to make holes with.

The master-bricklayer must try all the foundations, with a borer, such as well-diggers use, to try the ground.

Moxon.

To be BORN. v. n. pass. [derived from the word to bear, in the sense of bringing forth; as, my mother bore me twenty years ago; or, I was born twenty years ago.]

1. To come into life.

When we are born, we cry, that we are come

To this great stage of fools.

Shakspeare.

The new born babe, by nurses overlaid.

Dryden.

Nor nature's law with fruitless sorrow mourn,

But die, O mortal man! for thou wast born.

Prior.

All that are born into the world, are surrounded with bodies, that perpetually and diversely affect them.

Locke.

2. It is usually spoken with regard to circumstances;
as, he was born a prince; he was born to empire;
he was born for greatness; that is, formed at the birth.

The stranger that dwelleth with you, shall be unto you as one born among you, and thou shalt love him as thyself.

Leviticus, xix. 34.

* Man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward.

Job, v. 7.

A friend loveth at all times, and a brother is born for adversity.

Proverbs, xvii. 17.

Either of you knights may well deserve

A princess born; and such is she you serve.

Dryden.

Two rising crests his royal head adorn,

Born from a god, himself to godhead born.

Dryden.

Both must alike from heaven derive their light;

These born to judge, as well as those to write.

Pope.

For all mankind alike require their grace;

All born to want; a miserable race!

Pope.

I was born to a good estate, although it now turneth to little account.

Swift, Story of an Injured Lady.

Their lands are let to lords, who, never designed to be tennants, naturally murmur at the payment of rents, as a subserviency they were not born to.

Swift.

3. It has usually the particle of before the mother.

Be bloody, bold, and resolute, laugh to scorn

The power of man; for none of woman born

Shall harm Macbeth.

Shakspeare.

I being born of my father's first wife, and she of his third,

she converses with me rather like a daughter than a sister.

Tatler.

B O R

BORNE. † The participle passive of bear. Pronounced with o long, and therefore more correctly written borne, to distinguish it from born. [Sax. bopen.]

Their charge was always born by the queen; and duly paid out of the exchequer. Bacon.

The great men were enabled to oppress their inferiours; and their followers were born out and countenanced in wicked actions. Davies.

Upon some occasions, Clodius may be bold and insolent, born away by his passion. Swift.

BOROUGH. † n. s. [bophoc, Saxon.].

1. It signified anciently a surety, or a man bound for others. See BORROW.

A borough, as I here use it, and as the old laws still use, is not a borough town, that is, a franchised town; but a main pledge of a hundred free persons, therefore called a free borough, or, as you say, franci-plegium. For borh, in old Saxon, signifieth a pledge or surety; and yet it is so used with us in some speeches, as Chaucer saith, St. John to borrow; that is, for assurance and warranty. Spenser on Ireland.

2. A town with a corporation. [Goth. baurgs, a city; Sax. bupz.]

And, if a borough choose him not, undone. Pope.

BOROUGH English, is a customary descent of lands or tenements, whereby, in all places where this custom holds, lands and tenements descend to the youngest son; or, if the owner have no issue, to his youngest brother. Coxel.

BOROUGH-HOLDER. * n. s. A headborough. See BORSHOLDER.

BORREL. † adj. [from the Goth. bure, a clown: Sax. bupe. See BOOR. Dr. Johnson defines it from Junius, without etymology, "a mean fellow," and calls it a substantive. This adjective is written burel, in the Visions of Pierce Plowman, 1550. Gower and Chaucer write it borel, viz. borel clerk, and borel men.] Rustick; rude; coarse. Obsolete.

How be I am but rude and borrel,

Yet nearer ways I know. Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.

TO BORROW. † v. a. [borgen, Dutch; borgian, Saxon; borga, Iceland.].

1. To take something from another upon credit: opposed to lend.

He borrowed a box of the ear of the Englishman, and swore he would pay him again when he was able. Shakspeare.

We have borrowed money for the king's tribute, and that upon our lands and vineyards. Nehemiah, v. 4.

2. To ask of another the use of something for a time.

Then he said, go, borrow thee vessels abroad, of all thy neighbours. 2 Kings, iv. 3.

Where darkness and surprize made conquest cleave!

Where virtue borrowed the arms of chance, And struck a random blow! Dryden.

3. To take something belonging to another.

A borrowed title hast thou bought too dear;

Why didst thou tell me that thou wert a king? Shakspeare.

They may borrow something of instruction, even from their past guilt. Decay of Piety.

I was engaged in the translation of Virgil, from whom I have borrowed only two months. Dryden.

These verbal signs they sometimes borrow from others, and sometimes make themselves; as one may observe among the new names children give to things. Locke.

Some persons of bright parts have narrow remembrance; for riches of their own, they are not solicitous to borrow. Watts.

4. To use as one's own, though not belonging to one.

B O S

Unkind and cruel to deceive your son,
In borrow'd shapes, and his embrace to shun. Dryden.

5. To relieve; to protect; to redeem. Obsolete; but this meaning is most agreeable to the original northern word, borga, to be a sur

It [contrition] is a garment of sorowe.

Fro payne it will you borrowe.

Hawkins, Orig. of the Drama, i. 58.

BORROW. † n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The thing borrowed.

Yet of your royal presence I'll adventure

The borrow of a week. Shakspeare.

2. A pledge; a surety. [Sax. borgz, boph. See TO BORROW, and BOROUGH, which, however, is a false spelling; the word being, in our old authors, usually borwe, borrow, or byrowe.] Obsolete.

This was the first source of shepherds' sorow,
That now will be quitt with bail, nor borrow.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. May.

BORROWER. n. s. [from borrow.]

1. He that borrows; he that takes money upon trust; opposed to lender.

His talk is of nothing but of his poverty, for fear belike lest I should have proved a young borrower. Sidney.

Neither a borrower nor a lender he;
For loan oft loses both itself and friend,

And borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry. Shakspeare.

Go not my horse the better,

I must become a borrower of the night

For a dark hour or twain. Shakspeare.

But you invert the covenants of her trust,

And harshly deal, like an ill borrower,

With that which you receiv'd on other terms. Milton, Com.

2. He that takes what is another's, and uses it as his own.

Some say, that I am a great borrower; however, none of my creditors have challenged me for it. Pope.

BORROWING. * n. s. [from borrow.] The act of borrowing; the thing borrowed.

Borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Borrowing, if it be not bettered by the borrower, among good authors is accounted plagiarism. Milton, Reconocientes.

Yet are not these thefts, but borrowings; not iniquious falsities, but elegant flowers of speech.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsomeness, p. 165.

BORSHOLDER. * n. s. [from borrow and hold; old Fr. borisalder, Kelham.]

Tenne tythings make an hundred; and five made a lathe or wapentake; of which tenne, each one was bound for another; and the eldest or best of them, whom they called the tythingman or borsholder, that is, the eldest pledge, became surety for all the rest. Spenser on Ireland.

BOSCAGE. n. s. [boscage, Fr.]

1. Wood, or woodlands.

We bent our course thither, where we saw the appearance of land; and the next day, we might plainly discern that it was a land fit to our sight, and full of boscage, which made it shew the more dark. Bacon.

2. The representation of woods.

Cheerful paintings in feasting and banqueting rooms; graver stories in galleries; landscapes and boscage, and such wild works, in open terraces, or summer-houses. Wotton.

BOSH. * n. s. This is a provincial word of Norfolk, in which "to cut a bosh" is, to make a figure. It seems to have a similar meaning in the following passage.

A man who has learned but the bosh of an argument, that has only seen the shadow of a syllogism, and but barely heard talk of rhetorick and poetry, may by the use of this science, and a little modern effrontery, baffle one of real learning, silence genius itself, and put the most exalted merit out of countenance. Student, ii. 287.

BO'SKY. adj. [bosque, Fr.] Woody.

And with each end of thy blue bow do'st crown
My bosky acres, and my unshrub'd down. Shakspeare.
I know each lane, and every alley green,
Dingle, or bushy dell, of this wild wood,
And every bosky bourn from side to side. Milton, Com.

BO'SOM. n. s. [borme, borom, Sax.]

1. The embrace of the arms holding any thing to the breast.

2. The breast; the heart.

Our good old friend,
Lay comforts to your bosom; and bestow
Your heedful counsel to our businesses. Shakspeare.

3. The folds of the dress that cover the breast.

Put now thy hand into thy bosom; and he put his hand into his bosom: and when he took it out, behold his hand was leprous as snow. Exodus, iv. 6.

4. Inclosure; compass; embrace.

Unto laws thus received by a whole church, they which live within the bosom of that church, must not think it a matter indifferent, either to yield, or not to yield, obedience. Hooker.

5. The breast, as the seat of the passions.

Anger resteth in the bosoms of fools. Eccles. vii. 9.
From jealousy's tormenting strife

For ever be thy bosom freed. Prior.

Unfortunate Tallard! O, who can name
The pangs of rage, of sorrow, and of shame;
That with mix'd tumult in thy bosom swell'd,
When first thou saw'st thy bravest troops repell'd! Addison.
Here acting bosoms wear a visage gay,
And stifled groans frequent the ball and play. Young.

6. The breast, as the seat of tenderness.

Their soul was poured out into their mothers bosom.
Lamentations, ii. 12.

No further seek his merits to disclose,
Or draw his frailties from their dread abode;
There they alike in trembling hope repose,
The bosom of his father and his God. Gray.

7. The breast, as the receptacle of secrets.

If I covered my transgression as Adam, by hiding my iniquity in my bosom. Job, xxxi. 33.

8. Any receptacle close or secret; as, the bosom of the earth; the bosom of the deep.

9. The tender affections; kindness; favour.

Whose age has charms in it, whose title more,
To pluck the common bosoms on his side. Shakspeare.
To whom the great Creator thus reply'd:
O Son, in whom my soul hath chief delight;
Son of my bosom, Son who art alone
My word, my wisdom, and effectual might. Milton, P. L.

10. Inclination; desire. Not used.

If you can pace your wisdom
In that good path that I could wish it go,
You shall have your bosom on this wretch. Shakspeare.

Bosom, in composition, implies intimacy; confidence;
fondness.

No more that thane of Cawdor shall deceive
Our bosom-interest; go, pronounce his death. Shakspeare.

This Antonio,
Being the bosom-lover of my lord,
Must needs be like my lord. Shakspeare.

Those domestick traitors, bosom-thieves,
Whom custom hath call'd wives, the readiest helps
To betray the heady husbands, rob the easy. B. Jonson.

He sent for his bosom-friends, with whom he most confidently consulted, and shewed the paper to them; the contents whereof he could not conceive. Clarendon.

The fourth privilege of friendship is that which is here specified in the text, a communication of secrets. A bosom-secret, and a bosom-friend, are usually put together. South, Sermon, ii. 64.

She who was a bosom-friend of her royal mistress, he calls an insolent woman, the worst of her sex. Addison.

To Bo'som. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To inclose in the bosom.

Bosom up my counsel;
You'll find it wholesome. Shakspeare.

I do not think my sister so to seek,
Or so unprincipled in virtue's book,
And the sweet peace that goodness bosoms ever. Milton, Com.

2. To conceal in privacy.

The groves, the fountains, and the flow'rs,
That open now their choicest bosom'd smells,
Reserv'd for night, and kept for thee in store. Milton, P. L.

Towers and battlements it sees,
Rosom'd high in tufted trees,
Where perhaps some beauty lies,
The cynosure of neighbouring eyes. Milton, L' Al.

To happy convents, bosom'd deep in vines,
Where slumber abbots, purple as their wines. Pope.

Bo'son. n. s. [corrupted from boatswain.]

The harks upon the billows ride,
The master will not stay;
The merry boson from his side
His whistle takes, to check and chide
The ling'ring lad's delay. Dryden.

Bo'sQUET.* n. s. See BUSKET.

BOSS.† n. s. [bosse, Teut. and bosse, Fr.]

1. A stud; an ornament raised above the rest of the work; a shining prominence.

What signifies beauty, strength, youth, fortune, embroidered furniture, or gaudy bosses? I? Estrange.
This ivory, intended for the bosses of a bridle, was laid up for a prince, and a woman of Caria or Mæonia dyed it. Pope.

2. The part rising in the midst of any thing.

He runneth upon him, even on his neck, upon the thick bosses of his bucklers. Job, xv. 26.

3. A thick body of any kind.

A boss made of wood, with an iron book, to hang on the laths, or on a ladder, in which the labourer puts the mortar at the briches of the tiles. Moxon.

If a close appulse be made by the lips, then is framed M; if by the boss of the tongue to the palate, near the throat, then K. Holder.

BOTANICK. } herb.] Relating to herbs; skilled in herbs.

The botanical artist meets every where with vegetables.
Sir T. Brown's Tracts, p. 6.

Some botanical critics tell us, the poets have not rightly followed the traditions of antiquity, in metamorphosing the sisters of Phæton into poplars. Addison.

Some observations concerning plants, &c. of his own; some from his companions in those botanick studies.

Worthington to Hartlib, Ep. 10.

And to botanick land the flowers of health.

Thomson's Liberty, P. ii.

BOTA'NICALLY. * adv. [from botanical.] After the manner of botanists. Ash.

BOTA'NICK. * n. s. [from the adj.] He who is skilled in plants.

That there is such an herb, which for some kind of resplendency may be called aglaophotis, is by all botanicks or herbarists, I have seen, acknowledged.

M. Casaubon, Of Credulity, &c. p. 80.

BO'TANIST. n. s. [from botany.] One skilled in plants; one who studies the various species of plants.

The uliginous lacteous matter, taken notice of by that diligent botanist, was only a collection of corns. Woodward.

Then spring the living herbs, beyond the power Of botanist to number up their tribes. Thomson.

BOTANO'LOGY. n. s. [βοτανολογία.] A discourse upon plants. Dict.

BOT'ANY. n. s. [from βοτάνη, an herb.] The science of plants; that part of natural history which relates to vegetables.

BOT'ARGO. n. s. [botarga, Span.] A relishing sort of food, made of the roes of the mullet fish; much used on the coasts of the Mediterranean, as an incentive to drink. Chambers.

BOTCH. n. s. [bozza, pronounced botza, Ital.]

1. A swelling or eruptive discoloration of the skin.

Time, which rots all, and makes botches pox,

And, plodding on, must make a calf an ox,

Hath made a lawyer.

Donne.

Botches and blains must all his flesh imboss,

And all his people.

Milton, P. L.

It proves far more incommodious, which, if it were propelled in boils, botches, or ulcers, as in the scurvy, would rather conduce to health. Harvey.

2. A part in any work ill finished, so as to appear worse than the rest. See To BOTCH.

With him,

To leave no rubs or botches in the work,

Pleance, his son, must embrace the fate.

Shakspeare.

3. An adscitious, adventitious part clumsily added.

If both those words are not notorious botches, I am deceived, though the French translator thinks otherwise. Dryden.

A comma ne'er could claim

A place in any British name;

Yet, making here a perfect botch,

Thrusts your poor vowel from his notch.

Swift.

To BOTCH. † v. a. [from the old Goth. bocta, to repair, Serenius.]

1. To mend or patch clothes clumsily.

Their coats, from botching newly brought, are torn. Dryden.

2. To mend any thing awkwardly.

To botch up what th' had torn and rent,

Religion and the government.

Hudibras.

3. To put together unsuitably, or unskilfully; to make up of unsuitable pieces.

Go with me to my house,

And hear thou these, how many fruitless pranks,

This ruffian hath botch'd up, that thou thereby

May smile at this.

Shakspeare.

Her speech is nothing,

Yet the unshaped use of it doth move

The hearers to collection; they aim at it,

And botch the words up fit to their own thoughts. Shakspeare.

For treason botch'd in rhyme will be thy bane;

Rhime is the rock on which thou art to wreck.

Dryden.

Our professor, besides his botching in the words, has sullied even the sense. Bentley's Lett. p. 215.

4. To mark with botches.

Young Hylas, botch'd with stains too foul to name,

In cradle here renews his youthful frame.

Garth.

BO'TCHER. † n. s. [from botch.] A mender of old clothes; the same to a taylor as a cobbler to a shoemaker.

No man will put his sonne to a botcher, or [ere] he binde him prentise to a taylor. Sir T. Elyot's Governour, fol. 52.

He was a botcher's prentice in Paris, from whence he was whipt for getting the sheriff's fool with child. Shakspeare.

Botchers left old clothes in the lurch,

And fell to turn and patch the church.

Hudibras.

BO'TCHY. adj. [from botch.] Marked with botches.

And those boils did run—say so—Did not the general run?

Were not that a botchy core? Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

BOTE. n. s. [bote, Sax. a word now out of use.]

1. A compensation or amends for a man slain, which is bound to another. Corvel.

2. It was used for any payment.

BOTH. † adj. [Goth. ba, baioths; Sax. ba, both; ba tya, both two, i. e. two together. So Chaucer, "Our bothe labour," Tr. and Cress. i. 973. The labour of us both together. In old Eng. bathe, beath, and baith, are found for both; the two last of which are still northern pronunciations.] The two; as well the one as the other. Et l'un & l'autre, Fr. It is used only of two.

And the next day, both morning and afternoon, he was kept by our party. Sidney, b. ii.

Moses and the prophets, Christ and his apostles, were in their times all preachers of God's truth; some by word, some by writing; some by both. Hooker, v. § 19.

Which of them shall I take?

Both? one? or neither? neither can be enjoy'd,

If both remain alive.

Shakspeare.

Two lovers cannot share a single bed;

As therefore both are equal in degree,

The lot of both he left to destiny.

Dryden.

A Venus and a Helen have been seen,

Both perjurd wives, the goddess and the queen.

Granville.

BOTH. conj. [from the adjective.] As well: it has the conjunction and to correspond with it.

A great multitude both of the Jews and also of the Greeks believed.

Acts, xiv. 1.

Power to judge both quick and dead.

Milton, P. L.

Both the boy was worthy to be prais'd,

And Stimichon has often made me long

To hear, like him, so sweet a song.

Dryden.

To BO'THER. * v. a. [This word Mr. Malone believes to have been first used in Ireland. It is also a Cornish word. It is not found in serious writing. The substantive bother is sometimes used in common conversation.] To perplex and confound by senseless loquacity; to tease by constant solicitation; to make a stunning noise.

With the din of which tube my head you so bother,

That I scarce can distinguish my right ear from t'other. Swift.

BO'TRYOID. adj. [βωτρυειδής.] Having the form of a bunch of grapes.

The outside is thick set with botryoid efflorescences, or small knobs, yellow, bluish, and purple; all of a shining metallic hue. Woodward.

BOTS. n. s. [without a singular.] A species of small worms in the entrails of horses; answering, perhaps, to the ascarides in human bodies.

Pease and beans are as dank here as a dog, and that is the next way to give poor jades the bots. Shakspeare.

BOTTLE. † n. s. [Fr. bouteille; Span. botella; Ital. botteglia; low Lat. butellus; Græco-Barb. βέτλις, a cup or flagon, Gloss. Vet. V. Meursii Lexic. βέτλιον.]

1. A small vessel of glass, or other matter with a narrow mouth, to put liquor in.

The shepherd's homely curds,
His cold thin drink out of his leather bottle,
Is far beyond a prince's delicacies. Shakespeare.

Many have a manner, after other men's speech, to shake their heads. A great officer would say, it was as men shake a bottle, to see if there was any wit in their heads, or no. Baron.

Then if thy ale in glass thou wouldst confine,
Let thy clean bottle be entirely dry. King.

He threw into the enemy's ships earthen bottles filled with serpents, which put the crew in disorder. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. A quantity of wine usually put into a bottle; a quart.

Sir, you shall stay, and take t'other bottle. Spect. No. 462.

3. A quantity of hay or grass bundled up. [Fr. botte de paille.]

Methinks I have a great desire to a bottle of hay; good hay, sweet hay, hath no fellow. Shakespeare.

But I should wither in one day, and pass
To a lock of hay, that has a bottle of grass. Donne.

To Bo'TTLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To inclose in bottles.

You may have it a most excellent cyder royal, to drink or to bottle. Mortimer.

When wine is to be bottled off, wash your bottles immediately before you begin; but be sure not to drain them. Swift.

Bo'TTLE is often compounded with other words; as, bottle-friend, a drinking-friend; bottle-companion.

Sam, who is a very good bottle-companion, has been the diversion of his friends. Addison.

Bo'TTLED. * adj. [from bottle.] Having a belly protuberant like a bottle.

Why strew'st thou sugar on that bottled spider?
Shakespeare, K. Rich. III.

Bo'TTLE-ALE. * n. s. [from bottle and ale.] What we now call bottled-ale.

The Myrmidons are no bottle-ale houses.
Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

Selling cheese and prunes,
And retail'd bottle-ale. Beaumont and Fl. Captain.

Bo'TTLE-FLOWER. n. s. [cyaneus, Lat.] A plant.

Bo'TTLESCREW. n. s. [from bottle and screw.] A screw to pull out the cork.

A good butler always breaks off the point of his bottlescrew in two days, by trying which is hardest, the point of the screw, or the neck of the bottle. Swift.

Bo'TTLING. * n. s. [from bottle.] The operation of putting liquors into bottles.

Around the common room
I puff'd my daily pipe's perfume;
Rode for a stomach, and inspected,
At annual bottlings, corks selected.

T. Warton, Progr. of Discontent.

Bo'TTOM. † n. s. [bottom, Saxon; bodem, Germ.]

1. The lowest part of any thing.
The vail of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom. St. Matt. xxvii. 51.

2. The ground under the water.
Behold, he spreadeth his light upon it, and covereth the bottom of the sea. Job, xxxvi. 30.

Shallow brooks that flow'd so clear,
The bottom did the top appear. Dryden.

3. The foundation; the ground-work.
On this supposition my reasonings proceed, and cannot be affected by objections which are far from being built on the same bottom. Atterbury.

4. A dale; a valley; a low ground.
He stood among the myrtle trees that were in the bottom. Zech. i. 8.

In the purlieus stands a sheep-cote,
West of this place: down in the neighbour bottom. Shakespeare.

On both the shores of that fruitful bottom, are still to be seen the marks of ancient edifices. Addison on Italy.

Equal convexity could never be seen: the inhabitants of such an earth could have only the prospect of a little circular plain, which would appear to have an acclivity on all sides; so that every man would fancy himself the lowest, and that he always dwelt and moved in a bottom. Hemley.

5. The part most remote from the view; the deepest part.

His proposals and arguments should with freedom be examined to the bottom, that, if there be any mistake in them, nobody may be misled by his reputation. Locke.

6. Bound; limit.
But there's no bottom, none,
In my volatuness. Shakespeare.

7. The utmost extent or profundity of any man's capacity, whether deep or shallow.

I will fetch off these justices: I do see the bottom of Justice Shallow: how subject we old men are to lying! Shakespeare.

8. The last resort; the remotest cause; first motion.
He wrote many things which are not published in his name; and was at the bottom of many excellent counsels, in which he did not appear. Addison.

9. A ship; a vessel for navigation.
A bawbling vessel was he captain of,
With which, such scathful grapple did he make
With the most noble bottom of our fleet. Shakespeare.

My ventures are not in one bottom trusted;
Nor to one place. Shakespeare.

We have memory, not of one ship that ever returned, and but of thirteen persons only, at several times, that chose to return in our bottoms. Bacon.

He's a foolish seaman,
That when his ship is sinking, will not Unlade his hopes into another bottom. Denham.

He puts to sea upon his own bottom; holds the stern himself; and now, if ever, we may expect new discoveries. Norris.

He spreads his canvas, with his pole he steers,
The freights of sitting ghosts in his thin bottom bears. Dryden.

10. A chance; an adventure; state of hazard.
He began to say, that himself and the prince were too much to venture in one bottom. Clarendon.

We are embarked with them on the same bottom, and must be partakers of their happiness or misery. Spectator, No. 273.

11. A ball of thread wound up together.
This whole argument will be like bottoms of thread, close wound up. Bacon.

Silk worms finish their bottoms in about fifteen days, Mortimer.
Each Christmas they accounts did clear,
And wound their bottom round the year. Prior.

12. BOTTOM of a lane. The lowest end.

13. BOTTOM of beer. The grounds, or dregs.
To Bo'TTOM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To build upon: to fix upon as a support: with on.

They may have something of obscurity, as being bottom'd upon, and fetched from the true nature of the things. Hale.

Pride has a very strong foundation in the mind; it is bottomed upon self-love. Collier.

The grounds upon which we bottom our reasoning, are but apart; something is left out, which should go into the reckoning. Locke.

Action is supposed to be bottomed upon principle. Atterbury.

2. To wind upon something; to twist thread round something.

Therefore, as you unwind your love for him,
Lest it should unravel, and be good to none,
You must provide to bottom it on me. Shakespeare.

To Bo'TTOM. v. n. To rest upon as its ultimate support.

Find out upon what foundation any proposition, advanced, bottoms; and observe the intermediate ideas, by which it is joined to that foundation upon which it is erected. Locke.

Bo'TTOMED. adj. [from bottom.] Having a bottom; it is usually compounded.

There being prepared a number of flat-bottomed boats, to transport the land-forces, under the wing and protection of the great navy. Bacon.

Bo'ttomless. adj. [from bottom.] Without a bottom; fathomless.

Wickedness may well be compared to a bottomless pit, into which it is easier to keep one's self from falling, than being fallen, to give one's self any stay from falling infinitely. Sidney.

Is not my sorrow deep, having no bottom?
Then be my passions bottomless with them. Shakespeare.

Him the Almighty Power
Hurl'd headlong, flaming from the ethereal sky,
To bottomless perdition. Milton, P. I.

Bo'ttomry. n. s. [in navigation and commerce.] The act of borrowing money on a ship's bottom; that is, by engaging the vessel for the repayment of it, so as that, if the ship miscarry, the lender loses the money advanced; but if it arrives safe at the end of the voyage, he is to repay the money lent, with a certain premium or interest agreed on; and this on pain of forfeiting the ship. Harris.

Bouche.* n. s. See BOUGE.

Bo'vate.* n. s. [Lat. bovata.] A bovate (oxgang) of land is as much as one yoke of oxen can reasonably cultivate in a year. Burn, Hist. of Cumb. Gloss.

BOUCHET. n. s. [French.] A sort of pear.

Boud. n. s. An insect which breeds in malt; called also a weevil. Diet.

To BOUGE. v. n. [bouge, Fr.] To swell out.

BOUGE.* n. s. [a corruption of the French bouche. Bouge of court is an expression of our old language for the "allowance to the officers of the court." Bouch au cour, allowance of diet at the king's table. Kelham. Avoir bouche à cour, to eat and drink scot-free; to be in ordinary at court. Cotgrave.] Provisions; meat and drink. Not now in use.

They knock'd hypocrisy o' the pate, and made room for a bombard-man that brought bouge for a country lady or two, that fainted, he said, with fasting for the fine sight since seven o'clock in the morning. B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

BOUGH. n. s. [box, Sax. the gh is mute.] An arm or large shoot of a tree, bigger than a branch, yet not always distinguished from it.

A vine-labourer, finding a bough broken, took a branch of the same bough, and tied it about the place broken. Sidney.

Their lord and patron loud did him proclaim,
And at his feet their laurel boughs did throw. Spenser, F. Q.

From the bough
She gave him of that fair enticing fruit. Milton, P. L.

As the dove's flight did guide Aeneas, now
May thine conduct me to the golden bough. Denham.

Under some fav'rite myrtle's shady boughs,
They speak their passions in repeated vows. Roscommon.

See how, on every bough, the birds express,
In their sweet notes, their happiness. Dryden.

'Twas all her joy the ripening fruits to tend,
And see the boughs with happy burdens bend. Pope.

BOUGHT.† [Sax. bohte.] preter. and participle of To buy; which see.

The chief were these who not for empire fought,
But with their blood their country's safety bought. Pope.

BOUGHT.† n. s. [Teut. bocht, bucht, an inclosure, a fence of stakes; from bogen, to bend, bow, or inflect. Sax. bogeth, boved.]

1. A twist; a link; a knot.
His huge long tail wound up in hundred folds,—
Whose wreathed boughts whenever he unfolds,
And thick entangled knots adown does slack. Spenser, F. Q.

Immortal verse,
Such as the melting soul may pierce,
In notes, with many a winding bought
Of linked sweetness, long draw out. Milton, Il Pens.

2. A flexure.

The flexure of the joints is not the same in elephants as in other quadrupeds, but nearer unto those of a man; the bought of the fore-legs not directly backward, but laterally, and somewhat inward. Brown, Vulgar Errors.

3. That part of a sling which contains the stone.
The soul of thine enemies, then shall He sling out as out of the middle of a sling: [In the margin,] in the midst of the bought of a sling. 1 Sam. xxv. 29.

Bo'ughty.* adj. [from bought.] Crooked; bending. Not in use. Sherwood.

BOUILLON. n. s. [French.] Broth; soup; any thing made to be supped: a term used in cookery.

Bo'ulder Walls. [in architecture.] Walls built of round flints or pebbles, laid in a strong mortar; used where the sea has a beach cast up, or where there are plenty of flints. Build. Dict.

To BOULT. v. a. See To BOLA.

To BOUNCE.† v. n. [a word formed, says Skinner, from the sound.]

1. To fall or fly against any thing with great force, so as to rebound.

The fright awaken'd Arcite with a start,
Against his bosom bounc'd his heaving heart. Dryden.

2. To spring; to make a sudden leap; a sudden explosion.

High nonsense is like beer in a bottle, which has, in reality, no strength and spirit, but frets, and flies, and bounces, and imitates the passions of a much nobler liquor. Addison.

They bounce from their nest,
No longer will tarry. Swift.

Out bounc'd the mastiff of the triple head;
Away the hare with double swiftness fled. Swift.

3. To make a sudden noise.

Just as I was putting out my light, another bounces as hard as he can knock. Swift.

4. To boast; to bully: a sense only used in familiar speech.

He gives away countries, and disposes of kingdoms; and bounces, blusters, and swaggers, as if he were really sovereign lord and sole master of the universe.

Louth's Letter to Warburton, p. 14.

5. To be bold, or strong.

Forsooth the bouncing Amazon,
Your buskin'd mistress, and your warrior love,
To Theseus must be wedded. Shakespeare.

6. In the preceding instance bouncing, applied to an Amazon, may mean what Dr. Johnson asserts, to be bold or strong. But this word was often formerly applied to the fair sex merely to denote a superabundance of excellence, or cause of admiration, in them; and was also applied to things. We use brave in a similar manner.

I saw the bouncing bellibone,
Tripping over the dale alone;—
She sweeter than the violet. Spenser, Shep. Cal. August.

With lofty luring looks, they, [ladies] bouncing brave,
The highest place in all men's sight must have.

Mir. for Magistrates, p. 217.

We have had a merry and a lusty ordinary,
And wine, and good meat, and a bouncing reckoning.

Beaum. and Fl. Wild Goose Chase.

BOUNCE,† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A strong sudden blow.
The bounce burst ope the door; the scornful fair Relentless look'd. Dryden.

As I was sitting in my chamber, and thinking on a subject for my next Spectator, I heard two or three irregular bounces at my landlady's door; and upon the opening of it, a loud cheerful voice inquiring whether the philosopher was at home.

Addison, Spectator, No. 383.

2. A sudden crack or noise

What cannoner begot this lusty blood?
He speaks plain cannon fire, and smoke, and bounce;
He gives the bastinado with his tongue. Shakspeare.

Two hazel-nuts I threw into the flame,
And to each nut I gave a sweetheart's name;
This with the loudest bounce me sore amaz'd,
That in a flame of brightest colour blaz'd. Gay.

3. A boast; a threat: in low language.

Bo'UNCER. n. s. [from bounce.] A boaster; a bully;
an empty threatener: in colloquial speech.

BOUND.† n. s. [Sax. bunde, from bundan, to bind.
Old Fr. bundes, limit. Ketham.]

1. A limit; a boundary; that by which any thing is terminated.

Illimitable ocean! without bound;
Without dimension; where length, breadth, and highth,
And time, and place, are lost. Milton, P. L.

Those vast Scythian regions were separated by the natural bounds, of rivers, lakes, mountains, woods, or marshes. Temple.

Indus and Ganges, our wide empire's bounds,
Swell their dy'd currents with their natives wounds. Dryden.

Through all th' infernal bounds,
Which flaming Phlegethon surrounds,
Sad Orpheus sought his consort lost. Pope.

2. A limit by which any excursion is restrained.

Hath he set bounds between their love and me?
I am their mother, who shall bar me from them? Shakspeare.
Stronger and fiercer by restraint he roars,
And knows no bound, but makes his pow'r his shores. Denham.
Any bounds made with body, even adamant walls, are far from putting a stop to the mind, in its progress in space. Locke.

3. [from To bound, v. n.] A leap; a jump; a spring.

Do but note a wild and wanton herd,
Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fetching mad bounds, bellowing, and neighing loud. Shakspeare.

The horses started with a sudden bound,
And flung the reins and chariot to the ground. Addison.
Dextrous he escapes the coach with nimble bounds,
While ev'ry honest tongue St up th' reins. Gay.

4. A rebound; the leap of something flying back by the force of the blow.

These inward disgusts are but the first bound of this ball of contention. Decay of Poetry.

To BOUND. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To limit; to terminate.

A lofty tow'r, and strong on every side,
With treble walls, which Phlegethon surrounds,
Whose fiery flood the burning empire bounds. Dryden.

2. To restrain; to confine.

Take but degree away,
The bounded waters
Would lift their bosoms higher than the shores,
And make a sop of all this solid globe. Shakspeare.

3. Sometimes with in.

My mother's blood
Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister
Bounds in my sire's. Shakspeare.

To BOUND. v. n. [bondir, Fr.]

1. To jump; to spring; to move forward by leaps.

Torrismoud appear'd,
Gave me his hand, and led me lightly o'er,
Leaping and bounding on the billows heads. Dryden.

Before his lord the ready spaniel bounds,
Panting with hope, he tries the furrow'd grounds. Pope.

When sudden through the woods a bounding stag
Rush'd headlong down, and plung'd amidst the river. Rowe.

Warbling to the vary'd strain, advance
Two sprightly youths, to form the bounding dance. Pope.

2. To rebound; to fly back by repercussion.

Mark then a bounding valour in our English;
That being dead, like to the bullets grazing,
Breaks out into a second course of mischief. Shakspeare.

To BOUND. v. a. To make to bound.

If I might buffet for my love, or bound my horse for her favours, I would lay on like a butcher, and sit like a jackanapes, never off. Shakspeare.

If love, ambitious, sought a match of birth,
Whose veins bound richer blood than lady Blanch? Shakspeare.

BOUND.† pret. and particip. pass. of bind. [Sax. bond.]
Nay, said Pamela, none shall take that office from myself, being so much bound as I am for my education. Milney.

This is Antonio,
To whom I am so infinitely bound,—

— You should in all sense be much bound to him;
For, as I hear, he was much bound for you. Shakspeare.

The gentleman is learn'd, a most rare speaker,
To nature none more bound. Shakspeare.

The bishops of Hungary, being wonderfully rich, were bound to keep great numbers of horsemen, which they used to bring into the field. Knolles.

They summoned the governor to deliver it to them, or else they would not leave one stone upon another. To which the governor made no other reply, than that he was not bound to repair it; but, however, he would, by God's help, keep the ground afterwards. Clarendon.

BOUND.† adj. [a word of doubtful etymology, Dr.

Johnson says. It is a common word still in the North of England for going, or ready, and is pronounced boene; "where are you boene to," i. e.

whither are you going? or where are you bound to? Bonn is used for ready by Chaucer, and other of our old writers. So it is still employed in Scotland. Ruddiman and Chalmers derive the word from the Sax. abunden, expeditus, which, even if rightly translated, as Dr. Jamieson has observed, seems to be an insulated term, not allied to any other words in that language; and therefore the origin, given by Dr. Jamieson, from the Su. Goth.

boen, to prepare, to make ready, of which boen or boin is the participle, must be preferred.] Destined;

intending to come to any place.

His be that care, whom most it doth concern,
Said he; but whither with such hasty flight
Art thou now bound? for well might I discern Great cause, that carries thee so swift and light. Spenser, F. Q.

To be bound for a port one desires extremely, and sail to it with a fair gale, is very pleasant. Temple.

Willing we sought your shores, and hither bound,
The port so long desir'd, at length we found. Dryden.

Bo'UNDARY. n. s. [from bound.] Limit; bound.

He suffers the confluence and clamours of the people to pass all boundaries of laws, and reverence to his authority. King Charles.

Sensation and reflection are the boundaries of our thoughts; beyond which the mind, whatever efforts it would make, is not able to advance. Locke.

Great part of our sins consist in the irregularities attending the ordinary pursuits of life; so that our reformation must appear, by pursuing them within the boundaries of duty. Rogers.

Bo'UNDEN.† participle passive of bind. [Sax. bunden.]

Not now much in use.

Hereafter, in a better world than this,
I shall desire more love and knowledge of you. —
— I rest much bounden to you: fare you well. Shakspeare.

We also most humbly besought him to accept of us as his true servants, by as just a right as ever men on earth were bounden. Bacon.

To be careful for a provision of all necessities for ourselves, and those who depend on us, is a bounden duty. Rogers.

Bo'UNDENLY.* adv. [from bounden.] In a bounden or dutiful manner. Obsolete.

Your ladieship's daughter, most boundenly obedient.

Transl. of Ockin's Sermons, (1583.) Epist. Dedicat.

Bo'UNDER.* n. s. [from bound.]

1. A limiter; he who imposes bounds.

Now the bounder of all these, is only God himself; who is the bounder of all things. Fotherby's Athcomastix, p. 274.

BOU

2. A boundary. Sometimes written boundure.
The boundure of Alexander's march into India being in the tract obscure. Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 254.
Kingdoms are bound within their bounders, as it were in bands; and shut up within their limits, as it were in prison. Fotherby's Althcomastir, p. 274.

BO'UNDING-STONE. } n. s. A stone to play with.
BOUND-STONE.

I am past a boy;
A sceptre's but a play-thing, and a globe
A bigger bounding-stone. Dryden.

BO'UNDLESS. adj. [from bound.] Unlimited; unconfined; immeasurable; illimitable.

Beyond the infinite and boundless reach
Of mercy, if thou didst this deed of death,
Art thou damn'd, Hubert. Shakespeare.

Heav'n has of right all victory design'd;
Whence boundless power dwells in a will confin'd. Dryden.
Man seems as boundless in his desires, as God is in his being;
and therefore nothing but God himself can satisfy him. South.
Though we make duration boundless as it is, we cannot extend it beyond all being. God fills eternity, and it is hard to find a reason, why any one should doubt that he fills immensity. Locke.

Some guide the course of wand'ring orbs on high,
Or roll the planets through the boundless sky. Pope.

BO'UNDLESSNESS. n. s. [from boundless.] Exemption from limits.

God has corrected the boundlessness of his voluptuous desires, by stinting his strength, and contracting his capacities. South.

BO'UNTEOUS.† adj. [from bounty, old Fr. bountenouse.] Liberal; kind; generous; munificent; beneficent: a word used chiefly in poetry for bountiful.

Every one,
According to the gift, which bounteous nature
Hath in him clos'd. Shakespeare.

Her soul abhorring avarice,
Bounteous; but almost bounteous to a vice. Dryden.

BO'UNTEOUSLY. adv. [from bounteous.] Liberally; generously; largely.

He bounteously bestow'd unenvy'd good
On me. Dryden.

BO'UNTEOUSNESS.† n. s. [from bounteous.] Munificence; liberality; kindness. Dr. Johnson cites a passage from the Psalms to illustrate this word, where the real word, however, is plenteousness. "Thou fillest all things living with plenteousness." Ps. cxlv. 16.

BO'UNTIFUL. adj. [from bounty and full.]

1. Liberal; generous; munificent.
As bountiful as mines of India. Shakespeare.
If you will be rich, you must live frugal; if you will be popular, you must be bountiful. Taylor.
I am obliged to return my thanks to many, who, without considering the man, have been bountiful to the poet. Dryden.
God, the bountiful author of our being. Locke.

2. It has of before the thing given, and to before the person receiving.

Our king spares nothing, to give them the share of that felicity, of which he is so bountiful to his kingdom. Dryden.

BO'UNTIFUL.† adv. [from bountiful.] Liberally; in a bountiful manner; largely.

And now thy alms is given,
And thy poor starv'ling bountifully fed. Donne.
It is affirm'd, that it never raineth in Egypt; the river bountifully requiting it in its inundation. Brown, Vulg. Err.

BO'UNTIFULNESS. n. s. [from bountiful.] The quality of being bountiful; generosity.

Enriched to all bountifulness. 2 Cor. ix. 11.

BO'UNTY.† n. s. [from bounty and head, or hood.]
BO'UNTIFULNESS. } See HOOD.] Goodness; virtue. It
HOOD. } is now wholly out of use.

BOU

This goodly frame of temperance,
Formerly grounded, and last settled
On firm foundation of the bountihead. Spenser, F. Q.
How shall frail pen, with fear disparted,
Conceive such sovereign glory, and great bountyhood? Spenser, F. Q.

BO'UNTY.† n. s. [bonté, Fr. bountée, old Fr. from the Lat. bonitas.]

1. Generosity; liberality; munificence.

We do not so far magnify her exceeding bounty, as to affirm, that she bringeth into the world the sons of men, adorned with gorgeous attire. Hooker, iii. § 4.

If you knew to whom you show this honour,
I know you would be prouder of the work,
Than customary bounty can enforce you. Shakespeare.

Such moderation with thy bounty join,
That thou may'st nothing give, that is not thine. Denham.

Those godlike men, to wanting virtue kind,
Bounty well plac'd preferr'd, and well design'd,
To all their titles. Dryden.

2. It seems distinguished from charity, as a present from an alms; being used, when persons, not absolutely necessitous, receive gifts; or when gifts are given by great persons.

Tell a miser of bounty to a friend, or mercy to the poor, and he will not understand it. South.

Her majesty did not see this assembly so proper to excite charity and compassion; though I question not but her royal bounty will extend itself to them. Addison.

3. Simply, goodness; agreeably to the original of the word. Not now in use. Spenser has used the adjective bounteous in the same sense.

Let not her fault your sweet affections marre,
Ne blott the bounty of all womankind
'Mon'st thousands good, one wanton dame to find. Spenser, F. Q. iii. i. 49.

BO'UQUET.* n. s. [Fr.] A nosegay. See BUSKET.

May-busquets; if basket be not there the French bouquet, now become English. Warton, Notes on Milton.

TO BOURD.* v. n. [Fr. bourder, from the low Lat. burdare, to joke, to jest; which is supposed to be adopted from bohordicum, a kind of exercise or tilting with spears. V. Du Cange in BOHORDICUM. This is one of our oldest words; and is still used in the North of England, as the substantive also is, for jest.] To jest. Barret and Sherwood.

Brethren, quoth he, take kepe what I shal say;
My wit is great, though that I bourde and play. Chaucer, Pard. T.

BOURD.* n. s. [old Fr. bourd, bord, a jest or story. V. Lacombe. See also TO BOURD.] A jest.

They all agreed; so, turning all to game
And pleasaukt bord, they past forth on their way. Spenser, F. Q. iv. iv. 13.

Gramercy, Borrill, for thy company,
For all thy jests, and all thy merry bourds. Drayton, Shep. Garland. p. 53.

BO'URDER.* n. s. [Fr. bourdeur.] A jester. Huloet.

BO'URDINGLY.* adv. [from bourd.] In sport. Huloet.

TO BO'URGEON.† v. n. [bourgeonner, Fr.] To sprout; to shoot into branches; to put forth buds.

And tools to prune the trees, before the pride
Of hasting prime did make them burgein round. Spenser, F. Q. vii. vii. 43.

I fear, I shall begin to grow in love
With my dear self, and my most prosperous parts,
They do so spring and burgeon. B. Jonson's For. p. 1.

Long may the dew of heaven distil upon them, to make them bourgeon and propagate among themselves. Howell.

O that I had the fruitful heads of Hydra,
That one might bourgeon where another fell!
Still would I give thee work! Dryden.

BOURN.† n. s. [borne, Fr.]

1. A bound; a limit.
Bourn, bound of land, tilth, vineyard, none. Shakespeare, Temp.

B O U

That undiscover'd country, from whose bourn
No traveller returns. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

False,
As dice are to be wish'd, by one that fixes
No bourn 'twixt his and mine. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

2. [From burn, Saxon; burn, Gael. water.] A brook; a torrent; whence many towns, seated near brooks, have names ending in bourn. It is not now used in either sense, though the second continues in the Scottish dialect, Dr. Johnson says. It is, however, used still in the north of England for a brook, or small stream of water. And Milton affords a beautiful instance of the word, which Dr.
Johnson has misunderstood; the poet, in his landscape, meaning by "bosky bourn" a rivulet skirted with trees; not merely a bound or limit, as Dr. Johnson has stated.

No swelling Neptune, no loud thundering Jove,
Can change my cheer, or make me ever mourn;
My little boat can safely pass this perilous bourn. Spenser, F. Q.
And ere the sun had climb'd the eastern hills,
To gild the muttering bourns and pretty rills.

Browne, Brit. Past. p. 75.

I know each lane, and every alley green,
Dingle, or bushy dell of this wild wood,
And every bosky bourn from side to side.

Milton, Comus, ver. 313.

BOURSE.* n. s. See BURSE.

To BOUSE.† v. n. [buysen, Dutch.] "To drink lavishly; to tope.

As he rode, he somewhat still did eat,
And in his hand did bear a housing can,
Of which he sipt. Spenser, F. Q. i. iv. 22.
Though he bourne his belly full,

Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 381.

A file of housing comrades there. Cleveland's Poems, &c. p. 17.

To BOUSE.* v. a. To swallow.

To restore and well flesh them, [hawks,] they commonly gave them hog's flesh, with oil, butter, and honey; and a decoction of cumfury to bouze. Sir T. Brown's Tracts, p. 115.

Bou'sy. adj. [from bouse.] Drunken.

With a long legend of romantick things,
Which in his cups the bousy poet sings. Dryden.
The guests upon the day appointed came,
Each bousy farmer with his simp'ring dame. King.

BOUT. n. s. [botta, Ital.] A turn; as much of an action as is performed at one time, without interruption; a single part of any action carried on by successive intervals.

The play began: Pas durst not Cosma chace;
But did intend next bout with her to meet. Sidney.

Ladies, that have your feet
Unplagu'd with corns, we'll have a bout. Shakspeare.

When in your motion you are hot,
As make your bouts more violent to that end,
He calls for drink. Shakspeare.

If he chance to 'scape this dismal bout,
The former legatces are blotted out. Dryden.

A weasel seized a bat; the bat begged for life: says the bat, I am a mouse; look on my body: so she got off for that bout. L'Estrange.

We'll see when 'tis enough,
Or if it want the nice concluding bout. King.

BOU'ADE.* n. s. [Fr.] A whim; a start of fancy; an act of caprice.

His [lord Peter's] first boulade was, to kick both their wives one morning out of doors, and his own too.

Tale of a Tub.

BOUTEFEU. n. s. [French.] An incendiary; one who kindles feuds and discontents. Now disused.

VOL. I.

B O W

Animated by a base fellow, called John à Chamber, a very boutefeu, who bore much sway among the vulgar, they entered into open rebellion. Baron.

Nor could ever any order be obtained impartially to punish the known boutefeus, and open incendiaries. King Charles.

Besides the herd of boutefeus,
We set on work within the house. Hudibras.

BO'UTISALE. n. s. [I suppose from bounty or booty, and sale.] A sale at a cheap rate, as booty or plunder is commonly sold.

To speak nothing of the great boutisale of colleges and chantries. Sir J. Hayward.

BOUTS RIMEZ. [French.] The last words or rhimes of a number of verses given to be filled up.
To BOW.† v. a. [bugan, Saxon, boga, Su.]

1. To bend, or inflect. It sounds as now, or how.

Bow thy heavens, O Lord, and come down. Psaln cxliv. 5.

A threepence bow'd would hire me,
Old as I am, to queen it. Shakspeare.

Orpheus, with his lute, made trees,

And the mountain tops, that freeze,

Bow themselves when he did sing. Shakspeare.

I can fly, or I can run,
Quickly to the earth's green end,

Where the bow'd welkin slow doth bend. Milton, Com. v. 1015.

Some bow the vines, which bury'd in the plain,

Their tops in distant arches rise again. Dryden.

The mind has not been made obedient to discipline, when at first it was most tender and most easy to be bowed. Locke.

2. To bend the body in token of respect or submission.

They came to meet him, and bowed themselves to the ground before him. 2 Kings, ii. 15.

Is it to bow down his head as a hyrush, and to spread sackcloth and ashes under him? wilt thou call this a fast, and an acceptable day to the Lord? Isaiah, lviii. 5.

3. To bend, or incline, in condescension.

Let it not grieve thee to bow down thine ear to the poor, and give him a friendly answer. Ecclesi. iv. 8.

4. To depress; to crush.

Are you so gospell'd,
To pray for this good man, and for his issue,
Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,

And beggar'd yours for ever? Shakspeare.

Now wasting years my former strength confound,
And added woes may bow me to the ground. Pope.

To Bow.† v. n.

1. To bend; to suffer flexure.

The everlasting mountains were scattered; the perpetual hills did bow. Habakk. iii. 6.

2. To make a reverence.

Rather let my head
Stoop to the block, than these knees bow to any,
Save to the God of heav'n, and to my king. Shakspeare.

This is the great idol to which the world bows; to this we pay our devoutest homage. Decay of Piety

Admir'd, ador'd by all the circling crowd,
For wheresoe'er she turn'd her face, they bow'd. Dryden.

3. To stoop.

The people bowed down upon their knees, to drink.
Judges, vii. 6.

4. To sink under pressure.

They stoop, they bow down together; they could not deliver the burden. Isaiah, xlvii. 2.

Bow. n. s. [from the verb. It is pronounced, like the verb, as now, hine.] An act of reverence or submission, by bending the body.

Some clergy too she wou'd allow,
Nor quarrell'd at their awkward bow. Swift.

Bow.† n. s. [Sax. boz, boh.] pronounced as grow, no, lo, without any regard to the ro.

1. An instrument of war, made by holding wood or metal bent with a string, which, by its spring, shoots arrows with great force.

B O W

Take, I pray thee, thy weapons, thy quiver and thy bow, and go out to the field, and take me some venison. Genesis.
The white faith of history cannot show,
That e'er the musket yet could beat the bow.
Allegne's Hen. VII.

2. A rainbow.

I do set my bow in the cloud, and it shall be for a token of a covenant between me and the earth. Gen. ix. 13.

3. The instrument with which string-instruments are struck.

Their instruments were various in their kind;
Some for the bow, and some for breathing wind:
The sawtry, pipe, and hautboy's noisy band,
And the soft lute trembling beneath the touching hand.
Dryden, Fables.

4. The doubling of a string in a slip-knot. This is perhaps corruptly used for bought.

Make a knot, and let the second knot be with a bow.
Wise-man.

5. A yoke.

As the ox hath his bow, sir, the horse his curb, and the fault-con his bells, so man hath his desire. Shakspeare.

6. Bow of a saddle. The bowes of a saddle are two pieces of wood laid archwise, to receive the upper part of a horse's back, to give the saddle its due form, and to keep it tight.

Farrier's Dict.

7. Bow of a ship. That part of her which begins at the loof, and compassing ends of the stern, and ends at the sternmost parts of the fore-castle. If a ship hath a broad bow, they call it a bold bow; if a narrow thin bow, they say she hath a lean bow. The piece of ordnance that lies in this place, is called the bow-piece; and the anchors that hang here, are called her great and little bow-cers.

8. Bow is also a mathematical instrument, made of wood, formerly used by seamen in taking the sun's altitude.

9. Bow is likewise a beam of wood or brass, with three long screws, that direct a lath of wood or steel to any arch; used commonly to draw draughts of ships, projections of the sphere, or wherever it is requisite to draw long arches.

Harris.

BOW-BEARER. n. s. [from bow and bear.] An under-officer of the forest.

Cowel.

BOW-BENT. adj. [from bow and bent.] Crooked.

A sibyl old, bow-bent with crooked age,
That far events full wisely could presage. Milton, Vac. Ex.

BOW-HAND. n. s. [from bow and hand.] The hand that draws the bow.

Surely he shoots wide on the bow-hand, and very far from the mark. Spenser on Ireland.

BOW-LEG. n. s. [from bow and leg.] A leg crooked as a bow.

Who fears to set straight, or hide, the unhand-some warpings of bow-legs? Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsomeness, p. 60.

BOW-LEGGED. adj. [from bow and leg.] Having crooked legs.

BOW-SHOT. n. s. [from bow and shot.] Sometimes written bow-shoot. The space which an arrow may pass in its flight from the bow.

She went, and sat her down over against him, a good way off, as it were a bow-shot. Gen. xxi. 16.

About a bow-shot hence to the southward, upon the plain or lower ground; is a high column in perfection.

Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 148.

Though he were not then a bow-shot off, and made haste;
yet, by that time he was come, the thing was no longer to be seen. Boyle.

B O W

Bow-WINDOW. n. s. [from bow and window.] A window projected, thrown out beyond the rest. But see BAY-WINDOW.

Bo'WABLE. adj. [from To bow.] Flexible of disposition.

If she be a virgin, she is pliable or bowable.

Wodroephe's Fr. Gram. (1623,) p. 32.

To Bo'WEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To take forth the bowels. From this old unnoticed verb comes the modern disembowel, and also Shakspeare's embowel. Sherwood renders bowelled by desentrailé. Hulot and Minshew.

Bo'WEL-LESS. adj. [from bowel and less.] Without tenderness or compassion.

Miserable men commiserate not themselves; bowel-less unto others, and merciless unto their own bowels.

Browne, Chr. Morals, i. 7.

BO'WELS. n. s. [boyaul, Fr.]

1. Intestines; the vessels and organs within the body.

He smote him therewith in the fifth rib, and shed out his bowels. 2 Sam. xx. 10.

2. The inner parts of any thing.

Had we no quarrel else to Rome, but that Thou art thence banish'd, we would muster all
From twelve to seventy; and pouring war
Into the bowels of ungrateful Rome,
Like a bold flood appear.

Shakspeare.

His soldiers spying his undaunted spirit,
A Talbot! Talbot! cried out again,
And rush'd into the bowels of the battle.

Shakspeare.

As he saw drops of water distilling from the rock, by following the veins, he has made himself two or three fountains in the bowels of the mountain. Addison.

3. The seat of pity, or kindness.

His bowels did yearn upon him.

Genesis, xliii. 30.

4. Tenderness; compassion.

He had no other consideration of money, than for the support of his lustre; and whilst he could do that, he cared not for money; having no bowels in the point of running in debt, or borrowing all he could. Clarendon.

5. This word seldom has a singular, except in writers of anatomy.

BOWER. n. s. [not from bough or branch, or from the verb bow or bend, as Dr. Johnson asserts; but from the Sax. bup, a chamber. Our old language sometimes gives it bure; and in Cumberland, to this day, a back-room or chamber without a fire-place, or a little parlour, is called a boor. This word of northern origin is in the Goth. bur, a cottage; Theotisc. buer, the same; Icel. buur, a little dwelling, from bouan, to dwell; Dan. buur, an inner room; Dutch, buer, a cottage. The word, thus signifying a small or private abode, a place of shade or retirement, was easily transferred to the place of shelter or retirement, called an arbour. See BUR.]

1. A chamber; a private retirement.

Goe to my love, where she is carelesse laid,
Yet in her winter's bower not well awake. Spenser, Sonn. lxx.
The gyaunt selfe dismay'd with that sownd,
Where he with his Duessa dalliance fownd,
In haste came rushing forth from inner bower.

Spenser, F. Q. i. viii. 5.

2. A cottage: Harington has so rendered the expression of Ariosto, tugurii, agreeably to the old usage of bower.

Courtesie oft-times in simple bowres
Is found as great as in the stately towres.

Transl. of Ariost. xiv. 62.

3. Any abode or residence.

B O W

Wasting the cuntry with sword and with fire,
Overturning towns, high castles, and towers,
Like Mars, god of war, enflamed with ire,
I forced the Frenchmen to abandon their bowers.

Mir. for Magistrates, p. 282.

But, O sad virgin, that thy power
Might raise Musæus from his bower. Milton, Il Pens.

Refresh'd, they wait them to the bower of state,
Where, circled with his peers, Atrides sate. Pope, Il.

4. A place covered with the branches of trees or plants; a shady recess.

The pleached bower,
Where honey-suckles, ripen'd by the sun,
Forbid the sun to enter. Shakspeare, Much Ado.

Hand in hand alone they pass'd
On to their blissful bower: — the roof
Of thickest covert was inwoven shade,
Laurel and myrtle, and what higher grew
Of firm and fragrant leaf? Milton, P. L.

Bo'WER.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson considers this word as signifying, in Spenser, a blow, a stroke, from the Fr. bouvier, to fall upon. Both the etymology and definition are erroneous. The word is used for the shoulder, Sax. boh, Dan. bou. The bowers, in anatomy, are the musculi flexores.] One of the muscles which bend the joints.

His rawbone armes, whose mighty brawned bours
Were wont to rive Steele plates, and helmets hew,
Were elene consum'd. Spenser, F. Q. i. viii. 4 t.

Bo'WER. n. s. [from the bow of a ship.] Anchors so called. See Bow.

To Bo'WER. v. a. [from the noun.] To embower; to inclose.

Thou didst bower the spirit,
In mortal paradise of such sweet flesh. Shakspeare.

To Bo'WER.* v. n. To lodge. Obsolete.

Amongst them all growes not a fayer flowre
Than is the bloosme of comely courtesie;
Which though it on a lowly stake doth bowre,
Yet brancheth forth in brave nobilitie,
And spreads itself through all civillie. Spenser, F. Q. vi. i. 4.

Bo'WERY.† adj. [from bower.] Imbowering; covering with shade.

Landships how gay the bowery grotto yields,
Which thought creates, and lavish fancy builds. Tickell.

Snatch'd through the verdant maze the hurried eye
Distracted wanders: now the bowery walk
Of covert close, where scarce a speck of day
Falls on the lengthen'd gloom, protracted sweeps. Thomson, Spring.

To BOWGE. See To BOUGE.

Bo'WINGLY.* adv. [from bow.] In a bending manner; like a bow, arcuatim. Huileot.

BOWL.† n. s. [buclin, Welsh; which signifies, according to Junius, any thing made of horn, as drinking cups anciently were. It is pronounced bole. So far Junius and Dr. Johnson. But the word is of northern origin: Goth. bolla, a cup. Sax. bolla.]

1. A vessel to hold liquids, rather wide than deep; distinguished from a cup, which is rather deep than wide.

Give me a bowl of wine;
I have not that alacrity of spirit,
Nor cheer of mind, that I was wont to have. Shakspeare.

If a piece of iron be fastened on the side of a bowl of water, a loadstone, in a boat of cork, will make unto it. Brown.

The sacred priests, with ready knives, bereave
The beasts of life, and in full bowls receive
The streaming blood. Dryden.

While the bright Sein, t' exalt the soul,
With sparkling plenty crowns the bowl,
And wit and social mirth inspires. Fenton to Lord Gower.

B O W

with bouse, but found in no other passage.] To drench; to soak.

The water fell into a close walled plot; upon this wall was the frantick person set, and from thence tumbled headlong into the pond; where a strong fellow tossed him up and down, until the patient, by foregoing his strength, had somewhat forgot his fury: but if there appeared small amendment, he was bowsened again and again, while there remained in him any hope of life, for recovery. Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

Bo'WSTRING. n. s. [from bow and string.] The string by which the bow is kept bent.

He hath twice or thrice cut Cupid's bowstring, and the little hangman dare not shoot at him. Shakespeare.

modity of shooters; and good shooting may, perchance, be more occupied, to the profit of all bowyers and fletchers.

Ascham, Toxophilus.

BOX. n. s. [box, Saxon; buxus, Lat.] A tree.

The leaves are pennated, and evergreen; it hath male flowers, that are produced at remote distances from the fruit, on the same tree; the fruit is shaped like a porridge-pot, inverted, and is divided into three cells, containing two seeds in each, which, when ripe, are cast forth by the elasticity of the vessels. The wood is very useful for engravers, and mathematical instrument-makers; being so hard, close, and pönderous, as to sink in water. Miller.

Box, there are two sorts of it; the dwarf box, and a taller sort. The dwarf box is very good for borders, and is easily kept in order, with one clipping in the year. It will increase of slips set in March, or about Bartholomew tide, and will prosper on the declivity of cold, dry, barren, chalky hills, where nothing else will grow. Mortimer.

Box. n. s. [box, Sax. buste, Germ.]

1. A case made of wood, or other matter, to hold any thing. It is distinguished from chest, as the less

Chambers.

BOY. n. s. [bube, Germ. The etymology is not agreed on.]

1. A male child; not a girl.

The streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls playing.
Zech. viii. 5.

2. One in the state of adolescence; older than an infant, yet not arrived at puberty or manhood.

Speak thou, boy;

Perhaps thy childishness will move him more
Than can our reasons. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

Sometimes forgotten things, long cast behind,
Rush forward in the brain, and come to mind.
The nurse's legends are truths receiv'd,
And the man dreams but what the boy believ'd. Dryden.

3. A word of contempt for young men, as noting their immaturity.

Men of worth and parts will not easily admit the familiarity of boys, who yet need the care of a tutor. Locke.

The pale boy senator yet tingling stands,
And holds his breeches close with both his hands. Pope.

To Boy.† v. a. [from the noun.] To treat as a boy; but the example, which Dr. Johnson brings from Shakspeare, is thought by the commentators to signify the acting of women's characters on the stage by boys. I therefore add an example, which clearly proves the meaning of treated as a boy, or despised.

Anthony

Shall be brought drunken forth, and I shall see
Some squeaking Cleopatra boy my greatness,
P' the posture of a whore. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

I am tainted;

Wherever else she lets him rove,
To shun my house, and field, and grove; }
Peace cannot dwell with hate or love. } Prior.
8. Warlike preparation; from bracing the armour; as we say, girded for the battle.
- As it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question bear it;
For that it stands not in such warlike brace,
But altogether lacks the abilities
That Rhodes is dress'd in. Shakspeare, Othello.
9. The armour for the arm. [Fr. bras. Hence our word vant-brace also.]
- An armour, friends! I pray you, let me see it.—
It hath been a shield
Twixt me and death; and pointed to this brace. Shakspeare, Pericles, ii. 1.
10. Tension; tightness.
- The most frequent cause of deafness is the laxness of the tympanum, when it has lost its brace or tension. Holder.
- BRACE. n. s. [of uncertain etymology, probably derived from two braced together.]
1. A pair; a couple. It is not braces, but brace, in the plural.
- Down from a hill the beasts that reign in woods,
First hunter then, pursu'd a gentle brace,
Godliest of all the forest, hart and hind. Milton, P. L.
- Ten brace and more of greyhounds, snowy fair,
And tall as stags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair. Dryden, Fables.
2. It is used generally in conversation as a sportman's word.

Mrs. Bull's condition was looked upon as desperate by all the men of art; but there were those that bragged they had an infallible ointment. Arbutnot.

2. It has of before the thing boasted.

Knowledge being the only thing whereof we poor old men can brag, we cannot make it known but by utterance. Sidney.

Verona brags of him,
To be a virtuous and well govern'd youth. Shakspeare.

Ev'ry busy little scribler now
Swells with the praises which he gives himself,
And taking sanctuary in the crowd,
Brags of his impudence, and scorns to mend. Roscommon.

3. On is used, but improperly.

Yet lo! in me what authors have to brag on,
Reduc'd at last to hiss in my own dragon. Pope, Dunciad.

BRAG. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A boast; a proud expression.

A kind of conquest
Caesar made here; but made not here his brag
Of came, and saw, and overcame. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

It was such a new thing for the Spaniards to receive so little hurt, upon dealing with the English, as Avellaneda made great brags of it, for no greater matter than the waiting upon the English afar off. Bacon, War with Spain.

The thing boasted.

Beauty is nature's brag, and must be shewn
In courts, at feasts, and high solemnities;
Where most may wonder. Milton, Comus.

BRAG.* adj. [from the verb.] Proud; boasting; insolent. Spenser uses it adverbially.

The chief cause of this hath been the cruel contempt of holy wedlocke, and the bragge boasting out of their unholy chastity. Bule's Act, of Eng. Volaries, M. vii. b.

Seest how brag yond bullock bears,
So smirke, so smoothe, his pricked ears?

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb. 71.

Much hath been laid in against that bragge prescription, to the which their confidence and hope of silence on the contrary parte moved them.

Singleton's Fortresse of the Faith, (1565.) fol. 68.

BRAG.* n. s. A name given to a game at cards from the nature of it; the principal stake being won by him who brags with most confidence and address, i. e. who challenges the other gamblers to produce cards equal to his. Chambers.

If they happen to rise above brag or whist, [they] infallibly stop short of every thing either pleasing or instructive.

Ld. Chesterfield.

BRAGGADO'CIO.† n. s. [from brag, adopted from Spenser's vain-glorious knight, Braggadocchio.] A puffing, swelling, boasting fellow.

The world abounds in terrible faufurons, in the masque of men of honour; but these braggadocios are easy to be detected.

L'Estrange.

By the plot, you may guess much of the characters of the persons; a braggadocio captain, a parasite, and a lady of pleasure. Dryden.

BRAGGARDISE.* n. s. [old Fr. bragardise.] Gloria-tion; a bragging. Minsheu and Sherwood.

BRAGGARDISM.† n. s. [from braggardise.] Boastfulness; vain ostentation.

Why, Valentine, what braggardism is this?

Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

BRAGGART.† n. s. [sometimes written braggard, as in Minsheu's and Sherwood's dictionaries; old Fr. bragard.] A boaster.

Who knows himself a braggart,

Let him fear this; for it will come to pass,
That every braggart shall be found an ass.

Shakspeare, All's well.

Pox upon your women,
And your half-man there, court-sir Ambergia,
A perfum'd braggart. B. Jonson, Magnetick Lady.

BRAGGART. adj. [from the substantive.] Boastful; vainly ostentatious.

Shall I, none's slave, of high-born or rais'd men
Fear frowns; and my mistress, truth, betray thee
To th' huffing, braggart, puff nobility? Donne

BRAGGER.† n. s. [from brag, old Fr. braguer, Kelham.] A boaster; an ostentatious fellow.

Many ydell wytted braggers, which judge them selves learned, and are nothing lesse. Bale, in Ireland's New Year's Gifte.

The loudest braggers of Jews or Grecians are found guilty of spiritual ignorance. Hammond's Sermons, p. 627.

Such as have had opportunity to sound these braggers thoroughly, by having sometimes endured the penance of their sottish company, have found them, in converse, empty and insipid. South.

BRAGGET.* n. s. [Welsh, bragod, bragard; Cornish, bragard; a very old Eng. word, and sometimes written bracket, or braket. It is still in use in the north, as well as in Wales, for a compound drink.] A sweet drink, usually made of the wort of ale, spice, and honey; a kind of mead.

His mouth was swete as braket or the meth,
Or hord of apples laid in hay or heth. Chaucer, Miller's Tale.

Armed all in ale,
With the brown bowl, and charg'd in braggat stale.
B. Jonson, Masques.

One that knows not neck-beef from a pheasant,
Nor cannot relish braggat from ambrosia.
Beaumont and F. Little Thief.

BRA'GGINGLY.* adv. [from brag.] Boastingly; in an insulting manner. Huloet.

BRA'GLESS. adj. [from brag.] Without a boast; without ostentation.

The bruit is, Hector's slain, and by Achilles. —

— If it is so, bragless let it be,
Great Hector was as good a man as he.

Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

BRA'GIV. adv. [from brag.] Finely; so as it may be bragged.

Seest not thilk same hawt'orn stud,
How bragly it begins to bud,
And utter his tender head?

Flora now calleth forth each flower,
And bids make ready Maia's bower.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

To BRAID.† v. a. [bpedan, Saxon; often written brede, in our older language, agreeably to the etymology; and perhaps for another reason, which also has here escaped the notice of Dr. Johnson; namely, that the verb to braid for upbraid, was once in use, and therefore the distinction of orthography might be nicely regarded. See Huloet in V. To BRAIN, exprobro, reprocher.] To weave together.

She anointed herself with precious ointment, and braided the hair of her head.

Judith, x. 3.

Close the serpent sly,
Insinuating, wove with gordian twine
His braided train, and of his fatal guile
Gave proof unheeded.

Milton, P. L.

Osier wands, lying loosely, may each of them be easily dissociated from the rest; but when braided into a basket, they cohere strongly.

Boyle.

A ribband did the braided tresses bind,
The rest was loose, and wanton'd in the wind.

Dryden.

Since in braided gold her foot is bound,
And a long trailing manteau sweeps the ground,
Her shoe disdains the street.

Gay, Trivia.

BRAID. n. s. [from the verb.] A texture; a knot, or complication of something woven together.

Listen where thou art sitting,
Under the glossy, cool, translucent wave,

In twisted braids of lilies knitting

The loose train of thy amber-dropping hair.

Milton, Comus.

No longer shall thy comely tresses break

In flowing ringlets on thy snowy neck,

Or behind thy head, an ample round,

In graceful braids, with various ribbon bound.

Prior.

BRAID.† adj. [from Sax. bped, deceit; perhaps from the Iceland. bragd, fraud or deceit. Mr. Horne Tooke gives the interpretation of beaten up, as it were, in a mortar, from bray, to pound, instead of the sense, which Johnson and other commentators on Shakspeare had given the word, of deceitful; and, ridiculing them, he contends, that the expression alludes to Prov. xxvii. 20. "Though thou shouldest bray a fool in a mortar among wheat with a pestle, yet will not his foolishness depart from him." The context of the poet, however, does not seem to warrant Mr. Tooke's conclusion, that "Diana does not confine herself merely to the craft and deceit of Beaumont, but includes also all the other bad qualities of which she supposes him to be confounded, and would not depart from him, though bray'd in a mortar." The allusion, throughout the scene points merely at his deceit.] Crafty; deceitful.

My mother told me just how he would woo,
As if she sat in his heart: he had sworn to marry me,
When his wife's dead; therefore I'll lie with him,
When I am buried. Since Frenchmen are so brad,
Marry that will, I'll live and die a maid:
Only, in this disguise, I think 't no sin
To cozen him, that would unjustly win.

Shakspeare, All's Well, &c. iv. 2.

BRAID.* n. s. [from abraid, to awake. See To ABRAID. "At a braid," on a sudden, at the instant, Chauc. Rom. R. 1336.] A start. Obsolete.

O, what a ruthless, stedfast eye, methought,
He fix'd upon my face, which to my death
Will never part from me! when with a brid,
A deep-set sigh he gave, and then withal
Clasping his hands, to heaven he gart his sight.

Sackville, Trag. of Gorboduc.

To BRAID.* v. a. [Su. Goth. brigda; Icelandic, brekka; to reproach. This is the parent of our verb upbraid, though it has fallen into disuse. Huloet's old dictionary presents not only the verb, but also the substantive braider, as a reproacher.] To upbraid; to reproach. Obsolete.

BRAILS. n. s. [sea term.] Small ropes reeved through blocks, which are seized on either side the ties, a little off upon the yard; so that they come down before the sails of a ship, and are fastened at the skirt of the sail to the crengles. Their use is when the sail is furled across, to haul up its bunt, that it may the more readily be taken up or let fall.

Harris.

BRAIN.† n. s. [brægen, Sax. breyn, Dutch.]

1. That collection of vessels and organs in the head, from which sense and motion arise.

The brain is divided into cerebrum and cerebellum. Cerebrum is that part of the brain, which possesses all the upper and forepart of the cranium, being separated from the cerebellum by the second process of the dura mater, under which the cerebellum is situated. The substance of the brain is distinguished into outer and inner; the former is called corticalis, cinecea, or glandulosa; the latter, medullaris, alba, or nervæa. Cheselden.

If I be served such another trick, I'll have my brains taken out, and buttered, and give them to a dog for a new year's gift.

Shakspeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

That man proportionably hath the largest brain, I did, I confess, somewhat doubt, and conceived it might have failed in birds, especially such as having little bodies, have yet large cranies, and seem to contain much brain, as snipes and woodcocks; but, upon trial, I find it very true. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. That part in which the understanding is placed; therefore taken for the understanding.

The force they are under is a real force, and that of their fate but an imaginary conceived one; the one but in their brains, the other on their shoulders. Hammond on Fundamentals.

A man is first a geometrician in his brain, before he be such in his hand. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

3. Sometimes the affections: this is not common, nor proper.

My son Edgar! had he a hand to write this, a heart and brain to breed it in?

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

4. Fancy; imagination.

God will be worshipped and served according to his prescript word, and not according to the brain of man.

Ahp. Sandys, Sermons, fol. 128. b.

Ladies that call themselves collegiates, an order between courtiers and country-madams, that live from their husbands; and give entertainment to all the wits, and braveries o' the time, as they call 'em; cry down, or up, what they like or dislike in a brain or fashion, with most masculine or rather hermaphroditical authority. B. Jonson, Epicoene.

TO BRAIN. † v. s. [from the noun.] To dash out the brains; to kill by beating out the brains.

Why, as I told thee, 'tis a custom with him f' th' afternoon to sleep; there thou may'st brain him. Shakspeare, Tempest.

They invent a slander—that the Jews were naturally to their wives the cruellest men in the world; would poison, brain, and do know not what, if they might not divorce. Milton, Tetrachordon.

Outlaws of nature,
He shot and brain'd, without a process,
To stop infection; that's their proper death. Dryden.

Next seiz'd two wretches more, and headlong cast,
Brain'd on the rock, his second dire repast. Pope, Odyssey.

BRA'INISH. adj. [from brain.] Hotheaded; furious; as cerebrosus in Latin.

In his lawless fit,
Behind the arras hearing something stir,
He whips his rapier out, and cries, a rat!
And, in his brainish apprehension, kills
The unseen good old man. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

BRA'INLESS. adj. [from brain.] Silly; thoughtless; witless.

Some brainless men have, by great travel and labour, brought to pass, that the church is now ashamed of nothing more than of saints. Hooker, v. 20.

If the dull brainless Ajax come safe off,
We'll dress him up in voices. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

The brainless stripling, who, expell'd the town,
Damn'd the stiff college, and pedantick gown,
Aw'd by thy name, is dumb. Tickell.

BRA'INPAN. † n. s. [from brain and pan.] The skull containing the brains.

And a certain woman cast a piece of milstone on Abimelech, and all-to brake his brayne-panne.

Judges, ix. 53. (Bible of Hen. VIII.)

You are wise,
Your honourable brain-pan full of crotchets. Braun, and Fl. Bonduca, v. 2.

With those huge bellows in his hands, he blows
New fire into my head: my brainpan glows. Dryden.

BRA'INSICK. adj. [from brain and sick.] Diseased in the understanding; addleheaded; giddy; thoughtless.

Nor once deject the courage of our minds,
Because Cassandra's mad; her brainsick raptures
Cannot distaste the goodness of a quarrel. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

They were brainsick men, who could neither endure the government of their king, nor yet thankfully receive the authors of their deliverance. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

BRA'INSICKLY. † adv. [from brainsick.] Weakly; headily.

Why, worthythane,
You do unbend your noble strength to think
So brainsickly of things. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

In the question about avarities, M. Parsons, venting his acerbity, saith; "M. Morton hath a shift to deceive his reader." Bitterly and brainsickly too, by your leave; for afterwards he was compelled to confess, that the letters set down, for his direction, in the margin, were so dim, that he mistook them. Bp. Morton's Discharge, p. 219.

BRA'INSICKNESS. n. s. [from brainsick.] Indiscretion; giddiness.

BRAIT. n. s. Among jewellers for a rough diamond. Dict.

BRAKE. The preterite of break.
He thought it sufficient to correct the multitude with sharp words, and brake out into this cholerick speech. Knolles.

BRAKE. † n. s. [of uncertain etymology.]
1. A thicket of brambles, or of thorns.

VOL. I.

A dog of this town used daily to fetch meat, and to carry the same unto a blind mastiff, that lay in a brake without the town. Carew, Sur. of Cornwall.

If I'm tradit'd by tongues which neither know
My faculties nor person; let me say,
'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake,
That virtue must go through. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

In every bush and brake, where hap may find
The serpent sleeping. Milton, P. L.

Full little thought of him the gentle knight,
Who, flying death, had there conceal'd his flight;
In brakes and brambles hid, and shunning mortal sight. Dryden, Fables.

It is said originally to mean fern, Dr. Johnson says.
It has still this meaning. See BRACKEN.

In a canvas thin he was bedight,
And girded with a belt of twisted brake. Spenser, F. Q. ii. xi. 22.

Other [leaves] are parted small, like our fern or brakes.
Terry's Voyage, p. 103.

BRAKE. † n. s.

1. An instrument for dressing hemp or flax.
2. The handle of a ship's pump.
3. A baker's kneading trough.
4. A sharp bit or snaffle for horses. A smith's brake is a machine in which horses unwilling to be shod, are confined during that operation. Used figuratively by our old poets.

Who rules his rage with reason's brake. Turberville.

Drest, you still for man should take him,
And not think he had eat a stake,
Or were set up in a brack. B. Jonson.

BRAKE.* n. s. [Fr. braquer un canon, to level or plant a cannon.] That which moves a military engine to any particular point.

They view the iron runs, the brakes, and slings. Fairfax, Tasso.

BRA'KY. † adj. [from brake.] Thorny; prickly; rough.

Redeem arts from their rough and braky seats, where they lay hid and overgrown with thorns, to a pure, open, and flowery light, where they may take the eye, and may be taken by the hand. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

If He lead us through braky thickets and deep sloughs, know, that He knows this the nearer way, though more combesome. Bp. Hall, Heaven upon Earth.

BRA'MBLE. † n. s. [Sax. bræmbel, formerly written bramble.]

1. The blackberry bush; the raspberry bush, or hind-berry. Miller.

Content with food, which nature freely bred,
On wildings and on strawberries they fed:
Corucls and bramble berries gave the rest,
And falling acorns furnish'd out a feast. Dryden, Ovid.

2. It is taken, in popular language, for any rough prickly shrub.

The bush my bed, the bramble was my bower,
The woods can witness many a woful store. Spenser, Past.

There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles; all, forsooth, deifying the name of Rosalind. Shakspeare, As You Like it.

Thy younglings, Cuddy, are but just awake,
No thrustles shrill the bramble bush forsake. Gay, Past.

BRA'MBLED.* adj. [from bramble.] Overgrown with brambles or briars.

Beneath yon tower's unvaulted gate,
Forlorn she sits upon the brambled floor. T. Warton, Ode iii.

BRAN.† n. s. [old Fr. brén, bran; bas Bret. brén; Ital. brenna.] The husks of corn ground; the refuse of the sieve.

From me do back receive the flower of all.

And leave me but the bran.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

The citizens were driven to great distress for want of victuals; bread they made of the coarsest bran, moulded in cloaths; for otherwise it would not cloave together.

Huywood.

In the sifting of fourteen years of power and favour, all that came out, could not be pure meal, but must have, among it, a certain mixture of padar and bran, in this lower age of human fragility.

Wotton.

Then water him, and drinking what he can,

Encourage him to thirst again with bran.

Dryden.

Figuratively used, like the Latin farina.

They add more particulars of the same bran.

Bp. Taylor, Diss. from Popery, ch. 3. § 3.

BRAN-NEW.* [Teut. brand-new; and so written and pronounced in some parts of the north of England.]

This expression, still common in colloquial language, might be perhaps originally brent-new, or brén-new, from the Sax. brennan, to burn; equivalent in meaning to fire-new, i. e. to any thing new from the forge; hence the secondary sense, just finished, quite new.

Kilian explains the Teut. expression by vier-neu.

BRANCARD.* n. s. [Fr. brancal and brancar.

V. Colgrave in both.] A horse-litter; or any thing that has arms or outbearing side-beams, and is to be carried by or between two.

The gentleman — proposed, that he would either make use of a boat to Newport or Ostend, or a brancard to St. Omer's; either of which he would cause to be provided against the next morning.

Life of Lord Clarendon, iii. 891.

BRANCH.† n. s. [branche, Fr. in Provence, branchia, from the Lat. brachium.]

1. The shoot of a tree from one of the main boughs.

Why grow the branches, when the root is gone?

Why, wither not the leaves that want their sap? Shakspeare.

2. Any member or part of the whole; any distinct article; any section or subdivision.

Your oaths are past, and now subscribe your names,

That his own hand may strike his honour down,

That violates the smallest branch herein.

Shakspeare, Love's Lab. Lost.

The belief of this was of special importance, to confirm our hopes of another life, on which so many branches of christian piety do immediately depend.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

In the several branches of justice and charity, comprehended in these general rules, of loving our neighbour as ourselves, and of doing to others as we would have them do to us, there is nothing but what is most fit and reasonable.

Tillotson.

This precept will oblige us to perform our duty, according to the nature of the various branches of it.

Rogers.

3. Any part that shoots out from the rest.

And six branches shall come out of the sides of it; three branches of the candle-stick out of the one side, and three branches of the candlestick out of the other side.

Exodus, xxv. 32.

His blood, which disperseth itself by the branches of veins, may be re-embled to waters carried by brooks.

Raleigh, Hist.

4. A smaller river running into, or proceeding from a larger.

If, from a main river, any branch be separated and divided, then, where that branch doth first bound itself with new banks, there is that part of the river where the branch forsaketh the main stream, called the head of the river.

Raleigh, Hist.

B R A

Farrier's Dict.

9. [In architecture.] The arches of Gothic vaults: which arches transversing from one angle to another, diagonal wise, form a cross between the other arches, which make the sides of the square, of which the arches are diagonals.

Harris.

To BRANCH. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To spread in branches.

They were trained together in their childhoods, and there rooted betwixt them such an affection, which cannot choose but branch now.

Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

The cause of scattering of the boughs is the hasty breaking forth of the sap; and therefore those trees rise not in a body of any height, but branch near the ground. The cause of the pyramid, is the keeping in of the sap, long before it branch, and the spending of it when it beginneth to branch, by equal degrees.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Plant it round with shade

Of laurel ever-green, and branching palm.

Milton, S. A.

Straight as a line in beauteous order stood,

Of oaks unshorn a venerable wood;

Fresh was the grass beneath, and every tree

At distance planted in a due degree,

Their branching arms in air, with equal space,

Stretch'd to their neighbours with a long embrace.

Dryden.

One sees her thighs transform'd, another views

Her arms shot out, and branching into boughs.

Addison, Ovid.

2. To spread into separate and distinct parts and subdivisions.

The Alps at the one end, and the long range of Appenines that passes through the body of it, branch out, on all sides, into several different divisions.

Addison on Italy.

If we would weigh, and keep in our minds, what it is we are considering, that would best instruct us when we should, or should not, branch into further distinctions.

Locke.

3. To speak diffusively, or with the distinction of the parts of a discourse.

The swift stag from under ground

Bore up his branching head.

Milton, P. L.

To BRANCH.† v. a.

1. To divide as into branches.

The spirit of things animate are all continued within themselves, and are branched into canals as blood is; and the spirits have not only branches, but certain cells or seats where the principal spirits do reside.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. To adorn with needlework, representing flowers and sprigs.

In robe of lily white she was array'd,

That from her shoulder to her heel down raught,

The train whereof loose far behind her stray'd,

Branched with gold and pearl most richly wrought.

Spenser, F. Q.

May the moths branch their velvets.

Your branch'd cloth of bodkin.

Ibid.

BRANCHER. n. s. [from branch.]

1. One that shoots out into branches.

If their child be not such a speedy spreader and brancher, like the vine, yet perchance he may yield, though with a little longer expectation, as useful and more sober fruit than the other. Walton.

B R A

2. [Branchier, Fr.] In falconry, a young hawk. I enlarge my discourse on the observation of the eires, the brancher, and the two sorts of lenthers. Walton's Angler.

Coeval near with that, all ragged shew,
Long lash'd by the rude winds: some rift half down Their branchless trunks. R. Blair, The Grave.

2. Without any valuable product; naked. If I lose mine honour,
I lose myself; better I were not yours,
Than yours so branchless. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

BRA'NCHY. † adj. [from branch.] This adjective is a century older than the time of Pope, being found in Minshew's Dictionary.] Full of branches; spreading.

Trees on trees o'erthrown,
Fall crackling round him, and the forests groan;
Sudden full twenty on the plain are strow'd,
And lopp'd, and lighten'd of their branchy load. Pope.
What carriage can bear away all the various, rude, and unwieldy loppings of a branchy tree at once? Watts.

BRAND. † n. s. [brand, Sax. from brennan, to burn.]

1. A stick lighted, or fit to be lighted in the fire. Have I caught thee?
He that parts us shall bring a brand from heaven,
And fire us hence. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Take it, she said, and when your needs require,
This little brand will serve to light your fire. Dryden, Fables.
If, with double diligence, they labour to retrieve the hours they have lost, they shall be saved; though this is a service of great difficulty, and like a brand plucked out of the fire. Rogers.

2. A sword. [Runick, brandar; Goth. and Icelandic. brandur; old Fr. brande; Fr. Theotisc. brando; Ital. brando; a sword. All, in allusion to the brand, or flaming fire, which swords were either made or supposed to represent.]

They looking back, all the eastern side beheld
Of paradise, so late their happy seat!
Wav'd over by that flaming brand; the gate
With dreadful faces throng'd, and fiery arms. Milton, P. L.

3. A thunderbolt. The sire omnipotent prepares the brand,
By Vulcan wrought, and arms his potent hand. Graville.

4. A mark made by burning a criminal with a hot iron, to note him as infamous; a stigma.

Clerks convict should be burned in the hand, both because they might taste of some corporal punishment, and that they might carry a brand of infamy. Bacon, Hen. VIII.
The rules of good and evil are inverted, and a brand of infamy passes for a badge of honour. L'Estrange.

5. Any note of infamy. Where did his wit on learning fix a brand,
And rail at arts he did not understand. Dryden, Mac Fleck.

To BRAND. † v. a. [branden, Dutch.]

1. To mark with a brand, or note of infamy. Have I liv'd thus long a wife, a true one,
Never yet branded with suspicion? Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.
The king was after branded, by Perkin's proclamation, for an execrable breaker of the rights of holy church. Baron.
Brand not their actions with so foul a name;
Pity, at least, what we are forced to blame. Dryden.

B R A

Ha! dare not for thy life, I charge thee, dare not
To brand the spotless virtue of my prince. Rowe.

Our Punick faith
Is infamous and branded to a proverb. Addison, Cato.

The spreader of the pardons answered him an easier way, by branding him with heresy. Atterbury.

2. To burn with a hot iron. See BRAND. I was once taken upon suspicion of burglary, and was whipt through Thebes, and branded for my pains. Dryden, Amphitryon.

BRA'NDGOOSE. n. s. A kind of wild fowl, less than a common goose, having its breast and wings of a dark colour. Dict.

BRA'NDIRON. * n. s. [Sax. brandipen.] A trivet to set a pot upon. Huloet. In Scotland, brander is used for this word, and signifies a gridiron. But see ANDIRON.

To BRA'NDISH. † v. a. [from brand, a sword; which see.]

1. To wave, or shake, or flourish as a weapon. I will make many people amazed at thee, and their kings shall be horribly afraid for thee, when I shall brandish my sword before them. Ezek. xxxii. 10.

Brave Macbeth,
Disdaining fortune with his brandish'd steel,
Like valour's minion carved out his passage.
He said, and brandishing at once his blade,
With eager pace pursu'd the flaming shade. Dryden.

Let me march their leader, not their prince;
And at the head of your renown'd Cydonians, Brandish this sword. Smith, Phædr. and Hippok.

2. To play with; to flourish. He who shall employ all the force of his reason, only in brandishing of syllogisms, will discover very little. Locke.

BRA'NDISH. * n. s. [from the verb.] A flourish. I can wound with a brandish and never draw bow for the matter. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

[She] accompanied her discourse with motions of the body, tosses of the head, and brandishes of the fan. Tatler, No. 157.

To BRA'NDLE. * v. n. [Fr. brandiller.] To shake; to wag; to totter. Cotgrave.

Princes cannot be too suspicious when their lives are sought; and subjects cannot be too curious when the state brandles.

Ld. Northampton, Proceed. against Garnet, sign. G. g. b.
BRA'NDLING. n. s. The name for a particular worm. The dew-worm, which some call also the lob-worm, and the brandling, are the chief. Walton's Angler.

BRA'NDY. † n. s. [contracted from brandewine, or burnt wine.] Skinner first notices the word brandy, Etymol. 1671; South, in his application of it to shops, shews that it was then, however, common.] A strong liquor distilled from wine.

Buy any brand wine, buy any brand wine. Baum, and Fl. Beggar's Bush.

That man's work is done, and his name lies groveling upon the ground in all the taverns, brandy-shops, and coffee-houses about the town. South, Sermon vi. p. 109.

If your master lodgeth at inns, every dram of brandy extraordinary that you drink, raiseth his character. Swift, Direct. to the Footman.

BRANDY-WINE. n. s. The same with brandy.

It has been a common saying, A hair of the same dog; and thought, that brandy-wine is a common relief to such. Wigman's Surgery.

BRA'NGLE. † n. s. [uncertainly derived, Dr. Johnson says. It may be a corruption of wrangle, which see.] Squabble; wrangle; litigious contest.

The payment of tythes is subject to many frauds, brangles, and other difficulties, not only from papists and dissenters, but even from those who profess themselves protestants. Swift.

To BRA'NGLE. † v. n. [from the noun.] To wrangle; to squabble.

B R A

This is "durus sermo," says some brangling parishioner that fetches up his poor minister every term for trifles.

Ep. Hall, Rem. p. 81.

When polite conversing shall be improved, company will be no longer pestered with dull story-tellers, nor brangling disputers.

Swift.

BRA'NGLEMENT. n. s. [from brangle.] The same with brangle.

BRA'NGLING.* n. s. [from brangle.] Quarrel.

She doth not set business back by unquiet branglings and find-faulting quarrels.

Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. p. 347.

BRANK. n. s. Buckwheat or brank, is a grain very useful and advantageous in dry barren lands.

Mortimer.

BRA'NLIN.* n. s. An English name for a species of fish of the salmon kind, called also in some places fingery.

Chambers.

BRA'NNY.† adj. [from bran.]

1. Having the appearance of bran.

It became serpiginous, and was, when I saw it, covered with white branny scales.

Wiseman.

2. Consisting principally of bran.

Bread used to be eaten with oysters, as commonly bread which is branny or coarse.

Huloet, in V. Bread.

BRA'NSLE.* n. s. [Fr. bransle, from branler, to shake.] A brawl or dance. Cotgrave. See BRAWL. Obsolete.

Now making lays of love and lovers paine,
Bransles, ballads, virelays, and verses vaine.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. x. 8.

BRANT.* adj. Steep. See BRENT.

BRA'SEN. adj. [from brass.] Made of brass. It is now less properly written, according to the pronunciation, brazen.

BRA'SIER.† n. s. [from brass.]

1. A manufacturer that works in brass.

There is a fellow somewhat near the door, he should be a brasier by his face.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Brasiers that turn andirons, pots, kettles, &c. have their lathe made different from the common turners lathe.

Moron.

2. A pan to hold coals. [probably from embraser, Fr. Dr. Johnson says; but it is rather from brasier, a burning coal. V: Cotgrave, in braisier, and brasier. It is introduced as an affected word, and is said to have been made of silver, in the Pop's dictionary, at the end of Mundus Muliebris, published in 1690.]

It is thought they had no chimneys, but were warmed with coals on brasiers.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

BRA'SIL.† n. s. An American wood, commonly BRA'ZIL. } supposed to have been thus denominated, because first brought from Brasil: though Huet shews it had been known by that name many years before the discovery of that country; and the best sort comes from Fernambuc. It is used by turners, and takes a good polish, but chiefly in dying, though it gives but a spurious red. Chambers.

The following passage of an English author proves also that the Brazil wood was long known by that name, before the discovery of the country so called in America.

He loketh as a sparhawk with his eyen;
Him nedeth not his colour for to dien
With Brasil, ne with grain of Portingale.

Chaucer, Nun's Pr. Tale.

SS.† n. s. [bpat, Sax. prés, Welsh.]

A yellow metal, made by mixing copper with lapis calaminaris. It is used, in popular language, for kind of metal in which copper has a part.

B R

Brass is made of copper and calaminaris.

Pacon.

Men's evil manners live in brass, their virtues

We write in water.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Let others mold the running mass

Of metals, and inform the breathing brass.

Dryden.

2. Impudence. See BRASS-VISAGED.

3. Used for copper. The Irish now call copper money, brass; and formerly we employed the same phrase.

A land whose stones are iron; and out of whose hills thou mayest dig brass.

Deut. viii. 9.

Provide neither gold, nor silver, nor brass, in your purses.

St. Matt. x. 9.

There were just four thousand brass half-pence.

Dryden, Amphitryon.

BRASS-PAVED.* adj. [from brass and paved.] Firm and durable as brass; an expression warranted by classical authorities. Gr. χαλκοπεδον.

She [Juno] does ride

To Jove's high house, through heaven's brass-paved way

Spenser, F. Q. i. iv. 17.

BRASS-VISAGED.* adj. [from brass and visage.] Having a face of brass; impudent.

But I do hate him as I hate the devil,

Or that brass-visag'd monster Barbarism.

B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

BRA'SSICA.* n. s. [Lat.] Cabbage.

They adorned him [the poet laureat] with a new and elegant garland, composed of vine-leaves, laurel, and brassica, a sort of cabbage!

Pope, of the Poet Laureat.

BRA'SSINESS. n. s. [from brassy.] An appearance like brass; some quality of brass.

BRA'SSY. adj. [from brass.]

1. Partaking of brass.

The part in which they lie, is near black, with some sparks of a brassy pyrites in it.

Woodward.

2. Hard as brass.

Losses,

Enough to press a royal merchant down,

And pluck commiseration of his state

From brassy bosoms and rough hearts of flint.

Shakspeare.

3. Impudent.

BRAST. particip. adj. [from burst.] Burst; broken. Obsolete.

There creature never past,

That back returned without heavenly grace,

But dreadful furies which their chains have brast,

And damned sprights sent forth to make ill men agast.

Spenser, F. Q.

BRAT.† n. s. [its etymology is uncertain; bratt, in Saxon, signifies a blanket; from which, perhaps, the modern signification may have come, Dr. Johnson says. Bratt has a kindred meaning in the Welsh, viz. a rag, a clout. In Chaucer, the word is used for a coarse mantle. So in the Gael, brat, is a mantle or covering. And, to this day, in Cumberland and Westmorland, brat means a coarse apron. If the application of brat to a child be not owing to these terms, may we not consider it as the past participle of breed, viz. bred, then softened into bret, and finally corrupted into brat ?]

1. A child, so called in contempt.

He leads them like a thing

Made by some other deity than nature,

That shapes man better; and they follow him,

Against us brats, with no less confidence;

Than boys pursuing summer butterflies.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

This brat is none of mine:

Hence with it, and, together with the dam,

Commit them to the fire.

Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

The friends that got the brats, were poisoned too;

In this sad case what could our vermin do?

Roscommon.

Jupiter summoned all the birds and beasts before him, with their brats and little ones, to see which of them had the prettiest children. L'Estrange.

I shall live to see the invisible lady, to whom I was obliged, and whom I never beheld, since she was a brat in hanging-sleeves. Swift.

I give command to kill or save,
Can grant ten thousand pounds a year,
And make a beggar's brat a peer. Swift.

2. The progeny; the offspring.

The two late conspiracies were the brats and offspring of two contrary factions. South.

BRAVADO.† n. s. [bravada, Span.] A boast; a brag.

Let me advise our men to avoid needless bravadoes, and not condemn them [inhabitants] for their indefensive nakedness.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 19.

In a bravado to encounter death, and for a small flash of honour to cast away himself.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

No, Goodman glory, 'tis not your bravados,
Your punctual honour! Beaum. and Fl. Love's Pilgrimage.

BRAVE.† adj. [Goth. brahc, bold, brat, honest; Iceland. brat; Germ. brav. Ilre considers brage, as the origin; Wachter, probus; and others, he Gr. βραβεῖον, the prize of victory; whence the low Lat. bravium.]

1. Courageous; daring; bold; generous; high-spirited.

An Egyptian soothsayer made Antonius believe, that his genius, which otherways was brave and confident, was, in the presence of Octavius Caesar, poor and cowardly. Bacon.

From armed foes to bring a royal prize,
Shows your brave heart victorious as your eyes. Waller.

2. Gallant; having a noble mien; lofty; graceful.

I'll prove the prettier fellow of the two,
And wear my dagger with a braver grace. Shakspeare.

3. Magnificent; grand.

Rings put upon his fingers,
And brave attendants near him when he wakes,
Would not the beggar then forget himself? Shakspeare.

But whoso'er it was nature design'd
First a brave place, and then as brave a mind. Denham.

4. Excellent; noble: it is an indeterminate word, used to express the superabundance of any valuable quality in men or things.

Let not old age disgrace my high desire,
O heavenly soul in human shape contain'd;
Old wood inflam'd doth yield the bravest fire,
When younger doth in smoke his virtue spend. Sidney.

If there be iron ore, and mills, iron is a brave commodity where wood aboundeth. Bacon.

If a statesman has not this science, he must be subject to a braver man than himself, whose province it is to direct all his actions to this end. Digby, on the Soul, Dedic.

5. Fine; showy. See BRAVERY.

With blossoms brave bedecked daintily. Spenser, F. Q. i. vii. 32.

BRAVE.† n. s. [brave, Fr.]

1. A hector; a man daring beyond decency or discretion.

Happy times! when braves and hacksters, the only contented members of his government, were thought the fittest and the faithfulest to defend his person. Milton, Econ. ch. 3.

Hot braves, like thee, may fight, but know not well
To manage this, the last great stake. Dryden.

Morat's too insolent, too much a brave,
His courage to his envy is a slave. Dryden.

2. A boast; a challenge; a defiance.

There end thy brave, and turn thy face in peace;
We grant thou canst outscold us. Shakspeare.

He sent me a challenge (mixed with some few braves) which I restored, and in fine we met.

B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

To BRAVE.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To defy; to challenge; to set at defiance.

He upbraids Iago, that he made him
Brave me upon the watch. Shakspeare.

My nobles leave me, and my state is brav'd.
Ev'n at my gates, with ranks of foreign powers. Shakspeare.

The ills of love, not those of fate I fear;
These I can brave, but those I cannot bear. Dryden.

Like a rock unmov'd, a rock that braves
The raging tempest and the rising waves. Dryden.

2. To carry a boasting appearance of.

Both particular persons and factions are apt enough to flatter themselves, or, at least, to brave that which they believe not, Bacon, Essays.

3. To make fine or splendid, in the sense of bravery for show. Not now in use.

He [the sun] disdains to shine; for, by the book,
He should have brav'd the east an hour ago:

A black day will it be to somebody. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

BRAVELY.† adv. [from brave.]

1. In a brave manner; courageously; gallantly.

Martin Swart, with his Germans, performed bravely. Bacon.

No fire, nor foe, nor fate, nor night,
The Trojan hero did affright,
Who bravely twice renew'd the fight. Denham.

Your valour bravely did the assault sustain,
And fill'd the moats and ditches with the slain. Dryden.

Plato corrupted and spoilt the best philosophy in the world, by adding idolatry to that worship, which he had wisely and bravely before proved to be due to the Creator of all things.

Clarke, Nat. and Rev. Religion.

2. Finely; splendidly.

She decked herself bravely, to allure the eyes of all men that should see her. Judith, x. 4.

BRAVERY.† n. s. [from brave.]

1. Courage; magnanimity; generosity; gallantry.

It denotes no great bravery of mind, to do that out of a desire of fame, which we could not be prompted to do by a generous passion for the glory of him that made us.

Spectator, No. 255.

Juba, to all the bravery of a hero,
Adds softest love, and more than female sweetness. Addison.

2. Splendour; magnificence; finery.

Where all the bravery that eye may see,
And all the happiness that heart desire,
Is to be found. Spenser, M. Hubb. Tale

In that day the Lord will take away the bravery of their tinkling ornaments.

Like a stately ship —
With all her bravery on, and tackle trim,
Sails fill'd, and streamers waving. Milton, S. A. v. 717.

3. Show; ostentation.

Let princes choose ministers more sensible of duty than of rising, and such as love business rather upon conscience than upon bravery. Bacon, Essays.

4. Bravado; boast.

Never could man, with more unmanlike bravery, use his tongue to her disgrace, which lately had sung sonnets of her praises. Sidney, Arcadia.

For a bravery upon this occasion of power, they crowned their new king in the cathedral church of Dublin. Bacon.

There are those that make it a point of bravery, to bid defiance to the oracles of divine revelation. L'Estrange.

BRAVINGLY.† adv. [from brave.] In a defying or insulting manner.

Bravingly, in your epistle to Sir Edward Hobby, — you end thus. Sheldon, Miracles of Antichrist, p. 19.

BRAVO. n. s. [bravo, Ital.] A man who murders for hire.

For boldness, like the bravos and bunditti, is seldom employed, but upon desperate services. Govern. of the Tongue.

No bravos here profess the bloody trade,
Nor is the church the murderer's refuge made. Gay, Trivia.

B R A

BRAVURA.* n. s. [Ital.] A word of modern application, in this country, to such songs as require or occasion great vocal ability in the singer.

To BRAWL.* v. n. [brouiller, or bravler, Fr. or bragal, Welsh, to cry out.]

1. To quarrel noisily and indecently.

Here comes a man of comfort, whose advice
Hath often still'd my brawling discontent. Shakspeare.

How now, Sir John! what are you brawling here?
Does this become your place, your time, your business?

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

In council she gives licence to her tongue,
Loquacious, brawling, ever in the wrong. Dryden, Fab.
Leave all noisy contests, all immodest clamours, brawling language, and especially all personal scandal and scurrility, to the meanest part of the vulgar world. Watts.

2. To speak loud and indecently.

His divisions, as the times do brawl,
Are in three heads; one power against the French,
And one against Glendower. Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

3. To make a noise. This is little used, Dr. Johnson says: but both the poets cited use it beautifully.

As he lay along
Under an oak, whose antique root peeps out
Upon the brook that brawls along this wood. Shakspeare.
Up among the loose disjointed cliffs,
And fractur'd mountains wild, the brawling brook
And cave, presageful, send a hollow moan.
Thomson, Winter, 69.

To BRAWL.* v. a.

1. To drive away by noise.

Your deep wit—
Reason'd not brawl'd her [Truth] thence, and woo'd her hither.
Verses prefixed to Digby on Souls and Bodies.

2. Figuratively, to beat down.

By east and west let France and England mount
Their battering cannon, charged to the mouths;
Till their soul-fearing clamours have brawl'd down
The flinty ribs of this contemptuous city. Shakspeare, K. John.

BRAWL.* v. n. [from the verb.]

1. Quarrel; noise; scurrility.

He findeth, that controversies thereby are made but brawls;
and therefore wisheth, that, in some lawful assembly of churches, all these strifes may be decided.

Hooker, Ecc. Pol. Preface.

Never since that middle summer's spring
Met we on hill, in dale, forest, or mead,
But with thy brawls thou hast disturb'd our sport.
Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

That bonum is an animal,
Made good with stout polemick brawl. Hudibras.

2. A dance. See BRANSLE.

Thence did Venus learn to lead
The Italian brawls, and so to tread
As if the wind, not she, did walk. B. Jonson, Masques.

His usual songs are certain catches and roundelays he [the nightingale] hath, much after the manner of the French braules; you would take him verily to be a monsieur of Paris straight, if you heard but his preludiums; for then indeed is he set on a merry pin. Parthenia Sacra, (1633.) p. 139.

My grave lord-keeper led the brauls:
The real and maces danc'd before him.
Gray, Long Story, v. II.

BRA'WLER.* n. s. [from brawl.] A wrangler; a quarrelsome, noisy fellow.

Not a brawler, not covetous. 1 Tim. iii. 3.
To be no brawlers, but gentle. Tit. iii. 2.
An advocate may incur the censure of the court, for being a brawler in court, on purpose to lengthen out the cause.
Ayliffe.

BRAWLING.* n. s. [from the verb.] The act of brawling.

B R

Concerning prayer, who is more against it than you, which have clearly changed the right use of it into a brawlyng in the temple and a bletynge in the streets, in a foren speeche and in the sight of men.

Bale's Yet a Course at the Romish Foze, fol. 65.

She troubled was, alas! that it might be,
With tedious brawlings of her parents dear. Sidney.

BRA'WLINGLY.* adv. [from brawling.] In a quarrelsome manner. Huloch.

BRAWN.* n. s. [of uncertain etymology, Dr. Johnson says; which is certainly not the case, as far as the fourth and fifth definitions are concerned; bap, Sax. a boar, pronounced barn, and the pl. bapen, barn, offering the explanation of boars-flesh; bawren or boaren flesh, and by transposition brawn. And hence secondarily, perhaps, the application of braten to any muscular and fleshy appearance or substance.]

1. The fleshy or muscular part of the body.

The brawn of the arm must appear full, shadowed on one side, then shew the wrist-bone thereof. Peacham.

But most their looks on the black monarch bend,
His rising muscles and his brawn commend;
His double biting ax, and beamy spear,
Each asking a gigantick force to rear.

Dryden, Pal. and Arcite.

2. The arm, so called from its being muscular.

I'll hide my silver beard in a gold beaver,
And in my vanbrace put this wither'd brawn. Shakspeare.
I had purpose

Once more to hew thy target from thy brawn. Shakspeare.

3. Bulk; muscular strength.

The boisterous hands are then of use, when I,
With this directing head, those hands apply;
Brawn without brain is thine. Dryden, Fab.

4. The flesh of a boar, prepared in a particular manner.

The best age for the boar is from two to five years, at which time it is best to geld him, or sell him for brawn. Mortimer.
Intending, as soon as it can be ready, to entertain you with a strange collar of brawn.

Sir H. Wotton's Letters, Rem. p. 578.

5. A boar. In the north of England a boar is still called a brawn.

Her grace sits mumping,
Like an old ape eating a brawn.

Beaumont and Fl. Mad Lover, v. i.

BRA'WNED.* adj. [from brawn; in our old dictionaries, defined "well armed or legged," and "brawn'd like a boar."] Strong; brawny.

His rawbone arms, whose mighty brawn'd bows
Were wont to rive steele plates, and helmets hew,
Were clone consum'd. Spenser, F. Q. i. viii. 41.

BRA'WNER. n. s. [from brawn.] A boar killed for the table.

At Christmas time be careful of your fame,
See the old tenant's table be the same;
Then if you would send up the *brawn*er head,
Sweet rosemary and bays around it spread. King.

BRA'WNINESS.* n. s. [from brawny.] Strength; hardness.

Stall'd up and fed to such a brawniness, that neither the understanding nor the affection were capable of any impres-
Hammond, Serm. p. 651.

This brawniness and insensibility of mind, is the best armour against the common evils and accidents of life. Locke.

BRA'WNY.* adj. [from brawn.]

1. Muscular; fleshy; bulky; of great muscles and strength.

The brawny fool, who did his vigour boast,
In that presuming confidence was lost. Dryden, Juv.

The native energy

Turns all into the substance of the tree,
Starves and destroys the fruit, is only made
For branny bulk, and for a barred shade.

Dryden, Virg.

2. Figuratively, hard; unfeeling.

Those who have a hard and branny conscience, which hath no feeling in it. Medea's Apostasy of the Latter Times, P. 2.

To BRAY.† v. a. [bracan, Sax. braier, Fr.]

1. To pound, or grind small.

I'll burst him; I will bray

His bones as in a mortar.

Chapman, Iliad.

Except you would bray Christendom in a mortar, and mould it into a new paste, there is no possibility of a holy war.

Bacon.

2. To emit; to give vent to. [Gr. βράχω.]

Dr. Johnson has cited the passage of Milton for an example of the verb neuter; and omits this usage of the word as a verb active. But it is one of our oldest actives, and is supported by the best authority.

Not speaking, but, as a wilde bull, roaring and braying out wordes despitefull and venomous.

Sir T. Elyot's Governour, fol. 100.

Blasphemous words, which she doth bray out of her poisonous entrails fraught with dire decay.

Spenser, F. Q. v. xi. 20.

The kettle-drum and trumpet thus bray out

The triumph of his pledge. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Arms on armour clashing bray'd

Horrible discord. Milton, P. L. vi. 209.

To BRAY.† v. n. [broire, Fr. barrio, Lat.]

1. To make a noise as an ass.

Laugh, and they

Return it louder than an ass can bray.

Dryden, Juv.

'Agad if he should hear the lion roar, he'd cudgel him into an ass, and to his primitive braying.

Congreve, Old Bachelor.

2. To make an offensive, harsh or disagreeable noise.

[Gr. βράχω.]

As the hart panteth [in the margin, brayeth] after the water-brooks.

Psalms xlii. 1.

What, shall our feast be kept with slaughter'd men?

Shall braying trumpets, and loud churlish drums,

Clanours of hell, be measures to our pomp?

Shakespeare.

Hear'd ye the din of battle bray?

Gray, The Bard.

BRAY. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Voice of an ass.

2. Harsh sound.

Boisterous untun'd drums,

And harsh resounding trumpets dreadful bray.

Shakespeare.

BRAY.* n. s. [probably from brov; the upper part of a hill being, in some places, called both broo, and brac. Welsh, bre; Gael. brigh, from the Celt.
briga, a mountain or high place.] Ground raised as a fortification; a bank of earth.

Order was given that bulwarks, brays, and walls, should be raised in his castles and strong-holds on the sea-side.

Ld. Herbert, Hist. K. Hen. VIII. p. 28.

On that steep bray lord Guelpho would not then Hazard his folk.

Fairfax, Tasso, ix. 96.

BRAY'ER.† n. s. [from bray.]

1. One that brays like an ass.

Hold! cry'd the queen; a cat-call each shall win;

Equal your merits, equal is your din!

But that this well-disputed game may end,

Sound forth my brayers! and the welkin rend.

Whither are they vanish'd?

Into the air: and what seem'd corporal

Melted, as breath into the wind. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

2. Life.

No man has more contempt than I of breath?

But whence hast thou the pow'r to give me death? Dryden.

3. The state or power of breathing freely; opposed to the condition in which a man is breathless and spent.

At other times, he casts to sue the chace
Of swift wild beasts, or run on foot a race,
T' enlarge his breath, large breath in arms most needful,
Or else, by wrestling, to wax strong and heedful.

Spenser, F.Q.

What is your difference? speak.—

I am scarce in breath, my lord. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Spaniard, take breath; some respite I'll afford;

My cause is more advantage than your sword. Dryden.

Our swords so wholly did the fates employ,

That they, at length, grew weary to destroy;

B R E

Refus'd the work we brought, and out of breath,
Made sorrow and despair attend for death.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.

4. Respite; pause; relaxation.

Give me some breath, some little pause, dear lord,
Before I positively speak. Shakspeare, Richard III.

5. Breeze; moving air.

Vent all thy passion, and I'll stand its shock,
Calm and unruffled as a summer's sea,
When not a breath of wind flies o'er its surface.

Addison, Cato.

6. A single act; an instant.

You menace me, and court me in a breath,
Your Cupid looks as dreadfully as death. Dryden.

BREATHABLE.* adj. [from breath.] That may be breathed; as, breathable air.

TO BREATHE. v. n. [from breath.]

When France had breath'd, after intestine broils,
And peace and conquest crown'd her foreign toils.

Roscommon

4. To pass as air.

Shall I not then be stifled in the vault,
To whose foul mouth no healthsome air breathes in,
And there be strang'd ere my Romeo comes? Shakspeare.

TO BREATHE. v. a.

1. To inspire, or inhale into one's own body, and eject or expire out of it.

They wish to live,
Their pains and poverty desire to bear,
To view the light of heav'n, and breathe the vital air,

Dryden.

They here began to breathe a most delicious kind of aether, and saw all the fields about them covered with a kind of purple light. Tatler, No. 81.

2. To inject by breathing: with into.

He breathed into us the breath of life, a vital active spirit; whose motions, he expects, should own the dignity of its original. Decay of Pety.

I would be young, be handsome, be belov'd,
Could I but breathe myself into Adrastus. Dryden.

3. To expire; to eject by breathing: with out.

She is called, by ancient authors, the tenth muse; and, by Plutarch, is compared to Caius, the son of Vulcan, who breathed out nothing but flame. Spectator, No. 223.

breathing-time.

Dr. Warton, Essay on Pope, ii. 323.

BRE'ATHLESS. adj. [from breathe.]

1. Out of breath; spent with labour.

Well knew

The prince, with patience and sufferance sly,
So hasty heat soon cooled to subdue;
Tho' when he breathless wax, that battle 'gan renew.

Spenser, F. Q.

I remember, when the fight was done,
When I was dry with rage, and extreme toil,
Breathless, and faint, leaning upon my sword,
Came there a certain lord.

Shakspeare, Henry IV.

Many so strained themselves in their race, that they fell down breathless and dead.

Hayward.

Breathless and tir'd, is all my fury spent?

Or does my glutted spleen at length relent?

Dryden, Æn.

2. Dead.

Kneeling before this ruin of sweet life,
And breathing to this breathless excellence,
The incense of a vow, a holy vow.

Shakspeare, King John.

Yielding to the sentence, breathless thou

And pale shalt lie, as what thou huriest now.

Prior.

BRE'ATHLESSNESS.* n. s. [from breathless.]

The state of being out of breath.

Methinks I hear the soldiers and busie officers when they were telling that other weighty stone, (for such we probably conceive,) to the mouth of the vault with much toil and sweat and breathlessness, how they bragged of the sureness of the place.

Bp. Hall, Works, ii. 276.

B R E

BRED. participi pass. [from To breed.]

Their malice was bred in them, and their cogitation would never be changed.

Wisdom, xii. 10.

BREDE. n. s. See BRAID.

In a curious brede of needlework, one colour falls away by such just degrees, and another rises so insensibly, that we see the variety without being able to distinguish the total vanishing of the one, from the first appearance of the other.

Dryden.

BREECH. † n. s. [supposed from, bpræcan, Sax.

Dr. Johnson says. But see BREECHES.]

1. The lower part of the body; the back part.

When the king's pardon was offered by a herald, a lewd boy turped towards him his naked breech, and used words suitable to that gesture.

Hayward.

The storks devour snakes and other serpents; which when they begin to creep out at their breeches, they will presently clap them close to a wall, to keep them in.

Grew, Museum.

2. Breeches.

Ah! that thy father had been so resoly'd!—

—That thou might still have worn the petticoat,
And ne'er had stol'n the breech from Lancaster.

Shakspeare.

3. The hinder part of a piece of ordnance.

So cannons, when they mount vast pitches,
Are tumbld back upon their breeches.

Anonymous.

4. The hinder part of any thing.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

3. To whip on the breech. [breeched or jerked, fessé, fouetté. Sherwood.]

Cry like a breech'd boy, not eat a bit.

Beaumont and Fl. Hum. Lieutenant.

BREECHES. † n. s. [bpræc, Sax. from bracca, an old

Gaulish word; so that Skinner imagines the name of the part covered with breeches, to be derived from that of the garment. In this sense it has no singular, Dr. Johnson says; and yet he has, in the preceding article, given it in the singular number, under the second definition. Mr. Horne Tooke inclines to the Sax. bryce, because, he says,
" breeches cover those parts where the body is broken into two parts." But, from this ludicrous refinement of etymology, I pass on to direct the reader to the Celtick and Gothick languages;
brak old Goth. the kuer, brok, the covering or breeches; brag, Celt. whence the old Fr. braguès, and then broches; Sax. bpræc, whence also breeks, still a common word for breeches in the north of England; and sometimes found in our writings.]

1. The garment worn by men over the lower part of the body.

Petruchio is coming in a new hat and an old jerkin, and a pair of old breeches, thrice turned.

Shakspeare, Taming of the Shrew.

Rough satires, sly remarks, ill-natur'd speeches,

Are always aim'd at poets that wear breeches.

Prior.

Give him a single coat to make, he'd do't;

A vest or breeches, singly; but the brute

• Cou'd ne'er contrive all three to make a suit.

King.

A parliament-man is one that hath turned his leather breeches into the new fashion.

Characters, written about 1661.

2. To wear the breeches, is, in a wife, to usurp the authority of the husband.

Children rule, old men go to school, women wear the breeches.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

The wife of Xanthus was domineering, as if her fortune, and her extraction, had entitled her to the breeches. L'Esrange.

BREE'CHING. * n. s. [from the verb.]

That, to have heard, great horror would have bred.

Spenser, F. Q.

Our own hearts we know, but we are not certain what hope the rites and orders of our church have bred in the hearts of others. Hooker.

What hurt ill company, and overmuch liberty, breedeth in youth! Ascham, Schoolmaster.

Intemperance and lust breed infirmities and diseases, which, being propagated, spoil the strain of a nation. Tillotson.

4. To continue; to hatch; to plot.

My son Edgar! had he a hand to write this! a heart and brain to breed it in! Shakspeare, K. Lear.

5. To give birth to; to be the native place; so, there are breeding ponds, and feeding ponds.

Mr. Harding, and the worthiest divine Christendom hath bred for the space of some hundreds of years were brought up together in the same university. Hooker.

Hail, foreign wonder!

Whom, certain these rough shades did never breed.

Milton, Comus.

6. To educate; to form by education.

Whoe'er thou art, whose forward ears are bent
On state affairs to guide the government;
Hear first what Socrates of old has said,
To the lov'd youth, whom he at Athens bred,
To breed up the son to common sense,
Is evermore the parent's least expence. Dryden, Juvenal.

And left their pillagers, to rapine bred,
Without controul, to strip and spoil the dead. Dryden.

His farm may not remove his children too far from him, or the trade he breeds them up in. Locke.

Our endless anguish, does not nature claim?
Reason and sorrow are to us the same. Prior.

To BREED. v. n.

1. To bring young.

Lucina, it seems, was breeding, as she did nothing but entertain the company with a discourse upon the difficulty of reckoning to a day. Spectator, No. 431.

2. To be encreased by new production.

But could youth last, and love still breed,
Had joys no date, and age no need;
Then these delights my mind might move
To live with thee, and be thy love. Raleigh.

3. To be produced; to have birth.

Where they most breed and haunt, I have observ'd,
The air is delicate. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
There is a worm that breedeth in old snow, and dieth soon after it cometh out of the snow. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The caterpillar is one of the most general of worms, and breedeth of dew and leaves. Bacon.

It hath been the general tradition and belief, that maggots and flies breed in putrefied carcases. Bentley.

4. To raise a breed.

In the choice of swine choose such to breed of as are of long large bodies. Mortimer.

BREED. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A cast; a kind; a subdivision of species.

I bring you witnesses,
Twice fifteen thousand hearts of England's breed. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.
The horses were young and handsome, and of the best breed in the north. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Walled towns, stored arsenals, and ordnance; all this is but a sheep in a lion's skin, except the breed and disposition of the people be stout and warlike. Bacon, Essays.

Infectious streams of crowding sins began,
And through the spurious breed and guilty nation ran. Roscommon.

Rode fair Ascanius on a fiery steed,
Queen Dido's gift, and of the Tyrian breed. Dryden.

2. A family; a generation: in contempt.

A cousin of his last wife's was proposed; but John would have no more of the breed. Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

3. Progeny; offspring.

If thou wilt lend this money, lend it not
As to thy friend; for when did friendship take
A breed of barren metal of his friend? Shakspeare, Mer. of Ven.

4. A number produced at once; a hatch.

She lays them in the sand, where they lie till they are hatched; sometimes above an hundred at a breed. Greiv.

BRE'EDBATE. n. s. [from breed and bate.] One that breeds quarrels; an incendiary.

An honest, willing, kind fellow, as ever servant shall come in house withal; and, I warrant you, no telltale, nor no breedbate. Shakspeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

BRE'EDER. n. s. [from breed.]

1. That which produces any thing.

Time is the nurse and breeder of all good. Shakspeare.

2. The person which brings up another.

Time was, when Italy and Rome have been the best breeders and bringers up of the worthiest men. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

3. A female that is prolifick.

Get thee to a nunnery; why would'st thou be a breeder of sinners? Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Here is the babe, as loathsome as a toad,
Amongst the fairest breeders of our time. Tit. Andronicus.

Let there be an hundred persons in London, as many in the country, we say, that if there be sixty of them breeders in London, there are more than sixty in the country. Graunt.

Yet if a friend a night or two should need her,
He'd recommend her as a special breeder. Pope.

4. One that takes care to raise a breed.

The breeders of English cattle turned much to dairy, or else kept their cattle to six or seven years old. Temple.

BRE'EDING. n. s. [from breed.]

1. Education; instruction; qualifications.

She had her breeding at my father's charge,
A poor physician's daughter. Shakspeare, All's Well.
I am a gentleman of blood and breeding. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

I hope to see it a piece of none of the meanest breeding, to be acquainted with the laws of nature. Glauville, Scepas, Pref.

2. Manners; knowledge of ceremony.

As men of breeding, sometimes men of wit,
To avoid great errors, must the less commit. Pope.

The Graces from the court did next provide Breeding, and wit, and air, and decent pride. Swift.

3. Nurture; care to bring up from the infant state.

Why was my breeding order'd and prescrib'd,
As of a person separate to God,
Design'd for great exploits? Milton, S. 1.

BREESE. n. s. [brjoja, Saxon.] A stinging fly; the gadfly.

B R E

Cleopatra,
The breeze upon her, like a cow in June,
Hoists sail, and flies. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.
The learned write, the insect breeze
Is but the mongrel prince of bees. Hudibras.
A fierce loud buzzing breeze, their stings draw blood,
And drive the cattle gadding through the wood. Dryden.
BREEZE.† n. s. [brezza, Ital. brise, Fr. a term in Provence for a fresh wind which blows upon that coast from nine in the morning till the evening.] A gentle gale; a soft wind.
We find, that these hottest regions of the world, seated under the equinoctial line, or near it, are so refreshed with a daily gale of easterly wind, which the Spaniards call breeze, that doth ever more blow stronger in the heat of the day. Raleigh.
From land a gentle breeze arose by night,
Serenely shone the stars, the moon was bright,
And the sea trembled with her silver light. Dryden.
Gradual sinks the breeze
Into a perfect calm; that not a breath
Is heard to quiver through the closing wood. Thomson.
BREEZELESS.* adj. [from breeze and less.] Wanting a breeze.
Yet here no fiery ray inflames
The breezeless sky. W. Richardson's Poems.
A stagnate breezeless air becalms my soul. Shenstone's Poems.
BREEZY.† adj. [from breeze.]
1. Fanned with gales.
The seer, while zephyrs curl the swelling deep,
Basks on the breezy shore, in grateful sleep,
His oozy limbs. Pope.
2. Full of gales.
The breezy call of incense-breathing morn.
Gray, Elegy, st. 5.
BRE'HON.† n. s. [An Irish word, from breath, judgement. The word was once in use in Scotland also.
See Jamieson's Dict. In the example, from Spenser, given by Dr. Johnson, a curious error occurs in all the editions of the dictionary, which presents a specimen of that pleasant mode of blundering, so often attributed to the Irish; though Spenser does not warrant it; and therefore Spenser is now vindicated.
Dr. Johnson's reading is, "the judge will compound between the murderer and the party murdered!"]
In the case of murder, the bre'hon, that is, their judge, will compound between the murderer and friends of the party murdered, which prosecute the action, that the malefactor shall give unto them, or to the child or wife of him that is slain, a recompense, which they call an eriaich. Spenser on Ireland.
BREME.† adj. [from brēmman, Sax. to rage or fume, often written brim and bryme in our old language.
Brim or ferce, ferox, Prompt. Parv. Su. Goth. brumma, to rage.] Cruel; sharp; severe. Not used.
Thistles thicke,
And breris brimme for to pricke. Chaucer, Rom. R. 1836.
And when the shining sun laugheth once,
You deem the spring come at once:
But eft, when you count, you freed from fear,
Comes the breme winter, with chamfred brows,
Full of wrinkles, and frosty furrows. Spenser, Shep. Cal.
Baleful shrieks of ghosts are heard most brim.
Sackville's Induction, Mir. for Mag.
To BREN. v. a. [Iceland. brenn, to burn; Goth.
brinnan; Sax. brenman. This verb, instead of burn, is usual in our old authors. It continued in use till the reign of Elizabeth.] To burn. Obsolete.
Cleans the wicked flame his bowels brent.
Spenser, F. Q. iii. vii. 16.
BRENT.† part. adj. [from bren.] This word is given by Johnson merely as an adjective; without any

B R E

notice of the verb, which formerly both as an active and neuter verb was common.] Burnt.
What flames, quoth he, when I thee present see
In danger rather to be brent than drent? Spenser, F. Q.
BRENT, or BRANT.* adj. [Su. Goth. bryn, the top of a hill.] Steep; high. A brent brow is yet distinguished, in some places, as a high hill; in the north, it is brant or brunt; "as brant as the side of a house." Ray.
The grapes grow on the brant rocks so wonderfully, that you will marvel how men dare to climb up to them.
Ascham, Lett. to Raven.
BREST. n. s. [in architecture.] That member of a column, called also the torus, or tore.
BREST Summers. The pieces in the outward parts of any timber building, and in the middle floors, into which the girders are framed. Harris.
BRIT. n. s. A fish of the turbot kind, also burt or brut. Dict.
BRE'TFUL.* adj. [Cockeram gives this word, and defines it topfull; but says, that then (1622) it was obsolete. The etymology is uncertain; but, in Gloucestershire, the breeds of a hat are said to mean the brims of a hat, Grose's Prov. Gloss. This may serve perhaps to confirm the meaning, in our old poets, of brimful, which this obsolete word exhibits.]
Brimful.
His wallet lay before him in his lappe,
Bretful of pardons come from Rome all hote.
Chaucer, Prol. C. T. 689.
A frere on a bench—
With a face so fat, as a ful bleddere,
Blowen bretful of breath.
P. Plowman's Crede, (1554,) sign. B. i. b.
BRE'THREN.† n. s. [the plural of brother, Goth. brothrahans.] See BROTHER.
All these sects are brethren to each other in faction, ignorance, iniquity, perverseness, pride. Swift.
BREVE.† n. s. [in musick.] A note or character of time, equivalent to four minims.
BREVE.* n. s. [Lat. breve; whence the Icelandick bref, a diploma; the Germ. and Dutch brief, a letter; Sax. brave; and our own word brief, now used instead of breve, which however is found in good authors. Originally, "breve nihil aliud erat quam rescriptum quoddam principis, quo ordinario judici mandabat, ut de querelâ ad eum delatâ jus diceret breviter, ita ut ampliùs super eâ querelâ rex non molestetur." Cragii Jus Feudale, lib. ii. tit. xvii.]
An official writing; a letter of state. In the common law, a writ or brief; in the civil, a short note or minute.
The breve rather than the bull should have larger dispensation. Id. Herbert's Hist. of Hen. VIII. p. 227.
Neither the popes themselves, nor those of the court, the secretaries and dataries, which pen their bulls and breves, have any use or exercise in Holy Scripture. Bp. Bedell's Letters, &c. p. 356.
BREVET.* n. s. [Fr. from the low Lat. brevetum, of breve, short.] A military phrase of modern times.
For Cotgrave renders brevet "a brief, note, breviate, little writing, short declaration, ticket, or bill of one's hand." But brevet now means appointment in the army, and rank above the specifick appointment for which pay is received; as, a lieutenant-colonel, being made colonel by brevet, enjoys the pay only of the former, but the honour and privileges of the latter, station. A brevet is a warrant, without scal.

BREVIARY.† n. s. [breviaire, Fr. brevarium, Lat.]

1. An abridgement; epitomie; a compendium.

Cresconius, an African bishop, has given us an abridgement or breviary thereof.

Some few naked breviaries of their wars and leagues.

Sprat, Hist. R. Soc. p. 43.

Peter Comestor's Historia Scholastica, a sort of breviary of the Old and New Testament.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ii. 108.

2. The book containing the daily service of the church of Rome, as contradistinguished from the missal.

The sermon of the martyrs, which is found among the homilies of St. Augustine and Leo, and in the Roman breviary is appointed to be read at the common festival days of many martyrs.

Abp. Usher's Answer to the Jesuit Malone, p. 333.
If you say they were not saved, then your Roman martyrology, all your missals and breviaries are manifestly false.

Rp. Barlow's Remains, p. 460.

BREVIATE.† n. s. [from brevis, brevio, Lat.]

1. A short compendium.

He shall less need the help of breviates, or historical rhapsodies.

Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

It is obvious to the shallowest discourses, that the whole counsel of God, as far as it is incumbent for man to know, is comprised in one breviate of evangelical truth. Decay of Piety.

2. A lawyer's brief.

First, he that led the cavalcade

Wore a sow-gelder's flagellet,

On which he blew as strong a levet,

As well-fer'd lawyer on his breviate.

Hudibras, P. ii. c. 2.

To BREVIATE.* v. a. [Lat. brevio.] To abbreviate.

Sherwood.

BREVIATURE. n. s. [from brevio, Lat.] An abbreviation.

BREVIER. n. s. A particular size of letter used in printing; so called, probably, from being originally used in printing a breviary; as,

Nor love thy life, nor hate, but what thou liv'st,

Live well; how long or short, permit to Heav'n.

Milton.

BREVITY.† n. s. [brevitas, Lat. brieveté, Fr.] Conciseness; shortness; contraction into few words.

Virgil, studying brevity, and having the command of his own language, could bring those words into a narrow compass, which a translator cannot render without circumlocutions.

Dryden.

To BREW.† v. a. [brouwen, Dutch; brawen, German; brupan, Saxon; brugga, Goth. bruer, old Fr.]

1. To make liquours by mixing several ingredients.

We have drinks also brewed with several herbs, and roots, and spices.

Bacon.

Mercy guard me!

Hence with thy brew'd enchantments, foul deceiver.

Milton, Comus.

2. To put into preparation.

Here's neither bush nor shrub to bear off any weather at all, and another storm brewing.

Shakespeare, Tempest.

3. To mingle.

Take away these chalices; go, brew me a pottle of sack finely.

Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

4. Pope seems to use the word indeterminately.

Or brew fierce tempests on the watery main,

Or o'er the globe distil the kindly rain.

Pope, Rape of the Lock.

5. To contrive; to plot.

I found it to be the most malicious and frantick surmise, and the most contrary to his nature, that, I think, had ever been brewed from the beginning of the world, howsoever countenanced by a libellous pamphlet of a fugitive physician, even in print.

Wotton.

To BREW. v. n. To perform the office of a brewer.

I keep his house, and wash, wring, brew, bake, scour, dress meat, and make the beds, and do all myself.

Shakespeare.

BREW.† n. s. [from the verb.] Manner of brewing; or thing brewed.

Trial would be made of the like brew with potatoe roots, or burr roots, or the pith of artichokes, which are nourishing meats.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Above the northern nests of feather'd snows,

The brew of thunders, and the flaming forge

That forms the crooked lightning.

Young, Night Th. 9.

BRE'WAGE.† n. s. [from brew.] Mixture of various things.

Go, brew me a pottle of sack finely.

—With eggs, sir? —

—Simple of itself: I'll no pullet-sperm in my brewage.

Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

After the malmsey, or some well-spiced brewage.

Milton, Areopagitica.

BRE'WER. n. s. [from brew.] A man whose profession it is to make beer.

When brewers marr their malt with water.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Men every day eat and drink, though I think no man can demonstrate out of Euclid or Apollonius, that his baker, or brewer, or cook, has not conveyed poison into his meat or drink.

Tillotson.

BREWERY.* n. s. [from brewer.] The place appropriated to brewing.

Over the bridge is a great porter-brewery.

Pennant.

I could not but be somewhat diverted by hearing Johnson talk in a pompous manner of his new office, and particularly of the concerns of the brewery, which it was at last resolved should be sold.

Boswell, Life of Johnson.

BRE'WHOUSE. n. s. [from brew and house.] A house appropriated to brewing.

In our brewhouses, bakehouses, and kitchens, are made divers drinks, breads, and meats.

Bacon, Atlantis.

BRE'WING.* n. s. See To BREW, 4th sense. In naval language, the appearance of black tempestuous clouds, arising gradually from a particular part of the hemisphere, and indicating an approaching storm.

Chambers.

BRE'WING. n. s. [from brew.] Quantity of liquor brewed at once.

A brewing of new beer, set by old beer, maketh it work again.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

BRE'WIS.† n. s. [Sax. brup, pl. brupar, sops, or little pieces of meat. In Yorkshire, breau is the term for such brewis. In Welsh, brw is a morsel. Huloet calls it "browesse made with bread or fat meat."]

A piece of bread soaked in boiling fat pottage, made of salted meat. It seems anciently to have meant broth, with meat in it.

Clerks of the kitchen, yeomen of the horse, to have a soupe [sup] at their maister's broth and brewes.

Harmar's Tr. of Beza's Sermons, p. 334.

He, going to their stately place, did find in every dish, Fat beef and brewis, and great store of dainty fowl and fish.

Warner's Albion's England.

We eating rascals,

Whose gods are beef and brewis!

Beaum. and Fl. Bonduca.

What an ocean of brewis shall I swim in.

Beaum. and Fl. D.

BRI'AR. n. s. See BRIER.

BRIBE.† n. s. [Bribe, in French, original. is to be fies a piece of bread, and is applied to, in his taken from the rest; it is therefore likely, A new bribe originally signified, among us, a share thing unjustly got. This etymological des given by Dr. Johnson, is not complete. B.

Shakespeare.

pears to have formerly signified what is given to a beggar; and in old Fr. is sometimes written briba, "reste de pain d'un repas, morceau de telle chose que ce soit," Roquet. Gloss. de la Lang. Rom. Bribear is both a beggar, and a greedy devourer, in old Fr. V. Cotgrave and Roquetfort. Hence, from the latter acceptation, bribe is used by Chaucer for what is given to an extortioner, Canterb. T. ver. 6960, ed. Tyrwhitt. Brib is also a scrap or morsel in Welsh. In the writers of the middle age, a bribe given to a judge is called quota litis, and the receiver campi or cambi particeps; because the spoils of the field, i. e. the profits of the cause were thus shared with the giver. V. Chambers, in V. BRIBE. This obsolete meaning seems to have been assumed, in the time of James the First, by the lord keeper Williams; for he can only mean fees (which word, by the way, is also used for pittance) in his letter to the Duke of Buckingham, where he says, "my charge is exceeding great, my bribes are very little." See Cabala, or Mysteries of State, 1654, p. 85.] A reward given to pervert the judgement or corrupt the conduct.

You have condemn'd and noted Iucius Pella,
For taking bribes here of the Sardinians. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.
Nor less may Jupiter to gold ascribe,
When he had turn'd himself into a bribe. Waller.

If a man be covetous, profits or bribes may put him to the test.
L'Estrange.

There's joy when to wild will you laws prescribe,
When you bid fortune carry back her bribe. Dryden.

To BRIBE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To gain by bribes; to give bribes, rewards, or hire, to bad purposes.

The great, 'tis true, can still th' electing tribe,
The bard may supplicate, but cannot bribe.
I. J.logue to Good-natured Man.

2. It is seldom, and not properly, used in a good sense.

How pow'rful are chaste vows! the wind and tide
You brib'd to combat on the English side. Dryden.

BRIBER.† n. s. [old Fr. bribear. See BRIBE.] One that pays for corrupt practices.

Affection is still a briber of the judgement; and it is hard for a man to admit a reason against the thing he loves; or to confess the force of an argument against an interest. South.

BRIBERY. n. s. [from bribe.] The crime of taking or giving rewards for bad practices.

There was a law made by the Romans, against the bribery and extortion of the governours of provinces: before, says Cicero, the governours did bribe and extort as much as was sufficient for themselves; but now they bribe and extort as much as may be enough not only for themselves, but for judges, jurors, and magistrates. Bacon.

No bribery of courts, or cabals of factions, or advantages of fortune, can remove him from the solid foundations of honour and fidelity. Dryden, Aurengz. Pref.

BRICK. n. s. [brick, Dutch; brique, Fr. according to Balei. Menage, from imbrex, Lat. whence brica.]

BRICK-KILN. n. s. [from brick and kiln.] A kiln; a place to burn bricks.

Like the Israelites in the brick-kilns, they multiplied the more for their oppression. Decay of Piety.

BRICKLAYER. n. s. [from brick and lay.] A man whose trade it is to build with bricks; a brick-mason.

The elder of them, being put to nurse,
And ignorant of his birth and parentage,
Became a bricklayer when he came to age. Shakspeare.

If you had liv'd, sir,
Time enough to have been interpreter
To Babel's bricklayers, sure the tow'r had stood. Donne.

BRICKLE.* adj. [Teut. brokel, from broken, to break. Formerly written brokle by us. See Huloet in BRITTLE, "brickle or brokle." Huloet and Barret explain bryckle as "soon broken, easy to be broken." In Cheshire, brichoe is brittle.] Brittle; frail; apt to break.

The altar, on the which this image staid,
Was, O great pity! built of brickle clay.

The brickle and variable doctrine of John Calvin in his institutions. Stapleton's Fortress of the Faith, (1565,) fol. 24. b. This man—of earthly matter maketh brickle vessels and graven images. Wisdom, xv. 13.

Cotgrave in V. Brigueux.

BRIDAL.† n. s. [Sax. byrdal, signifying both the wedding, and the wedding feast; epulum nuptiale, nuptia. Lye, in V. Byrdal, edit. Manning. But Butler, in his English Grammar of 1634, says "A brideale [is] of bride and ale; the word signifying not the wedding, but the wedding feast, Ind. a. 2. Some have asserted, that the bridal is so denominated from the circumstance of the bride, in our northern counties, selling ale on the wedding-day, for which she received handsome presents from her friends. The word bride-bush is attributed to the same custom, and is only another expression for bride-ale; a bush at the end of a stake being once the usual sign in country places for the alehouse. A divine of James the First's time has published "a bride-bush or wedding sermon; compendiously describing the duties of married persons, &c." 1st edit. 1617. A bride-wain, which in the north, means a hidden wedding, i. e. a wedding to which guests are invited, is attended with presents also for the bride.] The nuptial festival.

The brideale was fulfilled with men sitting at the mete.

Wicliffe, St. Matt. xxii.

I saw nuns and papists dance at a bridal.

Ascham, Lett. to Raven.

Looke! how the crowne, which Ariadne wore
Upon her ivory forehead that same day
That Theseus her unto his brideale bore.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. x. 13.

Nay, we must think, men are not gods;

Nor of them look for such observance always,

As fits the brideal.

Shakspeare, Othello.

A man that's bid to bride-ale, if he ha' cake

And drink enough, he need not wear his stake.

B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub.

Sweet day, so cool, so calm, so bright,

The bridal of the earth and sky,

Sweet dews shall weep thy fall to-night;

For thou must die.

Herbert.

In death's dark bow'rs our brideals we will keep,
And his cold hand

Shall draw the curtain when we go to sleep.

Dryden.

BRIDAL.† adj. [from the substantive.] Belonging to a wedding; nuptial; connubial.

Our wedding cheer to a sad funeral feast,

Our solemn hymns to sullen dirges change,

Our bridal flowers serve for a hurried corse.

Shakspeare.

Come, I will bring thee to thy bridal chamber.

Shakspeare.

The amorous bird of night

Sung spousal, and bid haste the evening star,

On his hill-top to light the bridal lamp.

Your ill-meaning politician lords,

Under pretence of bridal friends and guests,

Appointed to await me thirty spies.

Milton, S. A.

When to my arms thou brought'st thy virgin love,

Fair angels sung our bridal hymn above.

Dryden.

With all the pomp of woe, and sorrow's pride,

Oh, early lost! oh, fitter to be led

In cheerful splendour to the bridal bed!

Walsh.

For her the spouse prepares the bridal ring,

For her white virgins hymeneals sing.

Pope, El. to Abelard.

BRIDALTY.* n. s. [from bridal.] Celebration of the nuptial feast.

At quintin he,

In honour of this bridaltie,

Hath challeng'd either wide countee.

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

BRIDE.† n. s. [byrd, Saxon; brudur, in Runick; signifies a beautiful woman, Dr. Johnson says. But the Goth. bruth is perhaps the original; bruth, the daughter in law, St. Matt. x. 35. M. Goth. Vers. The Su. brud, a bride, is from this word.] A woman new married.

Help me mine own love's praises to resound,

No let the fame of any be envy'd;

So Orpheus did for his own bride.

Spenser, Epithal.

The day approach'd, when fortune should decide

Th' important enterprize, and give the bride.

Dryden, Feb.

These are tributes due from pious brides,

From a chaste matron, and a virtuous wife.

Smith, Phad. and Hip.

BRIDEBED.† n. s. [from bride and bed, Sax. byrbed.] Marriage-bed.

Now until the break of day,

Through this house each fairy stray;

To the best bridebed will we,

Which by us shall blessed be.

Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dr.

Would David's son, religious, just, and brave,

To the first bridebed of the world receive

A foreigner, a heathen, and a slave?

Prior.

BRIDEBUSH.* n. s. See BRIDAL.

BRIDECAKE. n. s. [from bride and cake.] A cake distributed to the guests at the wedding.

With the phant'sies of hey-troll,

Troll about the bridal bowl,

And divide the broad bridecake

Round about the bride's stake.

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

The writer, resolved to try his fortune, fasted all day, and, that he might be sure of dreaming upon something at night, procured an handsome slice of bridecake, which he placed very conveniently under his pillow.

Spectator, No. 597.

BRIDCHAMBER.* [from bride and chamber.] Sax. byrdbupe, the bride-boxer or chamber.] The nuptial chamber.

Can the children of the bride-chamber mourn as long as the bridegroom is with them?

St. Matt. ix. 15.

BRIDEGROOM.† n. s. [from bride and groom, Dr. Johnson says. The Saxon word is byrdguma, the Teut. brautigam, and the Dutch bruydegom; the two latter of which Minshew notices, and adds a very ancient German word for it, viz. brutigomo; the etymology of which he plausibly refers to the Germ. braut, a bride, and the Gr. γαμω, to marry. Skinner, noticing the collateral words which want the r in groom, contends, however, that bridegroom is manifestly the groom or servant of the bride, he being so called on the wedding-day. But the word means literally the bride's man, gumme being the old Gothick for a man; guma, the M. Gothick; whence the Germ. gomo, and the Sax. gumma, a man. Gom was so used in our own language. See Gom. Mr. Horne Tooke, as plausibly as Minshew and Skinner, argues in support of an etymology which he offers, that groom is applied to the person by whom something is attended; and that notwithstanding the introduction of the letter r into it, for which, he says, he cannot account, he is persuaded that it is the past participle of the A. Sax. verb gyman, curare, regere, custodire, cavere, attendere. But he had not considered the Gothick word; or the remark of another etymologist, that the Lat. homo is perhaps only another form of gomo or guma; by which the omission of the r is at once accounted for. See Whiter's Etymolog. Magnum, p. 355. It is obvious, that our word yeoman (the original of which Dr. Johnson has not rightly explained) is to be found in this northern etymology. Coles, in his dictionary, has bridgume for bridegroom.] A new married man.

As are those dulcet sounds in break of day,

That creep into the dreaming bridegroom's ear,

And summon him to marriage.

Shakspeare.

B R I

Why, happy bridegroom!

Why dost thou steal so soon away to bed?

Dryden.

BRIDEMAID.† n. s. [from bride and maid.] She who attends upon the bride.

In came the bridemaids with a posset.

Sir J. Suckling, Song on a Wedding.

The bride [among the Anglo-Saxons] was led by a matron, who was called the bride's woman, followed by a company of young maidens, who were called the bride's maids.

Strutt, Manners and Customs of the Eng. i. 76.

BRIDEMAN.† n. s. [from bride and man.] He who attends the bride and bridegroom at the nuptial ceremony; formerly called a bride-knight, and a bride-squire; as in Selden's Uxor Ebraica, and B. Jonson's Underwoods.

My virtuous maid, this day I'll be your *bride*man.

Beaum. and Fl. Wife for a Month.

The friends [of persons to be married] may be understood such as the ancients called *paranymphe*s or *bride*men.

Wheatly on the Common Prayer.

BRIDESTAKE. n. s. [from bride and stake.] It seems to be a post set in the ground, to dance round, like a maypole.

Round about the *bride*stake. B. Jonson, Underwoods.

BRIDEWELL. n. s. [The palace built by St. Bride's, or Bridget's well, was turned into a workhouse.] A house of correction.

He would contribute more to reformation than all the work-houses and *Bride*wells in Europe. Spectator, No. 157.

BRIDGE.† n. s. [Su. Goth. brygga; Sax. brýce, brugg; old Fr. brug, bruge, and brige; the common word, in the north of England, for a bridge. Ihre states the Su. Goth. "bro, stratum aliquod," as the root of brygga.]

1. A building raised over water for the convenience of passage.

What need the bridge much broader than the flood?

Shakspeare.

And proud Araxes, whom no bridge could bind. Dryden.

2. The upper part of the nose.

The raising gently the bridge of the nose, doth prevent the deformity of a saddle nose. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. The supporter of the strings in stringed instruments of musick.

To BRIDGE.† v. a. [from the noun.] Of this unusual word Dr. Johnson cites only the following example in the passage of Milton, whom a literary friend supposes to have coined this verb. But I find bridged in Sherwood's dictionary of 1632, with the explanation, "that hath a bridge over it."

To raise a bridge over any place.

Xerxes, the liberty of Greece to yoke,

From Susa, his Memnonian palace high,

Came to the sea; and, over Hellespont

Bridging his way, Europe with Asia join'd.

Milton, P. L. x. 310.

BRIDGY.* adj. [from bridge.] Full of bridges.

Sherwood.

BRIDLE.† n. s. [old Fr. bridel, Sax. brubl.]

1. The headstall and reins by which a horse is restrained and governed.

They seiz'd at last

His courser's bridle and his feet embrac'd.

Dryden, Fob.

2. A restraint; a curb; a check.

The king resolved to put that place, which some men fancied to be a bridle upon the city, into the hands of such a man as he might rely upon. Clarendon.

A bright genius often betrays itself into many errors, without a continual bridle on the tongue. Watts.

B R I

To BRIDLE.† v. a. [Sax. brublian.]

1. To restrain, or guide by a bridle.

I bridle in my struggling muse with pain,
That longs to launch into a bolder strain.

Addison.

2. To put a bridle on any thing.

The queen of beauty stopp'd her bridled doves;
Approv'd the little labour of the Loves.

Prior.

3. To restrain; to govern.

The disposition of things is committed to them, whom law may at all times bridle, and superiour power controul.

Hooker, § 9.

With a strong, and yet a gentle hand,
You bridle faction, and our hearts command.

Waller.

To BRIDLE.† v. n. To hold up the head.

How the fool bridles! how she twitters at him!

Beaum. and Fl. Pilgrim.

BRIDLEHAND. n. s. [from bridle and hand.] The hand which holds the bridle in riding.

In the turning, one might perceive the bridlehand something gently stir; but, indeed, so gently, as it did rather distil virtue than use violence. Sidney, b. ii.

The heat of summer put his blood into a ferment, which affected his bridlehand with great pain. Wiseman's Surgery.

BRIDLER.* n. s. [from bridle.] He who directs or restrains as by a bridle.

The prelates — boast themselves the only bridlers of schism.

Milton, Reason of Ch. Gov. B. i. ch. 7.

A goose-bridler; a nick-name for a lawyer.

Cotgrave, in V. Brydoye.

BRIEF. adj. [brevis, Lat. brief, Fr.]

1. Short; concise. It is now seldom used but of words.

A play there is, my lord, some ten words long,

Which is as brief as I have known a play;

But by ten words, my lord, it is too long,

Which makes it tedious.

Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dr.

I will be mild and gentle in my words, —

— And brief, good mother, for I am in haste.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

I must begin with rudiments of art,

To teach you gamut in a *brief*er sort,

More pleasant, pretty, and effectual.

Shakspeare, Tam. of Shrew.

They nothing doubt prevailing, and to make it brief wars.

Shakspeare, Coriolanus

The brief stile is that which expresseth much in little.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

If I had quoted more words, I had quoted more profaneness; and therefore Mr. Congreve has reason to thank me for being brief. Collier, View of the Stage.

2. Contracted; narrow.

The shring of Venus, or straight pight Minerva,

Postures beyond brief nature.

Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

BRIEF.† n. s. [Icelandick, bréf, diploma; Dutch, brief. See BREVE.]

1. A writing of any kind.

There is a brief, how many sports are ripe:

Make choice of which your highness will see first.

Shakspeare.

The apostolical letters are of a twofold kind and difference, viz. some are called briefs, because they are comprised in a short and compendious way of writing. Ayliffe.

2. A short extract, or epitome.

But how you must begin this enterprize,

I will your highness thus in brief advise.

Spenser, F. Q.

I doubt not but I shall make it plain, as far as a sum or brief can make a cause plain. Bacon, Holy War.

The brief of this transaction is, these springs that arise here are impregnated with vitriol. Woodward, on Fossils.

3. [In law.] A writ whereby a man is summoned to answer to any action; or it is any precept of the king in writing, issuing out of any court, whereby he commands any thing to be done.

Cowel.

4. The writing given the pleaders, containing the case.

The brief with weighty crimes was charg'd,
On which the pleader much enlarg'd. Swift.

The young fellow had a very good air, and seem'd to hold his brief in his hand rather to help his action, than that he wanted notes for his further information. Tatler, No. 186.

5. Letters patent, giving licence to a charitable collection for any public or private loss.

6. [In musick.] A measure of quantity, which contains two strokes down in bejting time, and as many up. Harris.

BRIEFLY.† adv. [from brief.]

1. Concisely; in few words.

I will speak in that manner which the subject requires; that is, probably, and moderately, and briefly. Bacon.

The modest queen a while, with downcast eyes,
Ponder'd the speech; then briefly thus replies. Dryden.

2. Quickly.

Ant. Go, put on thy defences. Er. Briefly, sir. •

Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

BRIEFNESS.† n. s. [from brief.] Concisceness; shortness.

They excel in grandity and gravity, in smoothness and propriety, in quickness and briefness. Camden.

As Quintilian saith, there is a briefness of the parts sometimes that makes the whole long. B. Jonson's Discoveries.

My lord, long wish'd for, welcome!

'Tis a sweet briefness; yet in that short word

All pleasures, which I may call mine, begin;

And may they long increase, before they find

A second period! Beaum. and Fl. Martial Maid.

BRIER. n. s. [briær, Sax.] A plant. The sweet and the wild sorts are both species of the rose.

What subtle hole is this,

Whose mouth is cover'd with rude growing briers?

Shakspeare.

Then thrice under a brier doth creep,

Which at both ends was rooted deep,

And over it three times doth leap;

Her magick much availing.

Drayton's Nymphid.

BUIERY.† adj. [from brier.] Rough; thorny; full of briers. Sherwood.

BUIERY.* n. s. [from brier; so we say a shrubbery.] A place where briers grow. Hulcot.

BRIG, and possibly also BRIX, is derived from the Saxon, briec, a bridge; which, to this day, in the northern counties, is called a brigg, and not a bridge. Gibson's Camden.

BRIG.* n. s. [an abbreviation perhaps of brigantine, which see.] A light vessel with two masts.

BRIGADE.† n. s. [brigade, Fr. It is now generally pronounced with the accent on the last syllable, Dr. Johnson says; but nothing more. Milton wrote it brigad in order to urge, perhaps, an accentuation opposite to that of the French on the second syllable. He was no friend to the French language. But, in his own time, and long before the publication of the Paradise Lost, brigade was so written, and also accented on the first syllable. The etymology perhaps may be traced to the Goth. brigd. See BRIGUE. But some deduce it from brigandine, armour, or brigand, an ill-disciplined soldier.] A division of forces; a body of men, consisting of several squadrons of horse, or battalions of foot.

Can Lesley's regiment thus wheel about

The brigade of our clergy? put to rout

Our bishops, deans, and doctors?

Rome for Canterbury, (1641,) p. 7.

Thither, wing'd with speed,

A numerous brigad hasten'd.

Milton, P. L. i. 674.

With rapid wheels, or fronted brigads, form'd. Ibid. ii. 532.

Here the Bavarian duke his brigades leads,

Gallant in arms, and gaudy to behold.

Philips.

To BRIGADE. v. a. [old Fr. brigader, "to associate, to troop together," Cotgrave. That such a verb should escape especial notice in a Military Dictionary, is curious; but the reader will look for it in vain, at least in modern compilations of that kind.] To form into a brigade; to apportion a body of military forces.

BRIGADE Major. An officer appointed by the brigadier [or general] to assist him in the management and ordering of his brigade; and he there acts as a major does in an army. Harris.

BRIGADIER General.† An officer who commands a brigade of horse or foot in an army; next in order below a major general.

The Austrians have no brigadiers, and the French have no major-generals. Ld. Chesterfield.

BRIGAND. n. s. [brigand, Fr.] A robber; one that belongs to a band of robbers.

There might be a rout of such barbarous thievish brigands in some rocks; but it was a degeneration from the nature of man, a political creature. Bramhall against Hobbes.

BRIGANDAGE.* n. s. [Fr. brigandage.] Theft; plunder.

It was not at all for the publick good, to suffer peasants and mechanicks to run up and down the woods and forests, armed; which not only brings them to neglect their proper trades and employments to the damage of the publick and their families, but in time inevitably draws them on to robbery and brigandage.

Warburton, Alliance of Ch. and State, (1st. ed.) p. 129.

BRIGANDINE.† n. s.

1. A light vessel; such as has been formerly used by corsairs or pirates. [old Fr. brigandin; "brigantin, sort de vaisseau léger." Roquefort.]

Like as a warlike brigandine, apply'd

To fight, lays forth her threatful pikes afore

The engines, which in them sad death do hide.

Spenser.

2. A coat of mail. [old Fr. brigandine.]

Furbish the spears, and put on the brigandines.

Jerem. xlv. 4.

Then put on all thy gorgeous arms, thy helmet

And brigandine of brass, thy broad habergeon,

Vantrance, and greves.

Milton, S. 1.

BRIGANTINE.† n. s. [Fr. brigantin. See BRIGANDINE.] A light vessel.

In your brigantine you sail'd to see

The Adriatick wedded.

Otway, Venice Preserved.

The consul obliged him to deliver up his fleet, and restore the ships, reserving only to himself two brigantines.

Arbuthnot.

BRIGHT.† adj. [Goth. bairht; Sax. beopht, buiht, splendid, clear. Some have thought the Welsh brith, painted, as the origin of our word.]

1. Shining; full of light.

Through a cloud

Drawn round about thee like a radiant shrine,

Dark, with excessive bright, thy skirts appear.

Milton, P. L.

Then shook the sacred shrine, and sudden light

Sprung through the roof, and made the temple bright.

Dryden.

2. Shining as a body reflecting light.

Bright brass, and brighter domes.

Chapman.

Thy eyes are seen in diamonds bright.

Gay.

Bright as the sun her eyes the gazers strike.

Pope.

3. Clear; transpicious.

From the brightest wines

He turn'd abhorrent.

Thomson.

While the bright Seine t'exalt the soul,

With sparkling plenty crowns the bowl.

Benton.

4. Clear; evident.

He must not proceed too swiftly, that he may with more ease, with brighter evidence, and with surer success, draw the learner on. Watts, Improvement of the Mind.

5. Resplendent with charms.

Thy beauty appears,

In its graces and airs,

All bright as an angel new dropp'd from the sky. Parnell.

O Liberty, thou goddess heavenly bright,

Profuse of bliss, and pregnant with delight!

Bright as the sun, and like the morning fair, Addison.

Such Chloe is, and common as the air. Granville.

To-day black omens threat the brightest fair

That e'er engag'd a watchful spirit's care. Pope.

Thou more dreaded foe, bright beauty, shine. Young.

6. Illuminated with science; sparkling with wit.

Generous, gay, and gallant nation,

Great in arms, and bright in art. Pope.

If parts allure thee, think how Bacon shin'd,

The wisest, brightest, meanest of mankind. Pope.

7. Illustrious; glorious.

This is the worst, if not the only stain,

Of the brightest annals of a female reign. Cotton.

To BRIGHTEN.† v. a. [from bright, Goth. bairtjan, to make manifest.]

1. To make bright; to make to shine.

The purple morning rising with the year,

Salutes the spring, as her celestial eyes

Adorn the world, and brighten up the skies. Dryden.

2. To make luminous by light from without.

An ecstacy, that mothers only feel,

Plays round my heart, and brightens all my sorrow,

Like gleams of sunshine in a lowering sky. Philips.

3. To make gay, or cheerful.

Hope elevates, and joy

Brightens his crest. Milton, P. L.

This makes Jack brighten up the room wherever he enters, and changes the severity of the company into that gaiety and good humour, into which his conversation generally leads them. Taller, No. 206.

4. To make illustrious.

The present queen would brighten her character if she would exert her authority to instil virtues into her people. Swift.

Yet time ennobles, or degrades each line;

It brighten'd Craggs's, and may darken thine. Pope.

5. To make acute, or witty.

To BRIGHTEN.† v. n. To grow bright; to clear up; as, the sky brightens.

But let a lord once own the happy lines;

How the stile brightens, how the sense refines. Pope.

To look upon the soul as going on from strength to strength; to consider that she is to shine for ever in new accessions of glory, and brighten to all eternity; that she will still be adding virtue to virtue, and knowledge to knowledge; carries in it something wonderfully agreeable to that ambition which is natural to the mind of man. Addison, Spect. No. III.

BRIGHTBURNING.* adj. [from bright and burning.]

Burning brightly or briskly.

What fool hath added water to the sea,

Or brought a faggot to bright-burning Troy? Titus Andr. iii. 1.

BRIGHTEYED.* adj. [from bright and eye.] Having bright eyes.

Bright-eyed science watches round. Gray, Install. Ode.

BRIGHTHAIR.* adj. [from bright and hair.] Having hair of a bright colour.

Ther, bright-hair'd Vesta long of yore,

To solitary Saturn bore. Milton, Il Pens. ver. 23.

BRIGHTHARNESSED.* adj. [from bright and harness.]

Having bright armour. See HARNESSED.

And all about the courtly stable

Bright-harnes'd angels sit in order servicable. Milton, Ode on the Nativity.

BRIGHTLY.† adv. [Sax. brihtlice.] Splendidly; with lustre.

Safely I slept, till brightly dawning shone

The morn conspicuous on her golden throne. Pope.

BRIGHTNESS. n. s. [from bright.]

1. Lustre; splendour; glitter.

The blazing brightness of her beauty's beam,

And glorious light of her sun-shining face,

To tell, were as to strive against the stream. Spenser, F. Q.

A sword, by long lying still, will contract a rust, which shall deface its brightness. South.

The moon put on her veil of light,

Mysterious veil of brightness made,

That's both her lustre and her shade. Hudibras.

Vex'd with the present moment's heavy gloom,

Why seek we brightness from the years to come? Prior.

2. Acuteness.

The brightness of his parts, the solidity of his judgement, and the candour and generosity of his temper, distinguished him in an age of great politeness. Prior.

BRIGHTSHINING.* part. adj. [from bright and shine.]

Shining brightly.

The light of your brightshining starre.

Spenser, Hymn in Hon. of Beauty.

In the midst of this bright-shining day,

I spy a black, suspicious, threatening cloud.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. III.

BRIGOSE.* adj. [from the old Fr. Germ. or low Lat.

briga, contention. See BRIGUE.] Quarrelsome; contentious.

Which two words, as conscious that they were very brigose and severe, (if too generally taken, therefore) he softens them in the next immediate words by an apology.

Puller's Moderation of the Ch. of Eng. p. 324.

BRIGUE.* n. s. [Goth. brigd, Germ. briga, old Fr.

briga, low Lat. briga. Cotgrave translates the Fr.

word into "a canvas, a private suit, an underhand labouring for an office." In this softened sense both the verb and substantive are found in our modern language. In our old language, the substantive implies open and violent contention.] Strife;

quarrel.

Ye known wel that mine adversaries han begonne this debat and brige by their outrage. Chaucer, Tale of Melibeus.

The rise and decay of the papal power, the politicks of the court, the brigues of the cardinals, the tricks of the conclave.

Ld. Chesterfield.

To BRIGUE.* v. a. [Fr. briguer.] To canvas; to solicit. See BRIGUE.

Though I think too justly of myself to believe I am qualified to enter into the former of these lists; you may conclude, if you please, that I am too proud to brigue for an admission into the latter. Hurd.

BRIILIANCY. n. s. [from brilliant.] Lustre; splen-dour.

BRIILLIANT.† adj. [brillant, Fr. briller, old Fr.

to glitter, from bril, a sparkle.] Shining; sparkling; splendid; full of lustre.

So have I seen in larder dark

Of veal a lucid loin,

Replete with many a brilliant spark,

As wise philosophers remark,

At once both stink and shine. Dorset.

BRIILLIANT. n. s. A diamond of the finest cut, formed into angles, so as to refract the light, and shine more.

In deference to his virtues I forbear

To shew you what the rest in orders were;

This brilliant is so spotless and so bright,

He needs not foil, but shines by his own proper light. Dryden.

BRIILLIANTLY.* adv. [from brilliant.] Splendidly.

One of these [banners] is most brilliantly displayed.

Warton's Hist. Eng. Poetry. ii. 56.

B R I

BRILLIANTNESS. n. s. [from brilliant.] Splendour; lustre.

BRILLS. n. s. The hair on the eyelids of a horse.

BRIM.† n. s. [brim, Icelandic, brimn, Sax.]

1. The edge of any thing.

His hat being in the form of a turban, daintily made, the locks of his hair came down about the brims of it. Bacon.

This cited place lies upon the very brim of another corruption. Milton, of Prelat. Episcopacy.

2. The upper edge of any vessel.

How my head in ointment swims!

How my cup o'erlooks her brims!

So when with crackling flames a cauldron fries,

The bubbling waters from the bottom rise,

Above the brims they force their fiery way.

Thus in a basin drop a shilling,

Then fill the vessel to the brim,

You shall observe, as you are filling,

The pond'rous metal seems to swim.

3. The top of any liquor.

The feet of the priests, that bare the ark, were dipped in the brim of the water. Joshua, iii. 15.

4. The bank of a fountain, river, or the sea: the shore.

As the bright sunne, what time his fiery teme

Towards the western brim begins to draw,

'Gins to abate the brightness of his beme.

Spenser, F. Q. v. ix. 35.

It [the fountain] told me it was Cynthia's own,

Within whose cheerful brims

That curious nymph had oft been known

To bathe her snowy limbs.

Drayton, Quest. of Cynthia.

By dimpled brook and fountain-brim,

The wood-nymphs deck'd with daises trim,

Their merry wakes and pastimes keep. Milton, Com. ver. 119.

The sun ———

With wheels yet hovering o'er the ocean-brim,

Shot parallel to the earth his dewy ray. Milton, P. L. v. 140.

BRIM.* adj. [Sax. brýme, conspicuous. The adjective brema, i. e. fiere, is often written by our old authors brim or bryme. See BREME.] Publick; well-known. Obsolete.

That thou dost hold me in disdain,

Is brim abroad, and made a gibe to all that keep this plain.

Warner, Albion's England.

To BRIM. v. a. [from the noun] To fill to the top.

May thy brimmed waves, for this,

Their full tribute never miss,

From a thousand petty rills. Milton, Com. ver. 924.

This said, a double wreath Evander twin'd;

And poplars black and white his temples bind:

Then brims his ample bowl; with like design

The rest invoke the gods, with sprinkled wine.

Dryden.

To BRIM. v. n. To be full to the brim.

Now horrid frays

Commence, the brimming glasses now are hurl'd

With dire intent.

Philips.

To BRIMFILL.* v. a. [from brim and fill.] To fill to the top.

By all thy brim-fill'd bowls of fierce desire.

Crashaw's Poems, p. 197.

BRIMFUL. adj. [from brim and full.] Full to the top; overcharged.

Measure my case, how by thy beauty's filling,

With seed of woes my heart brimful is charged.

We have try'd the utmost of our friends;

Our legions are brimful, our cause is ripe. Shakspeare, J. Cæs.

Her brimful eyes, that ready stood,

And only wanted will to weep a flood,

Releas'd their watery store.

The good old king at parting wrung my hand,

His eyes brimful of tears, then sighing cry'd,

Prithee, be careful of my son.

Addison, Cato.

B R I

BRIMFULNESS. n. s. [from brimful.] Fulness to the top.

The Scot, on his unfurnish'd kingdom,

Came pouring like a tide into a beach,

With ample and brimfulness of his force. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

BRIMLESS.* adj. [from brim and less.] Without an edge or brim.

They [the Jews] wear little black brimless caps, as the Moors red. L. Addison, State of the Jews, p. 10.

BRIMMER. n. s. [from brim.] A bowl full to the top.

When healths go round, and kindly brimmers flow,

Till the fresh garlands on their foreheads glow.

Dryden, Lucret. b. iii.

BRIMMING. adj. [from brim.] Full to the brim.

And twice besides her breastings never fail,

To store the dairy with a brimming pail.

Dryden.

BRIMSTONE. n. s. [corrupted from brin or brinstone, that is, fiery stone.† Sulphur. See SULPHUR.]

From his infernal furnace, forth he threw

Huge flames that dimmed all the heavens' light,

Enroll'd in dusky smoke and brimstone blue. Spenser, F. Q.

The vapour of the grotto del Cane is generally supposed to be sulphureous, though I can see no reason for such a supposition: I put a whole bundle of lighted brimstone matches to the smoke, they all went out in an instant. Addison on Italy.

BRIMSTONY.† adj. [from brimstone.] Full of brimstone; containing sulphur; sulphureous.

The Ismaelite

King of Thogarma, and his habergions

Brimstony, blue, and fiery.

B. Jonson, Alchemist.

BRINDED.† adj. [brin, Fr. a branch, according to

Dr. Johnson, who defines the word streaked, or tabby.

The Fr. brin, is indeed a little sprig, and generally any small substance. But it is hardly the etymology of brinded, which is only another form of brended, from the Sax. brēman, to burn; and means a reddish broken colour, which, in the north of England, is often applied to cattle; as, a brinded cow. See

BROWN.] Of a brown colour, originally; thence,

of a varied colour; streaked.

Thrice the brinded cat hath mew'd.

She tam'd the brinded lioness,

And spotted mountain pard. Shakspeare, Macb.

My brinded heifer to the stake I lay,

Two thriving calves she suckles twice a-day.

Milton, Comus.

BRINDLE. n. s. [from brinded.] The state of being brinded.

A natural brindle.

Clarissa.

BRINDLED. adj. [from brindle.] Brinded; streaked.

The bear, my sisters! aim the fatal dart,

And strike the brindled monster to the heart.

Addison, Ovid.

BRINE.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson offers no etymology.

But the word is the Sax. brýne, salt liquor, perhaps from brým, the sea, which is the old Goth.

brim.]

1. Water impregnated with salt.

The encreasing of the weight of water, will encrease its power of bearing; as we see brine, when it is salt enough, will bear an egg. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Dissolve sheeps dung in water, and add to it as much salt as will make a strong brine, in this liquor steep your corn.

Mortimer.

2. The sea, as it is salt.

All, but mariners,

Plung'd in the foaming brine, did quit the vessel,

Then all afire with me. Shakspeare, Tempest.

The air was calm, and, on the level brine,

Sleek Panope, with all her sisters, play'd.

As when two adverse winds

Engage with horrid shock, the ruffled brine

Roars stormy. Philips.

3. Tears, as they are salt.

B R I

What a deal of brine

Hath wash'd thy sallow cheeks for Rosaline! Shakspeare.
TO BRINE. * v. a. In husbandry, to brine corn is an operation performed on the wheat seed, by a liquor prepared for the purpose, to prevent the smut. Chambers.
BRINEPIT. n. s. [from brine and pit.] Pit of salt water.

Then I lov'd thee,
 And shew'd thee all the qualities o' th' isle,
 The fresh springs, brinepits, barren place, and fertile. Shakspeare, Tempest.

TO BRING. † v. a. [Goth. briggan, brunzan, Sax. preter. I brought; part. pass. brought; brahta, Goth. bpoht, Sax.]

1. To fetch from another place; distinguished from to carry, or convey, to another place.
 I was the chief that rais'd him to the crown,
 And I'll be chief to bring him down again. Shakspeare.
 And as she was going to fetch it, he called to her, and said,
Bring me, I pray thee, a morsel of bread in thy hand. 1 Kings, xvii. 11.

A registry of lands may furnish easy securities of money, that shall be brought over by strangers. Temple.

2. To convey, or carry to another place; the preceding distinction not being always observed, which Dr. Johnson has not noticed. This sense, however, is rarely used.

Thou shalt go unto my country, and to my kindred, and take a wife unto my son Isaac. And the servant said unto him, Peradventure the woman will not be willing to follow me unto this land: must I needs bring thy son again unto the land from whence thou camest? Genesis, xxiv. 4, 5.

"Must I needs bring thy son again, &c." His doubt was, whether, if a woman would not come with him into Canaan, he should be bound to go again, a second time, and carry Isaac to her. Bp. Patrick on Genesis.

The steward demanded, whether, if he could not persuade the person, whom Isaac was to marry, to come and dwell with Isaac in Canaan, he might carry him to her, into that country which Abraham had forsaken. Pyle on Genesis.

3. To convey in one's own hand; not to send by another.

And if my wish'd alliance please your king,
 Tell him he should not send the peace, but bring. Dryden.

4. To produce; to procure, as a cause.

There is nothing will bring you more honour, and more ease, than to do what right in justice you may. Bacon.

5. To reduce; to recal.

Bring back gently their wandering minds, by going before them in the train they should pursue, without any rebuke. Locke.

Nathan's fable had so good an effect, as to bring the man after God's own heart to a right sense of his guilt. Spectator, No. 83.

6. To attract; to draw along.

In distillation, the water ascends difficultly, and brings over with it some part of the oil of vitriol. Newton, Opticks.

7. To put into any particular state or circumstances, to make liable to any thing.

Having got the way of reasoning, which that study necessarily brings the mind to, they might be able to transfer it to other parts of knowledge, as they shall have occasion. Locke.

The question for bringing the king to justice was immediately put, and carried without any opposition, that I can find. Swift, Presbyterian Plea.

8. To lead by degrees.

A due consideration of the vanities of the world, will naturally bring us to the contempt of it; and the contempt of the world will as certainly bring us home to ourselves. L' Estrange.

The understanding should be brought to the difficult and petty parts of knowledge, by insensible degrees. Locke.

9. To recal; to summons.

B R I

But those, and more than I to mind can bring,
 Menalcas has not yet forgot to sing. Dryden.

10. To induce; to prevail upon.

The nature of the things, contained in those words, would not suffer him to think otherwise, how, or whensoever, he is brought to reflect on them. Locke.

It seems so preposterous a thing to men, to make themselves unhappy in order to happiness, that they do not easily bring themselves to it. Locke.

Profitable employments would be no less a diversion than any of the idle sports in fashion, if men could but be brought to delight in them. Locke.

11. To attend; to accompany.

Yet, give leave, my lord,
 That we may bring you something on the way. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

Honey-sweet husband, let me bring thee to Staines. Shakspeare, K. Hen. V.

12. To bring about. [See ABOUT.] To bring to pass; to effect.

This he conceives not hard to bring about,
 If all of you would join to help him out. Dryden, Ind. Emp.

This turn of mind threw off the oppositions of envy and competition; it enabled him to gain the most vain and impracticable into his designs, and to bring about several great events, for the advantage of the publick. Addison, Freeholder.

13. To bring forth. To give birth to; to produce.

The good queen,
 For she is good, hath brought you forth a daughter:
 Here 'tis; commends it to your blessing. Shakspeare.

More wonderful
 Than that which, by creation, first brought forth
 Light out of darkness! Milton, P. L.

Bewail thy falsehood, and the pious works
 It hath brought forth, to make thee memorable
 Among illustrious women, faithful wives. Milton, S. A.

Bellona leads thee to thy lover's hand,
 Another queen brings forth another brand,
 To burn with foreign fires her native land! Dryden, Æneid.

Idleness and luxury bring forth poverty and want; and this tempts men to injustice; and that causeth enmity and animosity. Tillotson.

The value of land is raised, when it is fitted to bring forth a greater quantity of any valuable product. Locke.

14. To bring forth. To bring to light.

The thing that is hid, bringeth he forth to light. Job, xxxviii. 11.

15. To bring in. To place in any condition.

He protests he loves you,
 And needs no other suitor, but his liking,
 To bring you in again. Shakspeare, Othello.

16. To bring in. To reduce.

Send over into that realm such a strong power of men, as should perforce bring in all that rebellious rout, and loose people. Spenser on Ireland.

17. To bring in. To afford gain.

The sole measure of all his courtesies is, what return they will make him, and what revenue they will bring him in. South.
 Trade brought us in plenty and riches. Locke.

18. To bring in. To introduce.

Entertain no long discourse with any; but, if you can, bring in something to season it with religion. Taylor.

There is but one God, who made heaven and earth, and sea and winds; but the folly and madness of mankind brought in the images of gods. Stillingfleet.

The fruitfulness of Italy, and the like, are not brought in by force, but naturally rise out of the argument. Addison.

Since he could not have a seat among them himself, he would bring in one who had more merit. Tatler.

Quotations are best brought in, to confirm some opinion controverted. Swift.

19. To bring off. To clear; to procure to be acquitted; to cause to escape.

I trusted to my head, that has betrayed me; and I found fault with my legs, that would otherwise have brought me off. L' Estrange.

Set a kite upon the bench, and if it is forty to one he'll bring off a crow at the bar. L'Estrange.

The best way to avoid this imputation, and to bring off the credit of our understanding, is to be truly religious. Milton.

20. To bring on. To engage in action.

If there be any that would reign, and take up all the time, let him find means to take them off, and bring others on. Bacon.

21. To bring on. To produce as an occasional cause.

The fountains of the great deep being broke open, so as a general destruction and devastation was brought upon the earth, and all things in it. Burnet, Theory.

Soon as midnight brought on the dusky hour Friendliest to sleep and silence. Milton, P. L. v. 607.

The great question, which, in all ages, has disturbed mankind, and brought on them those mischiefs. Locke.

22. To bring over. To convert; to draw to a new party.

This liberty should be made use of upon few occasions, of small importance, and only with a view of bringing over his own side, another time, to something of greater and more publick moment. Swift on the Sentiments of a Church of Engl. man.

The protestant clergy will find it, perhaps, no difficult matter to bring great numbers over to the church. Swift.

23. To bring out. To exhibit; to shew.

If I make not this cheat bring out another, and the shearers prove sheep, let me be unrolled. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale.

Which he could bring out, where he had,
And what he bought them for, and paid. Hudibras.

These shake his soul, and, as they boldly press,
Bring out his crimes, and force him to confess. Dryden.

Another way made use of, to find the weight of the denarii, was by the weight of Greek coins; but those experiments bring out the denarius heavier. Arbuthnot.

To bring to. In naval language, to check the course of a ship, when she is advancing, by arranging the sails in such a manner, as that they shall counteract each other, and prevent her either from retreating or moving forward. In this situation, the ship is said to lie-by, or to lie-to. Chambers.

24. To bring to pass. To effect.

The thing is established by God, and God will bring it to pass. Genesis, xli. 32.

[She] in time's long and dark prospective glass,
Foresaw what future days should bring to pass. Milton, Vac. Exerc. v. 72.

25. To bring under. To subdue; to repress.

That sharp course which you have set down, for the bringing under of those rebels of Ulster, and preparing a way for their perpetual reformation. Spenser on Ireland.

To say, that the more capable, or the better deserver, hath such right to govern, as he may compulsorily bring under the less worthy, is idle. Bacon, Holy War.

26. To bring up. To educate; to instruct; to form.

The well bringing up of the people, serves as a most sure bond to hold them. Sidney, b. i.

He that takes upon him the charge of bringing up young men, especially young gentlemen, should have something more in him than Latin. Locke.

They frequently conversed with this lovely virgin, who had been brought up by her father in knowledge. Addison, Guardian.

27. To bring up. To introduce to general practice.

Several obliging deferences, condescensions, and submissions, with many outward forms and ceremonies, were first of all brought up among the politer part of mankind, who lived in courts and cities. Spectator, No. 119.

28. To bring up. To cause to advance.

Bring up your army; but, I think, you'll find,
They've not prepar'd for us. Shakespeare, Coriol.

29. To bring up. To bring back.

I will go down with thee into Egypt, and will also bring thee up again. Genesis, xli. 4.

30. To bring up. To introduce; to occasion.

VOL. I.

And the men which Moses sent to search the land, who returned, and made all the congregation to murmur against him by bringing up a slander upon the land; even those men that did bring up the evil report upon the land, died by the plague before the Lord. Numbers, xiv. 36, 37.

31. Bring retains in all its senses the idea of an agent, or cause producing a real or metaphorical motion of something towards something; for it is oft said; that he brought his companion out. The meaning is, that he was brought to something that was likewise without.

BRI'NGER. † n. s. [from bring.] The person that brings any thing.

Yet the first bringer of unwelcome news
Hath but a losing office: and his tongue
Sounds ever after as a sullen bell,
Remember'd tolling a dead friend. Shakespeare.

Best you see safe the bringer
Out of the host: I must attend mine office. Shakespeare.

The good king adores the books; feasts the bringers, who after fall to the business, and translated it out of the Hebrew into the Greek.

Donne, Hist. of the Sept. Epistle to the Reader.

BRI'NGER IN. * n. s. The person who introduces any thing.

Lucifer is a bringer in of light; and therefore the harbinger of the day. Sandys, Christ's Passion, Notes, p. 79.

he shall appear to the envious a scholar, a statesman, and a soldier. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

BRI'NISH. † adj. [from brine.] Having the taste of brine; salt.

Nero would be tainted with remorse
To hear and see her complaints, her brinish tears. Shakespeare.

For now I stand, as one upon a rock,
Environ'd with a wilderness of sea,
Who marks the waxing tide grow wave by wave;
Expecting ever when some envious surge
Will, in his brinish bowels, swallow him.

Shakespeare, Titus Andron.

Which saltness, [of the sea.] Aristotle says, is caused by the sun's exhaling the thinner and fresher parts thereof, leaving behind what is thick and brinish.

Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 188.

BRI'NISHNESS. n. s. [from brinish.] Saltness; tendency to saltness.

BRINK. n. s. [brink, Danish.] The edge of any place, as of a precipice or a river.

Th' amazed flames stand gather'd in a heap,
And from the precipice's brink retire,
Afraid to venture on so large a leap.

Dryden.

We stand therefore on the brinks and confines of those states at the day of doom.

Atterbury.

So have I seen, from Severn's brink,
A flock of geese jump down together;
Swim where the bird of Jove would sink.
And, swimming, never wet a feather.

Swift.

BRI'NY. adj. [from brine.] Salt.

He, who first the passage try'd,
In harden'd oak his heart did hide;
Or his, at least, in hollow wood,
Who tempted first the briny flood.

Dryden.

B R I

Then, briny seas, and tasteful springs, farewell,
Where fountain nymphs, confus'd with Nereids, dwell.

Addison on Italy.

A muriatick or briny taste seems to be produced by a mixture of an acid and alkaline salt; for spirit of salt, and salt of tartar, mixed, produce a salt like sea salt.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

BR'ONY. See BRYONY.

BRISK.† adj. [brusque, French, braska, Su. and Goth. to carry it highly or pertly.]

1. Lively; vivacious; gay; sprightly: applied to men.

BRITISH.* adj. [Sax. Byrtic.]

1. What relates to THE LAND WE LIVE IN, "our not-fearing Britain," as Shakspeare describes this country.

Imploing Divine assistance, that it may redound to his glory, and the good of the British nation, I now begin.

Milton, Hist. of England, B. i.

The British cannon formidably roars;

While, starting from his oozy bed,

The asserted ocean rears his reverend head;

To view and recognize his ancient lord again;

And, with a willing hand, restores

The fasces of the main.

Dryden, Threnod. Augustalis.

2. Applied to language, it means the Welsh.

What I here offer to the publick, is an explication of the antient British tongue, once the common language of Britain, and still preserved in the principality of Wales.

4. To let out any thing.
And now the field of death, the lists,
Were enter'd by antagonists,
And blood was ready to be broach'd,
When Hudibras in haste approach'd. Hudibras.

5. To give out, or utter any thing.

This error, that Pison was Ganges, was first broached by Josephus. Raleigh.

Those who were the chief instruments of raising the noise, made use of those very opinions themselves had broached, for arguments to prove, that the change of ministers was dangerous. Swift's Examiner.

To BROACH to.* In naval language, to turn suddenly to windward, so as to be in danger of oversetting. Chambers.

BRO'ACHER. n. s. [from broach.]

1. A spit.

The youth approach'd the fire, and, as it burn'd,
On five sharp broachers rank'd, the roast they turn'd;
These morsels stay'd their stomachs. Dryden.

2. An opener, or utterer of any thing; the first author.

There is much pride and vanity in the affectation of being the first broacher of an heretical opinion. L'Estrange.

Numerous parties denominate themselves, not from the grand Author and Finisher of our faith, but from the first broacher of their idolized opinions. Decay of Piety.

This opinion is commonly, but falsely, ascribed to Aristotle, not as its first broacher, but as its ablest patron. Cheyne.

BROAD.† adj. [Celt. brayd, vast; Goth. braid; Sax. brad; Su. bred, broad.]

1. Wide; extended in breadth; distinguished from length; not narrow.

The weeds that his broad spreading leaves did shelter
Are pull'd up root and all. Shakespeare.

The top may be justly said to grow broad, as the bottom narrower. Temple.

Of all your knowledge this vain fruit you have,
To walk with eyes broad open to your grave. Dryden.

So lofty was the pile, a Parthian bow,
With vigour drawn, must send the shaft below,
The bottom was full twenty fathoms broad. Dryden.

He launch'd the fiery bolt from pole to pole,
Broad burst the lightnings, deep the thunders roll. Pope.

2. Large.

To keep him at a distance from falsehood and cunning, which has always a broad mixture of falsehood; this is the fittest preparation of a child for wisdom. Locke.

3. Clear; open; not sheltered, not affording concealment.

In mean time he, with cunning to conceal
All thought of this from others, himself bore
In broad house, with the wooers us before. Chapman, Odyssey.

It no longer seeks the shelter of night and darkness, but appears in the broadest light. Decay of Piety.

If children were left alone in the dark, they would be no more afraid than in broad sunshine. Locke.

4. Gross; coarse.

The reeve and the miller are distinguished from each other, as much as the lady prioress and the broad apaking gap-toothed wife of Bath. Dryden, Fab. Pref.

Love made him doubt his broad barbarian sound;
By love, his want of words and wit he found. Dryden.

If open vice be what you drive at,
A name so broad will ne'er connive at. Dryden.

The broadest mirth unfeeling folly wears,
Less pleasing far than virtue's very tears. Pope.

Room for my lord! three jockeys in his train;
Six huntsmen with a shout precede his chair;
He grins, and looks broad nonsense with a stare. Pope.

5. Obscene; fulsome; tending to obscenity.

As chaste and modest as he is esteemed, it cannot be denied but in some places he is broad and fulsome. Dryden, Juv. Ded.

Though now arraign'd, he read with some delight;
Because he seems to chew the cud again,
When his broad comment makes the text too plain. Dryden.

6. Bold; not delicate; not reserved.

Who can speak *broad*er than he that has no house to put his head in? Such may rail against great buildings. Shakespeare.

From broad words, and 'cause he fail'd
His presence at the tyrant's feast, I hear,
Macduff lives in disgrace. Shakspeare.

BROAD as long. Equal upon the whole.

The mobile are still for levelling; that is to say, for advancing themselves: for it is as broad as long, whether they rise to others, or bring others down to them. L'Estrange.

BRO'ADAXE.* n. s. [Sax. bpad-æx.] Formerly a military weapon.

He [the Galloglass, or Irish foot-soldier,] being so armed in a long shirt of mayle down to the calf of his leg, with a long broad-axe in his hand. Spenser on Ireland.

BROAD-BLOWN.* part. adj. [from broad and blown.]

Huloet.

BROAD-BRIMMED.* adj. [from broad and brim.]

Having a broad border, brim, or edge.

What enemies were some ministers to periwigs, to high-crowned or broad-brimmed hats! Bp. Taylor, Artif. Hands, p. 119.

A broad-brimmed flat silver plate for sugar with Rhenish wine. Tatler, No. 245.

BROAD-CAST.* n. s. The method of cultivating corn, turnips, pulse, clover, &c. by sowing them with the hand at large. It is called the old husbandry, to distinguish it from the drill, horse-hoeing, or new husbandry. Chambers.

BROAD-CLOTH. n. s. [from broad and cloth.] A fine kind of cloth.

Thus, a wise taylor is not pinching;

But turns at ev'ry seam an inch in:

Or else, be sure, your broad-cloth breeches

Will ne'er be smooth, nor hold their stitches. Swift.

BROAD-EYED. adj. [from broad and eye.] Having a wide survey.

In despite of broad-ey'd watchful day,

I would into thy bosom pour my thoughts:

But, ah! I will not.

Shakspeare, K. John.

BROAD-FRONTED.* part. adj. [from broad and front.]

Having a broad front; a proper word as applied to cattle; applied by Shakspeare to a man.

A heifer most select,

That never yet was tam'd with yoke, broad-fronted.

Chapman, Iliad 10.

Broad-fronted Cæsar.

Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

BROAD-HORNED.* adj. [from broad and horned.]

Sandys, Psalms, Ps. 78.

Narrow and broad-leaved cyprus-grass. Woodward on Fossils.

To BRO'ADEN.* v. n. [from broad.] To grow broad.

I know not whether this word occurs, but in the following passage, viz. in Thomson's Summer, Dr. Johnson says. It occurs again in the Winter of the same poet.

Low walks the sun, and broadens by degrees,
Just o'er the verge of day.

Thomson, Summer.

With broaden'd nostrils, to the sky upturn'd,
The conscious heifer snuffs the stormy gale.

Thomson, Winter.

BRO'ADISH.* adj. [from broad.] Rather broad.

The under part of the tail is singularly variegated white and black, the black in long, broadish, streaks.

Russell's Acc. of Indian Serpents, p. 27.

BRO'ADLY.* adv. [from broad.] In a broad manner.

Little was it then imagined, that the time should come when the world, awakened by the cries of a friar, should look so broadly about, and search so narrowly all the sleights and hid corners of the papacy. Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

BRO'ADNESS.* n. s. [Sax. bpadnetje.]

1. Breadth; extent from side to side.

London — cannot be discerned by the fairness of the ways, though a little perhaps by the broadness of them, from a village.

Bacon, Charge at the Sessions of the Verge.

The jollity of the company made him overlook the broadness and danger of the way. South, Sermon, viii. 171.

2. Coarseness; fulsome-ness.

I have used the cleanest metaphor I could find, to palliate the broadness of the meaning. Dryden.

BROAD-PIECE.* n. s. [from broad and piece.] The denomination of one of our gold coins.

When the twenty shilling pieces, commonly called guineas, were coined in the reigns of Charles II., then the unites of the Commonwealth, Charles I., and James I., received the name of broads or broad-pieces. Snelling's View of the Gold Coin, p. 28.

BROAD-SEAL.* n. s. [from broad and seal.] The great or broad seal of England.

Is not this to deny the king's broad-seal?

Sheldon's Miracles of Antichrist, p. 61.

Under whose [the chancellor's] hands pass all charters, commissions, and grants of the king, corroborated or strengthened with the broad-seal; without which seal all such instruments, by law, are of no force. Jus. Sigilli, p. 3.

To BROAD-SEAL.* v. a. To stamp or sanction, as it were, with the broad seal.

Thy presence broad-seals our delights for pure;

What's done in Cynthia's sight, is done secure.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

BRO'ADSHOULDERED. adj. [from broad and shoulder.]

Having a large space between the shoulders.

Big-bon'd, and large of limbs, with sinews strong,

Broadshoulder'd, and his arms were round and long. Dryden.

I am a tall, broadshoulder'd, impudent, black, fellow; and, as I thought, every way qualified for a rich widow. Spectator.

BRO'ADSIDE.* n. s. [from broad and side.]

1. The side of a ship, distinct from the head or stern.

From vaster hopes than this he seem'd to fall,

That durst attempt the British admiral:

From her *broadside*s a ruder flame is thrown,

Than from the fiery chariot of the sun.

Waller.

2. The volley of shot fired at once from the side of a ship.

He used in his prayers to send the king, the ministers of state, the officers of the army, with all the soldiers and the episcopal clergy, all broadside to hell, but particularly the general himself. Swift, Memoirs of Capt. Creighton.

She has given you a broadside, captain. Southern, Oronoko.

3. [In printing.] A sheet of paper containing one large page.

BROAD-SPREADING.* part. adj. [from broad and spread.] Spreading widely.

The weeds that his broad-spreading leaves did shelter,

Are pluck'd up, root and all.

Shakspeare, K. Rich. II.

BRO'ADSWORD. n. s. [from broad and sword.] A cutting sword, with a broad blade.

He, in fighting a duel, was run through the thigh with a broadsword.

Wiscnag.

BRO'ADTAILED.* adj. [from broad and tail.] Having a broad tail. The agriculturists will be thankful for this expression, as well as for broadhorned.

Seven thousand broad-tail'd sheep graz'd on his downs.

Sandys, Job, p. 1.

BRO'ADWISE. adv. [from broad and wise.] According to the direction of the breadth.

If one should, with his hands, thrust a piece of iron broad-sword against the flat ceiling of his chamber, the iron would not fall as long as the force of the hand perseveres to press against it. Boyle.

BROCADE. n. s. [brocado, Span.] A silken stuff, variegated with colours of gold or silver.

I have the conveniency of buying and importing rich brocades. Spectator, No. 288.

Or stain her honour, or her new brocade,
Forget her pray'rs, or miss a masquerade. Pope.

BROCADE. adj. [from brocade.]

1. Drest in brocade.

2. Woven in the manner of a brocade.

Should you the rich brocaded suit unfold,
Where rising flow'rs grow stiff with frosted gold. Gay.

BRO'CAGE. n. s. [from broke.] Written frequently brokag.]

1. The gain gotten by promoting base bargains.

Yet sure his honesty
Got him small gains, but shameless flattery,
And filthy brocage, and unseemly shifts,
And borrow base, and some good ladies gifts.

It served well Pandar's purpose for the bolstering of his bawdy brocage. Epist. prefix. to Spenser's Shep. Cal.

2. The hire given for any unlawful office.

As for the politick and wholesome laws, they were interpreted to be but brocage of an usurer, thereby to woo and win the hearts of the people. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Many in this city grow exceeding wealthy by unlawful means; usury, brokage, bribery.

When 'tis said that merchandize is the Jews' general profession in Barbary, it is not to exclude their darling brokage and usury, in which they are very serviceable both to Christians and Moors. L. Addison's State of the Jews, p. 10.

3. The trade of dealing in old things; the trade of a broker.

Poor poet ape, that would be thought our chief,
Whose works are e'en the frippery of wit,
From brocage is become so bold a thief,
As we, the robb'd, leave rage, and pity it. B. Jonson.
Unless we do so, our charity is mercenary, and our friendships are direct merchandize, and our gifts are brokage.

4. The transaction of business for other men.

So much as the quantity of money is lessened, so much must the share of every one that has a right to this money be the less, whether he be landholder, for his goods, or labourer, for his hire, or merchant, for his brocage. Locke.

BROCCOLI. n. s. [Italian.] A species of cabbage.

Content with little, I can piddle here,
On broccoli and mutton round the year;
But ancient friends, though poor or out of play,
That touch my bell, I cannot turn away. Pope.

To BROCHE. v. a. See To BROACH.

So Geoffry of Bouloigne, at one draught of his bow, shooting against David's tower in Jerusalem, broched three feeble birds. Camden's Remains.

BROCK. n. s. [broc, Saxon: broc, Irish; brach,
Welsh and Cornish.] A badger.

That a brock or badger hath the legs on one side shorter than of the other, though an opinion perhaps not very ancient, is yet very general. Brown, Vulg. Err.
Or with pretence of chasing thence the brock,
Ad in a cur to worry the whole flock.

BROCKET. n. s. A red deer, two years old.

What with us is termed a brocket, or a pricket, the whole space of the second year of his age.

To BROGGLE.* v. n. To fish for eels. This is, in some places, the word for sniggle, better known to anglers in general. See To SNIGGLE.

BROGUE. n. s. [brog, Irish, and brog, Gael. a shoe.]

1. A kind of a shoe.

I thought he slept; and put
My clouted brogues from off my feet, whose rudeness
Answer'd my steps too loud. Shakspeare.

Sometimes it is given out, that we must either take these halfpence, or eat our brogues. Swift.

2. A cant word for a corrupt dialect, or manner of pronunciation.

His brogue will detect mine.
What we call the Irish brogue, is no sooner discovered, than it makes the deliverer, in the last degree, ridiculous and despised; and from such a mouth, an Englishman expects nothing but bluffs, blunders, and follies!

BROGUE-MAKER.* n. s. [from brogue and make.] A maker of brogues; a shoemaker.

I supposed that the husband made brogues as the wife made an apron, till next day it was told me, that a brogue-maker was a trade, and that a pair would cost half a crown.

BRO'DEIKIN.* n. s. [Fr. brodequin, Dutch, broseken.]
A buskin, or half-boot.

It [K. Charles the Second's apparel] was strait Spanish breeches; instead of a doublet, a long vest down to the mid-leg; and above that a loose coat, after the Muscovite or Polish way; the sword girt over the vest; and, instead of shoes and stockings, a pair of buskins or brodekins.

To BROID.* v. a. [The old word for braid or bread,
i. e. to plait; which Barret gives in his old dictionary, and which is found in our early translations of the New Testament; and had long before been used by Chaucer. Our last authorized translation of the New Testament gives broidered, not accurately, for broided; but in the margin, plaited.]
To braid or weave together.

Her yellow hair was broided in a tresse. Chaucer, Kn. Tale.
Likewise also the women, that they array themselves in comely apparel, with shamedness and modesty, not with broided hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly apparel.

To BROIDER. n. s. [brodir, Fr.] To adorn with figures of needle work.

A robe, and a broider'd coat, and a girdle.

BROIDERER.* n. s. [from broider; sometimes written broderer; as broder is for broider. V. Barret and Sherwood. So the Fr. bordeur for brodeur. V. Morin, Dict. Etym. Fr. and Gr.] An embroiderer.

BROIDERY. n. s. [from broider.] Embroidery; flower-work; additional ornaments wrought upon cloth.

The golden broidery tender Milkah wove,
The breast to Kenna sacred, and to love,
Lie rent and mangled. Tickell.

BROIL. n. s. [brouiller, Fr.] A tumult; a quarrel.

Say to the king thy knowledge of the broil,
As thou didst leave it. Shakspeare.
He has sent the sword both of civil broils, and publick war, amongst us. Wake.

To BROIL. n. s. [bruler, Fr.] To dress or cook
by laying on the coals, or before the fire.

They gave him a piece of a broiled fish. Luke, xxiv. 42.
Some strip the skin, some portion out the spoil,
Some on the fire the seeking entrails broil. Dryden.

To BROIL. v. n. To be in the heat.

BRO

Where have you been broiling?

— Among the croud i' th' abbey, where a finger
Could not be wedged in more.

Long ere now all the planets and comets had been broiling in the sun, had the world lasted from all eternity.

Shakspeare.

Cheyne.

BROILER.* n. s.

1. One who would excite a broil or quarrel.

What doth he but turn broiler and boutefeu, make new libels against the church, &c.

Hammond, Serm. p. 544.

2. That which dresses by cookery; "a broiler, grill, Fr."

Sherwood.

TO BROKE.† v. n. [of uncertain etymology, Dr.
Johnson says. Skinner seems inclined to derive it from To break, because broken men turn factors or brokers. Cassaubon from apartian. Skinner thinks, again, that it may be contracted from procurer.
Mr. Lye more probably deduces it from bpucan,
Sax. to be busy; to discharge an office; whence bpeac, St. Luke, i. 8.] To transact business for others, or by others. It is used, generally, in reproach, Dr. Johnson says; he should have said, occasionally.

He does, indeed;
And brokes with all that can, in such a suit,
Corrupt the tender honour of a maid.

Shakspeare, All's Well.

The gains of bargains are of a more doubtful nature, when men should wait upon others necessity; broke by servants and instruments to draw them on.

Bacon.

Mr. Egerton and he [Dr. Field] being acquainted, and Mr.
Egerton's mind being troubled with the ill success of this business, ventured it to this divine, who, contrary to his profession, took upon him to broke for him in such a manner, as was never precedented by any. He made Egerton to acknowledge a recognizance of 1000*l.* with a defeasance, &c.

Proceedings in the H. of Com. against Ld. Bacon, p. 6.

BRO'KING. part. adj. Practised by brokers.

Redeem from broking pawn the blemish'd crown,
Wipe off the dust that hides our sceptre's gilt.

Shakspeare.

BRO'KEN.† part. pass. of break. [Sax. bpocen.]

Preserve men's wits from being broken with the very bent of so long attention.

Hooker.

BRO'KEN-BELLIED.* adj. [from broken and belly.]

Having a ruptured belly. Used also figuratively.
Such is our broken-bellied age, that this astutia is turned into versutia; and we term those most astute which are most versute.

Sir M. Sandys, Essays, p. 168.

BRO'KEN MEAT. Fragments; meat that has been cut.

Get three or four chair-women to attend you constantly in the kitchen, whom you pay at small charges; only with the broken meat, a few coals, and all the cinders.

Swift.

BRO'KENHEARTED. adj. [from broken and heart.]

Having the spirits crushed by grief or fear.

He hath sent me to bind up the brokenhearted.

Isaiah, lxi. 1.

BRO'KENLY.† adv. [from broken.] Without any regular series.

Sir Richard Hopkins hath done somewhat of this kind, but brokenly and glancingly; intending chiefly a discourse of his own voyage.

Hukewill.

The mind of a man distracted amongst many things, must needs entertain them brokenly and unperfectly.

Hales, Rem. p. 219.

BRO'KENNESS. n. s. [from broken.] The state of being broken unevenness.

Those infirmities
that are incident to them [the teeth] whether looseness, howness, rottenness, brokenness.

Smith, Old Age, p. 85.

It is the brokenness the ungrammatical position, the total that charms me.

Gray, Letter to Mason.

BRO'KENWINDED.* adj. [from broken and wind; formerly written broke-winded.] Having short breath.

BRO

And in the hordid cave were heard at once,
Brokewinded murmurs, howlings, and sad growls.

May's Lucan, b. v.

BRO'KER.† n. s. [from To broke. Brokers in old Fr.
are termed broggours; and brokage, broggage. V.
Kelham's Norman Dict. Hence perhaps our low word, to prog.]

1. A factor; one that does business for another; one that makes bargains for another.

Brokers, who, having no stork of their own, set up and trade with that of other men; buying here, and selling there, and commonly abusing both sides, to make out a little poultry gain.

Temple.

Some South-Sea broke from the city,
Will purchase me, the more's the pity;
Lay all my fine plantations waste,
To fit them to his vulgar taste.

Swift.

2. One who deals in old household goods. A seller of old apparel, &c. "because he buyeth old and broken apparel, &c." Minsheu. Sherwood calls the broker of this kind, "a fripperer."

3. A pimp; a match-maker.

A goodly broker!

Dare you presume to harbour wanton lines;
To whisper and conspire against my youth?

Shakspeare.

In chusing for yourself, you shew'd your judgement;

Which being shallow, you shall give me leave

To play the broker in mine own behalf.

Shakspeare.

BRO'KERAGE. n. s. [from broker.] The pay or reward of a broker. See BRO'GAGE.

BRO'KERLY.* adj. [from broker.] Partaking of the character of a broker; mean; servile.

We had determin'd that thou shouldst ha' come,
In a Spanish suit, and ha' carried her so; and he,
A brokerly slave, goes, puts it on himself.

B. Jonson, Alchem.

BRO'KERY.* n. s. [from broker.] The business of a broker.

Let them that meane by bookish businesse

To earne their bread, or hopen to profess

Their hard-got skill, let them alone for me,

Busie their brains with deeper brokerie.

Bp. Hall, Sat. ii. 2.

More knavery, and usury,

And foolery and brokery, than dog's-ditch.

Beaumont and Fl. Tamer tamed.

BRO'NCIOCELE. n. s. [ἑρπονικήλη.] A tumour of that part of the aspera arteria, called the bronchus.

Quincy.

chial or pulmonary vessels, and may soon be communicated from one to the other, when the inflammation affects both the lobes.

Arbuthnot.

BRONCHO'TOMY.† n. s. [Fr. bronchotomie, from the Gr. βρόγχος and τίμνω.] That operation which opens the windpipe by incision, to prevent suffocation in a quincy.

Quincy.

The operation of bronchotomy is an incision into the aspera arteria, to make way for the air into the lungs, when respiration is obstructed by any tumour compressing the larynx.

Sharp's Surgery.

BROND.† n. s. [Sax. bpomb.] See BRAND. A sword.

Foolish old man, said then the pagan wroth,

That weenest words or charms may force withstood,

Soon shalt thou see, and then believe for troth,

That I can carve with this enchanted brond.

Spenser

BRONTO'LOGY. [n. s. ἑρπονὴ and λογία.] A dissertation upon thunder.

Diels.

BRONZE.† n. s. [bronze, Fr. bronzo, Ital.]

1. Brass.

Imbrown'd with native bronze, lo! Henley stands,

Tuning his voice, and balancing his hands.

Pope, Dunciad.

2. Relief, or statue, cast in brass and copper mixed.

I view with anger and disdain,
How little gives thee joy or pain;
A print, a bronze, a flower, a root.
A shell, a butterfly can do't.

Prior.

3. In chemistry, a factitious metal compounded of copper and tin, to which sometimes other metallick substances are added, particularly zinc. Chambers.

To BRONZE.* v. a. [old Fr. bronzer, to braze. Cotgrave.] To harden as brass.

Art, cursed art, wipes off the indebted blush
From nature's cheek, and bronzes every shame.

Young, Night Th. 5.

BROOCH.† n. s. [broke, Dutch, Dr. Johnson says. But it is the Fr. broche, a spit. See BROACH.* The ornament called a brooch was, in elder times, a buckle to fasten girdles, mantles, and the like; with a little pin, or spit, by which it was fixed to the respective part of the dress; and sometimes a twisted pin, with a jewel at the top of it, worn upon the hat or cap.]

1. A jewel; an ornament of jewels.

With gold rings upon their fingers, with broches and aiglets of gold upon their cups, which glistered full of pearls and precious stones. Robinson's Tr. of Sir T. More's Utopia, ii. 6.

Ay, marry, our chains and our jewels.—

Your brooches, pearls, and owches.

Shakespeare.

Richly suited, but unseasonable; just like the brooch and the toothpick, which we wear not now.

Shakespeare.

I know him well; he is the brooch, indeed,

And gem of all the nation.

Shakespeare.

2. [With painters.] A painting all of one colour. Dict.

To BROOCH. v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn with jewels.

Not th' imperious shew

Of the full-fortun'd Cæsar, ever shall

Be brooch'd with me.

Shakespeare.

To BROOD.† v. n. [Sax. broð, from brædan; old Fr. brode.]

1. To sit, as on eggs; to hatch them.

Thou from the first
Wast present, and, with mighty wings outspread,
Dove-like sat'st brooding on the vast abyss,
And mad'st it pregnant.

Milton, P. L.

Here nature spreads her fruitful sweetness round,
Breathes on the air, and broods upon the ground.

Dryden.

2. To cover chickens under the wing.

Exalted hence, and drunk with secret joy,
Their young succession all their cares employ;
They breed, they brood, instruct, and educate,
And make provision for the future state.

Dryden.

Find out some uncouth cell,

Where brooding darkness spreads his jealous wings,

And the night raven sings.

Milton.

3. To remain long in anxiety, or solicitous thought.

Defraud their clients, and, to lucre sold.

Sit brooding on unprofitable gold.

Dryden.

As rejoicing misers

Brood o'er their precious stores of secret gold.

Smith, Phæd. and Hip.

4. To mature any thing by care.

It was the opinion of Clinias, as if there were ever amongst nations a brooding of a war, and that there is no sure league but impuissance to do hurt.

Bacon, War with Spain.

To BROOD.† v. a. To cherish by care.

Mark the boy well;

If we could take or kill him ———

——— See how he broods the boy.

Beaumont and Fl. Bonduca, iv. 2.

Of crouds afraid, yet anxious when alone,

You'll sit and brood your sorrows on a throne.

Dryden.

He nor heaps his brooded stores,

Nor on all profusely pours.

Gray, Ode x.

BROOD.† n. s. [Sax. broð, old Fr. brode.]

1. Offspring; progeny; it is now hardly used of human beings, but in contempt.

The heavenly father keep his brood

From foul infection of so great a vice.

Fairfax.

With terrours and with clamours compass'd round,

Of mine own brood, that on my bowels feed.

Milton, P. L.

Or any other of that heavenly brood,

Let down in cloudy throne, to do the world some good.

Milton, Ode.

Ælian discourses of storks, and their affection toward their brood whom they instruct to fly.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Thing bred; species generated.

Have you forgotten Libya's burning wastes,

Its barren rocks, parch'd earth, and hills of sand,

Its tainted air, and all its broods of poison?

Addison, Cato.

3. A hatch; the number hatched at once.

I was wonderfully pleased to see the different workings of instinct in a hen followed by a brood of ducks.

Spectator, No. 121.

4. Something brought forth; a production.

Such things become the hatch and brood of time.

Shakespeare.

5. The act of covering the eggs.

Something's in his soul,

O'er which his melancholy sits on brood;

And, I do doubt, the hatch and the disclose

Will be some danger.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

BROODY.† adj. [Sax. broðige henne, a broody hen;

A term for a hen that sits on eggs, Holland's

Transl. of Pliny's Nat. Hist. p. 301. edit. 1601.]

In a state of sitting on the eggs; inclined to sit.

The common hen, all the while she is broody, sits, and leads her chickens, and uses a voice which we call clocking.

Ray.

BROOK.† n. s. [broc broca, Sax. from the Goth.

brikan, to burst forth; to break out, i. e. where a river breaks into lesser streams, and the broken parts become brooks and rivulets. The old orthography, as Mr. Horne Tooke has also observed, was broke;

and an example which he brings from Fletcher's

Faithful Shepherdess, confirms the etymology and explanation given.] A running water, less than a river.

A substitute shines brightly as a king,

Until a king be by; and then his state

Empties itself, as doth an inland brook

Into the main of waters.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Underneath the ground,

In a long hollow, the clear spring is bound;

Till on yon side, where the morn's sun doth look,

The struggling water breaks out in a brook.

Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess.

Or many grateful altars I would rear,

Of grassy turf; and pile up every stone,

Of lustre, from the brook; in memory,

Of monument to ages.

Milton, P. L.

And to Cephissus' brook their way pursue:

The stream was troubled, but the ford they knew.

Dryden.

Springs make little rivulets; those united, make brooks; and those coming together, make rivers, which empty themselves into the sea.

Locke.

To BROOK. v. a. [brocan, Sax.] To bear; to endure; to support.

Even they which brook it worst, that men should tell them of their duties, when they are told the same by a law, think very well and reasonably of it.

Hooker.

A thousand more mischances than this one,

Have learned me to brook this patiently.

Shakespeare.

How use doth breed a habit in a man!

This shadowy desert, unfrequented woods,

I better brook than flourishing peopl'd towns.

Shakespeare.

Heav'n, the seat of bliss,

Brooks not the works of violence, and war.

Milton, P. L.

Most men can much rather brook their being reputed knaves, than for their honesty be accounted fools.

South.

Restraint thou wilt not brook; but think it hard,
Your prudence is not trusted as your guard.

Dryden.

TO BROOK. v. n. To endure; to be content.

He, in these wars, had flatly refused his aid; because he could not brook, that the worthy prince Plangus was by his chosen Tiridates, preferred before him.

Sidney.

BRO'OKLIME. n. s. [becabungo, Lat.] A sort of water speedwell, very common in ditches.

BRO'OKMINT. n. s. [Sax. brocmynte.] The water-mint, which grows on the brinks of rivers.

BRO'OKY. adj. [from brook.] Abounding with brooks.

Leinster's brooky tract.

Dyer.

BROOM. n. s. [genista; bpom, Saxon.]

1. A small tree.

Even humble broom, and osiers, have their use,
And shade for sheep, and food for flocks, produce.

Dryden.

2. A besom; so called from the matter of which it is sometimes made.

Not a mouse

Shall disturb this hallow'd house;

I am sent with broom before,

To sweep the dust behind the door.

Shakspeare.

If they came into the best apartment, to set any thing in order, they were saluted with a broom.

Arbutnot.

TO BROOM, or BREAM. v. a. [from the noun.] In naval language, to clean the ship; burning off the filth she has contracted on her sides, with straw, reeds, broom, or the like, when she is on a careen, or on the ground. See Coles, Blount, and Chambers. See also TO CAREEN.

BRO'OMLAND. n. s. [broom and land.] Land that bears broom.

I have known sheep cured of the rot, when they have not been far gone with it, by being put into broomlands.

Mortimer.

BRO'OMSTAFF. n. s. [from broom and staff.] The staff to which the broom is bound; the handle of a besom.

They fell on; I made good my place: at length they came to the broomstaff with me; I defied 'em still.

Shakspeare.

From the age,

That children tread this worldly stage,

Broomstaff, or poker, they bestride,

And round the parlour love to ride.

Prior.

Sir Roger pointed at something behind the door, which I found to be an old broomstaff.

Spectator, No. 117.

BRO'OMSTICK. n. s. The same as broomstaff.

When I beheld this, I sighed and said within myself, SURELY MORTAL MAN IS A BROOMSTICK!

Swift, Meditation on a Broomstick.

BRO'OMY. adj. [from broom.]

1. Full of broom.

If land grow mossy or broomy, then break it up again.

Mortimer.

2. Consisting of broom.

The youth with broomy stumps began to trace

The kennel edge, where wheels had worn the place.

Swift.

BROTH. n. s. [broð, Sax. probably from brp, whence our northern word breau, spoon meat. See BREWIS.] Liqueur in which flesh is boiled.

You may make the broth for two days, and take the one half every day.

Bacon, Phys. Rem.

Instead of light deserts and luscious froth,

Our author treats to-night with Spartan broth.

Southerne.

If a nurse, after being sucked dry, eats broth, the infant will suck the broth almost unaltered.

Arbutnot.

BRO'THEL. } n. s. [bordel, Fr.] A house of BRO'THELHOUSE. } lewd entertainment; a bawdy-house.

Perchance

I saw him enter such a house of sale,

Videlicet, a brothel.

Shakspeare.

Then courts of kings were held in high renown,

Ere made the common brothels of the town;

There, virgins honourable vows receiv'd,

But chaste as maids in monasteries liv'd.

Dryden, Fab.

From its old ruins brothelhouses rise,

Scenes of lewd loves, and of polluted joys.

Dryden, Mac. Flect.

The libertine retires to the stews, and to the brothel.

Rogers.

BRO'THELLER. n. s. [from brothel.] He who frequents a brothel-house. Gower uses brothel for such a person, Conf. Am. (15) fol. clvi. col. 2.

BRO'THELRY. n. s. [from brothel.]

1. Whoredom.

Hulot.

Ye bastard poets, see your pedigree

From common trulls, and loathsome brothelery!

Bp. Hall, Satires, i. 2.

Shall Furia brook her sister's modesty,

And prostitute her soul to brothelery?

Marston's Scourge of Vill. i. 3.

2. Obscenity.

So bold prolepses, so rack'd metaphors, with brothelery, able to violate the ear of a pagan.

B. Jonson's Fox, Dedication.

BRO'THER. n. s. [Goth. brothr, from bru, Celt. the womb; Sax. broðer; Bret. breur. The Persian word also is broder.] Plural, brothers or brethren; Goth. brothrahus.

1. One born of the same father and mother.

Be sad, good brothers:

Sorrow so royally in you appears,

That I will deeply put the fashion on.

Shakspeare.

Whilst kin their kin, brother the brother foils,

Like ensigns all, against like ensigns bend.

Daniel.

These two are brethren, Adam, and to come

Out of thy loins.

Milton, P. I.

Comparing two men, in reference to one common parent, it is very easy to form the ideas of brothers.

Locke.

2. Any one closely united; associate; and hence the old phrase sworn brothers, i. e. persons who, in the days of adventure, swore to share in each other's fortune, and to divide what they gained.

Thou wotest well thou art my sworn brother.

Chaucer, Pardoner's Tale.

He hath every month a new sworn brother.

Shakspeare, Much Ado.

We few, we happy few, we band of brothers;

For he, to-day that sheds his blood with me,

Shall be my brother.

Shakspeare.

3. Any one resembling another in manner, form, or profession.

He also that is slothful in his work, is brother to him that is a great waster.

Proverbs, xviii. 9.

4. Brother is used, in theological language, for man in general.

I will eat no meat while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend.

1 Cor. viii. 13.

BRO'THERHOOD. n. s. [from brother and hood.]

1. The state or quality of being a brother.

This deep disgrace of brotherhood

Touche me deeper than you can imagine.

Shakspeare.

Finds brotherhood in thee no sharper spur?

Shakspeare.

So it be a right to govern, whether you call it supreme brotherhood, or supreme brotherhood, will be all one, provided we know who has it.

Locke.

2. An association of men for any purpose; a fraternity.

There was a fraternity of men at arms, called the brotherhood of St. George, erected by parliament, consisting of thirteen the most noble and worthy persons.

Davies on Ireland.

3. A class of men of the same kind.

He was sometimes so engaged among the wheels, that not above half the poet appeared; at other times, he became as conspicuous as any of the brotherhood. Addison, Guardian.

BRO'THERLESS.* adj. [from brother and less.] Without a brother.

The brotherless Heliades

Melt in such amber trees as these.

Andrew Marvel.

BRO'THERLIKE.* adj. [Sax. broðerlice.] Becoming a brother.

Welcome, good Clarence; this is brotherlike.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. VI. P. III.

Nor can any sever

His love, but brotherlike affects them ever.

Browne, Brit. Past. ii. 2.

BRO'THERLOVE.* n. s. [from brother and love.] Brotherly affection.

With a true heart,

And brother-love, I do it.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. VIII.

BRO'THERLY.† adj. [Sax. broðerlice.] Natural; such as becomes or becometh a brother.

He was a priest, and looked for a priest's reward; which was our brotherly love, and the good of our souls and bodies. Bacon.

Though more our money than our cause,

Their brotherly assistance draws.

Denham.

They would not go before the laws, but follow them; obeying their superiors, and embracing one another in brotherly piety and concord.

Addison, Freeholder.

BRO'THERLY. adv. After the manner of a brother; with kindness and affection.

I speak but brotherly of him; but should I anatomize him to thee as he is, I must blush and weep.

Shakespeare.

BROUGHT. [participle passive of bring.]

The Turks forsook the walls, and could not be brought on again to the assault.

Knolles.

The instances brought by our author are but slender proofs.

Locke.

BROW.† n. s. [Sax. bræp, pl. bræpag, the brows.]

1. The arch of hair over the eye.

'Tis now the hour which all to rest allow,

And sleep sits heavy upon every brow.

Dryden, Ind. Emp.

2. The forehead.

She could have run and waddled about;

For even the day before she broke her brow.

Shakespeare.

So we some antique hero's strength,

Learn by his lance's weight and length;

As these vast beams express the beast,

Whose shady brows alive they drest.

Waller.

3. The general air of the countenance.

Then call them to our presence, face to face,

And frowning brow to brow.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

Though all things foul would bear the brows of grace,

Yet grace must look still so.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

4. The edge of any high place. [Gael. bre; Welsh, bre, a hill; and in our northern dialect, broo, the upper part of a hill. See BRAY.]

The earl, nothing dismayed, came forwards that day unto a little village, called Stoke, and there encamped that night, upon the brow or hanging of a hill.

Bacon.

On the brow of the hill beyond that city, they were somewhat perplexed by espying the French ambassador, with the king's coach, and others, attending him.

Wotton.

Them with fire, and hostile arms,

Fearless assault; and, to the brow of heav'n

Pursuing, drive them out from God and bliss.

Milton, P. L.

TO BROW. v. a. [from the noun.] To bound; to limit; to be at the edge of.

Tending my flocks hard by i' th' hilly crofts,

That brow this bottom glade.

Milton, Comus.

TO BRO'WBEAT.† v. a. [from brow and beat.] To depress with severe brows, and stern or lofty looks.

Young men, prentices, servants, the common sort, are so far from hiding themselves, or rising up, that I have often seen the magistrate faced, and almost brow-beaten, as he hath passed by.

Dr. J. White, Sermons, (1615,) p. 54.

It is not for a magistrate to frown upon, and browbeat those who are hearty and exact in their ministry; and, with a grave nod, to call a resolved zeal, want of prudence. South.

Count Tariff endeavoured to browbeat the plaintiff, while he was speaking; but though he was not so impudent as the count, he was ever as sturdy.

Addison.

I will not be browbeaten by the supercilious looks of my adversaries.

Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scrib.

BRO'WBEATING.* n. s. [from brow and beat.] The act of depressing by stern or lofty looks.

What man will voluntarily expose himself to the imperious browbeatings and scorns of great men?

I. Estrange.

BRO'WBOUND. adj. [from brow and bound.] Crowned: having the head encircled as with a diadem.

In that day's feats,

He prov'd the best man i' the field, and, for his meed,

Was brow-bound with the oak.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

BRO'WLESS.* adj. [from brow and less.] Without shame; frontless.

So browless was this heretick, [Mahomet,] that he was not ashamed to tell the world, That all he preached was sent him immediately from heaven. L. Addison's Life of Mahomet, p. 84.

BRO'WSICK. adj. [from brow and sick.] Dejected; hanging the head.

But yet a gracious influence from you,

May alter nature in our browsick crew.

Suckling.

BROWN.† adj. [Sax. brun, from brennan, to burn, the colour of a burnt object being brown. The Germ. braun is burnt. Bret. brun; Su. brun, from brenna, Serenius.] The name of a colour, compounded of black and any other colour.

Brown, in High Dutch, is called braun; in the Netherlands, bruyen; in French, couleur brune; in Italian, bruno.

Peacham.

I like the new tire within excellently, if the hair were a little browner.

Shakespeare.

From whence high Ithaca o'erlooks the floods,

Brown with o'ercharging shades and pendent woods.

Pope.

Long untravell'd heaths;

With desolation brown, he wanders waste.

Thomson.

BRO'WBILL.† n. s. [from broken and bill.] The ancient weapon of the English foot; why it is called brown, I have not discovered, but we now say broken musket from it, Dr. Johnson says. It is probably so called, as Mr. Malone observes, from the weapons being sanguined or rubbed over with blood, to preserve them from rust, which gave them a brown colour.

And brownbills, levied in the city,

Made bills to pass the grand committee.

Hudibras.

BRO'WNISH. adj. [from brown.] Somewhat brown.

A brownish grey iron-stone, lying in thin strata, is poor, but runs freely.

Woodward.

BRO'WNISM.* n. s. The heresy of those who adopted the opinions of Robert Brown. See BROWNIST.

That schism would be the sorest schism to you; that would be Brownism and Anabaptism indeed.

Milton, Reason of Ch. Gov. B. i.

BRO'WNIST.* n. s. One of the sect of Robert Brown, a noted sectarist in the time of Queen Elizabeth, whose opinions were very licentious.

These sectaries are called Brownists from one master Robert Brown, a Northamptonshire man, who was schoolmaster of the free-school of St. Olave's in Southwark.—The Brownists confine the church of God to their conventicles, excluding all other Christians out of the pale of the church that are not of their sect.

Pagitt's Heresiography, p. 51—53.

I had as lief be a Brownist as a politician.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

The word Puritan seems to be quashed, and all that heretofore were counted such, are now Brownists.

Milton, Reason of Ch. Gov. i. 6.

B R U

BRO'WNNESS. n. s. [from brown.] A brown colour.

She would confess the contention in her own mind, between that lovely, indeed most lovely, brownness of Musidorus's face, and this colour of mine. Sidney, B. ii.

BRO'WNSTUDY. n. s. [from brown and study.] Gloomy meditations; study in which we direct our thoughts to no certain point.

They live retired, and then they doze away their time in drowsiness and brownstudies; or, if brisk and active, they lay themselves out wholly in making common places. Norris.

BRO'WNWORT.  n. s.* [Sax. brunepýpt.] In botany, the fig-wort.

BRO'WNIE.  n. s.* A spirit, till of late years supposed to haunt old houses in Scotland; and conjectured by Ruddiman to be so called from its pretended swarthy or tawny colour, in contradistinction to fairy from its fairness. The northern mythology exhibits, in the Edda, the swartalfar, i. e. swarthy or black elves, corresponding nearly, as Dr. Jamieson has observed, to the Brownie. Milton certainly adverted to this distinction, in mentioning the "swart fairy" in his Masque of Comus. This spirit is said to have been very friendly and serviceable to the family where he fixed his abode. In Iceland, almost every family had familiar spirits. See Burton's Anat. of Melancholy, p. 47. The Brownie seems to have belonged to that class, which Burton represents as frequenting forlorn houses, and for the most part innocuous.

BRO'WNY.  adj.* Brown.

His brownj locks did hang in crooked curls.

Shakespeare, Lover's Complaint.

To BROWSE. v. a. [brouser, Fr.] To eat branches, or shrubs.

And being down, is trod in the dirt

Of cattle, and browsed, and sorely hurt. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb.

Thy palate thou did deign

The roughest berry on the rudest hedge:

Yea, like the stag, when snow the pasture sheets,

The barks of trees thou browsedst. Shakespeare.

To BROWSE. v. n. To feed: it is used with the particle on.

They have scared away two of my best sheep; if any where I have them, 'tis by the sea-side, browsing on ivy. Shakespeare.

A goat, hard pressed, took sanctuary in a vineyard; so soon as he thought the danger over, he fell presently a browsing upon the leaves. L'Estrange.

Could eat the tender plant, and, by degrees,

Browse on the shrubs, and crop the budding trees. Blackmore.

The Greeks were the descendants of savages, ignorant of agriculture, and browsing on herbage, like cattle. Arbutnot.

BROWSE. n. s. [from the verb.] Branches, or shrubs, fit for the food of goats, or other animals.

The greedy lioness the wolf pursues,

The wolf the kid, the wanton kid the browse. Dryden.

On that cloud-piercing hill,

Plinlimmon, from afar the traveller kens,

Astonish'd, how the goats their shrubby browse

Gnaw peasant. Philips.

BRO'WSING.  n. s.* [from browse.] Food which deer find in young coppices, continually sprouting anew.

The stables butt upon the park, which for a cheerful rising ground, for groves and browsings for the deer, for rivulets of water, may compare with any for its highness in the whole land. Howell, Lett. i. ii. 8.

To BRUISE. † v. a. [Sax. brýðan, to bruise; anciently written brise, and brese; Fr. briser, old Fr. bracer, broyeur, to pound, or bruise, from the Lat. brachium.] To crush or mangle with the heavy blow of something not edged or pointed; to crush by any weight; to beat into gross powder; to beat together coarsely.

It shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel.

Gen. iii. 15.

Fellows in arms, and my most loving friends,
Bruis'd underneath the yoke of tyranny.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

And fix far deeper in his head their stings,
Than temporal death shall bruise the victor's heel,
Or theirs whom he redeems.

Milton, P. L.

As in old chaos heav'n with earth confus'd,

And stars with rocks together crush'd and bruis'd. Waller.

They beat their breasts with many a bruising blow,

Till they turn livid, and corrupt the snow. Dryden.

BRUISE. † n. s. [from the verb.] A hurt with something blunt and heavy.

There is no healing of thy bruise; thy wound is grievous.

Nahum, iii. 19.

One arm'd with metal, th' other with wood,
This fit for bruise, and that for blood.

Hudibras.

I since have labour'd

To bind the bruises of a civil war,

And stop the issues of their wasting blood.

Dryden.

BRUISER.  n. s.* [from bruise.]

1. In mechanics, a concave tool used for grinding and polishing the specula of telescopes. Chambers.

2. In vulgar language, a boxer.

BRUISEWORT. n. s. An herb; the same with COMFREY.

BRUIT. † n. s. [old Goth. brut, report, from bridda, to declare; Fr. bruit, from the old Fr. bru.] Rumour; noise; report.

A bruit ran from one to the other, that the king was slain.

Sidney.

Upon some bruils he apprehended a fear, which moved him to send to Sir William Herbert to remain his friend. Hayward.

I am not

One that rejoices in the common wreck,

As common bruit doth put it.

Shakespeare.

To BRUIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To report; to noise abroad; to rumour. Neither the verb nor the noun are now much in use.

His death,

Being bruited once, took fire and heat away

From the best temper'd courage in his troops.

Shakespeare.

It was bruited, that I meant nothing less than to go to Guiana.

Raleigh.

BRU'MAL. † adj. [old Fr. brumal, from brumalis, Lat.] Belonging to the winter.

About the brumal solstice, it hath been observed, even unto a proverb, that the sea is calm, and the winds do cease, till the young ones are excluded, and forsake their nests. Brown.

The brumal quarter, they fast from food.

Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 364.

BRUN, BRAN, BROWN, BOURN, BURN, are all derived from the Sax. boþn, bouþn, brunna, bupna; all signifying a river or brook. Gibson's Camden.

BRUNETT. n. s. [brunette, French.] A woman with a brown complexion.

Your fair women therefore thought of this fashion, to insult the olives and the brunettes.

Addison, Guardian.

BRUNION. n. s. [brugnon, Fr.] A sort of fruit between a plum and a peach. Trevoux.

BRUNT. † n. s. [brunst, Dutch, Dr. Johnson says; which means heat. It may be, however, the principle of the Sax. brennan, to burn; brunt implying heat in the sense of violent action; as, "the brunt of war."] 1. Shock; violence.

Erona chose rather to bide the brunt of war, than venture him. Sidney.

God, who caus'd a fountain, at thy prayer,
From the dry ground to spring, thy thirst t' allay
After the brunt of battle. Milton, S. A.

Faithful ministers are to stand and endure the brunt: a common soldier may fly, when it is the duty of him that holds the standard to die upon the place. South.

2. Blow; stroke.

A wicked ambush, which lay hidden long
In the close covert of her guileful eyen,
Thence breaking forth, did thick about me throng,
Too feeble I t' abide the brunt so strong. Spenser, Sonn.

The friendly rug preserv'd the ground,
And headlong knight, from guise or wound,
Like featherbed betwixt a wall
And heavy brunt of cannon-ball. Hudibras.

3. A brief and sudden effort.

A brunt of holiness, and away! Rp. Hall, Rem. p. 153.

BRUSH.† n. s. [brosse, Fr. from bruscus, Lat.]

1. An instrument to clean any thing, by rubbing off the dirt or soil. It is generally made of bristles set in wood.

2. It is used for the larger and stronger pencils used by painters.

Whence comes all this rage of wit? this arming all the pencils and brushes of the town against me? Stillingfleet.
With a small brush you must smear the glue well upon the joint of each piece. Moxon.

3. A rude assault; a shock; rough treatment; which, by the same metaphor, we call a scouring.

Let grow thy sinews till their knots be strong,
And tempt not yet the brushes of the war. Shakspeare.
It could not be possible, that, upon so little a brush as Waller had sustained, he could not be able to follow and disturb the king. Clarendon.

Else when we put it to the push,
They had not giv'n us such a brush. Hudibras.

4. A thicket. See BRUSKET.

All suddenly out of the thickest brush,—
A goodly lady did forebly them rush. Spenser, F. Q. iii. i. 15.

To BRUSH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To sweep or rub with a brush.

If he be not in love with some woman, there is no believing old signs; he brushes his hat o' morning; what should that bode? Shakspeare.

2. To strike with quickness, as in brushing.

The wrathful beast about him turned light,
And him so rudely passing by, did brush
With his long tail, that horse and man to ground did rush.
Spenser, F. Q.

Has Sonius brush'd thy eyelids with his rod? Dryden.
His son Cupavo brush'd the briny flood,
Upon his stern a brawny centaur stood. Dryden.

High o'er the billows flew the massy load,
And near the ship came thund'ring on the flood,
It almost brush'd the helm. Pope.

3. To paint with a brush.

You have commissioned me to paint your shop, and I have done my best to brush you up like your neighbours. Pope.

4. To carry away, by an act like that of brushing; to sweep.

And from the boughs brush off the evil dew,
And heal the harms of thwarting thunder blue. Milton, Arcades.

The receptacle of waters, into which the mouths of all rivers most empty themselves, ought to have so spacious a surface, that as much water may be continually brushed off by the winds, and exhaled by the sun, as, besides what falls again, is brought into it by all the rivers. Bentley.

5. To move as the brush.

A thousand nights have brush'd their balmy wings
Over these eyes. Dryden.

To BRUSH. v. n.

1. To move with haste: a ludicrous word, applied to men.

Nor wept his fate, nor cast a pitying eye,
Nor took him down, but brush'd regardless by. Dryden.

The French had gather'd all their force,
And William met them in their way;
Yet off they brush'd, both foot and horse. Prior.

2. To fly over; to skim lightly.

Nor love is always of a vicious kind,
But oft to virtuous acts inflames the mind,
Awakes the sleepy vigour of the soul,
And, brushing o'er, adds motion to the pool. Dryden, Fab.

BRUSHIER. n. s. [from brush.] He that uses a brush.

Sir Henry Wotton used to say, that critics were like brushers of noblemen's cloaths. Bacon, Apophthegms.

BRUSHET.* n. s. See BRUSKET.

BRUSHWOOD. n. s. [from brush and wood.] I know not whether it may not be corrupted from broesc- wood.] Rough, low, close, shrubby thickets; small wood fit for fire.

It smokes, and then with trembling breath she blows;
Till in a cheerful blaze the flames arose.
With brushwood, and with chips, she strengthens these,
And adds at last the boughs of rotten trees. Dryden, Fab.

BRUSHY. adj. [from brush.] Rough or shaggy, like a brush.

I suspected, that it might have proceeded from some small unheeded drop of blood, wiped off by the brushy substance of the nerve, from the knife wherewith it was cut. Boyle.

BRUSK.* adj. [Fr. brusque, uncivil, harsh, Cotgrave.] Rude.

We are sorry to hear, that the Scottish gentleman, who has been lately sent to that king, found (as they say) but a brusk welcome. Sir H. Wotton's Letters, Rem. p. 582.

To BRUSTLE.† v. n. [brustlian, Saxon, from brastl, a crackling or burning. In the north of England, "the sun brustles the hay," i. e. dries it, is yet a common phrase. And meat too much broiled is said to be bruzzled. The old Fr. brusler, to burn, (now written bruler), may with the Saxon be traced to the Icelandick brys, a burning heat.] To crackle; to make a small noise. Skinner.

Right as a ship against the stream,
He routeth with a slepie noyse;
And broustleth as a monkes froyse,
When it is throwe into the pannic. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.
Break 'em more, they are but brustled yet.

Beaumont and Fl. Wife for a Month.

BRUTAL. adj. [brutal, French; from brute.]

1. That which belongs to a brute; that which we have in common with brutes.

There is no opposing brutal force to the stratagems of human reason. L'Esrange.

2. Savage; cruel; inhuman.

The brutal bus'ness of the war
Is manag'd by thy dreadful servants care. Dryden.

BRUTALITY. n. s. [brutalité, Fr.] Savageness; chur-lishness, inhumanity.

Courage, in an ill-bred man, has the air, and escapes not the opinion of brutality. Locke.

To BRUTALIZE. v. n. [brutaliser, Fr.] To grow brutal or savage.

Upon being carried to the Cape of Good Hope, he mixed, in a kind of transport, with his countrymen, brutalized with them in their habit and manners, and would never again return to his foreign acquaintance. Addison, Freeholder.

To BRUTALIZE.† v. a. To make brutal or savage.

Strange! that a creature rational, and cast
In human mould, should brutalize by choice
His nature. Cowper's Sofa, B. 1.

BRUTALLY. adv. [from brutal.] Churlishly; inhumanly; cruelly.

Mrs. Bull aimed a knife at John, though John threw a bottle at her head, very brutally indeed. Arbutnot.

BRUTE.† adj. [brutus, Latin.]

1. Senseless; unconscious.

But when at bar beneath we came to plead our case,
Our wits were in the wane, our pleading very brute.

Mr. for Magistrates, p. 277.

Nor yet are we so low and base as their atheism would depress us; not walking statues of clay, not the sons of brute earth, whose final inheritance is death and corruption. Bentley.

2. Savage; irrational; ferine.

Even brute animals make use of this artificial way of making divers motions, to have several significations to call, warn, chide, cherish, threaten. Holder.

In the promulgation of the Mosaick law, if so much as a brute beast touched the mountain, it was to be struck through with a dart. South.

3. Bestial; in common with beasts.

Then to subdue, and quell, through all the earth

Brute violence, and proud tyrannick power. Milton, P. R.

4. Rough; ferocious; uncivilized.

The brute philosopher, who ne'er has prov'd

The joy of loving, or of being lov'd. Pope.

BRUTE. n. s. [from the adjective.] An irrational creature; a creature without reason; a savage.

What may this mean? Language of man pronounced

By tongue of brute, and human sense express'd! Milton, P. L.

To those three present impulses, of sense, memory, and instinct, most, if not all, the sagacities of brutes may be reduced. Hall, Orig. of Mankind.

Brutes may be considered as either aerial, terrestrial, aquatic, or amphibious. I call those aerial which have wings, wherewith they can support themselves in the air; terrestrial are those, whose only place of rest is upon the earth; aquatic are those, whose constant abode is upon the water. Locke.

Heav'n from all creatures hides the book of fate,

All but the page pre-scrib'd, this present state;

From brutes what men, from men what spirits know;

Or who could suffer being here below? Pope, Ess. on Man.

To BRUTE. v. a. [written ill for bruit.] To report.

This, once bruted through the army, filled them all with heaviness. Knolles.

BRUTELY. * adv. [from brute.] In a rough, uncivilized manner.

The vulgar expositor rushes brutely and impetuously against all the principles both of nature, piety, and moral goodness; and in the fury of his literal expounding overturns them all.

Milton, Tetrachordon.

BRUTENESS. n. s. [from brute.] Brutality: a word not now used.

Thou dotard vile,

That with thy bruteness shoud'st thy comely age.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. viii. 12.

To BRUTIFY.† v. a. [from brute.]

1. To make a man a brute.

O thou salacious woman! art I then brutified? Ay; feel it here; I sprout, I bud, I am ripe horn mad.

Congreve, Old Bachelor.

2. To render the mind brutal.

Success in some petty sport and pastime can yield but a very thin and transitory satisfaction to a man not quite brutified, and void of sense. Barrow, Serm. iii. 50.

Drunkness besots a nation, and brutifies even the bravest spirits. Pellham, Resolves, i. 84.

BRUTISH.† adj. [from brute.]

1. Bestial; resembling a beast.

Osiris, Isis, Orus, and their train,
With monstrous shapes and sorceries abus'd

Fanatick Egypt, and her priests, to seek
Their wandering gods disguis'd in brutish forms. Milton, P. L.

2. Having the qualities of a brute; rough; savage; ferocious.

Brutes, and brutish men, are commonly more able to bear pain than others. Grew, Cosm. Sacra.

3. Gross; carnal.

For thou thyself hast been a libertine,

As sensual as the brutish sting itself. Shakespeare, As you Like it.

After he has slept himself into some use of himself, by much ado he staggers to his table again, and there acts over the same brutish scene. South.

4. Ignorant; untaught; uncivilized.

They were not so brutish, that they could be ignorant to call upon the name of God. Hooker, v. § 35.

5. Unconscious; insignificant. [Lat. brutum fulmen.]

Thou great Director of the rolling stars,

Unless thou idly look'st on men's affairs,

And vainly we thy brutish thunder fear;

Why should thy land so dire a monster bear?

Judas, in Sandys's Christ's Passion, p. 29.

The philosophers will have two sorts of lightning; calling the one fatal, that is, pre-appointed and mortal; the other brutish, that is, accidental and flying at random.

Sandys's Christ's Passion, Note, p. 100.

BRUTISHLY. adv. [from brutish.] In the manner of a brute, savagely; irrationally; grossly.

I am not so diffident of myself, as brutishly to submit to any man's dictates. King Charles.

For a man to found a confident practice upon a disputable principle, is brutishly to outrun his reason. South.

BRUTISHNESS.† n. s. [from brutish.] Brutality; savageness.

All other courage, besides that, is not true valour, but brutishness. Spratt.

Who would not presently discern the perfect brutishness of this kind of reasoning? Rp. Bull's Works, iii. 1162.

[The] message, through the negligence of the person employed, was not delivered till he that sent it was in the last agonies of death: the doctor was very much affected at it, passionately complaining of the brutishness of those that had so little sense of a soul in that sad state.

Pell's Life of Hammond, Sect. 2.

To BRUT, or BRUTTE. * v. n. [not from the Sax. bryttian, to enjoy, as Mr. Mason thinks in the additions to his Supplement; but from the Fr. broyer, to browse, to nibble; and that from the Gr. βρύλλω, to eat. V. Hesychius. To brutte is a common expression still in Kent.] To browse.

What the goats so easily brutted upon.

Evelyn's Acetaria, after sect. 82.

BRUTTING. * n. s. [from the verb.] Browsing.

Of all the foresters, this [horn-beam] preserves itself best from the bruttings of the deer. Evelyn, i. vi. 2.

BRV'ONY.† n. s. [bryonia, Latin, βρυονία, vitis alba; vox Græco-barbara. V. Critopuli Emend. et Animadv. in Meursii Gloss. p. 24.] A plant.

The blue bindweed doth itself infold

With honeysuckle, and both these intwine

Themselves with bryony and jessamine. B. Jonson, Masques.

BUB. n. s. [a cant word.] Strong malt liquor.

Or if it be his fate to meet

With folks who have more wealth than wit,

He loves cheap port, and double bub,

And settles in the humdrum club.

Prior.

To BUB. * v. n. [An old English word for bubble.

Mr. Horne Tooke, who considers ble as an unnecessary addition to our present word, would have been glad to meet with the following proof of the curtailed object of his approbation.] To throw out in bubbles. Obsolete.

Rude Acheron, a loathsome lake to tell,
That boils and bubs up swelth as black as hell.

Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Magistrates.

BUBBLE.† n. s. [bobbel, Dutch; a corruption of the Latin bulia.]

1. A small bladder of water; a film of water filled with wind.

B U B

Bubbles are in the form of a hemisphere; air within, and a little skin of water without: and it seemeth somewhat strange, that the air should rise so swiftly, while it is in the water, and, when it cometh to the top, should be stayed by so weak a cover as that of the bubble is. Bacon.

The colours of bubbles, with which children play, are various, and change their situation variously, without any respect to confine or shadow. Newton.

2. Any thing which wants solidity and firmness; any thing that is more specious than real.

The earl of Lincoln was induced to participate, not lightly upon the strength of the proceedings there, which was but a bubble, but upon letters from the lady Margaret.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Then a soldier,
Seeking the bubble reputation,
Even in the cannon's mouth. Shakspeare, As you Like it.

War, he sung, is toil and trouble,
Honour but an empty bubble,
Fighting still, and still destroying. Dryden.

3. A cheat; a false show.
The nation then too late will find
Directors promises but wind,
South-sea at best a mighty bubble. Swift.

4. The person cheated.
Cease, dearest mother, cease to chide;
Ganny's a cheat, and I'm a bubble;
Yet why this great excess of trouble? Prior.
He has been my bubble these twenty years, and, to my certain knowledge, understands no more of his own affairs, than a child in swaddling clothes. Arbutnot, John Bull.

To BU'BBLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To rise in bubbles.
Alas! a crimson river of warm blood,
Like to a bubbling fountain stir'd with wind,
Doth rise and fall. Titus. Andron.

Adder's fork, and blindworm's sting,
Lizard's leg, and owlet's wing;
For a charm of pow'rful trouble,
Like a hellbroth boil and bubble. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
Still bubble on, and pour forth blood and tears. Dryden.

The same spring suffers at some times a very manifest remission of its heat: at others, as manifest an increase of it; yea, sometimes to that excess, as to make it boil and bubble with extreme heat. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. To run with a gentle noise.
For thee the bubbling springs appear'd to mourn,
And whispering pines made vows for thy return. Dryden.
Not bubbling fountains to the thirsty swain,
Not show'rs to larks, or sunshine to the bee,
Are half so charming as thy sight to me. Pope.

To BU'BBLE. v. a. To cheat: a cant word.
He tells me, with great passion, that she has bubbled him out of his youth; and has drilled him on to five and fifty.

Addison, Spect. No. 89.

Charles Mather could not bubble a young bean better with a toy. Arbutnot, John Bull.

BU'BBLER. n. s. [from bubble.] A cheat.
What words can suffice to express, how infinitely I esteem you, above all the great ones in this part of the world; above all the Jews, jobbers, and bubblers! Digby to Pope.

BU'BBLY.* adj. [from bubble; an adjective yet in use in the North of England; as, "the bairn has a bubbly nose." Grose.] Consisting of bubbles or froth.

They would no more live under the yoke of the sea, or have their heads washed with this bubbly spume.

Nashe's Lenten Stuffe, (1599,) p. 8.

BU'BBY.† n. s. [No etymology has been offered. It may have been adopted from the old Fr. bibbe or bube a push, or bump. Cotgrave. Buberon is a sucking-bottle.] A woman's breast.

Foh! say they, to see a handsome, brisk, genteel, young fellow, so much governed by a doating old woman; why don't you go and suck the bubby? Arbutnot, John Bull.

BU'BO. n. s. [Lat. from βουβων, the groin.] That part of the groin from the bending of the thigh to the scrotum; and therefore all tumours in that part are called bubors. Quincy.

I suppurated it after the manner of a bubo, opened it, and endeavoured detersion. Wiseman.

BUBONOCE'LE. n. s. [Lat. from βουβων, the groin, and κηλη, a rupture.] A particular kind of rupture, when the intestines break down into the groin. Quincy.

When the intestine, or omentum, falls through the rings of the abdominal muscles into the groin, it is called hernia inguinalis, or, if into the scrotum, scrotalis: these two, though the first only is properly so called, are known by the name of bubonocele. Sharp's Surgery.

BU'BUKLE. n. s. A red pimple.
His face is all bubukles, and wheals, and knobs, and flames of fire. Shakspeare.

BUCANI'ERS.† n. s. A cant word for the privateers, or pirates, of America, Dr. Johnson says. The men may have been so denominated from their manner of living; the first settlers in Hispaniola being said to be called buccaneers from their custom of assembling themselves after a chase, in order to regale themselves with broiling the flesh of the cattle they had killed, and buccaning, that is, drying the rest: many of these afterwards turned pirates. Hist. of America, P. II. p. 18. Cotgrave gives the Fr. verb boucaner, which he renders "to imitate the goat, also to broyle or scorch on a wooden gridiron." This old verb boucaner, from bouc, certainly illustrates the character of these men.

Whether gold will not cause either industry or vice to flourish? And whether a country, where it flowed in without labour, must not be wretched and dissolute like an island inhabited by buccaneers? Bp. Berkeley, Quirist.

BUCCELLATION. n. s. [buccella, a mouthful, Lat.] In some chymical authors, signifies a dividing into large pieces. Harris.

BUCK.† n. s. [bauche, Germ. suds, or lye; Su. byke, from Goth. bucka, to beat. See BATLET. Ital. bucata, "lye to wash a buck with," Florio, Ital. Dict. 1598.]

1. The liquor in which clothes are washed.
Buck! I would I could wash myself of the buck: I warrant you, buck, and of the season too it shall appear. Shakspeare.

2. The clothes washed in the liquor.
Of late, not able to travel with her furred pack, she washes bucks here at home. Shakspeare.

BUCK.* n. s. A cant word for a bold, ostentatious, or forward person; a blood; whom Johnson calls a man of fire! From this word come the modern phrases buckish and buckism, applied both to the person and to the science which constitutes a man of such importance! Serenus has observed that the Gothick bocke, is a great man! Who is a greater, one may add, in his own estimation, than a buck?

Remember, lifeless drone,
I carry bucks and bloods alone!

T. Warton's Phaeton to the One-Horse Chair.

BUCK.† n. s. [buech, Welsh; bock, Dutch; bouc, Fr.; bucka, Sax.; becco, Ital. The Iceland. bekre is a ram.] The male of the fallow deer; the male of rabbits, and other animals.

Bucks, goats, and the like are said to be tripping or saliant, that is, going or leaping. Peacham.

To BUCK.† v. a. [Goth. bucka, Ital. bucare. See BUCK.] To wash clothes.

Here is a bucket; he may creep in here, and throw foul linen upon him, as if it were going to bucking. Shakspeare.

To BUCK. v. n. [from the noun.] To copulate as bucks and does.

The chief time of setting traps is in their bucking time.

BUCKBASKET. n. s. The basket in which clothes are carried to the wash.

They conveyed me into a buckbasket; rammed me in with foul shirts, foul stockings, and greasy napkins. Shakspeare.

BUCKBEAN. n. s. [bocksboonen, Dutch.] A plant; a sort of trefoil.

The bitter nauseous plants, as centaury, buckbane, gentian, of which tea may be made, or wines by infusion. Floyer.

BUCKET. † n. s. [baquet, French, Dr. Johnson says. But our original word is bouk, Sax. buc, a kind of vessel; low Lat. bauca; Gr. βαυκη. Bouk is the present word, in Staffordshire and Cheshire, for a pail to hold water. Hence bouket, and bucket. Chaucer writes it boket.]

1. The vessel in which water is drawn out of a well.

Now is this golden crown like a deep well,

That owes two buckets, filling one another;

The emptier over dancing in the air,

The other down unseen, and full of water. Shakspeare.

Is the sea ever likely to be evaporated by the sun, or to be emptied with buckets? Bentley.

2. The vessels in which water is carried, particularly to quench a fire.

Now streets grow throng'd, and, busy as by day,

Some run for buckets to the hallow'd quire;

Some cut the pipes, and some the engines play;

And some, more bold, mount ladders to the fire. Dryden.

The porringers, that in a row

Hung high, and made a glitt'ring show,

To a less noble substance chang'd,

Were now but leathern buckets rang'd. Swift.

BUCKINGSTOOL.* n. s. [from buck and stool.] A low expression, of the same value as its modern synonyme, a washing block.

He lookt about, and saw under him (though afar off) his lord upon Rosinante, no bigger than a toad upon a bucking-stool.

Gayton's Notes on D. Quixote, B. 3. ch. 3.

BUCKLE. n. s. [brecel, Welsh, and the same in the Armorick; boucle, French.]

1. A link of metal, with a tongue or catch made to fasten one thing to another.

Fair lined slippers for the cold,

With buckles of the purest gold. Shakspeare.

The chlamys was a sort of short cloak tied with a buckle, commonly to the right shoulder. Arbutnot on Coins.

Three seal-rings; which after, melted down,

Form'd a vast buckle for his widow's gown, Pope.

2. The state of the hair crisped and curled, by being kept long in the same state.

The greatest beau was dressed in a flaxen periwig: the wearer of it goes in his own hair at home, and lets his wig lie in buckle for a whole half year. Spectator, No. 129.

That live long wig, which Gorgon's self might own,
Eternal buckle takes in Parian stone. Pope.

To BUCKLE. † v. a. [from the noun, and old Fr. boucler.]

1. To fasten with a buckle.

Like saphire, pearl, and rich embroidery,
Buckled below fair knighthood's bending knee.

Shakspeare, Merry W. of Windsor.

France, whose armour conscience buckl'd on,

Whom zeal and charity brought to the field. Shakspeare.

Thus, ever, when I buckle on my helmet,

Thy fears afflict thee. Phillips.

When you carry your master's riding coat, wrap your own in it, and buckle them up close with a strap. Swift.

To prepare to do any thing: the metaphor is taken from buckling on the armour.

The Saracen, this hearing, rose amain;
And catching up in haste his three-square shield,
And shining helmet, soon him buckled to the field.

Spenser, F. Q.

3. To join in battle.

The lord Gray, captain of the men at arms, was forbidden to charge, until the foot of the avantguard were buckled with them in front. Hayward.

4. To confine.

How brief the life of man

Runs his erring pilgrimage!

That the stretching of a span

Buckles in his sum of age. Shakspeare.

5. A technical word among barbers; as, to buckle a wig, i. e. to put it into curl. [Germ. bucken. Sax. būgan, to bend.] See BUCKLE.

To BUCKLE. v. n. [bucken, Germ.]

1. To bend; to bow.

The wretch, whose fever-weaken'd joints,

Like strengthless hinges, buckle under life

Impatient of his fit, breaks like a fire

Out of his keeper's arms. Shakspeare.

2. To buckle to. To apply to; to attend. See the active, second sense.

Now a covetous old crafty knave,

At dead of night, shall raise his son, and cry,

Turn out, you rogue; how like a beast you lie;

Go buckle to the law. Dryden.

This is to be done in children, by trying them, when they are by laziness unbent, or by avocation bent another way, and endeavouring to make them buckle to the thing proposed. Locke.

3. To buckle with. To engage with; to encounter; to join in a close fight, like men locked or buckled together.

For single combat, thou shalt buckle with me. Shakspeare.

Yet thou, they say, for marriage dost provide;

Is this an age to buckle with a bride? Dryden, Jurenal.

BUCKLER. † n. s. [brecled, Welsh; boucler, Fr.] A shield; a defensive weapon buckled on the arm.

He took my arms, and while I forc'd my way,

Through troops of foes, which did our passage stay;

My buckler o'er my aged father cast,

Still fighting, still defending as I past. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

This medal compliments the emperor as the Romans did dictator Fabius, when they called him the buckler of Rome.

Addison on Medals.

To BUCKLER. v. a. [from the noun.] To support; to defend.

Fear not, sweet wench, they shall not touch thee, Kate;

I'll buckler thee against a million. Shakspeare.

Can Oxford, that did ever fence the right,

Now buckler falsehood with a pedigree? Shakspeare.

BUCKLER-THORN. n. s. Christ's-thorn.

BUCKMAST. n. s. The fruit or mast of the beech tree.

BUCKRAM. n. s. [bougram, Fr.] A sort of strong linen cloth, stiffened with gum, used by tailors and staymakers.

I have peppered two of them; two, I am sure, I have paid, two rogues in buckram suits. Shakspeare.

BUCKRAM.* adj. [in allusion to the stiffness of buckram.] Stiff; precise; formal.

A few buckram bishops of Italy, and some other epicurean prelates of other countries. Fulke against Allen, p. 301.

One, that not long since was the buckram scribe,

That would run on men's errands for an asper.

Beaum. and Fl. Span. Curate.

BUCKRAMS. n. s. The same with wild garlick.

BUCKSHORN PLANTAIN. n. s. [Ecoronopus, Lat. from the form of the leaf.] A plant. Miller.

B U D

BU'CKSKIN.* adj. [from buck and skin,] Made of the skin of a buck.

Mr. Humphry Trelooby, wearing his own hair, a pair of buck-skin breeches, a hunting whip, with a new pair of spurs.

Tatler, No. 42

BU'CKSTALL.* n. s. [from buck and stall.] A net to catch deer.

Huloet.

A service in the forest in attending at a certain station to watch deer in hunting.

Burns, Gloss. Hist. of Cumberland.

BU'CKTHORN. n. s. [rhamnus, Lat. supposed to be so called from bucc, Saxon, the belly.] A tree that bears a purging berry.

BU'CKWHEAT. n. s. [buckweitz, Germ. fagopyrum, Lat.] A plant.

Millr.

BUCOLICAL.* adj. [Lat. bucolicus; Fr. bucolique; from the Gr. βουκολος, a cowherd. This adjective is of high antiquity in our language; though hitherto unnoticed.] Pastoral.

Old Quintilian with his declamations,

Theocritus with his bucolical relations. Skelton's Poems, p. 19.

BUCOLICK.† adj. [Fr. bucolique. See BUCOLICAL.] Pastoral.

The pastoral form is a fault of the poet's times: it contains also some passages, which wander far beyond the bounds of bucolick song.

Warton, Notes on Milton's Smaller Poems.

BUCOLICK.* n. s.

1. A writer of bucolicks or pastorals.

Spenser is erroneously ranked as our earliest English bucolick.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii. 51.

2. A bucolick poem.

I look upon this bucolick as an inestimable treasure of the most ancient science.

Arbutnot and Pope, Mart. Scrib.

The first modern Latin bucolicks are those of Petrarch, in number twelve.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ii. 255.

Theocritus and Moschus had respectively written a bucolick on the deaths of Daphnis and Bion.

Ib. Notes on Milton's Smaller Poems.

BUD. n. s. [bouton, Fr.] The first shoot of a plant; a gem.

Be as thou was wont to be,

See as thou wast wont to see:

Dian's bud o'er Cupid's flower

Hath such force and blessed power. Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dr.

Writers say, as the most forward bud,

Is eaten by the canker ere it blow,

Even so by love the young and tender wit

Is turn'd to folly, blasting in the bud

Losing his verdure even in the prime.

Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

When you the flow'rs for Chloe twine,

Why do you to her garland join

The meanest bud that falls from mine?

Prior.

Insects wound the tender buds, with a long hollow trunk, and deposit an egg in the hole, with a sharp corroding liquour, that causeth a swelling in the leaf, and closeth the orifice.

Bentley.

To BUD. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To put forth young shoots or gems.

Bud forth as a rose growing by the brook of the field.

Eccles. xxxix. 13.

2. To rise as a gem from the stalk.

There the fruit, that was to be gathered from such a conflux, quickly budded out.

Clarendon.

Heaven gave him all at once, then snatch'd away,

Ere mortals all his beauties could survey;

Just like that flower that buds and withers in a day.

Dryden.

Tho' lab'ring yokes on their own necks they fear'd,

And felt for budding horns on their smooth foreheads rear'd.

Dryden, Silenus.

3. To be in the bloom, or growing.

Young budding virgin, fair and fresh and sweet,

Whither away, or where is thy abode?

Shakspeare.

To BUD. v. a. To inoculate; to graft by inserting a bud into the rind of another tree.

Of apricocks, the largest is much improved by budding upon a peach stock.

Temple.

BU'DDLE.* n. s. In mineralogy, a sort of frame so called by the English dressers of the ores of metals, made to receive the ore after its first separation from its grossest foulness. Phil. Transact. N^o. 69.

Chambers.

To BUDGE.† v. n. [bouger, Fr.] To stir; to move off the place: a low word, Dr. Johnson says. Sir T. Herbert uses it not as such.

All your prisoners are

In the lime grove, which weatherfends your cell,

They cannot budge till you release. Shakspeare, Tempest.

The mouse ne'er shunn'd the cat, as they did budge

From rascals worse than they. Shakspeare, Coriol.

When one is struck down, the residue budge not.

Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 385.

I thought th' hadst scorn'd to budge

For fear.

Hudibras.

BUDGE.† adj. [of uncertain etymology, Dr. Johnson says. He cites only the passage in Milton, and assigns to the word the meaning of stiff or surly; while others consider it as an academical phrase, denoting the scholastick habit, which was trimmed with budge or fur; [bouge furre, Fr. Palsgrave;] and Dr. Farmer has mentioned an order of the university of Cambridge in 1414, directing the bachelors of arts to be habited "tantum furraris buggeis aut agninis;" and Mr. Warton applies the word to this meaning; observing, however, that "the poet explains the obsolete budge, in which there is a tincture of ridicule, by the very awkward tautology of fur. See the substantive BUDGE. But Milton is perhaps equivocating. He is at least supported in the usage of the word as an adjective, in the sense of stiff, big, or pompous, by his friend Ellwood; and the etymology may then be referred to big, which see. He looks very bug of it;" for big; "a bog or bogge fellow," for bold or sawey. The old substantive budgeness supports also this sense of the adjective; though another old adjective, budgy, countenances the academical application. See BUDGENESS and BUDGY.]

O foolishness of men! that lend their ears

To those budge doctors of the stoick fur.

Milton, Comus, ver. 707.

The warden was a budge old man; and I looked somewhat big too. Ellwood's Life, (written by Himself,) 3d edit. p. 60.

This was a budge fellow, and talked high. Ibid. p. 119.

BUDGE.† n. s. [Bouge furre, rommenis, peaux de Lombardie. Palsgrave.] The dressed skin or fur of lambs; and, in some countries, of kids.

Minsheu and Cockeram.

He's nought but budge, old guards, brown fox-fur face,

He hath no soul.

Marston's Scourge of Vill. ii. 7.

They are become so liberal, as to part freely with their own budge-gowns from off their backs, and bestow them on the magistrate.

Milton, on the Art. of Peace with the Irish.

BU'DGENESS.* n. s. [from budge.] Sternness; severity.

A Sara for goodness, a great Bellona for budgenesse,

For mildnesse Anna, for chastitye godlye Susanna.

Stanhurst, cited by Warton, Hist. Eng. Poet. iii. 401.

BU'DGER. n. s. [from the verb.] One that moves or stirs from his place.

B U F

Let the first budget die the other's slave,
And the gods doom him after. Shakespeare, Coriol.

BUDGET.† n. s. [bogette, French; formerly written bouget, which originally signified "a little coffer or trunk of wood, covered with leather, wherewith the women of old time carried their jewels, attires, and trinkets, at their saddle bowes, when they rid into the countrey." See Cotgrave in V. BOUGETTE. It may be from the Goth. bulgs; but the Welsh have bolgan for a budget or mail of leather; and the Armorick, boulchet; low Lat. bulga. V. Bu Cauge.]

1. A bag, such as may be easily carried.
With that out of his budget forth he drew
Great store of treasure, therewith him to tempt. Spenser, F. Q. iii. x. 29.

If tankers may have leave to live,
And bear the sowskin budget;
Then my account I well may give,
And in the stocks avouch it. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.
Sir Robert Clifford, in whose bosom or budget, most of Perkin's secrets were laid up, was come into England. Baron.
His budget with corruptions cramm'd,
The contributions of the damn'd. Swift.

2. It is used for a store, or stock.
It was nature, in fine, that brought off the cat, when the fox's whole budget of inventions failed him. L'Estrange.

3. The statement made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the House of Commons, on a certain day in each session, of the finances of the kingdom, and of the ways and means of raising the revenue wanted for the ensuing year.

BUDGY.* adj. [from budget.] Consisting of fur.
The example, like that from Milton, presents a tautology.

On whose furr'd chin did hang a budget fleece.
Thule, or Virtue's Historic, by F. R. 1598. sign. R. 2. b.

BUFF.† n. s. [from buffalo, Dr. Johnson says; noticing only the skin of the animal, or leather. It is the buffle or wild ox itself, Lat. bufalus, for bulalus, from the Gr. βουβαλος. See BUFFLE. Huloet, Barret, and Cotgrave, all mentioning the buff, with the variation of buffle or bugle, and with the definition of wild ox.]

1. A buffalo.
2. A sort of leather prepared from the skin of the buffalo; used for waist belts, pouches, and military accoutrements.

A ropy chain of rheums, a visage rough,
Deform'd, unfeatur'd, and a skin of buff. Dryden, Jur.

3. The skins of elks and oxen dressed in oil, and prepared after the same manner as that of the buffalo.

4. A military coat made of thick leather, so that a blow cannot easily pierce it.

A fiend a fairy, pitiless and rough,
A wolf, nay worse, a fellow all in buff. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

5. The colour of the leather, of a very light yellow.

6. In medicine, the sily, viscid, tough mass, which forms on the upper surface of the blood; what physicians call the coagulable lymph. Chambers.

TO BUFF. v. a. [buffe, Fr.] To strike: it is a word not in use.

There was a shock,
To have buff'd out the blood
From ought but a block. B. Jonson.

BUFFALO. n. s. [Ital.] A kind of wild ox.

Of buffaloe, salt goats, and hungry cows. Dryden.

BUFFET.† n. s. [buffeto, Ital. buffet, Fr. from the old Fr. buffe, which Barbazan derives from bouter, to strike, by the change of the t into f; others, from the Dan. puff, a stroke or blow. Su. Goth. baefta, Iceland. bifa, to move.] A blow with the fist; a box on the ear.

They gaven to him buffetis. Wicliffe, St. John. xix.
O, I could divide myself, and go to buffets, for moving such a dish of skimmed milk with so honourable an action. Shakespeare.

A man that fortune's buffets and rewards
Hast ta'en with equal thanks. Shakespeare.

What a manly body! methinks, she looks
As though she'd pitch the bar, or go to buffets.
Braun. and Fl. Loyal Subject.

Go, buffet coward, lest I run upon thee,
And with one buffet lay thy structure low. Milton, S. A.
Round his hollow temples, and his ears,
His buckler beats; the sun of Neptune stunn'd
With these repeated buffets, quits the ground. Dryden.

None knows what it is to be pursued and worried with the restless buffets of an impure spirit, but he who has endured the same terrible conflict himself. South, Sermons, vi. 180.

BUFFET. n. s. [buffette, Fr.] A kind of cupboard; or set of shelves, where plate is set out to shew, in a room of entertainment.

The rich buffet well-colour'd serpents grace,
And gaping Tritons spew to wash your face. Pope, Moral Ess.

TO BUFFET.† v. a. [old Fr. buffeter, Ital. bufettare. See BUFFET.] To strike with the hand; to box; to beat. Wicliffe uses buffate.

An angel of Sathanas is given to me that he buffate me.
Wicliffe, 2 Cor. xii. 7.

Why, woman, your husband is in his old luns again; he so buffets himself on the forehead, crying, Peer out, peer out! that any madness I ever yet beheld, seemed but tameness. Shakespeare, K. John.

Our ears are cudgell'd; not a word of his
But buffets better than a fist of France. Shakespeare, Hen. V.
The torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it
With lusty sinews; throwing it aside. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.
St. Paul tells us, he was buffeted. South, Serm. vi. 293.

Instantly I plung'd into the sea,
And buffeting the billows to her rescue,
Redeem'd her life with half the loss of mine. Otway.

2. A term applied to the mournful peal, or funeral peal, as it is called, of bells.

Buffeting the bells, that is, by tying pieces of leather, old hat, or any other thing that is pretty thick, round the ball of the clapper of each bell, and then, ringing them, they make a most-doleful and mournful sound.

The Art of Ringing, (1733.) p. 200.

TO BUFFET. v. n. To play a boxing-match.

If I might buffet for my love, I could lay on like a butcher. Shakespeare, Henry V.

BUFFETING.* n. s. [from buffet.] Stroke.

From the head these hysterick buffetings descended, and were plentifully bestowed upon the members.

Warburton, Doct. of Grace, i. 122.

BUFFLE.† n. s. [Germ. buffel, Fr. beuffle. The BUFF.]

The same with buffalo; a wild ox.

Buffles big-boned, fat, and camel-backed.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 23.

TO BUFFLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To puzzle; to be at a loss.

This was the utter ruin of that poor, angry, buffing, well-meaning mortal, Pistorides, who lies equally under the contempt of both parties. Swift.

BUFFLEHEADED.† adj. [from buffle and head.] A man with a large head, like a buffalo; dull; stupid:

B U F

foolish. Dr. Johnson gives no example. Dr. Jamieson has produced the Scottish bluffeheaded, as the synonyme, viz. having a large head, accompanied with the appearance of dulness of intellect; perhaps, he adds, from the English bluff. Our English of nearly two centuries back presents, however, buffheaded.

So fell this buffe-headed giant by the hand of Don Quixote.
Gayton's Notes on D. Quixote, iii. 3.

BUFFOON.† n. s. [buffon, French; and buffon in old English. Teut. beffe, derision, and boof, a knave; but the word is perhaps from the Fr. bouffer, to puff.]

1. A man whose profession is to make sport, by low jests and antick postures; a jackpudding.

And when such buffons ball, [bawl,] and cornets sound,
(The guests loud-laughing,) who can then be heard?

Davies, Wittes Pilgrimage, sign. V. ii.
No prince would think himself greatly honoured, to have his proclamation canvassed on a publick stage, and become the sport of buffoons. Watts.

2. A man that practises indecent raillery.

It is the nature of drolls and buffoons, to be insolent to those that will bear it, and slavish to others. L'Estrange.

The bold buffoon, where'er they tread the green,
Their motion mimicks, but with jest obscene. Garth.

TO BUFFOON.* v. a. [from the noun, and Fr. bouffonner, Cotgrave.] To laugh at; to make ridiculous.

Oppression, and all the deadly sins; whatever is contrary to sound religion and true doctrine; reign, triumph, brave the sun, are fashionable, and almost creditable:—But virtue, sobriety, religion; religion, matter of the best, highest, truest, honour, despised, buffooned, exposed as ridiculous!

Glanville, Serm. ix. 343.

Let not so mean a style your muse debase,
But learn from Butler the buffooning grace.

Sir W. Soame's and Dryden's Art of Poetry.

BUFFOONERY. n. s. [from buffoon.]

1. The practice or art of a buffoon.

Courage in an ill-bred man, has the air, and escapes not the opinion of brutality; learning becomes pedantry, and wit buffoonery. Locke on Education.

2. Low jests; ridiculous pranks; scurrile mirth. Dryden places the accent, improperly, on the first syllable.

Where publick ministers encourage buffoonery, it is no wonder if buffoons set up for publick ministers. L'Estrange.

And whilst it lasts, let buffoonery succeed,
To make us laugh; for never was more need.

Dryden, Ep. to Southerne.

BUFFOONING.* n. s. [from the verb.] Buffoonery: low jesting.

Leave your buffooning and lying; I am not in humour to bear it. Dryden, Amphitryon.

These whiffers, who have neither learning nor good manners, are neither afraid nor ashamed, by their rude drolling and buffooning, to expose to contempt all that which the wisest and best men in the world have always had the greatest veneration for. Hallywell's Discourses, p. 56.

BUFFOONISM.* n. s. [from buffoonize.] Jestings. Minsheu, and Cotgrave.

TO BUFFOONIZE.* v. n. [from buffoon.] To buffoonize it; to play the fool, jester, or buffoon; to get a living by jests. Minsheu, and Cotgrave.

BUFFOONLIKE.* adj. [from buffoon and like.] Resembling a buffoon. Sherwood.

BUFFOONLY.* adj. [from buffoon.] Scurrile; ridiculous.

B U G

Such men become fit only for toys and trifles, for apish tricks and buffoonly discourse.

Goodman's Wint. Ev. Conference, P. 1.

BUG.† n. s. A stinking insect bred in old household stuff; or, as in some places bug is used, any insect of the scarabæi kind. Ray.

Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,
This painted child of dirt, which stinks and stings. Pope.

BUG.† } n. s. [It is derived by some from big, by Bu'GBEAR. } others from pug: bæg, in Welsh, has the same meaning, Dr. Johnson says. Pug was an old term for the devil. See PUCK. But bug is the Celtick bûg, a goblin; whence also bogle, which see. Bugbear was formerly written bearbug, in order, I suppose, to be represented as a fit companion for another "word of fear," bullbeggar: "As children be afraid of bearbugs and bul-beggars," Sir T. Smith, Append. to his Life, p. 34.] A frightful object; a walking spectre, imagined to be seen; generally now used for a false terror to frighten babes.

Each trembling leaf and whistling wind they hear,
As ghastly bug, does greatly them affear:
Yet both doth strive their fearfulness to feign.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. iii. 20.

Sir, spare your threats;
The bug which you would fright me with, I seek. Shakspeare.
Hast not slept to-night? would he not, naughty man, let it sleep? a bugbear take him. Shakspeare.
Indeed! these are bug-words.

Beaumont and Fl. Tamer tamed.

We might guess them weary of the present discipline, as offensive to their state, which is the bug we fear.

Milton, Of Ref. in England, B. 2.

We have a horror for uncouth monsters; but, upon experience, all these bugs grow familiar, and easy to us.

L'Estrange.

Such bugbear thoughts, once got into the tender minds of children, sink deep, so as not easily, if ever, to be got out again. Locke.

To the world, no bugbear is so great,
As want of figure, and a small estate. Pope.

BUGGINESS. n. s. [from buggy.] The state of being infected with bugs.

BUGGY. adj. [from bug.] Abounding with bugs.

BUGLE.† } n. s. [from buzen, Sax. to bend, Bu'GLEHORN. } Junius; from bucula, Lat. a heifer, Skinner: from bugle, the bonasus, Lye. It is very natural that the term of the beast should be applied to the horn. See BUGLE.] A hunting horn.

Then took that squire an horny bugle small,
Which hung adown his side in twisted gold,
And tassels gay. Spenser, F. Q.

I will have a recheate winded in my forehead, or hang my bugle in an invisible baldrick. Shakspeare.

He gave his buglehorn a blast,
That through the woodland echo'd far and wide. Tickell.

BUGLE.† n. s. [old Fr. bugle, bos. Lacombe. A bull, in Hampshire, is called a bugle. See also BUFFLE.] A sort of wild ox.

The hart, and the roebucke, and the bugle, and the wilde goate. Deuterion, xiv. 5. (Transl. of 1578.)

BUGLE. n. s. A shining bead of black glass. Bugle bracelets, necklace amber, Perfumed for a lady's chamber. Shakspeare.

'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
Your bugle eyeballs, nor your cheek of cream,
That can entame my spirits to your worship. Shakspeare.

BUGLE. n. s. [from bugula, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

BU'GLOSS. n. s. [from buglossum. Lat.] The herb ox-tongue.

To BUILD. † v. a. preter. I built, I have built; and formerly buildet. [bilden, Dutch; bylcan, Sax. to confirm. The Su. Goth. bol, a city, is perhaps the original.]

1. To raise from the ground; to make a fabrick, or an edifice.

Thou shalt not build an house unto my name.

1 Chron. xxii. 8.

The high places — which Solomon, the king of Israel, had buildet for Ashtoreth, the abomination of the Zidonians.

2 Kings, xviii. 13.

When usurers tell their gold in the field,
And whores and bawds do churches build. Shakspeare.

2. To raise in any laboured form.

When the head-dress was built up in a couple of cones and spires, which stood so excessively high on the side of the head, that a woman, who was but a pigmy without her head dress, appeared like a colossus upon putting it on. Spectator, No. 98.

3. To raise any thing on a support or foundation.

To build, with level of my lofty style,
That which no hands can evermore compile.

Spenser, Ruins of Rome, st. 25.

He knew

Milton, Lycid. v. 11.

Love built on beauty, soon as beauty, dies;
Choose this face, chang'd by no deformities. Donne.
I would endeavour to destroy those curious, but groundless structures, that men have built up of opinions alone. Boyle.

To BUILD. v. n.

1. To play the architect.

To build, to plant, whatever you intend,
To rear the column, or the arch to bend.

Pope.

2. To depend on; to rest on.

By a man's authority, we here understand the force which his word hath for the assistance of another's mind, that buildeth upon it.

Hooker.

Some build rather upon the abusing of others, and putting tricks upon them, than upon a soundness of their own proceedings.

Bacon, Essays.

Even those who had not tasted of your favours, yet built so much on the fame of your beneficence, that they benighted the loss of their expectations.

Dryden, Fob. Ded.

This is certainly a much surer way, than to build on the interpretations of an author, who does not consider how the ancients used to think.

Addison on Medals.

BUI'DER. n. s. [from build.] He that builds; an architect.

But fore-accounting oft makes builders miss;

They found, they felt, they had no lease of bliss. Sidney.

When they, which had seen the beauty of the first temple built by Solomon, beheld how far it excelled the second, which had not builders of like abilities, the tears of their grieved eyes the prophets endeavoured, with comforts, to wipe away.

Hooker.

As is the built, so different is the fight;
Their mounting shot is on our sails design'd;
Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find.

Dryden, Ann. Mir. st. 60.

The built of our ships, and courage of our seamen, is more proper and able to maintain a close fight, than any other nation of the world.

Temple's Works, ii. 377.

2. Species of building.

There is hardly any country, which has so little shipping as Ireland; the reason must be, the scarcity of timber proper for this built.

Temple.

BUL.* n. s. In ichthyology, an English name for the common flounder. Chambers.

BULB. n. s. [from bulbus, Lat.] A round body, or root.

Take up your early autumnal tulips, and bulbs, if you will remove them. Evelyn's Kalendar.

If we consider the bulb, or ball of the eye, the exterior membrane, or coat thereof, is made thick, tough, or strong, that it is a very hard matter to make a rupture in it.

Ray on the Creation.

To BULB out.* v. n. To project; to swell out.

A stone —

BULBED.* adj. [from bulb.] Round-headed, like an onion. Cotgrave in V. Bulbeaux.

BULBOUS. † adj. [Fr. bulbeux, Cotgrave.] Containing bulbs; consisting of bulbs; having round or roundish knobs.

There are of roots, bulbous roots, fibrous roots, and hirsute roots. And I take it, in the bulbous, the sap hasteneth most to the air and sun.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Set up your traps for vermin, especially amongst your bulbous roots.

Evelyn's Kalendar.

Their leaves, after they are swelled out, like a bulbous root, to make the bottle, bend inward, or come again close to the stalk.

Ray on the Creation.

BULGE.* n. s. [Welsh, bolch, a gap. But see also To BULGE.] The sea term for a leak, the breach which lets in water. See To BILGE.

To BULGE. † v. n. [It was originally written bilge; bilge was the lower part of the ship, where it swelled out; from bilg, Sax. a bladder, Dr. Johnson says. It may be rather from the Goth. bulgia, to swell, from bulgs.]

1. To take in water; to founder.

To save our shatter'd ships —

To weigh them out, that else had bulg'd themselves in sand.

Mir. for Magistrates, p. 133.

Then bulg'd at once, and in the deep was lost.

Dryden.

2. To jut out.

The side, or part of the side of a wall, or any timber that bulges from its bottom or foundation, is said to batter, or hang over the foundation.

Moxon, Mechanical Exercises.

BULIMY. † n. s. [old Fr. boulimie, from Gr. βελιμία, from βῆς, an ox, and λιμός, hunger.] An enormous appetite, attended with fainting, and coldness of the extremities. Dict.

BULK. † n. s. [bulcke, Dutch, the breast, or largest part of a man, Dr. Johnson says. To this may be added the Goth. bulgs, and the Gr. βυκε, the belly. Chaucer writes bouke, for bulke. In Sussex, buck is the body or trunk of the body; whence the buck of a cart. But the Su. Goth. bolck, bulck, which Ihre derives from bol, great, is probably the original of our word.

1. Magnitude; of material substance; mass.

Against these forces there were prepared near one hundred ships; not so great of bulk indeed, but of a more nimble motion, and more serviceable. Bacon, War with Spain.

The Spaniards and Portuguese have ships of great bulk, but fitter for the merchant than the man of war; for burden than for battle. Raleigh, Essays.

Though an animal arrives at its full growth, at a certain age, perhaps it never comes to its full bulk till the last period of life. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Size; quantity.

Things, or objects, cannot enter into the mind, as they subsist in themselves, and by their own natural bulk, pass into the apprehension; but they are taken in by their ideas. South.

3. The gross; the majority; the main mass.

Those very points, in which these wise men disagreed from the bulk of the people, are points, in which they agreed with the received doctrines of our nature. Addison, Freeholder.

Change in property, through the bulk of a nation, makes slow marches, and its due power always attends it. Swift.

The bulk of the debt must be lessened gradually. Swift.

4. Main fabrick; the body itself.

He rais'd a sigh so piteous and profound,
As it did seem to shatter all his bulk,
And end his being. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Her heart
Beating her bulk, that his hand shakes withal.
Shakspeare, Rape of Lucrece.

My liver leapt within my bulck.
Turberville, Songs and Sonets, (1570.)
Their bulks and souls are bound on fortune's wheel.
B. Jonson, Sejanus.

5. The main part of a ship's cargo; as, to break bulk, is to open the cargo. [Goth. balke, portio mercium in navi. Serenius.]

BULK. † n. s. [from bicke, Dan. a beam.] A part of a building jutting out.

Here stand behind this bulk. Straight will he come:
Wear thy good rapier bare, and put it home.

Shakspeare, Othello.
He found a country fellow dead-drunk, snorting on a bulke.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 274.

The keeper coming up, found Jack with no life in him; he took down the body, and laid it on a bulck, and brought out the rope to the company. Arbuthnot, History of J. Bull.

BULKHEAD. n. s. A partition made across a ship, with boards, whereby one part is divided from another. Harris.

BULKINESS. n. s. [from bulky.] Greatness of stature, or size.

Wheat, or any other grain, cannot serve instead of money, because of its bulkiness, and change of its quantity. Locke.

BULKY. adj. [from bulk.] Of great size or stature.

Latrons, the bulkiest of the double race,
Whom the spoil'd arms of slain Hæls grace. Dryden.
Huge Telephus, a formidable page,
Cries vengeance; and Orestes' bulky rage,
Unsatisfy'd with margins closely writ,
Foams o'er the covers. Dryden.

The manner of sea engagements, which was to bore and sink the enemy's ships with the rostra, gave bulky and high ships a great advantage. Arbuthnot on Coins.

BULL. † n. s. [bulle, Dutch.]

1. The male of black cattle; the male to a cow.

A gentlewoman, sir, and a kinswoman of my master's.—
Even such kin as the parish heifers are to the town bulk.
Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Bulls are more steep upon the forehead than cows. Bacon.
Best age to go to bulck, or calve, we hold,
Begins at six, and ends at ten years old. May's Virgil.

2. In the scriptural sense, an enemy powerful, fierce, and violent.

Many bulles have compassed me: strong bulle of Bashan have beset me round. Psalms xxii. 12.

3. One of the twelve signs of the zodiac.

At last from Aries rolls the bounteous sun,
And the bright Bull receives him. Thomson, Spring.

4. A letter published by popes and emperours. [Fr. bulle; and written bulle by some of our own writers, to distinguish it, as by Lowth and T. Warton; βύλλα, (bulle, sigillum,) vox Græco-barb. V. Meursii Gloss. in voce.]

A bull is letters called apostolick by the canonists, strengthened with a leaden seal, and containing in them the decrees and commandments of the pope or bishop of Rome. Ayliffe.

There was another sort of ornament wore by the young nobility, called bulle; round, or of the figure of a beast, hung about their necks like diamond crosses. Those bulles came afterwards to be hung to the diplomas of the emperours and popes, from whence they had the name of bulle. Arbuthnot.

It was not till after a fresh bull of Leo's had declared how inflexible the court of Rome was in the point of abuses. Atterbury.

5. A blunder; a contradiction.

Mr. Bagshaw thinks this phrase might take its rise among Protestants in allusion to the constant incongruity in the pope's *bulle*s, where he styles himself servant to the servants of God, and yet dictates and decrees with despotick authority. The example, which I bring from Milton, seems to countenance this supposition; a bull being described as taking away the essence of that which it calls itself.

That such a poem should be toothless, I still affirm it to be a bull, taking away the essence of that which it calls itself. Milton, Apok. for Smectym.

Never did I see such a confused heap of false grammar, improper English, and downright *bulle*s. Dryden, Pref. to Notes on Emp. of Morocco.

I confess it is what the English call a bull, in the expression, though the sense be manifest enough. Pope, Letters.

6. A stock-jobber. See BEAR.

BULL, in composition, generally notes the large size of any thing, as, bull-head, bull-rush, bull-trout; and is therefore only an augmentative syllable, without much reference to its original signification.

BULL-BAITING. n. s. [from bull and bait.] The sport of baiting bulls with dogs.

What am I the wiser for knowing that Trajan was in the fifth year of his tribuneship, when he entertained the people with a horse-race or bull-baiting? Addison on Medals.

BULL-BEEF. n. s. [from bull and beef.] Coarse beef; the flesh of bulls.

They want their porridge and their fat bull-beeves.

Shakspeare.

BULL-BEGGAR. † n. s. [This word probably came from the insolence of those who begged, or raised money by the pope's bull; or it may be a corruption of bold-beggar.] Something terrible; something to fright children with.

As children be afraid of beardugs and bulbeggars.

Sir T. Smith, Append. to his Life, p. 34.
These diminutions from the Vatican were turned into ridicule; and, as they were called bull-beggars, they were used as words of scorn and contempt. Ayliffe.

This is the greatest bullbegger they seem to object against such converts as come from them.

Sheldon, Miracles of Antichrist, p. 137.
This was certainly an ass, in a lion's skin; a harmless bullbegger, who delights to frighten innocent people, and set them a galloping. Tatler, No. 212.

B U L

BULL-CALF. n. s. [from bull and calf.] A he calf; used for a stupid fellow: a term of reproach.

And, Falstaff, you carried your guts away as nimbly, and roared for mercy, and still ran and roared, as ever I heard a bull-calf. Shakspeare.

BULL-DOG. n. s. [from bull and dog.] A dog of a particular form, remarkable for his courage. He is used in baiting the bull; and this species is so peculiar to Britain, that they are said to degenerate when they are carried to other countries.

All the harmless part of him is that of a bull-dog; they are tame no longer than they are not offended. Addison, Spect.

BULL-FACED.* adj. [from bull and face.] Having the face, as it were, of a bull, a large face.

Not bull-fac'd Jonas, who could statutes draw To mean rebellion, and make treason law.

Dryden, Abs. and Achitophel.

BULL-FINCH. n. s. [rubicilla.] A small bird, that has neither song nor whistle of its own, yet is very apt to learn, if taught by the mouth.

Phillips's World of Words.

The blackbird whistles from the thorny brake,

The mellow bull-finch answers from the groves. Thomson.

BULL-FLY. } n. s. An insect.

BULL-BEE. } Phillips's World of Words.

BULL-HEAD. n. s. [from bull and head.]

1. A stupid fellow; a blockhead.

2. The name of a fish.

The miller's thumb, or bull-head, is a fish of no pleasing shape; it has a head big and flat, much greater than suitable to its body; a mouth very wide, and usually gaping; he is without teeth, but his lips are very rough, much like a file; he hath two fins near to his gills, which are roundish or crested; two fins under his belly, two on the back, one below the vent, and the fin of his tail is round. Nature hath painted the body of this fish with whitish, blackish, brownish spots. They are usually full of spawn all the summer, which swells their vents in the form of a dug. The bull-head begins to spawn in April; in winter we know no more what becomes of them than of eels or swallows.

Walton's Angler.

3. A little black water vermin.

Phillips's World of Words.

BULL-TROUT. n. s. A large kind of trout.

There is, in Northumberland, a trout called a bull-trout, of a much greater length and bigness than any in these southern parts. Walton's Angler.

BULL-WEED. n. s. The same with knapsweed.

BULL-WORT, or BISHOPS-WEED. n. s. [ammi, Lat.] A plant.

BU'LLACE. n. s. A wild sour plum.

In October, and the beginning of November, come services, medlars, bullaces; roses cut or removed, to come late; holy-oaks, and such like. Bacon, Essays.

BU'LLARY.* n. s. [Lat. bullarium.] A collection of papistical bulls.

The whole bull is extant in the bullary of Lærtius Cherubinus. South, Sermons, v. 224.

BU'LLET. n. s. [boulet, Fr.] A round ball of metal, usually shot out of guns.

As when the devilish iron engine wrought

In deepest hell, and fram'd by furies skill,

With windy nitre and quick sulphur fraught,

And rammed with bullet round, ordain'd to kill. Spenser, F. Q.

B U L

Giaffer, their leader, desperately fighting amongst the fore-most of the janizaries, was at once shot with two bullets, and slain. Knoles.

And as the built, so different is the fight;

Their mounting shot is on our sails design'd:

Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,

And through the yielding planks a passage find. Dryden.

BULLETIN.* n. s. Fr. "a bill, ticket, or cocket; a billet in a lottery," Cotgrave in V. BULLETIN. Our language, of late years, has adopted this word for an official account of publick news, usually of no great length.

BU'LLION. n. s. [billon, Fr.] Gold or silver in the lump, unwrought, uncoined.

The balance of trade must of necessity be returned in coin or bullion. Bacon, Advice to Valliers.

A second multitude,

With wondrous art, found out the massy ore,

Severing each kind, and scumm'd the bullion dross.

Milton, P. L.

Bullion is silver whose workmanship has no value. And thus foreign coin hath no value here for its stamp, and our coin is bullion in foreign dominions. Locke.

In every vessel there is stowage for immense treasures, when the cargo is pure bullion. Addison on the War.

To BU'LLIRÆ.* v. a. [See To BALLARAG. This is the northern pronunciation and writing of ballarag; which Lye imagines to be derived from the Iceland. baul, a curse, and rargia, to reproach. Others consider it merely as a vulgarity, from bully, or from baul.] To insult in a bullying manner.

BU'LLISH.* adj. [from bull.] Partaking of the nature of a bull or blunder.

A toothless satire is as improper as a toothed sleek-stone, and as bullish. Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

BU'LLIST.* n. s. [Fr. bulliste, a writer or maker of papal bulls, Cotgrave.]

As for the ancients and elders, they are become penitentiaries, proctors in the court ecclesiastical, dataries, bullists, copyists. Harnar's Tr. of Beza's Sermons, p. 134.

BU'LLITION. n. s. [from bullio, Lat.] The act or state of boiling.

There is to be observed in these dissolutions, which will not easily incorporate, what the effects are, as the bullition, the precipitation to the bottom, the ejaculation towards the top, the suspension in the midst, and the like. Bacon, Phys. Rem.

BU'LOCK.* n. s. [Sax. bulluca.] A young bull.

Why, that's spoken like an honest drover: so they sell bullocks. Shakspeare, Much Ado.

Some drive the herds; here the fierce bullock scorns

Th' appointed way, and runs with threatening horns. Cowley.

Until the transportation of cattle into England was prohibited, the quickest trade of ready money here was driven by the sale of young bullocks. Temple.

BU'LLY. n. s. [Skinner derives this word from burly, as a corruption in the pronunciation; which is very probably right: or from bulky, or bull-eyed; which are less probable.* May it not come from bull, the pope's letter, implying the insolence of those who came invested with authority from the papal court?] A noisy, blustering, quarrelling fellow: it is generally taken for a man that has only the appearance of courage.

Mine host of the garter! — What says my bully-rocket? Speak scholarly and wisely. Shakspeare, Merry W. of Windsor.

All on a sudden the doors flew open, and in comes a crew of roaring bullies, with their wenches, their dogs, and their bottles. L'Estrange, Fab.

'Tis so ridiculous, but so true withal,

A bully cannot sleep without a brawl. Dryden, Juvenal.

A scolding hero is, at the worst, a more tolerable character than a bully in petticoats. Addison, Frecholder.

B U M

The little man is a bully in his nature, but, when he grows choleric, I confine him till his wrath is over. Addison, Spect.

To BULLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To overbear with noise or menaces.

Prentices, parish clerks, and hectors meet,
He that is drunk, or bully'd, pays the treat. King's Cookery.

To BULLY. † v. n. To be noisy and quarrelsome.

So Britain's monarch once uncover'd sat,
While Bradshaw bullied in a broad-brim'd hat. Bramston.

BULRUSH. n. s. [from bull and rush.] A large rush, such as grows in rivers, without knots; though Dryden has given it, the epithet knotty, confounding it, probably, with the reed.

To make fine cages for the nightgale,
And baskets of bulrushes, was my wont. Spenser.
All my praises are but as a bulrush cast upon a stream; they are born by the strength of the current. Dryden.

The edges were with bending osiers crown'd;
The knotty bulrush next in order stood,
And all within of reeds a trembling wood. Dryden.

BULRUSHY.  adj.* [from bulrush.] Made of bulrushes, or full of bulrushes. Huot.

BULTEL.  n. s.* [low Lat. bultellus.]

1. The bran or refuse of meal after dressing. See To BOLT. Chambers.

2. The bag wherein meal is dressed; a bolter-cloth. V. Du Cange.

BULWARK. † n. s. [bolwercke, Dutch; probably only from its strength and largeness; so Germ. bolwerk from the Iceland. bol, large.]

1. What is now called a bastion.

But him the squire made quickly to retreat,
Encountering fierce with single sword in hand,
And 'twixt him and his lord did like a bulwark stand. Spenser, F. Q.

They oft repair
Their earthen bulwarks 'gainst the ocean flood. Fairfax, Tasso.

We have bulwarks round us;
Within our walls are troops enur'd to toil. Addison, Cato.

2. A fortification.

Taking away needless bulwarks, divers were demolished upon the sea coasts. Hayward.
Our naval strength is a bulwark to the nation. Addison, Frecholder.

3. A security; a screen; a shelter.

Some making the wars their bulwark, that have before gored the gentle bosom of peace with pillage and robbery. Shakspeare.

To BULWARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To fortify; to strengthen with bulwarks.

And yet no bulwark'd town, or distant coast,
Preserves the beautiful youth from being seen. Addison, Ovid.

BUM. † n. s. [bomme, Dutch; bun, Gael. and Iceland. the bottom of any thing.] The buttocks; the part on which we sit.

The wisest aunt telling the saddest tale,
Sometime for threefoot stool mistaketh me,
Then slip I from her bun, down topples she. Shakspeare.

This said, he gently rais'd the knight,
And set him on his bun upright. Hudibras.

From dusty shops neglected authors come,
Martyrs of pies, and relics of the bun. Dryden.

The learned Sydenham does not doubt,
But profound thought will bring the gout;
And that with bun on couch we lie,
Because our reason's soar'd too high. W——n.

To BUM.  v. n.* [Dutch bommen, to resound; from bomme, a drum. † To make a noise or report.

Fox-furr'd Mecho—
Hath rak'd together some four thousand pound;

B U M

To make his smug girl bear a bumming sound

In a young merchant's ear. Murston's Scourge of Vill. B. i. s. 4.
BUMBA'ILIFF. † n. s. [This is a corruption of bound bailiff, pronounced by gradual corruption, boim, bun, bum bailiff, Dr. Johnson says. Blackstone also says, that it was bound-bailiff. But this origin of the word bun is questionable. The term may have arisen from the person being pursued, and the bailiff or pursuer catching him by the hinder part of his garment; and the vulgar, who are no admirers of this sort of gentry, might affix the contemptuous name to such of bun-bailiff. A literary friend proposes bump, as the etymology; the bailiff giving the party to be arrested a bump on the shoulder. But my own remark is supported by a laughable writer of nearly two centuries ago.] A bailiff of the meanest kind; one that is employed in arrests.

Go, Sir Andrew, scout me for him at the corner of the orchard, like a bumbailiff. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

Constables, tithing-men, bailiffs, bomme or shoulder-marshals, and the like dreadful appearances, which make stop of suspicious persons. Gayton's Notes on D. Quixote, B. ii. ch. 2.

BUMBARD. n. s. [wrong written for bombard; which see.] A great gun; a black jack; a leathern pitcher.

Yond same black cloth, yond huge one looks,
Like a foul bumbard, that would shed his liquor. Shakspeare, Tempest.

BUMBAST. † n. s. [falsely written for bombast; bombast and bombasine being mentioned, with great probability, by Junius, as coming from boom, a tree, and scin, silk; the silk or cotton of a tree. Mr. Steevens, with much more probability, deduces them all from bombycinus, Dr. Johnson says. But see BOMBAST.]

1. A cloth made by sewing one stuff upon another; patchwork.

The usual bumbast of black bits sewed into ermine, our English women are made to think very fine. Grew.

2. Linen stuffed with cotton; stuffing; wadding.

We have received your letters full of love,
And, in our maiden council, rated them
As courtship, pleasant jest, and courtesy,
As bumbast, and as lying to the time. Shakspeare.

BUMBLEBEE.  n. s.* [from bumble and bee.] Chaucer uses the verb bumble to describe the noise made by the bittern. The bumble or bumble bee is a common word in the north of England; and is, no doubt, so called from the bumming, or humming, noise which it makes. See To BUM and To BUMP. The wild bee, or, as we now call it, the humble bee; which makes a great noise.

BUMBOAT.  n. s.* [from bun and bout; or perhaps from bump. See BUMP.] A large clumsy boat, used in carrying vegetables and liquours to a ship lying at some distance from the shore.

BUMP. † n. s. [perhaps from bun, as being prominent, Dr. Johnson says. It is from the Goth. and Iceland. bomps, a stroke or blow.] A swelling; a protuberance.

It had upon its brow a bump as big as a young cockrel's stone; a perilous knock, and it cried bitterly.

Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

Not though his teeth are beaten out, his eyes
Hang by a string, in bumps his forehead rise. Dryden

To BUMP. † v. n. [Dutch bommen, Tent. bomme, Lat. bombus. See To BOMB. It is applied, perhaps, only to the bittern; which, in some places, is called the butter-bump. Chaucer employs bumble, in describing the noise made by this bird, C. T. ver. 6554.] To make a loud noise, or bomb.

B U N

Then to the water's brink she laid her head,
And as a bittour bumps within a reed,
To thee alone, O lake, she said. — Dryden, Fables.

Bump.* n. s. [from the verb.] The mugient noise made by the bittern.

The bitter with his bump,
The crane with his trump,
The swan of Menander,
The goose and the gander.

Skelton's Poems, p. 227.

BUMPER. † n. s. [from bump, Dr. Johnson says, which he conceives to be from bum, as being prominent. But this is a far-fetched explanation of bumper. Others consider it as a corruption of bumbard or bombard, a drinking vessel. In Spence's Anecdotes, another corruption is proposed, viz. of au bon pere: the English, when they were good catholicks, being accustomed to drink the pope's health in a full glass, every day after dinner, "au bon pere!"] A cup filled till the liquor swells over the brims.

Places his delight

All day in playing bumpers, and at night
Reels to the bawds.

Dryden, Juvenal.

I have no opinion of your bumper-patriots. Some eat, some drink, some quarrel for their country!

Bp. Berkeley on Patriotism, § 21.

BUMPKIN. † n. s. [This word is of uncertain etymology; Henshaw derives it from pumkin, a kind of worthless gourd, or melon. This seems harsh; yet we use the word cabbage-head in the same sense. Bump is used amongst us for a knob, or lump; may not bumpkin be much the same with clodpate, loggerhead, block, and blockhead. Such is the etymological explanation given by Dr. Johnson. The word is of no great age, in this sense, in our language. But bumkin, a naval word, is of higher antiquity. It is found in Sherwood's Dictionary of 1632, and is rendered into French chicambault, which Cotgrave defines "the luffe-block, a long and thick piece of wood, whereunto the foresayle and spritsayle are fastened, when a ship goes by the wind;" and this word bumkin, meaning a boom or bar of timber, is still in our sea-language. May not, then, this block of wood have given rise to the contemptuous application of bumpkin to a man? Kersey's Dictionary of 1707 gives bumkin, a country clown, without the p. The Dutch have boomken for a little tree.] An awkward heavy rustick; a country lout.

The poor bumpkin, that had never heard of such delights before, blessed herself at the change of her condition.

L'Estrange.

A heavy bumpkin, taught with daily care,
Can never dance three steps with a becoming air. — Dryden.

In his white cloak the magistrate appears,
The country bumpkin the same liv'ry wears. — Dryden.

It was a favour to admit them to breeding; they might be ignorant bumpkins and clowns, if they pleased. — Locke.

BUMPKINLY. adj. [from bumpkin.] Having the manners or appearance of a clown; clownish.

He is a simple, blundering, and yet conceited fellow, who, aiming at description, and the rustick wonderful, gives an air of bumpkinly romance to all he tells. — Clarissa.

BUNCH. † n. s. [bunker, Danish, the crags of the mountains, bunke, Goth. an heap.]

1. A hard lump; a knob.

B U N

They will carry their treasures upon the bunches of camels to a people that shall not profit them. — Isaiah, xxx. 6.

He felt the ground, which he had wont to find even and soft, to be grown hard with little round balls or bunches, like hard boiled eggs. — Boyle.

2. A cluster; many of the same kind growing together.

Vines, with clust'ring bunches growing.

Shakspeare.

Titian said, that he knew no better rule for the distribution of the lights and shadows, than his observation drawn from a bunch of grapes.

Dryden.

For thee, large bunches load the bending vine,

And the last blessings of the year are thine.

Dryden.

3. A number of things tied together.

And on his arms a bunch of keys he bore.

Spenser, F. Q.

All? I know not what ye call all; but if I fought not with fifty of them, I am a bunch of ruddish.

Shakspeare.

Ancient Janus, with his double face,

Dryden.

And bunch of keys, the porter of the place.

The mother's bunch of keys, or any thing they cannot hurt themselves with, serves to divert little children.

Locke.

4. Any thing bound into a knot: as, a bunch of ribbon; a tuft.

Upon the top of all his lofty crest,

A bunch of hairs discover'd diversly,

With sprinkled pearl and gold full richly drest. — Spenser, F. Q.

TO BUNCH. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell out in a bunch; to grow out in protuberances.

It has the resemblance of a champignon before it is opened, bunching out into a large round knob at one end.

Woodward, on Fossils.

BUNCHED. adj. [from bunch and back.] Having bunches on the back; crookbacked.

The day shall come, that thou shalt wish for me,

To help thee curse this pois'nous bunchback'd toad. — Shakspeare.

BUNCHINESS. † n. s. [from bunchy.] The quality of being bunchy, or growing in bunches. — Sherwood.

BUNCHY. adj. [from bunch.] Growing in bunches; having tufts.

He is more especially distinguished from other birds, by his bunchy tail, and the shortness of his legs. — Grew's Museum.

BUNDLE. n. s. [byñble, Sax. from byñb.]

1. A number of things bound together.

As to the bundles of petitions in parliament, they were, for the most part, petitions of private persons. — Hale, Law of Eng.

Try, lads, can you this bundle break; —

Then bids the youngest of the six

Take up a well-bound heap of sticks.

Swift.

2. A roll; any thing rolled up.

She carried a great bundle of Flanders lace under her arm; but finding herself overladen, she dropped the good man, and brought away the bundle.

Spectator, No. 499.

TO BUNDLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To tie in a bundle; to tie together: with up.

We ought to put things together, as well as we can, doctrina causa; but, after all, several things will not be bundled up together, under our terms and ways of speaking. — Locke.

See how the double nation lies,
Like a rich coat with skirts of frize;

As if a man, in making posies,
Should bundle thistles up with roses.

Swift.

BUNG. n. s. [bwng, Welsh.] A stopple for a barrel.

After three nights are expired, the next morning pull out the bung stick, or plug.

Mortimer.

TO BUNG. † v. a. [from the noun.] To stop; to close up.

Kersey.

BUNGHOLE. n. s. [from bung and hole.] The hole at which the barrel is filled, and which is afterwards stopped up.

Why may not imagination trace the noble dust of Alexander; till he find it stopping a bunghole.

Shakspeare.

TO BUNGLE. v. n. [See BUNGLER.] To perform clumsily.

When men want light,

They make but bungling work.

Dryden, Span. Friar.

Letters to me are not seldom opened, and then sealed in a bungling manner before they come to my hands.

Swift.

To BU'NGLE. v. a. To botch; to manage clumsily; to conduct awkwardly: with up.

Other devils, that suggest by treasons,

Do botch and bungle up damnation,

With patches, colours, and with forms being fetcht

From glist'ring assemblances of piety.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

They make lame mischief, though they mean it well:

Their int'rest is not finely drawn, and hid,

But seams are coarsely bungled-up, and seen.

Dryden, Don. Sebast.

BU'NGLE. n. s. [from the verb.] A botch; an awkwardness; an inaccuracy; a clumsy performance.

Errours and bungles are committed, when the matter is inapt or contumacious.

Ray on the Creation.

BU'NGLER. n. s. [bungler, Welsh; q. bôn y glér, i. e. the last or lowest of the profession. Davies.] A bad workman; a clumsy performer; a man, without skill.

Painters at the first, were such bunglers, and so rude, that, when they drew a cow or a hog, they were fain to write over the head what it was; otherwise the beholder knew not what to make of it.

Peacham on Drawing.

Hard features every bungler can command;

To draw true beauty shews a master's hand.

Dryden.

A bungler thus, who scarce the nail can hit,

With driving wrong will make the pannel split.

Swift.

BU'NGLINGLY. adv. [from bungling.] Clumsily; awkwardly.

To denominate them even monsters, they must have had some system of parts, compounded of solids and fluids; that executed, though but bunglingly, their peculiar motions and functions.

Bentley, Serm. p. 182.

BUNN.† n. s. [huno, Span. bunna, Irish, a cake.]

A kind of sweet bread.

Thy songs are sweeter to mine ear,

Than to the thirsty cattle rivers clear;

Or winter porridge to the lab'ring youth,

Or buns and sugar to the damsel's tooth.

Gay, Pastoral.

BUNT.† n. s. [corrupted, as Skinner thinks, from bent. Bown, however, is swollen, in Norfolk.]

1. A swelling part; an encresing cavity.

The wear is a frith, reaching slopewise through the ooze, from the land to low water mark, and having in it a bunt or cod, with an eye-hook, where the fish entering, upon the coming back with the ebb, are stopped from issuing out again, forsaken by the water, and left dry on the ooze.

Carew.

2. The middle part of a sail, purposely formed into a sort of bag, that it may receive the more wind. It is also called the bent.

The use of the brails is, when the sail is furled across, to hale up its bunt.

Harris.

To BUNT. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell out, as the sail bunts out.

BU'NTER.† n. s. A cant word for a woman who picks up rags about the street; and used, by way of contempt, for any low vulgar woman.

Her two marriageable daughters, like bunters, in stuff gowns, are now taking sixpennyworths of tea at the White-conduit House.

Goldsmith's Essays, Ess. 13.

BU'NTING.† n. s. [emberiza alba.] The name of a bird.

I took this lark for a bunting.

Shakspeare, All's Well.

A goshawk beats not a bunting.

Ray, Proverbs.

BU'NTING. n. s. The stuff of which a ship's colours are made.

BUOY. n. s. [boia, or boye, Fr. boya, Span.] A piece of cork or wood floating on the water, tied to a weight at the bottom.

The fishermen, that walk upon the beach,

Appear like mice; and yond tall anchoring bark

Diminish'd to her cock; her cock a buoy,

Almost too small for sight.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Like buoys, that never sink into the flood,

On learning's surface we but lie and nod.

Pope, Dunciad.

To BUOY.† v. a. [from the noun: the u is mute in both, Dr. Johnson says; but a correct speaker leaves not the u mute in either. It is pronounced bwoy.] To keep afloat; to bear up.

All art is used to sink episcopacy, and launch presbytery in England; which was lately buoyed up in Scotland, by the like artifice of a covenant.

K. Charles.

The water which rises out of the abyss, for the supply of springs and rivers, would not have stopped at the surface of the earth, but marched directly up into the atmosphere, wherever there was heat enough in the air to continue its ascent, and buoy it up.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

To BUOY. v. n. To float; to rise by specifick lightness.

Rising merit will buoy up at last.

Pope, Essay on Crit.

BUOYANCY. n. s. [from buoyant.] The quality of floating.

All the winged tribes owe their flight and buoyancy to it.

Derham, Physico-Theology.

BUOYANT. adj. [from buoy.] Floating; light; that which will not sink. Dryden uses the word, perhaps improperly, for something that has density enough to hinder a floating body from sinking.

I swam with the tide, and the water under me was buoyant.

Dryden.

His once so vivid nerves,

So full of buoyant spirit, now no more

Inspire the course.

Thomson, Autumn.

BUR, BOUR, BOR,† come from the Sax. bup, an inner-chamber, or place of shade and retirement.

See BOWER.

Gibson's Camden.

BUR. n. s. [lappa; bourre, Fr. 's down; the bur being filled with a soft tomentum, or down.] A rough head of a plant, called a burdock, which sticks to the hair or clothes.

Nothing teems

But hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies, burs,

Losing both beauty and utility.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Hang off, thou cat, thou bur; vile thing, let loose;

Or I will shake thee from me like a serpent.

Shakspeare.

Dependents and suitors are always the burs, and sometimes the briars of favourites.

Wolton.

Whither betake her

From the chill dew, amongst rude burs and thistles.

Milton, P. L.

And where the vales with violets once were crown'd,

Now knotty burs and thorns disgrace the ground.

Dryden.

A fellow stuck like a bur, that there was no shaking him off.

Arbuthnot, Hist. of John Bull.

BU'RBOT.† n. s. A fish full of prickles, Dr. Johnson says. It is the English name of the mustela fluviatilis; a fish common in the Trent, and many other of our rivers; and, called, in other places, the eel-pout.

Chambers.

BU'RDELAIS.† n. s. [perhaps Bourdelaïs, from Bourdelaux.] A sort of grape.

BURDEN.† n. s. [býrden, Sax. and therefore properly written burthen, Dr. Johnson says; which he might have supported by noticing that burthen is probably a contraction from bæpan and þinge, i. e. to bear any thing. But he only observes, that it is supposed to come from the Lat. burdo, a mule. Býrden is another form also of the Sax. substantive. See BURTHEN.]

BUR

1. A load: something to be carried.

Camels have their provender
Only for bearing burdens, and sore blows
For sinking under them.

It is of use in lading of ships, and may help to shew what burden in the several kinds they will bear. Bacon, Phys. Rem.

2. Something grievous, or wearisome.

Couldst thou support
That burden, heavier than the earth to bear? Milton, P. L.

None of the things they are to learn, should ever be made a burden to them, or imposed on them as a task. Locke.

Deaf, giddy, helpless, left alone,
To all my friends a burden grown. Swift.

3. A birth: now obsolete.

Thou hadst a wife once, call'd Æmilia,
That bore thee at a burden two fair sons. Shakspeare.

4. The verse repeated in a song; the bob; the chorus; [low Lat. burdo, a humming noise; Fr. bourdon, the drone of a bagpipe. Cockeram renders "a deep base" by the Fr. burdon; and the Welsh byrdon is also used for the bass in musick. The commentators on Chaucer consider the sompner, "bearing a stiff burdown," as singing the bass part of a well-known song, which the pardoner was singing; but it might be the chorus. However, the latter is the present meaning.]

At every close she made, the attending throng
Reply'd, and bore the burden of the song. Dryden, Fables.

5. The quantity that a ship will carry; or the capacity of a ship: as, a ship of a hundred tons burden.

6. A club. [Fr. bourdon, a pilgrim's staff, Cotgrave; Ital. bordone. Chaucer describes the giant Danger with a great bourdown in his hand," Rom. R. 3401.]

The villain ———
Let drive at him so dreadfully amaine,
That for his safety he did him constraine
To give him ground, and shift on every side,
Rather than once his burden to sustaine.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. vii. 46.

- To BURDEN. v. a. [from the noun.] To load; to incumber.

Burden not thyself above thy power. Eccles. xiii. 2.
I mean not that other men be eased and you burdened.

2 Corinthians, viii. 13.

With meats and drinks they had sufficed,
Not burden'd nature. Milton, P. L.

- BURDENER. n. s. [from burden.] A loader; an oppressor.

- BURDENOUS. adj. [from burden.]

1. Grievous; oppressive; wearisome.

Make no jest of that which hath so earnestly pierced me through; nor let that be light to thee, which to me is so burdenous.
Sudney, b. i.

2. Useless; cumbersome.

To what can I be useful, wherein serve,
But to sit idle on the household hearth,
A burdenous drone; to visitants a gaze. Milton, S. A.

- BURDENSOME. adj. [from burden.] Grievous; troublesome to be born.

His leisure told him that his time was come,
And lack of load made his life burdensome.

Milton, Epit. on Hobson.

Could I but live till burdensome they prove,
My life would be immortal as my love. Dryden, Ind. Emp.

Assistances always attending us, upon the easy condition of our prayers, and by which the most burdensome duty will become light, and easy. Rogers.

- BURDENSOMENESS. n. s. [from burdensome.] Weight; heaviness; uneasiness to be born.

- BURDOCK. n. s. [persolata.] A plant.

- BURDEAU. † n. s. [bureau, Fr. a thick and coarse cloth of a brown, russet, or dark-mingled colour;

BUR

also the table that is within a court of audience; be-like, because 'tis usually covered with a carpet of that cloth. Cotgrave in V. BUREAU. Hence, our table, with drawers.] A chest of drawers with a writing board. It is pronounced as if it were spelt buro.

For not the desk with silver nails,
Nor bureau of expence,
Nor standish well japann'd, avails,
To writing of good sense.

Swift.

- BURG. † n. s. See BURGH, and BURROW.

Tame, a burg or fort of some note.

Warton, Hist. of Kildington, p. 48.

- BUR'GAGE. † n. s. [Fr. bourgage, from bourg; low Lat. burgagium. See BURGH.] A tenure proper to cities and towns, whereby men of cities or burrows hold their lands or tenements of the king, or other lord, for a certain yearly rent. Cowel.

The gross of the borough is surveyed together in the beginning of the county; but there are some other particular bur- gages thereof, mentioned under the titles of particular men's possessions. Hale, Orig. of Manum.

- BUR'GAMOT. n. s. [bergamotte, Fr.]

1. A species of pear.

2. A kind of perfume.

- BUR'GANET. } n. s. [from bourginote, Fr.] A kind
- BUR'GONET. } of helmet.

Upon his head his glistering burganet,
The which was wrought by wonderful device,
And curiously engraven, he did fit. Spenser, Muirpotmos.
This day I'll wear aloft my burgonet,
Even to affright thee with the view thereof.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

I was page to a footman, carrying after him his pike and burganet. Hakewill on Providence.

- BUR'GEOIS. n. s. [burgeois, Fr.]

1. A citizen; a burges.

It is a republick itself, under the protection of the eight ancient cantons. There are in it an hundred burgeois, and about a thousand souls. Addison on Italy.

2. A type of a particular sort, probably so called from him who first used it: such is the type, in which the examples to words are, in the present work, given.

- To BUR'GEON. * See To BOURGEON. Often written burgeon by our old authors.

- BUR'GEON. * n. s. In gardening, a knot or button put forth by the branch of a tree in the spring. Chambers.

- BUR'GESS. † n. s. [bourgeois, Fr. burgess, old Fr. Roquefort, Gloss. de la Lang. Rom.]

1. A citizen; a freeman of a city or corporate town.

Twenty years have I lived
A burgess of the sea, and have been present
At many a desperate fight. Beaumont and Fl. Cust. of the Country.
Almost a constant burgess of the groves.

Sir R. Ranshaw, Tr. of Pastor Fido, p. 18.

2. A representative of a town corporate.

The whole case was dispersed by the knights of shires, and burgesses of towns through all the veins of the land. Wotton.

- BUR'GESS-SHIP. * n. s. The state and quality of a burgess.

One of our burgess-ships is vacant by the promotion of Sir Heneage Finch.

South, Lett. to Bathurst, Warton's Life of Bathurst, p. 174.

- BURGH. † n. s. [Sax. burg, from the Goth. baurgs, a city; old Fr. bourg; Germ. bourg; low Lat. burgus; Gr. πύργος; in the Macedonian dialect, βύργος, a tower. V. Morin, Dict. Etym. Fr. et Gr. Wachter derives the Germ. bourg, from bergen, to cover, to protect, or fortify. See BURG, and BOROUGH.] A corporate town or borough.

Many towns in Cornwall, when they were first allowed to send burgesses to the parliament, bore another proportion to London than now; for several of these burghs send two burgesses, whereas London itself sends but four. Grant.

BURGHIER. n. s. [from burgh.] One who has a right to certain privileges in this or that place. Locke.

It irks me, the poor dappled fools,
Being native Burghers of this desert city,
Should in their own confines, with forked heads,
Have their round haunches gor'd. Shakspeare, As you like it.

After the multitude of the common people was dismissed, and the chief of the burghers sent for, the imperious letter was read before the better sort of citizens.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

BURGHERSHIP. n. s. [from burgher.] The privilege of a burgher.

BURGLAR. † n. s. [written also burglarer or burglerer, and burglayer.] The former agrees with its derivation from burglary; but the latter would suggest an etymology from burgh and lay, which is not intelligible.] One guilty of the crime of house-breaking.

Sir William Brian was sent to the tower, only for procuring the pope's bull against certain burglerers that robbed his own house. Id. Northampton, Proc. against Garnet, G. g. 2.

If in this resistance the thief, or burglayer, miscarry, his blood will be upon his own head.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience, it. 1.

BURGLARIOUS. * adj. [from burglar.] Relating to the crime of housebreaking. Ash.

BURGLARY. n. s. [from burg, a house, and larron, a thief.] In the natural signification, is nothing but the robbing of a house: but as it is a term of art, our common lawyers restrain it to robbing a house by night, or breaking in with an intent to rob, or do some other felony. The like offence committed by day, they call house-robbing, by a peculiar name. Coxw.

What say you, father? Burglary is but a venial sin among soldiers. Dryden, Spanish Fryar.

BURGMASER. See BURGOMASTER.

BURGMOTE. * n. s. [from burgh and mote. See MOTE.] A borough court.

The king sent a notification of these proceedings to each burgmote, where the people of that court also swore to the observance of them. Buke, Abridg. Eng. Hist. ii. 7.

BURGMASER. n. s. [from burg and master.] One employed in the government of a city.

They chuse their councils and burgomasters out of the burgois, as in the other governments of Switzerland. Addison.

BURGRAVE. * n. s. [from bourg, and graf or grave, Germ. a count.] An hereditary governour of a castle, or fortified town.

Fourre marquesses, fourre landgraves, fourre burggraves, fourre carles, &c. Bale, Acts of Eng. Notaries. P. ii. sign. B. 8. b.

BURGUNDY. * n. s. Wine that is made in Burgundy.

The mellow-tasted burgundy. Thomson, Autumn, ver. 703.

BURH, is a tower; and from that, a defence or protection; so Cwenburh is a woman ready to assist; Cuthbur, eminent for assistance. Gibson's Camden.

BURIAL. n. s. [from To bury.]

1. The act of burying; sepulture; interment.

Not would we deign him burial of his men. Shakspeare.

See my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand,

Vailing her high top lower than her ribs,

To kiss her burial. Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

VOL. I.

Your body I sought, and had I found,
Design'd for burial in your native ground. Dryden, Æneid.

2. The act of placing any thing under earth or water.

We have great lakes, both salt and fresh; we use them for burials of some natural bodies: for we find a difference of things buried in earth, and things buried in water. Bacon.

3. The church service for funerals.

The office of the church is performed by the parish priest, at the time of interment, if not prohibited unto persons excommunicated, and laying violent hands on themselves, by a rubrick of the burial service. Ayliffe, Parergon.

BURIAL-PLACE. * n. s. [from burial and place.] A place set apart for burial.

These are the souls of wicked, not of virtuous men, which are thus forced to wander amidst burial-places, suffering the punishment of an impious life.

Warton, Notes on Milton's Smaller Poems.

BURIER. † n. s. [from bury.] He that buries; he that performs the act of interment.

And the passengers that pass through the land, when any seeth a man's bone, then shall he set up a sign by it, till the buriers have buried it. Ezek. xxxix. 15.

Let one spirit of the first-born Cain

Reign in all bosoms, that, each heart being set

On bloody courses, the rude scene may end,

And darkness be the burier of the dead. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

BURINE. n. s. [French.] A graving tool; a graver.

Wit is like the graver's burine upon copper, or the corrodings of aquafortis, which engrave and indent the characters, that they can never be defaced. Government of the Tongue.

To BURL. † v. a. To dress cloth as fullers do.

In the manufacturing of white cloths for dying, the process of clearing it of the knots, ends of thread, and the like, with little iron nippers called in our old lexicography urling-irons, is termed urling. Whence this word is derived, I know not; but it is curious to observe, that in a Scottish act of parliament (in 1451) "money urlit and clippit" occurs: which is analogous to our technical word.

BURLER. * n. s. [from the verb.] A dresser of cloth; he who clips off the ends and threads.

Soon the clothier's sheers,

And burler's thistle, skin the surface keen. Dyer's Fleece.

BURPLACE. n. s. [corruptly written for burdelais.] A sort of grape.

BURLESQUE. † adj. [Fr. burlesque, Ital. burlesco, from burles, to jest; which may be from the low Lat. burdare, that is, to board, or joke. See BOURD.] Jocular; tending to raise laughter, by unnatural or unsuitable language or images.

Homer, in his character of Vulcan and Thersites, in his story of Mars and Venus, in his behaviour of Irus, and in other passages, has been observed to have lapsed into the burlesque character, and to have departed from that serious air, essential to the magnificence of an epic poem. Addison, Spect.

BURLESQUE. † n. s. Ludicrous language, or ideas; ridicule.

Who make but a jest of it at the best; if not a subject of burlesque and drollery. Wallis's Sermons, (1682,) p. 3.

When a man lays out a twelvemonth on the spots in the sun, however noble his speculations may be, they are very apt to fall into burlesque. Addison on Ancient Medals.

To BURLESQUE. † v. a. [from the adjective.] To turn to ridicule.

'Tis foppish to speak of religion but in raillery; or to mention such a thing as Scripture, except it be to burlesque and deride it. Serm. iv. 194.

B U R

Would Homer apply the epithet divine to a modern swine-herd? if not, it is an evidence, that Homæus was a man of consequence, otherwise Homer would burlesque his own poetry.

Broome, Notes on the Odyssey.

BURLESQUE.* n. s. [from burlesque.] He who turns a circumstance into ridicule.

BURLETTA.* n. s. [Ital. from burlare, to jest.] A word of late introduction into our language, meaning generally a musical farce.

BURLINESS.† n. s. [from burly.] Bulk; bluster. Into a lesser room thy burliness to bring.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 8.

BURLY.† adj. [Junius has no etymology; Skinner imagines it to come from boorlike, clownish, Dr. Johnson says. Sir T. More, I may add, in his Life of King Richard III. writes boorly, for boorlike, which countenances Skinner's conjecture. Mr. Malone is also of this opinion.]

1. Great of stature; great of size; bulky; tumid. Steel, if thou turn thine edge, or cut not out the burly boned clown, in chins of beef, ere thou sleep in thy sheath, I beseech Jove that thou mayest be turned into hobnails.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. II.

It was the orator's own burley way of nonsense. Cowley.

Away with all your Carthaginian state,
Let vanquish'd Hannibal without doors wait,
Too burly and too big to pass my narrow gate.

Dryden.

Her husband being a very burly man, she thought it would be less trouble for her to bring away little Cupid.

Addison, Spect.

2. Replete; full; without vacuity. 'Twixt their burly sacks, and full stuff'd barns, they stand.

Drayton, Polyolbion, S. 14.

3. Boisterous; loud. [Teut. borlen, to make a noise. This sense is unnoticed by our lexicographers. The example presents a very fine specimen of our old and forgotten poetry.]

So when a burly tempest rolls his pride
About the world; though mighty cedars bow,
Though seas give way untill his greater tide,
Though mountains lay their proudest heads full low
Before his feet; yet still he roars amain,
And rusheth on in blustering disdain.

Beaumont, Psyche, v. st. 224.

To BURN.† v. a. preterite and participle, burned, or burnt. [German, bürnan, Sax.]

1. To consume with fire.

They burnt Jericho with fire.

Joshua, vi. 24.

The fire burneth the wood.

Psalms lxxxiii. 14.

Altar of Syrian mode, whereon to burn

His odious offerings.

Milton, P. L.

That where she fed his amorous desires

With soft complaints, and felt his hottest fires,
There other flames might waste his earthly part,
And burn his limbs where love had burn'd his heart.

Dryden.

A fleshy excrescence, becoming exceeding hard, is supposed to demand extirpation, by burning away the induration, or amputating.

Sharp's Surgery.

2. To wound or hurt with fire or heat.

Hand for hand, foot for foot, burning for burning, wound for wound, stripe for stripe.

Exodus, xxi. 25.

3. To exert the qualities of heat, as by drying or scorching; to communicate heat as to burn wine.

See BURN'T.

O that I could but weep, to vent my passion!
But this dry sorrow burns up all my tears.

Dryden.

To BURN. v. n.

1. To be on fire; to be kindled.

A fire devoureth before them, and behind them a flame burneth; the land is as the garden of Eden before them, and behind them a desolate wilderness.

Isaiah, ii. 2.

B U R

The mount burned with fire.

Deut. ix. 15.

O coward conscience! how dost thou afflict me!

The light burns blue — Is it not dead midnight?

Cold fearful drops stand on my trembling flesh. Shakspeare.

2. To shine; to sparkle.

The barge she sat in, like a burnish'd throne,

Burnt on the water.

Shakspeare.

Oh! prince, oh! wherefore burn your eyes? and why

Is your sweet temper turn'd to fury?

Rowe.

3. To be inflamed with passion, or desire.

When I burnt in desire to question them farther, they made themselves air, into which they vanished.

Shakspeare.

Tranio, I burn, I pine, I perish, Tranio,

If I achieve not this young modest girl!

Shakspeare.

In Raleigh mark their every glory mix'd;

Raleigh, the scourge of Spain! whose breast with all

The sage, the patriot, and the hero burn'd.

Thomson.

4. To act with destructive violence, used of the passions.

Shall thy wrath burn like fire?

Psalms lxxxix. 46.

5. To be in a state of destructive commotion.

The nations bleed where'er her steps she turns,

The groan still deepens and the combat burns.

Pope.

6. It is used particularly of love.

She burns, she raves, she dies, 'tis true,

But burns, and raves and dies for you.

Addison.

BURN.† n. s. [Sax. býnn.] A hurt caused by fire.

We see the phlegm of vitriol is a very effectual remedy against burns.

Boyle.

BURNABLE.* adj. [from burn.] That which may be burnt up; adustible.

Cotgrave in V. Adustible.

BURNER.† n. s. [from burn.] A person that burns any thing.

They [Pagans] were great burners and destroyers of Holy Scriptures.

Brevint's Saul and Samuel at Endor, p. 376.

BURNET. n. s. [pimpinella, Lat.] The name of a plant.

The even mead that erst brought sweetly forth,

The freckled cowslip, burnet, and green clover.

Shakspeare.

BURNING.† n. s. [Sax. bæpning.]

1. Fire; flame; state of inflammation.

The mind, surely, of itself, can feel none of the burnings of a fever.

South.

In liquid burnings, or on dry to dwell,

Is all the sad variety of hell.

Dryden.

2. The thing to be burned.

Thou shalt die in peace; and with the burnings of thy fathers, the former kings which were before thee, so shall they burn odours for thee.

Jerem. xxxiv. 5.

3. The act of burning.

The persecutions in the Thyatirian interval were usually burnings, and rackings, and wasting away their lives in miserable imprisonments.

More's Seven Churches, ch. 6.

BURNING. adj. [from the participle.] Vehement; powerful.

These things sting him

So venomously, that burning shame detains him
From his Cordelia.

Shakspeare.

I had a glimpse of him; but he shot by me

Like a young hound upon a burning scent.

Dryden.

BURNING-GLASS. n. s. [from burning and glass.] A glass which collects the rays of the sun into a narrow compass, and so increases their force.

The appetite of her eye did seem to scorch me up like a burning-glass.

Shakspeare.

Love is of the nature of a burning-glass, which, kept still in one place, fireth; changed often, it doth nothing.

Suckling.

O diadem, thou centre of ambition,

Where all its different lines are reconciled,

As if thou wert the burning-glass of glory!

Dryden.

To BURNISH.† v. a. [burnir, Fr. Formerly, brunir; Ital. brunire; Span. brunir; probably from the low Lat. brunus, a coat of mail, which was in old times highly polished. "It was formerly written by the English born or burn. Chaucer's temple of Mars is "wrought all of burned steel," Knight's Tale; and Gower has "burned gold," Conf. Am. B. I. Coles, in his dictionary, notices the verb born for burnish.] To polish; to give a gloss to.

Mislike me not for my complexion,
The shadow'd delivery of the burnish'd sun,
To whom I am a neighbour, and near bred. Shakspeare.

Make a plate of thain, and burnish it as they do iron. Bacon.

The frame of burnish'd steel, that cast a glare
From far, and seem'd to thaw the freezing air. Dryden.

To BU'RNISH. v. n. To grow bright or glossy.

I've seen a snake in human form,
All stain'd with infamy and vice,
Leap from the dunghill in a trice,
Burnish, and make a gawdy show,
Become a general, peer, and beau. Swift.

To BU'RNISH. v. n. [of uncertain etymology.] To grow; to spread out.

This they could do, while Saturn fill'd the throne,
Ere Juno burnish'd, or young Jove was grown. Dryden.

To shoot, and spread, and burnish into man. Dryden.

Mrs. Primley's great belly she may lace down before, but it burnishes on her hips. Congreve, Way of the World.

BU'RNISH.* n. s. [from the verb.] A gloss.

Blushes, that bin
The burnish of no sin,
Nor flames of aught too hot within. Crashaw's Poems, p. 226.

BU'RNISHER. n. s. [from burnish.]

1. The person that burnishes or polishes.
2. The tool with which bookbinders give a gloss to the leaves of books: it is commonly a dog's tooth set in a stick.

BURNT. particip. pass. of burn: applied to liquours, it means made hot.

I find it very difficult to know,
Who, to refresh th' attendants to a grave,
Burnt claret first, or Naples biscuit gave. King's Cookery.

BURR.* n. s. Used, in many places, for the sweet-bread.

BURN. n. s. The lobe or lap of the ear. Dict.

BURN Pump. [In a ship.] A pump by the side of a ship, into which a staff seven or eight feet long is put; having a burr or knob of wood at the end, which is drawn up by a rope fastened to the middle of it, called also a bilge pump. Harris.

BURROW, BERG, BURG, BURGH.* n. s. [derived from the Saxon byrig, býrg, a city, tower, or castle, Gibson's Camden. See also BURGH.]

1. A corporate town, that is not a city, but such as sends burgesses to the parliament. All places that, in former days, were called boroughs, were such as were fenced or fortified. Cowel.

King of England shalt thou be proclaim'd
In every burrow, as we pass along. Shakspeare.

Possession of land was the original right of election among the commons; and burrows were entitled to, as they were possessed of certain tracts. Temple.

2. The holes made in the ground by conies. [Teut. bergen, to cover. See To BURY.]

When they shall see his crest up again, and the man in blood, they will out of their burrows, like conies after rain, and revel all with him. Shakspeare.

3. The improper word for barrow, a mount. See BARROW.

Upon a single view, and outward observation, they [tumuli, or artificial hills] may be the monuments of any of these three nations; although the greatest number, not improbably, of the Saxons; who fought many battles with the Britains and Danes, and also between their own nations; and left the proper name of burrows for these hills, still retained in many of them, as the seven burrows upon Salisbury plain, and in many other parts of England. Sir T. Brown's Tracts, p. 154.

To BU'RRROW. v. n. [from the noun.] To make holes in the ground; to mine, as conies or rabbits.

Some strew sand among their corn, which they say, prevents mice and rats burrowing in it; because of its falling into their ears. Mortimer.

Little sinuses would form, and burrow underneath. Sharp.
BU'RSAR.* n. s. [bursarius, Lat. boursier, Fr. from bourse, a purse. The purser of a ship is the bursar.]

1. The treasurer of a college.

λογιστής, or γραμματικός, was the bursar, who kept the accounts and registered all the receipts and expences of the ship.

Potter, Antiq. of Greece, ii. 148.

To offices I'd bid adieu,
Of dean, vice-pres, of bursar too.

T. Warton, Progr. of Discontent.

2. Students sent as exhibitioners to the universities in Scotland by each presbytery, from whom they have a small yearly allowance for four years.

BU'RSARSHIP.* n. s. [from bursar.] The office of bursar.

Not the plotting for an headship, (for that is now become a court-business,) but the contriving of a bursarship of twenty nobles a year, is many times done with as great a portion of suing, siding, &c. Hales, Rem. p. 276.

BU'RSARY.* n. s. [from bursar.]

1. The treasury of a college.
2. In Scotland, an exhibition.

BURSE.* n. s. [bourse, Fr. bursa, Lat. a purse; or, from byrsa, Lat. the exchange of Carthage.] An exchange where merchants meet, and shops are kept; so called, because the sign of the purse was anciently set over such a place; the Exchange in the Strand was termed Britain's Bourse by James I. Phillips.

Fraternities and companies I approve of, such as merchants' burses, colleges of druggers, physicians, musicians, &c.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

Tattellus, the new-come traveller,
With his disguised coat and ringed ear,
Trampling the bourse's marble twice a day,
Tells nothing but stark truths I dare well say!

Whether the Britaine burse did fill apace,
And likely were to give the Exchange disgrace. Donne's Poems, p. 94.

To BURST.* v. n. I burst; I have burst, or bursten. [burstan, Saxon.]

1. To break, or fly open; to suffer a violent disruption.

BUR

So shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine.
It is ready to burst like new bottles.

The egg that soon
Bursting with kindly rupture, forth disclos'd
The callow young.

2. To fly asunder.

Yet am I thankful; if my heart were great,
'Twould burst at this.

3. To break away; to spring.

You burst, ah cruel! from my arms,
And swiftly shoot along the Mall,
Or softly glide by the Canal.

4. To come suddenly.

A resolved villain,
Whose bowels suddenly burst out; the king
Yet speaks, and, peradventure, may recover.

If the worlds
In worlds inclos'd shou'd on his senses burst,
He wou'd abhorrent turn.

5. To come with violence.

Well didst thou, Richard, to suppress thy voice;
For had the passions of thy heart burst out,
I fear, we should have seen decypher'd there
More rancorous spite.

Where is the notable passage over the river Euphrates, bursting out by the vallies of the mountain Antitaurus; from whence the plains of Mesopotamia, then part of the Persian kingdom, begin to open themselves.

[They] bursting forth •
Afresh with conscious terrors vex me round.

6. To begin an action violently or suddenly.

Thrice he assay'd, and thrice, in spite of scorn,
Tears, such as angels weep, burst forth. Milton, P. L. i. 620.
She burst into tears, and wrung her hands. Arbuthnot.

To BURST. v. a. To break suddenly; to make a quick and violent disruption.

My breast I'll burst with straining of my courage,
And from my shoulders crack my arms asunder,
But I will chastise this high-minded strumpet.

He fasten'd on my neck, and bellow'd out,
As if he would burst heaven.

I will break his yoke from off thy neck, and will burst thy bonds.

Moses saith also, the fountains of the great abyss were burst asunder, to make the deluge; and what means this abyss, and the bursting of it, if restrained to Judea? what appearance is there of this disruption there?

If the juices of an animal body were, so as by the mixture of the opposites, to cause an ebullition, they would burst the vessels.

BURST. n. s. [from the verb.] A sudden disruption; a sudden and violent action of any kind.

Since I was man,
Such sheets of fire, such burst of horrid thunder,
Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard.

Down they came, and drew
The whole roof after them, with burst of thunder,
Upon the heads of all.

Imprison'd fires, in the close dungeons pent,
Roar to get loose, and struggle for a vent;
Eating their way, and undermining all,
Till with a mighty burst whole mountains fall.

BURST.† } particip. adj. [Sax. byrston.] Diseased

BURSTEN. } with a hernia, or rupture.

BURR. n. s. A flat fish of the turbot kind.

BURTHEN.† n. s. } See BURDEN. Burthen is the
To BURTHEN. v. a. } right spelling of the common acceptation of the word; though the example, which Dr. Johnson brings from Pope, belongs to the sense and orthography of burden, which require, on account of its French origin, the d instead of the th.
Drayton uses the burden of the song in the same manner.

Some roundelays do sing; the rest the burthen bear.
Drayton's Polyolbion, S. 14.

Sacred to ridicule his whole life long,
And the sad burthen of some merry song.

BURTON. n. s. [In a ship.] A small tackle to be fastened any where at pleasure, consisting of two single pulleys, for hoisting small things in or out.

he doth with very great celerity.

BURY PEAR.* [Fr. Beurre.] The name of a very tender and delicate pear.

To BURY.† v. a. [Sax. byrgan, byrgan, byrgan, from byrig or beorg, a mound; derived from the Gotl. berga, to cover; and Iceland. birgian.
"Among our Saxon ancestors, the dead bodies of such as were slain in the field were not laid in graves; but, lying upon the ground, were covered with turves or clods of earth; and the more in reputation the persons had been, the greater and higher were the turves raised over their bodies:
This some used to call biriging, some beorging of the dead; all being one thing, though differently pronounced, and from whence we yet retain our speech of burying the dead, that is, hiding the dead."
Verstegan.]

1. To inter; to put into a grave.

When he lies along,
After your way his tale pronounc'd, shall bury
His reasons with his body.

2. To inter, with the rites and ceremonies of sepulture.

Slave, thou hast slain me!
If ever thou wilt thrive, bury my body. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
If you have kindness left, there see me laid;
To bury decently the injur'd maid,
Is all the favour.

3. To conceal; to hide.

This is the way to make the city flat,
And bury all, which yet distinctly ranges,
In heaps and piles of ruin.

4. To place one thing within another.

A tearing groan did break
The name of Antony; it was divided Between her heart and lips; she render'd life,
Thy name so bury'd in her.

BURYING.* n. s. [from bury.] Burial; the solemnity of a funeral.

Against the day of my burying hath she kept this.

BUSIL. † n. s. [Tent. busch; Dan. busk; old Fr. bussuns, buissons, bushes, Kelham; now bois.]

1. A thick shrub.

Est through the thick they heard one rudely rush,
With noise whereof, he from his lofty steed,
Down fell to ground, and crept into a bush,
To hide his coward head from dying dread. Spenser, F. Q.

The poller, and exacter of fees, justifies the resemblance of the courts of justice to the bush, wherunto while the sheep flies for defence from the weather, he is sure to lose part of the fleece. Bacon, Essays.

Her heart was that strange bush, whose sacred fire,
Religion did not consume, but inspire
Such piety, so chaste use of God's day,
That what we turn to feast, she turn'd to pray. Donne.

With such a care,
As roses from their stalks we tear,
When we would still prefer them new,
And fresh as on the bush they grew. Waller.

The sacred ground
Shall weeds and poisonous plants refuse to bear;
Each common bush shall Syrian roses wear? Dryden, Virgil.

2. A bough of a tree fixed up at a door, to shew that liquours are sold there.

If it be true, that good wine needs no bush, 'tis true that a good play needs no epilogue. Shakspeare, As you Like it.

BU'SHMENT. n. s. [from bush.] A thicket; a cluster of bushes.

Princes thought how they might discharge the earth of woods, briars, bushments, and waters, to make it more habitable and fertile. Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

BU'SHY. adj. [from bush.]

1. Thick; full of small branches, not high.

The gentle shepherd sat beside a spring,
All in the shadow of a bushy brier. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Dec.

Generally the cutting away of boughs and suckers at the root and body, doth make trees grow high; and, contrariwise, the polling and cutting of the top, make them spread and grow bushy. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Thick like a bush.

Statues of this god, with a thick bushy beard, are still many of them extant in Rome. Addison on Italy.

3. Full of bushes.

The kids with pleasure browse the bushy plain;
The show'rs are grateful to the swelling grain. Dryden.

BU'SILESS. adj. [from busy.] At leisure; without business; unemployed.

The sweet thoughts do even refresh my labour,
Most bussiless when I do it. Shakspeare.

BU'SILY. † adv. [from busy.]

1. With an air of importance; with an air of hurry.

2. Curiously; importunately.

Or if too bussily they will enquire
Into a victory, which we disdain,
'Then let them know, the Belgians did retire,
Before the patron saint of injur'd Spain. Dryden. Hulcot.

3. Earnestly. Intentè, obnixè.

BU'SINESS. † n. s. [old Fr. lusoignes. But see BUSY.]

This substantive was formerly bussyship: "What hast thou done of bussyship to love?" Gower, Conf.

Am. B. 3.]

1. Employment; multiplicity of affairs.

Must business thee from hence remove?
Oh! that's the worst disease of love. Donne.

2. An affair. In this sense it has the plural.

Bestow
Your needful counsel to our businesses,
Which crave the instant use. Shakspeare.

3. The subject of business; the affair or object that engages the care.

You are so much the business of our souls, that while you are in sight we can neither look nor think on any else; there are no eyes for other beauties. Dryden.

The great business of the senses, being to take notice of what hurts or advantages the body. Locke.

4. Serious engagement, in opposition to trivial transactions.

I never knew one, who made it his business to lash the faults of other writers, that was not guilty of greater himself. Addison.

He had business enough upon his hands, and was only a poet by accident. Prior, Pref.

When diversion is made the business and study of life, though the actions chosen be in themselves innocent, the excess will render them criminal. Rogers.

5. Right of action.

What business has a tortoise among the clouds? L'Estrange.

6. A point; a matter of question; something to be examined or considered.

Fitness to govern, is a perplexed business; some men, some nations, excel in the one ability, some in the other. Bacon.

7. Something to be transacted.

They were far from the Zidonians, and had no business with any one. Judges, xviii. 7.

8. Something required to be done.

To those people that dwell under or near the equator, this spring would be most pestilent; as for those countries that are nearer the poles, in which number are our own, and the most considerable nations of the world, a perpetual spring will not do their business; they must have longer days, a nearer approach of the sun. Bentley.

9. To do one's business. To kill, destroy, or ruin him.

BUSK. n. s. [busque, Fr.] A piece of steel or whale-bone, worn by women to strengthen their stays.

Off with that happy busk which I envy,
That still can be, and still can stand so nigh. Donne.

BUSK. * n. s. [Dan. busk. See BUSH and BUSKET.]

Chaucer uses buske for bush repeatedly; and it is yet used in the north of England.] A bush.

And range amid the bushes thy self to feed. Davison's Poetical Rapsodie, (1611), p. 39.

To BUSK. * v. a. To make ready; a word still in use in the north of England. In Scotland it also signifies to dress, probably from the old Fr. busque, part of the female attire. See BUSK. A bonny bride is soon busket," Scotch Proverb. Our's is a secondary sense like that of dress, to prepare for any purpose, as well as to clothe.

The noble baron whet his courage hot,
And busket him boldly to the dreadful fight.

Fairfax, Tasso. (1600.)

BU'SKET. * n. s. [A diminutive of busk, the old commentator on Spenser says; a little bush of hawthorn. Old Fr. boschet, and in the ancient Provenç. boscat; Ital. boschetto, bosco; low Lat. boscus, wood.]

1. A sprig or small bush. It is busket in the English Glossography of 1707.
Youth folke now flocken in every where,
To gather May-busket and smelling breere.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. May.

2. A small compartment of gardens, formed of trees, shrubs, and tall flowering plants, set in quarters, and either placed regularly in rows, or disposed in a more regular manner. See Miller's Gard. Dict. But this meaning of the word disdains the anglicism of Spenser, and is written bosquet. Ray uses busket, like a true Englishman, for a little wood, Remains, p. 251.

BUSKIN. n. s. [broscken, Dutch.]

1. A kind of half boot; a shoe which comes to the midleg.

The foot was dressed in a short pair of velvet buskins; in some places open, to shew the fairness of the skin. Sidney.
Sometimes Diana he her takes to be,
But misseth bow, and shafts, and buskins to her knee.

Spenser, F. Q.

There is a kind of rusticity in all those pompous verses, somewhat of a holiday shepherd strutting in his country buskins.

Dryden.

2. A kind of high shoe worn by the ancient actors of tragedy, to raise their stature.

Great Fletcher never treads in buskins here,
No greater Jonson dares in socks appear. Dryden.
In her best light the comick muse appears,
When she, with borrow'd pride, the buskin wears. Smith.

BUSKINED. † adj. [from buskin.]

1. Dressed in buskins.

Or what, though rare, of later age,
Ennobl'd hath the buskin'd stage? Milton.
Here, arm'd with silver bows, in early dawn,
Her buskin'd virgins trac'd the dewy lawn. Pope.

2. Relating to tragedy as represented on the stage.

Next, in a buskin'd strain,
Sang how himself he bore upon Damascus' plain.
Drayton's Polyolbion, S. 2.

In buskin'd measures move
Pale Grief, and pleasing Pain. Gray, The Bard.

BU'SKY. adj. [written more properly by Milton, bosky. See BOSKY.] Woody; shaded with woods; overgrown with trees.

How bloodily the sun begins to peer
Above yon busky hill! Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. I.

BUSS. † n. s. [bus, the mouth, Irish; bouche, Fr. Dr. Johnson says. He might have added the Span. bus. But, in fact, the etymology is the Lat. basium, from basiare, to kiss; and our oldest dictionaries give the English word bass for the kiss; as, "the mother allto basseth her chylde," Vulg. Hormanni, 1530, sign. Y. iii.; and even basser for the kisser. V. Huloet. Chancer and Skelton both use basse; and Cole, in his dictionary towards the close of the 17th century, gives bass for buss, and also to basiate.]

1. A kiss; a salute with the lips.

Thou dost give me flatt'ring busses.—By my troth, I kiss thee with a most constant heart. Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. II.
Some squire perhaps you take delight to rack,
Who visits with a gun, presents with birds,
Then gives a smacking buss. Pope.

2. A boat for fishing. [busse, German.]

If the king would enter towards building such a number of boats and busses, as each company could easily manage, it would be an encouragement both of honour and advantage.

Temple.

To BUSS. v. a. [from the noun.] To kiss; to salute with the lips.

Yonder walls, that partly front your town,
Yond towers, whose wanton tops do buss the clouds,
Must kiss their feet. Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.
Go to them with this bonnet in thy hand,
Thy knee bussing the stones; for in such business,
Action is eloquence. Shakespeare, Coriol.

BUST. † n. s. [buste, old Fr. busto, Ital.] A statue representing a man to his breast. See BUSTO.

Agrippa, or Caligula, is a common coin, but a very extraordinary bust; and a Tiberius, a rare coin, but a common bust.
Addison on Italy.

Ambition sigh'd: she found it vain to trust
The faithless column, and the crumbling bust. Pope.

BU'STARD. n. s. [bistarde, Fr.] A wild turkey.

His sacrifices were phenicopters, peacocks, bustards, turkeys, pheasants; and all these were daily offered. Hakewill.

To BU'STLE. † v. n. [of uncertain etymology; perhaps from busy; or from brustle, by dropping the r; just as buskin is from brosken. See To BRUSTLE.] To be busy; to stir; to be active.

Come, bustle, bustle—caparison my horse.
Shakespeare, Rich. III.

God take king Edward to his mercy,
And leave the world for me to bustle in. Shakespeare, Ib.
Sir Henry Vane was a busy and bustling man, who had credit enough to do his business in all places. Clarendon.

A poor abject worm,
That crawl'd awhile upon a bustling world,
And now am trampled to my dust again. Southerne, Oroonoko.
Ye sov'reign lords, who sit like gods in state,
Awing the world, and bustling to be great! Granville.

BU'STLE. n. s. [from the verb.] A tumult; hurry; a combustion.

Wisdom's self
Oft seeks to sweet retired solitude;
Where, with her best nurse, Contemplation,
She plumes her feathers, and lets grow her wings,
That, in the various bustle of resort,
Were all-to ruffled. Milton, Cornus.

This is the creature that pretends to knowledge, and that makes such a noise and bustle for opinions. Granville, Scepis.
Such a doctrine made a strange bustle and disturbance in the world, which then sat warm and easy in a free enjoyment of their lusts. South.

If the count had given them a pot of ale after it, all would have been well, without any of this bustle. Spectator, No. 481.

BU'STLER. † n. s. [from bustle.] An active stirring man.

Forgive him, then, that bustler in concerns
Of little worth. Cowper's Task, b. 6.

BU'STO. * n. s. [Ital. busto.] A statue. See BUST.

The entrance to the royal apartment is through a vestibulo supported with pillars, with some antick bustoes in the niches. Ashmole, Berk. iii, 115.

Worn on the edge of days, the brass consumes,
The busto moulders, and the deep-cut marble;
Unsteady to the steel, gives up its charge.
R. Blair, The Grave.

BUT

BU'SY. † adj. [Sax. byr, byrig, from byrgan, which may be perhaps from the Goth. anabusn, a command; Dutch, besigh; old Fr. busoin, or busoign; modern, besogne. See BUSINESS. It is pronounced bizzy.]

1. Employed with earnestness.

My mistress sends you word, that she is busy, and cannot come. Shakspeare, Tam. of Shrew.

2. Bustling; active; meddling.

The next thing which she awaking looks upon,
On meddling monkey, or on busy ape,
She shall pursue it with the soul of love. Shakspeare.

Thus busy pow'r is working day and night;
For when the outward senses rest do take,
A thousand dreams, fantastical and light,
With flutt'ring wings, do keep her still awake. Davies.

The coming spring would first appear,
And all this place with roses strow,
If busy feet would let them grow. Waller.

All written since that time, seem to have little more than events we are glad to know, or the controversy of opinions, wherein the busy world has been so much employed. Temple.

Religious motives and instincts are so busy in the heart of every reasonable creature, that no man would hope to govern a society, without regard to those principles. Addison, Freeholder.

3. Troublesome; vexatiously importunate or intensive.

The christians, sometimes valiantly receiving the enemy, and sometimes charging them again, repulsed the proud enemy, still busy with them. Knolles, History of the Turks.

TO BU'SY. v. a. [from the noun.] To employ; to engage; to make or keep busy.

He in great passion all this while did dwell,
More busying his quick eyes her face to view,
Than his dull ears to hear what she did tell. Spenser, F. Q.

The pleasure which I took at my friend's pleasure herein,
Idly busied me thus to express the same. Carew, Survey.

Be it thy course to busy giddy minds
With foreign quarrels. Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

While they were busied to lay the foundations, their buildings were overthrown by an earthquake, and many thousands of the Jews were overwhelmed. Raleigh.

The points which busied the devotion of the first ages, and the curiosity of the latter. Decay of Picty.

The ideas it is busied about, should be natural and congenial ones, which it had in itself. Locke.

The learning and disputes of the schools have been much busied about genus and species. Locke.

For the rest, it must be owned, he does not busy himself, by entering deep into any party, but rather spends his time in acts of hospitality. Swift.

BU'SYBODY. n. s. [from busy and body.] A vain, meddling, fantastical person.

Going from house to house, tatlers and busybodies, are the canker and rust of idleness, as idleness is the rust of time.

Busybodies and intermeddlers are a dangerous sort of people to have to do withal. L'Esrange.

She is well acquainted with all the favourite servants, busybodies, dependants, and poor relations of all persons of condition in the whole town. Spectator, No. 437.

BUT. † conjunct. [bute, butan, Saxon; formerly written bot, to distinguish it from the preposition but. Dr. Johnson considers but only as a conjunction; whereas it is, in fact, a conjunction, preposition, adverb, and interjection; as Dr. Adam Smith long since ingeniously proved. His examples, assigned to the conjunction, sometimes illustrate the word as a preposition and adverb; and are therefore now separated. Nor has he given every meaning of the conjunction. Mr. Tooke contends, that but is the imperative of the Sax. beon-utan, to be out; and bot, of the Sax. botan, to boot. But the Sax. verb is betan. However the word may be derived, it has hitherto, in our dictionaries, been very inaccurately explained. It is pronounced bout in our northern counties.]

1. Except.

An emission of immaterial virtues we are a little doubtful to propound, it is so prodigious; but that it is so constantly avouched by many. Bacon.

2. Except then; had it not been that: in this sense we now write but that. See sense 8.

And but infirmity,
Which waits upon worn times, hath something seiz'd
His wish'd ability, he had himself
The lands and waters measur'd. Shakspeare.

3. Yet; nevertheless. It sometimes only enforces yet.

Then let him speak, and any that shall stand without shall hear his voice plainly; but yet made extreme sharp and exile, like the voice of puppets: and yet the articulate sounds of the words will not be confounded. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Our wants are many, and grievous to be born, but quite of another kind. Swift.

4. The particle which introduces the minor of a syllogism; now.

If there be a liberty and possibility for a man to kill himself to-day, then it is not absolutely necessary that he shall live till to-morrow; but there is such a liberty, therefore no such necessity. Bp. Bramhall against Hobbes.

God will one time or another make a difference between the good and the evil. But there is little or no difference made in this world: therefore there must be another world, wherein this difference shall be made. Watts, Logic.

5. Than, or that; according as the particles of negation no or not are placed or understood in the sentence: when preceding but, implying than; when following it, that: as, the full moon was no sooner up, than he privately opened the gate of paradise; i. e. but he opened: There is no question, that the king of Spain will not reform most of the abuses, i. e. but he will reform.

The full moon was no sooner up and shining in all its brightness, but he privately opened the gate of Paradise.

There is no question but the king of Spain will reform most of the abuses. Guardian, No. 167.

6. But that; without this consequence that.

Frosts that constrain the ground,
Do seldom their usurping power withdraw,
But raging floods pursue their hasty hand. Dryden.

BUTTRESS. n. s. [from aboutir, Fr.]

1. A prop; a wall built to support another wall, and standing out.

No jutting frize,

Buttress, not coigne of vantage, but this bird

Hath made his pendant bed, and procreant cradle.

Fruit trees, set upon a wall against the sun, between elbows or buttresses of stone, ripen more than upon a plain wall.

Bacon.

But we inhabit a weak city here,

Which buttresses and props but scarcely bear.

Dryden, Juv.

2. A prop; a support.

It will concern us to examine the force of this plea, which our adversaries are still setting up against us, as the ground pillar and buttress of the good old cause of non-conformity.

South.

To BUTTRESS. v. a. [from the noun.] To prop; to support.

BUTWINK. n. s. The name of a bird.

Dict.

Floyer.

BUTYROUS. adj. [butyrum, Lat.] Having the properties of butter.

Its oily red part is from the butyrons, parts of chyle.

Floyer, on the Humours.

BU'XOM. † adj. [bucrum, Sax. from buzan, to bend. It originally signified obedient, as John de Trevisa, a clergyman, tells his patron that he is "obedient and bucrom to all his commands." In an old form of marriage, used before the reformation, the bride promised to be "obedient and buxom, in bed and a-board;" from which expression, not well understood, its present meaning seems to be derived. Spenser connects it with its original bent, and thus exhibits the force of the expression as strongly as that in the form of marriage, or rather more strongly; for the words in the old form are "bonair and buxom," which Dr. Johnson has not noticed. See BONAIR. Spenser describes many falling into mischief, all for they noulde be buxome and bent." Shep. Cal. Sept. ver. 149; where his contemporary commentator explains the words "mecke and obedient."] 1. Obedient; obsequious; yielding.

He did tread down and disgrace all the English, and set up and countenance the Irish; thinking thereby to make them more tractable and buxom to his government.

Spenser, on Ireland.

Then with quick fan

Winnows the buxom air.

Milton, P. L.

2. Gay; lively; brisk.

I'm born

Again a fresh child of the buxom morn,
Heir of the sun's first beams.

Crashaw, Poems, p. 104.

Zephyr, with Aurora playing,
As he met her once a maying,
Foll'd her with thee, a daughter fair,
So buxom, blithe, and debonaire.

Milton, L'Allegro.

Sturdy swains,

In clean array, for rustick dance prepare,
Mixt with the buxom damsels hand in hand.

Phillips.

3. Wanton; jolly.

Almighty Jove descends, and pours
Lure his buxom bride his fruitful showers.
She feigned the rites of Baccus! cry'd aloud,
And to the buxom god the virgin vow'd.

Dryden, Farg.

Dryden, Ib.

BU'XOMLY. † adv. [from buxom.]

1. Dutifully; obediently. Of this old meaning of the adverb Dr. Johnson has taken no notice.

I, without noise or crie,
My plaint make all buxomly,
To putten all wrath awaie.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 2.

2. Wantonly; amorously.

BU'XOMNESS. † n. s. [Sax. bucrumneþe.] Written formerly bughsomeness, buhsoneness, and boxsomeness; all referrible to buzan, to bend or bow. See Verstegan, Restit. of Antiq. p. 231. Dr. Johnson has defined this word by wantonness and amorousness; of which meaning, however, he produces no example. Our old language presents the word in the sense of meekness and obedience.

That thee is sent, receyve in bucrumnesse.

Chaucer, Good Counsel.

Pliableness or bawsoneness, to wit, humbly stooping or bowing down, in sign of obedience.

Verstegan.

Whom the divine bucrumnes for his ineffable justice hath now late taken to his grace.

Arnold's Chronicle, Sign. L. iii. b.

TO BUY. † v. a. preter. I bought; I have bought. [Goth. buzian, to buy, bauht, particip. Sax. bigan.]

1. To purchase; to acquire by paying a price; to obtain for money, or something equivalent; to procure by sale, not gift or theft.

They must buy up no corn growing within twelve miles of Geneva, that so the filling of their magazines may not prejudice their market.

Addison on Italy.

2. To pay dearly for, in the sense of aby. See To ABY. Dr. Johnson thinks that Shakspeare, in the following passage, wrote the word 'by, as a contraction of aby. But see To BY.

Nay, then thou mock'st me. Thou shalt buy this dear,
If ever I thy face by daylight see.

Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dr.

3. To procure some advantage by something that deserves it, or at some price.

I have bought

Golden opinions from all sorts of people.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Pent to linger

But with a grain a day, I would not buy

Their mercy at the price of one fair word.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

Pleasure with praise, and danger they would buy,

And with a foe that would not only fly.

Denham.

4. To regulate by money; in this sense it has particles annexed.

You, and all the Kings of Christendom,

Are led so grossly by this meddling priest,

Dreading the curse that money may buy out.

Shakspeare, K. John.

What pitiful things are power, rhetoric, or riches; when they would terrify, dissuade, or buy off conscience?

South.

TO BUY. v. n. To treat about a purchase.

I will buy with you, sell with you, talk with you, walk with you, and so following.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

BU'YER. n. s. [from To buy.] He that buys; a purchaser.

When a piece of art is set before us, let the first caution be, not to ask who made it, lest the fame of the author do captivate the fancy of the buyer.

Wotton's Architecture.

Buz. † interject. [The etymology and origin of this phrase is uncertain.] An exclamation, often used, in modern times, when a person begins to relate what was generally known before; and is by some of the commentators on Shakspeare supposed to be the meaning of Hamlet.

Pol. The actors are come hither, my lord.

Ham. Buz, buz!

Shakspeare.

TO BUZZ. v. n. [bizzen, Teut. to growl. Junius.]

1. To hum; to make a noise like bees, flies, or wasps.

And all the chamber filled was with flies,
Which buzzed all about, and made such sound,
That they encumber'd all men's ears and eyes,
Like many swarms of bees assembled round.

Spenser, F. Q.

There he more wasps, that buzz about his nose,

Will make this sting the sooner.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

For still the flowers ready stand,

One buzzes round about,

One lights, one taster, gets in, gets out.

Suckling

What though no bees around your cradle flew,

Nor on your lips distill'd their golden dew;

Yet have we oft discover'd, in their stead,

A swarm of drones that buzz'd about your head.

Pope.

We join, like flies and wasps, in buzzing about wit

Swift.

2. To whisper; to prate to.

There is such confusion in my pow'rs,

As after some oration fairly spoke

By a beloved prince, there doth appear

Among the buzzing multitude.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

3. To sound heavy and low.

Herewith arose a buzzing noise among them, as if it had been the rustling sound of the sea afar off.

Maynard.

TO BUZZ. v. a. To whisper; to spread secretly.

Where doth the world thrust forth a vanity,

That is not quickly buzz'd into his ears?

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

I will buzz abroad such prophecies,

That Edward shall be fearful of his life.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Did you not hear
A buzzing of a separation
Between the king and Catherine? Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.
They might buzz and whisper it one to another, and, silently withdrawing from the presence of the apostles, they then lift up their voices, and noised it about the city.
Bentley, Serm. p. 220.

Buzz.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The noise of a bee or fly.
What a noise and a buz does the pitiful little gnat make, and how sharply does it sting! South, Sermons, viii. 202.
2. A hum; a whisper; a talk.
The hive of a city or kingdom is in best condition when there is least noise or buzz in it. Bacon, Apophthegms.
Where I found the whole outward room in a buzz of politick. Addison, Spect.

BUZZARD.† n. s. [old Fr. buizard; modern, busard.]

1. A degenerate or mean species of hawk.
More pity that the eagle should be maw'd,
While kites and buzzards prey at liberty. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
The noble buzzard ever pleas'd me best;
Of small renown, 'tis true: for, not to lie,
We call him but a hawk by courtesy. Dryden, Hind and Panther.
2. A blockhead; a dunce.
Those blind buzzards, who, in late years, of wilful malicious-ness, would neither learn themselves, nor could teach others any thing at all. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

BUZZARD.* adj. [from the substantive.] Senseless;
stupid; undiscerning.

Those who thought no better of the living God, than of a buzzard idol. Milton, Eiconoclastes, ch. 1.
Thus I reclaim'd my buzzard love to fly
At what, and when, and how, and where I choose.
Donne, Poems, p. 47.

BUZZER. n. s. [from buzz.] A secret whisperer.

Her brother is in secret come from France,
And wants not buzzers to infest his ear
With petulant speeches of his father's death.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

BY.† prep. [bi, big, Saxon, from the Goth. bi. Fr.
Theotisc. bi. But Mr. Tooke thinks that the word owes its origin to the Sax. byð, the imperative of beon, to be. This preposition, he observes, is frequently, but not always, used with an abbreviation of construction; the instrument, cause, or agent, being understood, Div. of Purley. vol. i. p. 402.]

1. It notes the agent.
The Moor is with child by you, Launcelot. Shakespeare.

Sought by the wretch, and vanquish'd by the brave. Garth.
2. It notes the instrument, and is commonly used after a verb neuter, where with would be put after an active; as, he killed her with a sword; she died by a sword.
But by Pelides' arms when Hector fell,
He chose Æneas, and he chose as well. Dryden, Virg.
3. It notes the cause of any effect.
I view, by no presumption led,
Your revels of the night. Parnell.
By woe the soul to daring action steals,
By woe in plaintless patience it excels. Savage.
4. It notes the means by which any thing is performed, or obtained.
You must think, if we give you any thing, we hope to gain by you. Shakespeare, Coriol.
Happier! had it suffic'd him to have known
Good by itself, and evil not at all. Milton, P. L.

tance as what we take seldom, and only by grains and spoonfuls. Arbutnot on Al. Pref.

The North, by myriads, pours her mighty sons;
Great nurse of Goths, of Alans, and of Huns. Pope.

8. At, or in; noting place: it is now perhaps only used before the words sea, or water, and land.
This ems a remnant of a meaning now little known. By once expressed situation; as, by west, westward.

We see the great effects of battles by sea; the battle of Ac-tium decided the empire of the world. Bacon, Essays.

Arms, and the man, I sing, who, forc'd by fate,
Expell'd, and exil'd, left the Trojan shore;
Long labours both by sea and land he bore. Dryden, Virgil.

Not now in use.

Thou, Porrex, thou this damned deed hast wrought;

Thou, Porrex, thou shalt dearly bye the same.

Sackville's Gorboduc, iv. 1.

By, in composition, implies something out of the direct way; and, consequently, some obscurity, as a by-road; something irregular, as a by-end; or something collateral, as a by-concernment; or private, as a by-law. This composition is used at pleasure, and will be understood by the examples following.

BY-COFFEEHOUSE. n. s. A coffeehouse in an obscure place.

I afterward entered a by-coffeehouse, that stood at the upper end of a narrow lane, where I met with a nonjuror.

Addison, Spect.

BY-CONCERNMENT. n. s. An affair which is not the main business.

Our plays, besides the main design, have under-plots, or by-concernments, or less considerable persons and intrigues, which are carried on with the motion of the main plot. Dryden.

BY-CORNER. * n. s. [from by and corner.] A private corner.

In by-corners of

This sacred room, silver, in bags heap'd up.

Massinger's City Madam.

Neglected heaps we in by-corners lay.

Sir W. Soane's and Dryden's Art of Poetry.

BY-DEPENDENCE. n. s. An appendage; something accidentally depending on another.

These,

And your three motives to the battle, with

I know not how much more, should be demanded;

And all the other by-dependencies,

From chance to chance.

Shakspeare.

BY-DESIGN. n. s. An incidental purpose.

And if she miss the mouse-trap lines,

They'll serve for other by-designs,

And make an artist understand,

B Y

To copy out her seal or hand;

Or find void places in the paper,

To steal in something to entrap her.

Hudibras.

BY-DRINKING. * n. s. [from by and drink.] Private drinking, not in company with others.

You owe money here besides, Sir John, for your diet and by-drinkings.

Tell him, you're sure

All in Bohemia's well: this satisfaction

The by-gone day proclaim'd.

Shakspeare.

As we have a conceit of motion coming, as well as by-gone; so have we of time, which dependeth thereupon.

Grew.

BY-INTEREST. n. s. Interest distinct from that of the publick.

Various factions and parties, all aiming at by-interest, without any sincere regard to the publick good.

Atterbury.

BY-LANE. * n. s. [from by and lane.] A lane out of the usual road.

She led me into a by-lane, and told me there I should dwell.

Burton, Anal. of Med. p. 504.

BY-LAW. † n. s. [Sax. bilage.]

By-laws are orders made in court-leets, or court-barons, by common assent, for the good of those that make them, farther than the publick law binds.

Coxl.

There was also a law to restrain the by-laws and ordinances of corporations.

Bacon.

In the beginning of this record is inserted the law or institution; to which are added two by-laws, as a comment upon the general law.

Addison.

BY-MATTER. n. s. Something incidental.

I knew one, that, when he wrote a letter, would put that which was most material into the postscript, as if it had been a by-matter.

Bacon, Ess. of Civility.

BY-NAME. † n. s. A nick-name; name of reproach, or accidental appellation.

Whether it was the proper surname of the family, or a personal by-name given him on account of his stature, — it is neither material nor possible to determine. Louth, Life of Wylcheare.

To BY-NAME. * v. a. [from the noun.] To give a nick-name. The following example had been placed by Dr. Johnson under the substantive as an illustration of it.

Robert, eldest son to the Conquerour, used short hose, and thereupon was by-named Court-hose, and shewed first the use of them to the English.

Cauden.

BY-PAST. † adj. Past; a term of the Scotch dialect; Dr. Johnson says. Gilbert Burnet, in his Vindication of the authority, &c. of the church and state of Scotland, (Glasgow, 1673,) uses it, p. 234. But it is not uncommon English; at least, in Yorkshire it is the usual word for past or ago.

But ah! who ever shunn'd by precedent

The destin'd ill she must herself assay?

Or forc'd examples, 'gainst her own content,

To put the by-pass'd perils in her way.

Shakspeare, Lover's Complaint.

Wars, pestilences, and diseases, have not been fewer for these three hundred years by-past, than ever they had been since we have had records.

Cheyne.

BY-PATH. † n. s. A private or obscure path.

Heaven knows, my son,

By what by-paths, and indirect crook'd ways,

I got this crown.

Shakspeare.

Your petitioner is a general lover, who for some months last past has made it his whole business to frequent the by-paths and roads near his dwelling, for no other purpose but to hand such of the fair sex as are obliged to pass through them.

Taller, No. 219.

B Y

BY-RESPECT. n. s. Private end or view.

It may be that some upon by-respects, find somewhat friendly usage in usance, at some of their hands. Carew.

The archbishops and bishops, next under the king, have the government of the church: he not you the mean to prefer any to those places, for any by-respects, but only for their learning, gravity, and worth. Bacon.

Augustus, who was not altogether so good as he was wise, had some by-respects in the enacting of this law; for to do any thing for nothing, was not his maxim. Dryden.

BY-ROAD. n. s. An obscure unfrequented path.

Through slippery by-roads, dark and deep,
They often climb, and often creep. Swift.

BY-ROOM. n. s. A private room within another.

I pry'thee, do thou stand in some by-room, while I question my puny drawer to what end he gave the sugar. Shakspeare.

BY-SPEECH. n. s. An incidental or casual speech, not directly relating to the point.

When they come to allege what word and what law they meant, their common ordinary practice is to quote by-speeches, in some historical narration or other, and to use them as if they were written in most exact form of law. Hooker.

BY-STANDER. n. s. A looker on; one unconcerned.

She broke her feathers, and, falling to the ground, was taken up by the by-standers. L'Estrange.

The by-standers asked him, why he ran away, his bread being weight? Locke.

BY-STREET. n. s. An obscure street.

The broker here his spacious beaver wears,
Upon his brow sit jealousies and cares;
Bent on some mortgage, to avoid reproach,
He seeks by- streets, and saves the expensive coach. Gun.

BY-TURNING.* n. s. [from by and turn.] An obscure road.

The many by-turnings that may divert you from your way.
Sidney, Defence of Poesy.

BY-VIEW. n. s. Private self-interested purpose.

No by-views of his own shall mislead him. Atterbury.

BY-WALK. n. s. A private walk; not the main road.

He moves afterwards in by-walks, or under plots, as diversions to the main design, lest it should grow tedious; though they are still naturally joined. Dryden.

The chief avenue ought to be the most ample and noble; but there should be by-walks, to retire into sometimes, for ease and refreshment. Broome.

BY-WAY. n. s. A private and obscure way.

Night stealths are commonly driven in by-ways, and by blind fords, unused of any but such like. Spenser, on Ireland.

Other by-ways he himself betook,
Where never foot of living wight did tread. Spenser.

Wholly abstain, or wed; thy hounteous Lord
Allows thee choice of paths; take no by-ways,
But gladly welcome what he doth afford;
Not grudging that thy lust hath bounds and stays. Herbert.

A servant, or a favourite, if he be in want, and no other apparent cause of esteem, is commonly thought, but a by-way to close corruption. Bacon.

B Y Z

This is wonderfully diverting to the understanding, thus to receive a precept, as it were, through a by-way, and to apprehend an idea that draws a whole train after it. Addison.

BY-WEST. n. s. Westward; to the west of.

Whereupon grew that by-word, used by the Irish, that they dwell by-west the law, which dwell beyond the river of the Barrow. Davies on Ireland.

C A B

C, The third letter of the alphabet, has two sounds; one like k, as, call, clock, craft, coal, companion, cuneiform; the other as s, as, Cæsar, cessionation, cinder. It sounds like k before a, o, u, or a consonant; and like s, before e, i, and y.

C.* The numeral letter of the Romans, which we use, to denote an hundred.

C.* A note or key in musick.

CAB. n. s. [קב.] A Hebrew measure, containing about three pints English, or the eighteenth part of the ephah.

CABA'L. † n. s. [cabale, Fr. קבלה, tradition.]

1. The secret science of the Hebrew rabbins.

The childish fancies and fables of the Jewish rabbins in their talmud and cabal. Hakewill, Apology, p. 310.

2. A body of men united in some close design. A cabal differs from a party, as few from many.

This junto, together with the Duke of Buckingham, being called the cabal, it was observed, that cabal proved a technical word, every letter in it being the first letter of those five, Clifford, Ashly, Buckingham, Arlington, and Lauderdale.

Burnet, Hist. of his Own Time, 1672.

She often interposed her royal authority, to break the cabals which were forming against her first ministers. Addison.

3. Intrigue; something less than conspiracy.

When each, by cur'd cabals of women, strove,
To draw th' indulgent king to partial love. Dryden.

To CABA'L. v. n. [cabaler, Fr.] To form close intrigues; to intrigue; to unite in small parties.

His mournful friends, summon'd to take their leaves

Are throng'd about his couch, and sit in council:

What those caballing captains may design,

I must prevent, by being first in action. Dryden.

CABALA.* n. s. See CABAL. The secret science of the Jewish doctors; any secret science.

They [the modern rabbins] started a grammatical cabala to serve their ambition upon. Spencer on Prodiges, p. 322.

You merchants, — who know your cabala so well to make your profit rather by selling for time, than for ready money.

Harmar, Tr. of Beza's Sermons, p. 372.

If I wholly mistake not the cabala of his sect.

Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 9.

The laughter, gave out, that the gnomes and sylphs, disguised like railians, had shot him, as a punishment for revealing the secrets of the cabala. Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

C'ABALIST. † n. s. [from cabal.] One skilled in the traditions of the Hebrews.

C A B

In a multitude of verses they delivered what they taught, not suffering it to be committed to writing, so imitating both cabalists, Pythagoreans, and ancient christians.

Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 9.

Their talmudists and cabalists, their Scribes and Pharisees.

Hakewill, Apology, p. 233.

The profoundest of the Hebrew divines, whom they now call cabalists.

Bp. Patrick on Eccles. Pref.

Persons, which begin their inquiries where all wise men make an end; cabbalists, pretenders to revelations, to an understanding of signs and mysterious prophecies.

Spencer on Prodiges, p. 403.

Which gave occasion to that renowned cabalist, Bumbastus, of placing the body of man in due position to the four cardinal points.

Swift, Tale of a Tub.

Then Jove thus spake: with care and pain

We form'd this name, renown'd in rhyme,

Not thine, immortal Neufgermain!

Cost studious cabalists more time.

Swift.

C'ABALISM.* n. s. [from cabal.] A part of the science of the cabal.

Vigorous impressions of spirit, extasies, pretty allegories, parables, cabballisms.

Spencer on Prodiges, p. 287.

CABALISTICAL. † } adj. [from cabalist.] Something

CABALISTICK. } that has an occult meaning.

Spells, cabalistical words, charms, characters, images, amulets.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 219.

That less calculation in caballistick concordance of identities in different words.

Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 9.

The holy Apostle well understood that cabalistical theology of the Jews.

Bp. Bull's Works, ii. 402.

The letters are caballistical, and carry more in them than it is proper for the world to be acquainted with.

Addison.

He taught him to repeat two cabalistical words, in pronouncing of which the whole secret consisted.

Spectator.

CABALISTICALITY.* adv. [from cabalistical.] In a cabalistical manner.

Rabbi Elias — from the first verse of the first chapter of Genesis, where the letter aleph is six times found, cabalistically concludes that the world shall endure just six thousand years; aleph in coputation standing for a thousand.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 123.

CABA'LLER. † n. s. [from cabal.] He that engages with others in close designs; an intriguer.

Factions and rich, bold at the council board,

But cautious in the field, he shunn'd the sword;

A close caballer, and tongue-valiant lord.

Dryden.

I looked on that sermon [Dr. Price's] as the publick declaration of a man much connected with literary caballers and intriguing philosophers.

Burke on the Fr. Revolution.

C'ABALLINE. † adj. [Fr. cabalin, from caballinus, Lat.]

Belonging to a horse; as, caballine alocs, or horse alocs. Cotgrave.

ABBET. † n. s. [French.] A tavern.

Suppose this servant passing some cabaret, or tennis-court, where his comrades were drinking or playing, should stay with them, and drink or play away his money.

They durst not so much as enter into a cabaret,
Where the Greeks were allowed to sell wine.

Smith, Mann, of the Turks, p. 65.

ABBAGE. † n. s. [cabus, Fr. probably from cab, old Fr. the head, top, or extremity. Ital. cabuccio; Dutch, kabuyts; all from caput, the head. The Fr. caboché also is the head. Nevertheless, Mr. Horne Tooke strangely thinks that abbage may be from the Gr. κάρη, food. But the form of the cabbage, resembling a head, shews caput to be the original.] A plant.

The leaves are large, fleshy, and of a glaucous colour; the flowers consist of four leaves, which are succeeded by long taper pods, containing several round acid seeds. The species are, cabbage. Savoy cabbage. Broccoli. The cauliflower. The musk cabbage. Branching tree cabbage, from the sea-coast. Colewort. Perennial Alpine colewort. Perfoliated wild cabbage, &c. • Miller.

Good worts! good cabbage.

Shakespeare, Merry W. of Windsor.

Cole, cabbage, and coleworts, are soft and demulcent, without any acidity; the jelly, or juice, of red cabbage, baked in an oven, and mixed with honey, is an excellent pectoral.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ABBAGE. * n. s. [Mr. Brand thinks that this cant word is adopted from cablish, wind-fallen or brush wood. Pop. Antiq. See Cowel in V. Cablish.] A learned friend observes, that he has read of a family in Savoy, who bore for their arms a savoy cabbage proper, with the motto, "tout n'est qu'abus." A cant word for the shreds and patches made by tailors in cutting out clothes.

For as tailors preserve their cabbage,
So squires take care of bag and baggage.

Second part of Hudibras, (spurious,) 1663. p. 56.

TO CABBAGE. † v. n. [old Fr. cabusser, to grow headed as a cabbage. Cotgrave and Sherwood.] To form a head; as, the plants begin to cabbage.

TO CABBAGE. † v. a. [A cant word among tailors, Dr. Johnson says. But Mr. Bagshaw considers it also as a general word for stealing; and that it might arise from the frequent encroachments of cottagers on commons by taking in part of them for a garden to raise cabbages in.] To steal in cutting clothes.

Our taylor, instead of sbreads, cabbages whole yards of cloth.

Arbuthnot.

CABBAGE TREE. n. s. A species of palm-tree.

It is very common in the Caribbee islands, where it grows to a prodigious height. The leaves of this tree envelope each other, so that those which are inclosed, being deprived of the air, are blanched; which is the part the inhabitants cut for plaits for hats, and the young shoots are pickled; but whenever this part is cut out, the trees are destroyed; nor do they rise again from the old roots; so that there are very few trees left remaining near plantations.

Miller.

CABBAGE-WORM. n. s. An insect.

CABIN. † n. s. [cabane, Fr. caban, Welsh, a cottage, or booth; Span. cabanna; Ital. capanna; low Lat.

capanna; from the Gr. καπών, a stable, according to some; from the Lat. cavea, a hole or den, according to others. Our elder authors write it caban; and Huloet denominates "caban, a dark lodging." Cowel, "She laie in a caban close," Conf. Am. b. 8.]

1. A small room.

So long in secret cabin there he held
Her captive to his sensual desire,
Till that with timely fruit her belly swell'd,
And bore a boy unto that savage sire.

Spenser, F. Q.

When Jeremiah was entered into the dungeon, and into the cabins, [in the margin, cells.] Jerem. xxxvii. 16.

2. A small chamber in a ship.

Give thanks you have lived so long, and make yourself ready, in your cabin, for the mischance of the hour, if it so happen.

Shakespeare.

Men may not expect the use of many cabins, and safety at once, in the sea service.

Raleigh.

The chessboard, we say, is in the same place it would remain in the same part of the cabin, though the ship was all the while.

Locke.

3. A cottage, or small house.

Come from marble bowers, many times the gay harbour of anguish,

Sidney.

Unto a silly cabin, though weak, yet stronger against woes.

Sidney.

Neither should that odious custom be allowed, of flaying off the green surface of the ground, to cover their cabins, or make up their ditches.

Swift.

4. A tent, or temporary habitation.

Some of green boughs their slender cabins frame,
Some lodged were Tortosa's streets about.

Fairfax.

Contenting ourselves with our smallness, let us oppose unto all this statelike masquerade, with which the world feedeth itself, the lodgings and cabins of the ancient true pastors.

Harmar, Tr. of Bezar's Sermons, p. 155.

TO CABIN. † v. n. [from the noun.] To live in a cabin.

I'll make you feed on berries and on roots,
And feed on curds and whey, and suck the goat,
And cabin in a cave.

Shakespeare.

They two have cabin'd
In many as dangerous as poor a corner.

Beaum. and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen.

TO CABIN. † v. a. To confine in a cabin.

Fleance is 'scap'd, I had else been perfect;
As broad and gen'ral as the casing air;
But now I'm cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound in,
To saucy doubts and fear.

Shakespeare.

They feel themselves in a state of thralldom, they imagine that their souls are coop'd and cabin'd in, unless they have some man or some body of men dependent on their mercy.

Burke, Speech at Bristol in 1780.

CABIN-BOY. * n. s. The boy who waits in the cabin on board a ship. The Welsh have the similar term, cabin-was.

CABIN-MATE. * n. s. He who occupies the same cabin with another.

His cabin-mate, I'll assure ye. Beaum. and Fl. Sea-Voyage.

CABINED. adj. [from cabin.] Belonging to a cabin.

The nice morn, on the Indian steep,
From her cabin'd loophole peep.

Milton, Comus.

CABINET. † n. s. [cabinet, Fr.]

1. A closet; a small room.

At both corners of the farther side, let there be two delicate or rich cabinets, daintily paved, richly hanged, glazed with crystalline glass, and a rich cupola in the midst, and all other elegance that may be thought on.

Back.

2. A hut or small house; a cot or tent.

Hearken awhile from thy green cabinet,

The rural song of careful Colinet. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Dec.

24

C A B

Their groves he fell'd; their gardens did deface;
Their arbores spoyle; their cabinets suppress.

Spenser, F. Q. xii. 73.

Cool cabinets of fresh greene laurell boughs should shadow Barnecliffe. Affect. Shepherd, (1594.) sign. B. 1.

3. A private room in which consultations are held.
You began in the cabinet what you afterwards practis'd in the camp. Dryden.

4. A set of boxes or drawers for curiosities; a private box.

Who sees a soul in such a body set,
Might love the treasure for the cabinet.
In vain the workman shew'd his wit,
With rings and hinges counterfeit,
To make it seem, in this disguise,
A cabinet to vulgar eyes.

B. Jonson.

Swift.

5. Any place in which things of value are hidden.
Thy breast hath ever been the cabinet,
Where I have lock'd my secrets. Denham.
We cannot discourse of the secret, but by describing our duty; but so much duty must needs open a cabinet of mysteries.
Taylor.

CABINET-COUNCIL. n. s.

1. A council held in a private manner, with unusual privacy and confidence.

The doctrine of Italy, and practice of France, in some kings times, hath introduced cabinet-councils. Bacon, Ess. xx.

2. A select number of privy counsellors supposed to be particularly trusted.

From the highest to the lowest it is universally read; from the cabinet-council to the nursery. Gay to Swift.

CABINET-MAKER. n. s. [from cabinet and make.]

* One that makes small nice drawers or boxes.

The root of an old whitethorn will make very fine boxes and combs; so that they would be of great use for the cabinet-makers, as well as the turners, and others. Mortimer.

To CABINET. * v. a. [from the noun.] To enclose.

This is the frame of most men's spirits in the world; to adore the casket, and condemn the jewel that is cabinetted in it.

Houyt, Serm. p. 87.

CABLE. † n. s. [cabl, Welsh; cabel, Dutch; low
Lat. caplum; Barb. Græc. καπλον; a rope.
V. Meursii Gloss.] The great rope of a ship to which the anchor is fastened.

What though the mast be now blown overboard,
The cable broke, the holding anchor lost,
And half our sailors swallow'd in the flood,
Yet lives our pilot still? Shakspeare.

The length of the cable is the life of the ship in all extremities; and the reason is, because it makes so many bendings and waves, as the ship, riding at that length, is not able to stretch it; and nothing breaks that is not stretched. Raleigh.

The cables crack, the sailors fearful cries
Ascend; and sable night involves the skies. Dryden.

CABLED. * adj. [from cable.] Fastened with a cable.

While they, her flattering creeks and opening bowers
Cautious approaching, in Myrina's port

Cast out the cabled stone upon the strand. Dyer.

CABLET. * n. s. [Fr. cablot.] A tow-rope.

To CABO'B. * v. a. [in the Persian language, cobbob is roast meat. See Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 316.]

In cookery, often applied to a loin of mutton, prepared with seasoning, and roasted at a quick fire.

CABOSHED, OR CABO'CHED. * adj. [from the old Fr.
cabôche, the head; cabosso, i. e. caboché, Languedoc.

CACHE'TICAL. † } adj. [from cachery, and Fr. ca- CACHE'TICK. } cachetique, Cotgrave.] Having an ill habit of body; shewing an ill habit.

Young and florid blood, rather than vapid and cache'tical.

Arbuthnot on Air.

The crude chyle swims in the blood, and appears as milk in the blood, of some persons who are cache'tick. Floyer.

CACHE'XY. † n. s. [Fr. cachexie, from the Gr.
καχεξία, and formerly written by us cachexia, as by Burton in his Anat. of Mel.] A general word to express a great variety of symptoms; most commonly it denotes such a distemperature of the humours, as hinders nutrition, and weakens the vital and animal functions, proceeding from weakness of the fibres, and an abuse of the non-naturals, and often from severe acute distempers.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

The defects of digestion are the principal cause of scurvy and cachexy. Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 96.

CACHINNA'TION. † n. s. [cachinnatio, Lat.] A loud laughter. This substantive is in our lexicography of James the First's time.

Haste what they could, this long-legged spectre was still before them, moving her body with a vehement cachinnation, a great unmeasurable laughter.

Satan's Invisible World discovered, (1685,) ¶ 4.

CA'CKEREL. † n. s. [Fr. caquerel.] A fish, said to make those who eat it laxative.

Fish, whose ordinary abode is in salt waters, namely porpoise, — cackrel, skate, soles, &c.

Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 187.

To CA'CKLE. † v. n. [kaeckelen, Dutch; from the Lat. graculus, a jackdaw.]

1. To make a noise as a goose.
The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren. Shakspeare.

Or rob the Roman geese of all their glories,
And save the state, by cackling to the Tories. Pope.

2. Sometimes it is used for the noise of a hen.
The trembling widow, and her daughters twain,
This woful cackling cry with horror heard,
Of those distracted damsels in the yard. Dryden.

3. To laugh; to giggle.
Nic. grinned, cackled, and laughed, till he was like to kill himself, and fell a frisking and dancing about the room.
Arbuthnot.

CA'CKLE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The voice of a goose or fowl.
The silver goose before the shining gate
There flew, and, by her cackle, sav'd the state. Dryden.

2. Idle talk; prattle.

CA'CKLER. n. s. [from cackle.]

1. A fowl that cackles.

2. A telltale; a tattler.

CACOCY'MICAL. } adj. [from cacochymy.] Having CACOCY'MICK. } the humours corrupted.

It will prove very advantageous, if only cacochymick, to clarify his blood with a laxative. Harvey on Consumptions.

If the body be cacochymical, the tumours are apt to degenerate into very venomous and malignant abscesses. Wiseman.
The ancient writers distinguished putrid fevers, by putrefaction of blood, choler, melancholy, and phlegm; and this is to be explained by an effervescence happening in a particular cacochymical blood. Floyer on the Humours.

CACOCYMY.† n. s. [Fr. cacochymie, from the Gr. κακοχυμία.] A depravation of the humours from a sound state, to what the physicians call by general name of a cacochymy. Spots, and discolorations of the skin, are signs of weak fibres; for the lateral vessels, which lie out of the road of circulation, let gross humours pass, which could not, if the vessels had their due degree of stricture.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Strong beer, a liquor that attributes the half of its ill qualities to the hops, consisting of an acrimonious fiery nature, sets the blood, upon the least cacochymy, into an orgasmus.

Harvey.

CACODÆMON.* n. s. [Gr. κακός, and δαίμων.] An old substantive in our language, which Bullokar notices. Skelton uses cacodæmonial, Poems, p. 164.] An evil spirit; a devil.

If the vultur pick out his right eye first, then they conclude that he is in paradise; if the left, then a cacodæmon vexes him.

Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 168.

Hie thee to hell for shame, and leave this world,
Thou cacodæmon.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

The prince of darkness himself, and all the cacodæmons, by an historical faith, believe there is a God. Howell's Lett. ii. 10.

Nor was the dog a cacodæmon,

But a true dog that would shew tricks

For the emperor, and leap o'er sticks. Hudibras, ii. 3.

CACOTHES.* n. s. [Fr. cacothie, Cotgrave; from the Gr. κακοθήεια, which is from κακός and θεός.] In medicine, an incurable ulcer; generally, a bad custom; a bad habit.

CACOGRAPHY.* n. s. [Gr. κακός and γράφω.] Bad spelling.

The orthography or cacography, style and manner, of the English language in the reigns of Henry V. and VI. are very remote from the mock Saxon of Rowley. Walpoliana, i. xxv.

CACOPHONY.† n. s. [Fr. cacophonie, Cotgrave; from the Gr. κακοφωνία.] A bad sound of words.

These things shall lie by, till you come to carp at them, and alter rhimes, grammar triplets, and cacophonies of all kinds.

Pope to Swift.

To CACUMINATE. v. a. [cacumino, Lat.] To make sharp or pyramidal. Dict.

CADAVER.* n. s. [Lat.] A corpse.

Who ever came

From death to life? Who can cadavers raise?—

Thus their blasphemous tongues deride the truth.

Davies, Wit's Pilgrimage, v. 2. b.

CADAVEROUS.† adj. [Fr. cadavereux, Cotgrave; from cadaver, Lat.] Having the appearance of a dead carcase; having the qualities of a dead carcase.

In vain do they scruple to approach the dead, who livingly are cadaverous, for fear of any outward pollution whose temper pollutes themselves.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The urine, long detained in the bladder, as well as glass, will grow red, fetid, cadaverous, and alkaline. The case is the same with the stagnant waters of hydropical persons.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CADDIS.† n. s. [This word is used in Erse for the variegated cloaths of the Highlanders. The Gael. cadhas is cotton. Caddis properly means worsted galloon.]

A kind of tape or ribbon.

He hath ribbons of all the colours of the rainbow; inkles, caddis, cambricks, lawns; why, he sings them over as if they were gods and goddesses. Shakspeare.

2. A kind of worm or grub found in a case of straw. He loves the may, which is bred of the codworm, or caddis; and these make the trout bold and lusty.

Walton's Angler.

CADDOW.* n. s. A chough, or jackdaw. Hulock.
A caddow, a jackdaw; Norfolk. In Cornwall they call the guilliam a kiddare. Ray.

CADE.† adj. [It is deduced, by Skinner, from cadeler, Fr. an old word, which signifies to breed up tenderly.] Tape; soft; delicate; as a cade lamb, a lamb bred at home, Dr. Johnson says. Some have thought it, with less reason, adopted from the Lat. cado, to fall; meaning a dropped or fallen lamb, the dam of which dying, the lamb is brought up by hand, in the house. The cade lamb is a tame lamb in Norfolk and Suffolk; in Cumberland, a pet lamb.

1. e. a lamb that is made much of.

He brought his cade lamb with him to mass.

Sheldon, Miracles of Antichrist, p. 224.

To CADE. v. a. [from the noun.] To breed up in softness.

CADE. n. s. [cadus, Lat.] A barrel.

We John Cade, so termed of our supposed father.—Or rather of stealing a cade of herrings.

Shakspeare.

Soon as thy liquor from the narrow cells
Of close press'd husks is freed, thou must refrain
Thy thirsty soul; let none persuade to broach
Thy thick, unwholesome, undigested cares.

Philips.

CADE-WORM. n. s. The same with caddis.

CADENCE.† } n. s. [cadence, Fr.]

CADENCY.

1. Fall; state of sinking; decline.

Now was the sun in western cadence low
From noon; and gentle airs, due at their hours,
To fan the earth, now wak'd.

Milton.

2. The fall of the voice; sometimes the general modulation of the voice.

The sliding, in the close or cadence, hath an agreement with the figure in rhetoric, which they call præter expectatum; for there is a pleasure even in being deceived.

Bacon.

There be words not made with lungs,
Sententious showers! O! let them fall,
Their cadence is rhetorical.

Crashaw.

I never heard a better [song] why, there's a cadence able to ravish the dullest Stoick.

Brewer's Lingua, (1657.) iii. 7.

3. The flow of verses, or periods.

The words, the versification, and all the other elegancies of sound, as cadences, and turns of words upon the thought, perform exactly the same office both in dramatick and epic poetry.

Dryden.

The cadency of one line must be a rule to that of the next; as the sound of the former must slide gently into that which follows.

D.

4. The tone or sound.

Hollow rocks retain

The sound of blustering winds, which all night long
Had rous'd the sea, now with hoarse cadence lull
Sea-faring men, o'erwatch'd.

Milton.

He hath a confused remembrance of words since he left the university; he hath lost half their meaning, and puts them together with no regard, except to their cadence.

Swift.

5. In horsemanship.

Cadence is an equal measure or proportion, which a horse observes in all his motions, when he is thoroughly managed.

Farrier's Dict.

6. In heraldry, cadency means distinction of houses or families.

C A D

To CA'DENCE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To regulate by musical measure or proportion.

A certain measured, cadenced step, commonly called a dapping step, which keeps time with, and as it were beats the measure of, the musick which accompanies and directs it, is the essential characteristic which distinguishes a dance from every other sort of motion. A. Smith on the Imitation of Arts.

CA'DENT.† adj. scadens, Lat.] Falling down.

Let it ~~camp~~ wrinkles in her brow of youth;
With cadent tears fret channels in her cheeks;
Turn all her mother's pains, and benefits,
To laughter and contempt. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

CADENZA.* n. s. [Ital.] The fall or modulation of the voice in singing. See CADENCE, in the second sense.

CADET.† n. s. [cadet, Fr. It was anciently capdet: "capdet, cadet, puiné, par opposition à cap-d'ostal [or capdal] l'aîné, le chef de la maison," Roquefort. The eldest of the family was also called capmas, i. e. chef de maison, chief or head of the family; and the younger cadet, from capitetum, a little head or chief. Dict. Trev.]

1. The younger brother.

Walter Buck was a cadet of the house of Flanders. Sir G. Burck, Hist. of Rich. III. p. 68.

These rambling letters of mine—are nought else than a legend of the cumbersome life and various fortunes of a cadet. Howell's Lett. ii. 61.

2. The youngest brother.

Joseph was the youngest of the twelve, and David the eleventh son, and the cadet of Jesse. Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. A volunteer in the army, who serves in expectation of a commission.

The royal apartments are now occupied by a college of young gentlemen cadets, educated at the king's expence in all the sciences requisite for forming an engineer.

Swinkburne, Trav. through Spain, Lett. 44.

CADDEW. n. s. A straw worm. See CADDIS. Dict.

To CADGE.* v. a. [perhaps from the Teut. katsen, kelsen, to run about; and certainly the parent of cadger, which Dr. Johnson has given, and which he derives from cadge, or cage, a panier; but I know of no instance in which cadge is used directly for cage, though it has been indeed the term for a round frame of wood, on which falconers carry their hawks, when they exposed them to sale. Cadge is a common verb for carry in the north of England.] To carry a burthen; to carry on the back. Ray.

Cadging the belly; to stuff the belly; also to bind or tie a thing. Lancashire. Grose.

CA'DGER.† n. s. [from cadge.] A huckster; one who brings butter, eggs, and poultry, from the country to market; a cadger to a mill, a loader. Northumb. Grose.

CADI.† n. s. A magistrate among the Turks and Persians, whose office seems nearly to answer to that of a justice of peace.

In Persia, the cadi passes sentence for a round sum of money. Ld. Lyttelton.

CADYLLACK. n. s. A sort of pear.

CADU'CTY.* n. s. [old Fr. caducité, frailty, weakness; from the Lat. caducus.] Frailty; tendency to fall.

bu- heterogeneous jumble of youth and caducity. bossea. Ld. Chesterfield.

Book.* adj. [old Fr. caduc, "qui a perdu ses Tenures, quefort; from the Lat. caducus. This is an old English adjective, which Cotgrave and Sherwood use: "caduque, frail, caduke, feeble, &c." In later times, Dr. Scot and Dr. Ash have given the word with the definition of crazy. But fleeting or frail is the proper definition; and the word is so used in Scotland also.]

C A I

All their happiness was but caduke and unlasting.

CAECIAS. n. s. [Lat.] A wind from the north east. Hickes's Lucian.

Now, from the north,
Boreas and Caecias and Argestes loud
And Thracias rend the woods, and seas upturn. Milton, P. L.

CESA'REAN. See CESARIAN.

CESURA.† n. s. [Lat.]

1. A figure in poetry, by which a short syllable after a complete foot is made long.

2. The natural pause or rest of the voice, which, falling upon some part of a verse, divides it into two unequal parts.

CÆSURAL.* adj. [from cæsura.] Relating to the poetical figure, or to the pause of the voice.

CÆRULE.* V. CERULE, and CERULEAN.

CAFTAN. n. s. [Persick.] A Persian or Turkish vest or garment.

CAG. n. s. A barrel or wooden vessel, containing four or five gallons. Sometimes keg.

CAGE. n. s. [cage, Fr. from cavea, Lat.]

1. An inclosure of twigs or wire, in which birds are kept.

See whether a cage can please a bird? or whether a dog grow not fiercer with tying? Sidney.

He taught me how to know a man in love; in which cage of rushes, I am sure, you are not a prisoner. Shakspeare.

Though slaves, like birds that sing not in a cage,
They lost their genius, and poetick rage;

Homers again and Pindars may be found,
And his great actions with their numbers crown'd. Waller.

And parrots, imitating human tongue,

And singing birds in silver cages hung;

And ev'ry fragrant flow'r, and od'rous green,

Were sorted well, with lumps of amber laid between. Dryden.

A man recurs to our fancy, by remembering his garment, a beast, bird, or fish, by the cage, or court-yard, or cistern, wherein it was kept. Watts on the Mind.

The reason why so few marriages are happy, is, because young ladies spend their time in making nets, not in making cages. Swift.

2. A place for wild beasts, inclosed with palisadoes.

3. A prison for petty malefactors.

To CAGE.† v. a. [from the noun.] To inclose in a cage.

He swoln, and pauper'd with high fare,

Sits down and snorts, cag'd in his basket-chair. Donne.

And now she would the caged cloister fly. Shakspeare, Lover's Complaint.

Though yon close anchorite's contracted shrowd

Made his innarrow'd carcass seem a crowd,

Yet the cag'd votary did wider dwell

Than thou in thy large roof, and spreading cell.

Verses prefixed to Gregory's Posthuma, 1650.

The Scots—treacherously sold him [K. Charles I.] to the goodly members sitting at Westminster, who after they had caged him awhile, at last set up a mock court of justice, in which they formally arraigned and condemned him.

Dr. Matt. Griffith, Sermon. 1660, p. 28.

CAIC, CAIQUE, CAICA.* n. s. [Fr. caic, caique, a galley boat.] A skiff or sloop belonging to a galley. Chambers says, that the Cossacks give the same name, caic, to a small kind of bark used in the navigation of the Black Sea.

CAIL. * n. s. See KAIL.

CAIMAN. * n. s. The American name of the crocodile.

To CAJOLE. * v. a. [cageoller, Fr.] Cajeoler signifies to prate like a bird in a cage; to babble to little purpose; and is not perhaps from graculus, as Mr. Whiter in his Etymologicon Magnum affirms, but from the old Fr. gaiole, whence géolle, jaiole, and jéole, a cage or prison; Lat. cavea, cavcola; low Lat. gabia, gajola. V. Roquefort, Gloss. The word now means, as Dr. Johnson says, to flatter, or coax; but this is far removed from the original sense. In the Pref. to the King's Cabinet opened, 4to. 1645, it appears that this word was introduced about that time; but it is mentioned by Heylin, eleven years after that time, as an unusual word.] To flatter; to soothe; to coax: a low word.

Thought he, 'tis no mean part of civil State-prudence, to cajole the devil.

Hudibras.

The one affronts him, while the other cajoles and pities him; takes up his quarrel, shakes his head at it, clasps his hand upon his breast, and then protests and protests.

L'Esrange.

My tongue, that wanted to cajole

I try'd, but not a word would troll.

Rymer.

CAJO'LER. * n. s. [cageoleur, Fr. a great and idle prater; one that (like a jay in a cage) jangles much to no purpose. Cotgrave.] A flatterer; a wheedler.

CAJO'LERY. * n. s. [cajolerie, Fr.] Flattery.

Even if the lord-mayor and speaker mean to insinuate, that this influence is to be obtained and held by flattering the people, &c. such cajoleries perhaps would be more prudently practised than professed.

Burke, Letter to R. Burke.

CAISSON. * n. s. [French.]

1. A chest of bombs or powder, laid in the enemy's way, to be fired at their approach.
2. A wooden case, in which the piers of bridges are built within the water.

CAITIFF. * n. s. [cattivo, Ital. a slave; whence it came to signify a bad man, with some implication of meanness; as knave in English, and fur in Latin; so certainly does slavery destroy virtue. A slave and a scoundrel are signified by the same words in many languages. So far Dr. Johnson; who also, in support of his moral assertion, ingeniously introduces a Greek line formed from two in Homer, Odyss. xvii. 322. But the word is not directly from cattivo, as he asserts. It is from the old Fr. chetiff, chaitiff, wretched; caitiú, Langued. Dial. Chaitif, caitif, caiptif; Lat. captivus. Our cattif is used by Wickliffe, Isaiah, lxi. Chaucer has the substantive cattifness, Test. of L. And Wicliffe: "He that leadeth into cattiftee, schal go into cattiftee." Apoc. xxiv.] A mean villain; a despicable knave: it often implies a mixture of wickedness and misery.

Vile cattif, vns. of dread und despair,
Unworthy of the common breathed air;
Why livest thou, dead dog, a longer day,
And dost not unto death thyself prepare?

Spenser.

'Tis not impossible,
But one, the wicked'st cattif on the ground,
May seem as shy, as grave, as just, as absolute,
As Angelo.

Shakespeare.

The wretched cattif, all alone,
As he believ'd, began to moan,
And tell his story to himself.

Hudibras.

I see him, who was once the object of my contempt and scorn, a despised beggar, an ulcerous cattif, a loathsome spectacle of mortality, now basking himself in Abraham's bosom. (The rich man's Soliloq. of Lazarus.) Killingbeck, Sermon. p. 178.

CAITIFF, or CAITIVE. * adjs. [from the Fr. chetif.] Base; servile.

Should raise one's mind above the starrie sky,
And cause a cattive courage to aspire.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. October.

Huge numbers lay

Of cattive wretched thralls, that wailed night and day.

Spenser, F. Q. i. v. 45.

Start not, Dervise,

Tinge not thy cattif cheek with reddening honour. Thomson.
CAIRN. * n. s. [Gael. Ir. Welsh, carn; a heap of stones.] A heap of stones, from the ancient custom of throwing stones on the dead.

A cairne is a heap of stones thrown upon the grave of one eminent for dignity of birth, or splendour of achievements.

Johnson, Journ. to the Western Islands.

CAKE. * n. s. [cuch, Teutonic; Welsh caccen, Arab. caac.]

1. A kind of delicate bread.

You must be seeing christenings! do you look for ale and cakes here, you rude rascals?

Shakespeare.

My cake is dough, but I'll in among the rest,

Out of hope of all, but my share of the feast.

Shakespeare.

The dismal day was come, the priests prepare
Their heaven'd cakes, and fillets for my hair.

Dryden.

2. Any thing of a form rather flat than high; b; which it is sometimes distinguished from a loaf.

There is a cake that groweth upon the side of a dead tree, that hath gotten no name, but it is large and of a chestnut colour, and hard and pithy.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. Concreted matter; coagulated matter.

Yet when I meet again those sorcerers eyes,
Their beams my hardest resolutions thaw,
As if that cakes of ice and July met.

Baum. and Fl. Martiul Maid.

Then when the fleecy skies new cloath the wood,

And cakes of rustling ice come rolling down the flood.

Dryden.

To CAKE. * v. n. [from the noun.] To harden, as dough in the oven.

This burning matter, as it sunk very leisurely, had time to cake together, and form the bottom, which covers the mouth of that dreadful vault that lies underneath it.

Addison on Italy.

This is that very Mah,

That plats the manes of horses in the night,

And cakes the elflocks in foul sluttish hairs.

Shakespeare.

He rins'd the wound,

And wash'd away the strings and clotted blood,

That cak'd within.

Addison.

To CAKE. * v. n. [from] To cackle as geese. In the north of England, geese are said to cake, hens to cackle.

Ray and Grose.

CALABASH Tree.

It hath a flower consisting of one leaf, divided at the brim into several parts; from whose cup rises the pointal in the hinder part of the flower; which afterwards becomes a fleshy fruit, having an hard shell. They rise, to the height of twenty-five or thirty feet in the West Indies, where they grow naturally. The shells are used by the negroes for cups, as also for making instruments of musick, by making a hole in the shell, and putting in small stones, with which they make a sort of rattle.

Miller.

CALAMA'NCO. * n. s. [a word derived probably by some accident from calamancus, Lat. which, in the middle ages, signified a hat.] A kind of woollen stuff.

He was of a bulk and stature larger than ordinary, had a red coat, flung open to shew a calamanco waistcoat.

Tatler.

CALAMIFEROUS. * adj. [from calamus and fero, Lat.] A term applied by some to those plants, otherwise called calmiferous; also bearing a smooth stalk knotted, and generally hollow. Chambers and Ash.

CALAMINE. or Lapis Calaminaris. * n. s. A kind of fossile bituminous earth, which, being mixed with copper, changes it into brass.

We must not omit those, which, though not of so much beauty, yet are of greater use, viz. loadstones, whetstones of all kinds, limestones, calamine, or lapis calaminaris. Locke.

CALAMINT. † n. s. [Fr. calament, from the Gr. καλαμίνθη.] The name of a plant.

To CALAMISTRATE. * v. a. [old Fr. calamistrer, “calamistrayer, triser, crisper comam,” Lacombe: low Lat. calamistrare, from calamus; probably from twisting the hair into various shapes by pipes of similar means of art.” The hair-torturers of modern times may be glad of the word; especially when I add that a “calamist,” in James the First’s time, was “one having his hair turned upwards.” (See Cockeram’s Dict.) a definition that will suit those who have recently studied how, in this respect, to set their hair on end!] To curl or frizzle the hair.

Cotgrave.

Which belike makes our Venetian ladies, at this day, to counterfeit yellow hair so much; great women to calamistrate and curl it up, to adorn their heads with spangles, pearls, and made-flowers; and all courtiers to affect a pleasing grace in this kind. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 464.

CALAMISTRA’TION. * n. s. [from the verb.] The act of curling the hair. Obsolete.

Those curious needle-works, variety of colours, jewels, — embroideries, calamistrations, ointments, &c. will make the veriest dowdy otherwise, a goddess.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 475.

CALA’MITOUS. adj. [calamitosus, Lat.]

1. Miserable; involved in distress; oppressed with infelicity; unhappy; wretched; applied to men.

This is a gracious provision God Almighty hath made in favour of the necessitous and calamitous; the state of some in this life, being so extremely wretched and deplorable, if compared with others. Calamy.

2. Full of misery; distressful; applied to external circumstances.

What calamitous effects the air of this city wrought upon us the last year, you may read in my discourse of the plague.

Harvey on Consumptions.

Strict necessity

Subdues me, and calamitous constraint!
Lest on my head both sin and punishment,
However insupportable, be all Devolv’d.

Milton.

Much rather I shall chuse
To live the poorest in my tribe, than richest,
And be in that calamitous prison left.

Milton.

In this sad and calamitous condition, deliverance from an oppressor would have even revived them. South.

CALA’MITOUSNESS. * n. s. [from calamitosus.] Misery; distress.

CALA’MITY. † n. s. [calamité; Fr. Cotgrave, from calamitas, Lat.]

1. Misfortune; cause of misery; distress.

Another ill accident is drought, and the spindling of the corn, which with us is rare, but in hotter countries common; inasmuch as the word calamity was first derived from calamus, when the corn could not get out of the stalk. Bacon.

2. Misery; distress.

This infinite calamity shall cause
To human life, and household peace confound.

Milton.

From adverse shores in safety let her hear

Foreign calamity and distant war;

Of which, great heaven, let her no portion bear.

Prior.

CALAMUS. * n. s. [Lat.] A sort of reed, or sweet-scented wood, mentioned in Scripture with the other ingredients of the sacred perfumes. It is a knotty reed, reddish without and white within, which puts forth long and narrow leaves, and brought from the Indies. The prophets speak of it as a foreign commodity of great value. These sweet reeds have no smell when they are green, but when they are dry only. Their form differs not from other reeds, and their smell is perceived upon entering the marshes. Calmet.

Take thou also unto thee principal spices of pure myrrh, of sweet cinnamon, and of sweet calamus. Exodus, xxx. 23.

CALA’SH. † n. s. [caleche, Fr. Dryden and Butler wrote it calrche.]

1. A small carriage of pleasure.

Sir Matthew is gone abroad, I suspect a wooring; and his caleche is gone with him. Dryden’s Lett. edit. Malone, p. 29.

Ladies hurried in caleches. Hudibras, iii. ii.

Daniel, a sprightly swain, that us’d to slash

The vigorous steeds that drew his lord’s calash. King.

The ancients used calashes, the figures of several of them being to be seen on ancient monuments. They are very simple, light, and drove by the traveller himself. Arbutnot on Coins.

2. A covering to protect the head of a lady full dressed; generally made of silk, and projecting considerably over the face; being supported with hoops of cane.

CALCA’REOUS. * adj. [from the Lat. calx.] Partaking of the nature or qualities of calx or lime.

On the east side is a stratum of bones of all sizes, belonging to various animals and fowls, enched in an incrustation of a reddish calcareous rock.

Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, Lett. 29.

Soils consist of different combinations of two or more of the four primitive earths; namely, the calcareous, which some times call mild calx; magnesia; argil; and the silicious.

Kirwan on Manures, i. § 1.

CALCAVALLA. * n. s. A superiour kind of Lisbon wine.

CALCEATED. adj. [calceatus, Lat.] Shod; fitted with shoes.

CALCEDONIUS. * n. s. [Lat.] A kind of precious stone. Calcedonius is of the agate kind, and of a misty grey, clouded with blue, or with purple.

Woodward on Fossils.

CALCEDONY. * n. s. The calcedonius.

The first foundation was a jasper; the second, a sapphire; the third, a calcedony. Rev. xxi. 19.

CALCINABLE. * adj. [from calcine.] That which may be calcined.

Not fermenting with acids, and imperfectly calcineable in a great fire. Hill on Fossils, Of Granite.

To CALCINATE. See To CALCINE.

In hardening, by baking without melting, the heat hath these degrees; first, it indurath, then maketh fragile, and, lastly, it doth calcinate. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

CALCINATION. * n. s. [from calcine; calcination; Fr.]

Such a management of bodies by fire, as renders them reducible to powder; wherefore it is called chemical pulverization. This is the next degree of the power of fire beyond that of fusion; for when fusion is longer continued, not only the more subtile particles of the body itself fly off, but the particles of fire likewise insinuate themselves in such multitudes, and are so blended through its whole substance, that the fluidity, first caused by the fire, can no longer subsist. From this union arises a third kind of body, which, being very porous and brittle, is easily reduced to powder; for, the fire having penetrated every where into the pores of the body, the particles are both hindered from mutual contact, and divided into minute atoms. Quincy.

C A L

Divers residences of bodies are thrown away, as soon as the distillation or calcination of the body that yielded them is ended. Boyle.

This may be effected, but not without a calcination, or reducing it by ~~it~~ into a subtle powder. Brown, Vulg. Err.

CALCINATORY. † n. s. [Fr. calcinoire, Cotgrave.] A vessel used in calcination.

To CALCINE. † v. a. [calciner, Fr. from calx, Lat.]

1. To burn in the fire to a calx, or friable substance.

See CALCINATION.

He put up the ashes into several glasses, sealed hermetically, and written upon with the several names of the calcined herbs. Gregory, Posthuma, p. 70.

The solids seem to be earth, bound together with some oil; for if a bone be calcined, so as the least force will crumble it, being emersed in oil, it will grow firm again. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. To burn up.

It [a fever] doth not only melt him, but calcine him, reduce him to ashes and to atoms. Donne, Devotions, p. 23.

Fiery disputes that union have calin'd,
Almost as many minds as men we find. Denham.

To CALCINE. v. n. To become a calx by heat.

This crystal is a pellucid fissile stone, clear as water, and without colour, enduring a red heat without losing its transparency, and, in a very strong heat, calcining without fusion. Newton's Opticks.

To CALCITRATE. † v. n. [Fr. calcitrer.] To kick; to spurn; to fling. Cotgrave and Cockram.

CALCOGRAPHY. † n. s. [Fr. calcographie, from χαλκος and γραφω.] The art of engraving on brass. See CHALCOGRAPHY.

The histories of refining; of making copperas; of making alum; — of calcography; of enamelling. Sprat, Hist. of R. Soc. p. 28.

CALCULABLE. † adj. [from calcule.] That which may be estimated or computed.

To CALCULATE. v. a. [calculus, Fr. from calculus, Lat. a little stone or bead, used in operations of numbers.]

1. To compute; to reckon: as, he calculates his expences.

2. To compute the situation of the planets at any certain time.

A cunning man did calculate my birth,
And told me, that by water I should die. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Who were there then in the world, to observe the births of those first men, and calculate their nativities, as they sprang out of ditches? Bentley.

3. To adjust; to project for any certain end.

The reasonableness of religion clearly appears, as it tends so directly to the happiness of men, and is, upon all accounts, calculated for our benefit. Tillotson.

To CALCULATE. † v. n. To make a computation.

Why all these fires, why all these gliding ghosts,
Why old men, fools, and children calculate?
Why all those things change from their ordinance? Shakespeare, Jul. Cas.

CALCULATION. † n. s. [from calculus.]

1. A practice, or manner of reckoning; the art of numbering.

Cypher, that great friend to calculation; or rather, which changeth calculation, into easy computation. Holder on Time.

2. A reckoning; the result of arithmetical operation.

If then their calculation be true; for so they reckon. Hooker.
Being different from calculations of the ancients, their observations confirm not ours. Brown, Vulg. Err.

C A L

CALCULATIVE. † adj. [from calculus.] Belonging to calculation.

Persons bred in trade have in general a much better idea, by long habits of calculative dealings, of the propriety of expending in order to acquire. Burke, on the Popery Laws.

CALCULATOR. † n. s. [from calculus.] A computer; a reckoner.

Let him make an ephemerides, read Sisnet the calculator's works, Scaliger, and Petavius his adversary.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 281.

The calculators of after chances seldom hit right.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 154.

Fortune-tellers, or pretending calculators of nativities.

Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 224.

Ambition is no exact calculator.

Burke, on the Duration of Parliaments.

CALCULATORY. † adj. [Fr. calculatoire.] Belonging to calculation. Sherwood.

CALCULE. † n. s. [calculus, Lat.] Reckoning; compute: obsolete.

The general calculus, which was made in the last perambulation, exceeded eight millions. Hovel, Local Forest.

To CALCULE. † v. a. The old English verb for calculate. Obsolete.

Full subtly he calculated all this. Chaucer, Froth. Tale.

CALCULOSE. } adj. [from calculus, Lat.] Stony;

CALCULOUS. } gritty.

The volatile salt of urine will coagulate spirits of wine; and thus, perhaps, the stones, or calculose concretions in the kidney or bladder, may be produced. Brown, Vulg. Err.

I have found, by opening the kidneys of a calculus person, that the stone is formed earlier than I have suggested. Sharp.

CALCULUS. † n. s. [Latin.] The stone in the bladder.

CALDRON. † n. s. [chauldron, Fr. from calidus, Lat.] A pot; a boiler; a kettle.

In the midst of all

There placed was a caldron wide and tall,

Upon a mighty furnace, burning hot. Spenser, F. Q.

Some strip the skin, some portion out the spoil;

The limbs, yet trembling, in the caldrons boil;

Some on the fire the reeking entrails broil. Dryden, Æn.

In the late eruptions, this great hollow was like a vast caldron, filled with glowing and melted matter, which, as it boiled over in any part, ran down the sides of the mountain. Addison.

CALECHE. The same with CALASH.

CALEDONIAN. † adj. [from Caledonia, an ancient name of Scotland.] Relating to Scotland.

Milton supposes that the naked bosoms of these three nymphs were tinged with Caledonian or Pictish wood.

Warton, Note on Milton's Silv. Lil.

CALEFACTION. † n. s. [from calefactio, Lat.]

1. The act of heating any thing.

2. The state of being heated.

Every flatuous calefaction of the brain, whence soever it arise, is apt to make a man ecstatical.

Spenser, Vanity of Vulg. Proph. p. 105.

As [if] the remembrance of calefaction can warm a man in a cold frosty night. Moore, Philos. Poems, Pref. C. 2.

CALEFACTIVE. † adj. [calfactif, Fr. Cotgrave; from calefacio, Lat.] That which makes any thing hot; heating.

CALEFACTORY. adj. [from calefacio, Lat.] That which heats.

To CALEFY. † v. n. [calefy, Lat.]. To grow hot; to be heated.

Crystal will calefy unto electricity; that is, a power to attract straws, or light bodies, and convert the needle, freely placed. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To CALEFY. † v. a. To make warm. Bullock.

CALENDAR. † n. s. [calendarium, Lat.] A register of the year, in which the months, and stated time, are marked, as festivals and holidays.

What hath this day deserv'd? what hath it done,
That it in golden letter should be set
Among the high tides, in the calendar? Shakspeare, King John.

We compute from calendars differing from one another; the compute of the one anticipating that of the other. Brown.

Curs'd be the day when first I did appear;

Let it be blotted from the calendar,

Lest it pollute the month!

Drayton, Fables.

To CALENDAR. n. s. [from the noun.] To enter in a calendar.

Often martyred names, as well as men, are calendar'd.

Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. p. 21.

To CALENDER. v. a. [calendrer, Fr. Skinner] Some derive this word from the Lat. cylindrus, or Gr. κλινδρος; or rather from the low Lat. celendra, whence calendre; the whole effect of the machine depending upon a cylinder. To dress cloth; to lay the nap of cloth smooth.

CALENDRER. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A hot press; a press in which clothiers smooth their cloth.

2. The workman who manages the machine.

I am a linnen-draper bold,
As all the world does know,
And my good friend, the calendar,
Will lend his horse to go.

Cowper's John Gilpin.

CALENDER, or KALENDER. n. s. The name of a sort of dervises, spread through Turkey and Persia. They derive the appellation from Calenderi, their founder. They are not in much esteem; and their name is said to be not correct. In Languedoc, "calendres" mean "droles, bon companions, goinfres."

Thirty nobles in the habit of pilgrim-calenders.

Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 70.

CALENDREER. n. s. [from calender.] The person who calenders.

CALENDS. n. s. [calendar, Lat.] It has no singular. The first day of every month among the Romans.

CALESTURE. n. s. [from caleo, Lat.] A distemper peculiar to sailors, in hot climates; wherein they imagine the sea to be green fields, and will throw themselves into it.

Quincy.

And for that lethargy was there no cure,

But to be cast into a calesture.

Denham.

So, by a calesture misled,

The mariner with rapture sees,

On the smooth ocean's azure bed,

Enamell'd fields, and verdant trees;

With eager haste, he longs to rove

In that fantastick scene, and thinks

It must be some enchanted grove;

And, while he leaps, and down he sinks.

Swift.

CALF. n. s. calves in the plural. [caul, calf, Saxon; kalf, Dutch.]

The young of a cow.

The colt hath about four years of growth; and so the fawn, and so the calf. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Acosta tells us of a fowl in Peru, called condore, which will kill and eat up a whole calf at a time. Wilkins.

Ah! Blouzelind, I love thee more by half,

Than does their fawns, or cows the new-fall'n calf.

Gay.

Calves of the lips, mentioned by Hosea, signify sacrifices of praise and prayers, which the captives of Babylon addressed to God, being no longer in a condition to offer sacrifices in his temple. Calmet.

Turn to the Lord, and say unto him, Take away all iniquity, and receive us graciously: so will we render the calves of our lips.

Hosea, xiv. 2.

3. By way of contempt and reproach applied to a stupid wretch.

When such a one has got,

That or that, or that, or that,

What folk perceive it driveth not,

So silly doating brainless calf,

That understands things by the half,

Says, that the fairy left the oaf,

And took away the other.

Drayton, Nym.

4. The thick, plump, bulbous part of the leg. [calf, Dutch; Goth. calf, kalve, the calf of the leg. Serenius.]

Into her legs I'd have love's issues fall,

And all her calf into a gouty snail.

Suckling.

The calf of that leg blistered.

Wise man's Surgery.

CA'LF-LIKE. adj. Resembling a calf.

So I charin'd their ears,

That, calf-like, they my lowing followed. Shakspeare, Tempest.

CA'LIBER. n. s. [calibre, Fr.] The bore; the diameter of the barrel of a gun; the diameter of a bullet.

It is easy for an ingenious philosopher to fit the ends of these empty tubes to the diameter of the particles of matter, so as they shall require no grosser kind of matter. Reid's Inquiry.

CA'LIBRE. n. s. [Fr. calibre, a quality, state, or degree; as qualibre. Cotgrave.] A sort or kind.

Coming from men of their calibre, they were highly mischievous. Burke.

CA'LICE. n. s. [calix, Lat.] A cup; a chalice. See CHALICE.

There is a natural analogy between the ablution of the body and the purification of the soul; between eating the holy bread and drinking the sacred calice, and a participation of the body and blood of Christ. Taylor.

CA'LICO. n. s. [from Calecut in India.] A stuff made of cotton; sometimes stained with various and beautiful colours. This was the original application of the word. The manufacture, in our own country, of making impressions upon linen, with beauty equal to that of the Indian, has completely anglicised the word.

I wear the hoop petticoat, and am all in calicoes, when the finest are in silks. Addison, Spectator.

CA'LICO-PRINTER. n. s. The manufacturer of printed linens.

Suppose an ingenious gentleman should write a poem of advice to a calico-printer; do you think there is a girl in England, that would wear any thing but the taking of Lisle, or the battle of Oudenarde? Tatler, No. 3.

CA'LIB. adj. [calidus, Lat.] Hot; burning; fervent.

CAL'DITY. n. s. [Fr. calidite.] Heat.

Ice will dissolve in any way of heat; for it will dissolve with fire; it will colliquate in water, or warm oil; nor doth it only submit into an actual heat, but not endure the potential calidity of many waters. Brown, Vulg. Err.

CA'LIDUCT. n. s. [from calidus and ductus, Lat.] That which conveys heat; a stove. Coles.

Since the subterranean caliducts have been introduced,

CA'LIFF. n. s. khalifa, Arab. an heir or successor.

CA'LIPH. n. s. A title assumed by the successors of Mahomet among the Saracens, who were vested with absolute power in affairs, both religious and civil.

Ally, son-in-law to Mahomet, for pretending to the caliphship, was by this restless caliph every where pursued.

Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 266.

CALIGA'TION. n. s. [from caligo, Lat. to be dark.] Darkness; cloudiness.

Instead of a diminution, or imperfect vision, in the mole, we affirm an abolition, or total privation; instead of caligatio, or dimness, we conclude a cecity, or blindness. Brown.

CAL

CAL'GINOUS.† adj. [Fr. caligineux, from caliginosus, Lat.] Obscure; dim; full of darkness. Their punishment [that of the rebellious angels] was their dejection and detrusion into the caliginous regions of the air.

It is filled with such a thick and caliginous air, that the ground cannot be seen.

CAL'GINOUSNESS. n. s. [from caliginous.] Darkness; obscurity.

CAL'IGRAPHY. n. s. [καλλιγραφία.] Beautiful writing. This language is incapable of caligraphy.

CALIPA'SH.* } n. s. Terms of cookery in dressing a CALIP'E. } turtle; meaning as well the shell of the animal, as the flesh; and written also callapash and callapee. Modern luxury, which introduced the words, may settle the orthography.

Instead of rich sirloins we see
Green calipash and yellow calipee. Prologue to the Dramatist.

CAL'IPERS. See CALLIPERS.

CAL'IPHATE.* n. s. The government of the caliph. The former part of this period may be called the era of the grandeur and magnificence of the caliphate.

CAL'IPHSHIP.* n. s. The state and office of the caliph. See the word in the example to CALIPH. The more modern word is CALIPHATE, which see.

CAL'IVER.† n. s. [corrupted from caliber.] A hand-gun; a harquebuse; a musket of a particular size or bore.

Come, manage me your caliver. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
He is so hung with pikes, halberds, petronels, calivers, and muskets, that he looks like a justice of peace's hall.

B. Jonson, Epicoene.

CALIX. n. s. [Latin.] A cup; a word used in botany; as, the calix of a flower.

To CALK. v. a. [from calage, Fr. hemp, with which leaks are stopped; or from cäle, Sax. the keel. Skinner.] To stop the leaks of a ship.

There is a great error committed in the manner of calking his majesty's ships; which being done with rotten oakum, is the cause they are leaky.

Raleigh, Essays.

CAL'KER. n. s. [from calk.] The workman that stops the leaks of a ship.

The ancients of Gebel, and the wise men thereof, were in thee thy calkers; all the ships of the sea, with their mariners, were in thee to occupy thy merchandize.

Ezek. xxvii. 9.

CAL'KIN.* n. s. A part prominent from a horse-shoe, turned up and pointed to secure the horse from falling.

Ash.

CAL'KING. n. s. A term in painting, used where the backside is covered with black lead, or red chalk, and the lines traced through on a waxed plate, wall, or other matter, by passing lightly over each stroke of the design with a point, which leaves an impression of the colour on the plate or wall.

Chambers.

CAL'KING-IRON.* n. s. A kind of chissel used in calking a ship.

So here some pick out bullets from the side;
Some drive old oakum through each seam and rift;
Their left-hand does the calking-iron guide,
The rattling mallet with the right they lift.

Dryden.

To CALL.† v. a. [calo, Lat. kalder, Danish; Dr. Johnson says. It is rather from the Su. kalla; though the Gr. καλεω may be also mentioned; and the Heb. col, the voice. Lye's A-Sax. Dict. gives calb, as the participle called, ed. Manning.]

VOL. I.

CAL

1. To name; to denominate.

And God called the light day, and the darkness he called night.

Gen. i. 5.

2. To summon, or invite, to or from any place, thing, or person. It is often used with local particles; as, up, down, in, out, off.

Be not amazed, call all your senses to you, defend my reputation, or bid farewell to your good life for ever.

Shakspeare, King Lear.

Are you call'd forth from out a world of men,

To slay the innocent?

Shakspeare, Richard III.

Lodronius, that famous captain, was called up, and told by his servants, that the general was fled.

Kneller, History.

Or call up him, that left half told

The story of Cambuscan bold.

Milton.

Drunkenness calls off the watchmen from their towers; and then evils proceed from a loose heart, and an untied tongue.

Taylor, Holy Living.

The soul makes use of her memory, to call to mind what she is to treat of.

Duypa, Rules to Devotion.

Such fine employments our whole days divide,

The salutations of the morning tide

Call up the sun; those ended, to the hall

We wait the patron, hear the lawyers bawl.

Dryden.

Then, by consent, abstain from further toils,

Call off the dogs, and gather up the spoils.

Addison.

By the pleasures of the imagination or fancy, I mean such as arise from visible objects, when we call up their ideas into our minds by paintings, statues, or descriptions.

Addison, Spect.

Why dost thou call my sorrows up afresh!

My father's name brings tears into my eyes.

Addison, Cato.

I am called off from publick dissertations, by a domestick affair of great importance.

Tailler.

Æschylus has a tragedy, entitled Persæ, in which the shade of Darius is called up.

Broome on the Odyssey.

The passions call away the thoughts, with incessant importunity, toward the object that excited them.

Watts.

3. To convoke; to summon together.

Now call we our high court of parliament.

Shakspeare.

The king being informed of much that had passed that night, sent to the lord mayor to call a common council immediately.

Clarendon.

4. To summon judicially.

The king had sent for the earl to return home, where he should be called to account for all his miscarriages.

Clarendon.

Once a day, especially in the early years of life and study, call yourselves to an account, what new ideas, what new proposition or truth, you have gained.

Watts.

5. To summon by command.

In that day did the Lord God of Hosts call to weeping, and to mourning, and to baldness, and to girding with sackcloth.

Isaiah, xxii. 12.

6. In the theological sense, to inspire with ardours of piety; or to summon into the church.

Paul a servant of Jesus Christ, called to be an apostle, separated unto the gospel of God.

Rom. i. 1.

7. To invoke; to appeal to.

I call God for a record upon my soul, that, to spare you, I came not as yet unto Corinth.

2 Cor. i. 23.

8. To appeal to.

When that lord perplexed their counsels and designs, with inconvenient objections in law, the authority of the lord Manchester, who had trod the same paths, was still called upon.

Clarendon.

9. To proclaim; to publish. Thus, in the north of England, it means to give notice by the publick cryer; as, I had it called, i. e. cried.

Nor ballad-singer, plac'd above the croud,
Sings with a note so shrilling, sweet, and loud.

Gay.

Nor parish-clerk, who calls the psalm so clear.

10. To excite; to put in action; to bring into view.

He swells with angry pride,

And calls forth all his spots on every side.

Cowley.

See Dionysius Homer's thoughts call to mind,

And call new beauties forth from ev'ry line.

Pope.

11. To stigmatize with some opprobrious denomination.

Deafness unqualifies men for all company, except friends; whom I can call names, if they do not speak loud enough.

Swift to Pope.

12. To call back. To revoke; to retract.

He also is wise, and will bring evil, and will not call back his words; but will rise against the house of the evil doers, and against the help of them that work iniquity.

Isaiah, xxxi. 2.

13. To call for. To demand; to require; to claim.

Madam, his majesty doth call for you, And for your grace, and you, my noble lord. You see, how men of merit are sought after; the under-server may sleep, when the man of action is called for.

Shakspeare.

Among them he a spirit of phrensy sent,
Who hurt their minds,
And urg'd you on, with mad desire,
To call in haste for their destroyer.

Milton, S. A.

For master, or for servant, here to call,

Was all alike, where only two were all.

Dryden, Fab.

He commits every sin that his appetite calls for, or perhaps his constitution or fortune can bear.

Rogers.

14. To call in. To resume money at interest.

Horace describes an old usurer, as so charmed with the pleasures of a country life, that, in order to make a purchase, he called in all his money; but what was the event of it? why in a very few days after, he put it out again.

Addison, Spectator.

15. To call in. To resume any thing that is in other hands.

If clipped money be called in all at once, and stopped from passing by weight, I fear it will stop trade.

Locke.

Neither is any thing more cruel and oppressive in the French government, than their practice of calling in their money, after they have sunk it very low, and then coining it anew, at a higher value.

Swift.

16. To call in. To summon together; to invite.

The heat is past, follow no farther now;

Call in the powers, good cousin, Westmoreland.

He fears my subjects loyalty,

And now must call in strangers.

Denham, Sophy.

17. To call over. To read aloud a list or muster-roll.

18. To call out. To challenge; to summon to fight.

When their sov'reign's quarrel calls 'em out,

His foes to mortal combat they defy.

Dryden, Virgil.

TO CALL. v. n.

1. To stop without intention of staying. This meaning probably rose from the custom of denoting one's presence at the door by a call; but it is now used with great latitude. This sense is well enough preserved by the particles on or at; but is forgotten, and the expression made barbarous by in.

2. To make a short visit.

And as you go, call on my brother Quintus,

And pay him, with the tribunes, to come to me.

B. Jonson.

He ordered her to call at his house once a-week, which she did for some time after, when he heard no more of her.

Temple.

That I might begin as near the fountain-head as possible, I first of all called in at St. James's.

We called in at Morge, where there is an artificial port.

Addison on Italy.

3. To call on. To solicit for a favour, or a debt.

I would be loth to pay him before his day; what need I be so forward with him, that calls not on me?

Shakspeare, Henry IV.

4. To call on. To repeat solemnly.

Thrice call upon my name, thrice beat your breast,

And hail me thrice to everlasting rest.

Dryden.

The Athenians, when they lost any men at sea, went to the shores, and, calling thrice on their names, raised a cenotaph or empty monument, to their memories.

Broome on the Odyssey.

5. To call upon. To implore; to pray to.

Call upon me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me.

Psalms i. 15.

CALL.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A vocal address of summons, or invitation.

But death comes not at call; justice diving

Mends not her slowest pace, for pray'rs or cries.

Milton.

But would you sing, and rival Orpheus' strain,

The wond'ring forests soon should dance again:

The moving mountains hear the pow'ful call,

And headlong streams hang list'ning in their fall.

Pope.

2. Requisition authoritative and publick.

It may be feared, whether our nobility would contentedly suffer themselves to be always at the call, and to stand to the sentence of a number of mean persons.

Hooker's Preface.

3. Divine vocation; summons to true religion.

Yet he at length, time to himself best known,

Rememb'ring Abraham, by some wond'rous call,

May bring them back repentant and sincere.

Milton.

4. A summons from heaven; an impulse.

How justly then will impious mortals fall,

Whose pride would soar to heav'n without a call?

Roscommon.

Those who to empire by dark paths aspire,

Still plead a call to what they most desire.

Dryden.

St. Paul himself believed he did well, and that he had a call to it, when he persecuted the christians, whom he confidently thought in the wrong: but yet it was he, and not they, who were mistaken.

Locke.

5. Authority; command.

Oh! Sir, I wish he were within my call, or yours.

Denham.

6. A demand; a claim.

Dependence is a perpetual call upon humanity, and a greater incitement to tenderness and pity, than any other motive whatsoever.

Addison, Spectator.

7. An instrument to call birds.

For those birds or beasts were made from such pipes or calls, as may express the several tones of those creatures, which are represented.

Wilkins, Mathemat. Magick.

8. In naval language, a sort of pipe or whistle used by the boatswain and his mates to summon the sailors to their several employments.

9. Calling; vocation; employment.

Now, through the land, his cure of souls he stretch'd,

And, like a primitive apostle, preach'd:

Still cheerful, ever constant to his call;

By many follow'd, lov'd by most, admir'd by all.

Dryden.

10. A nomination.

Upon the sixteenth was held the serjeants feast at Ely place, there being nine serjeants of that call.

Bacon.

11. Call of the House. In parliamentary language; to discover what members are absent without leave of the house or just cause; and to ensure their attendance, at the discussion of some eminently important question.

CALLER.* n. s. [from call, Fr. appeleur.] He who calls.

Sherwood.

CALLET.† n. s. [It is said by Urry, Dr. Grey, and others to be derived from the Fr. calotte, a sort of cap or head-dress worn by country girls. But the calotte is not a cap confined to those maidens; and if it were, why derive so opprobrious a word from that circumstance? It is probably one of the cant words of elder days. It appears from an entry in the Stationers' Books in 1563, that there was "an order of drabs or callets. Our old poet Skelton treats them as scolds, in which sense the verb callet is used in the north of England.] A trull, or a scold.

Then Elinour said, ye callettes,

I shall breake your palettes,

Without ye now cease;

And so was made the drunken peace. Shelton's Poems, p. 133.

He call'd her whore: a beggar, in his drink.

Could not have had such terms upon his callet. Shakespeare.

To CA'LIET. * n. n. [from the noun. A calletting housewife, in the north of England, is a scold.

Ray.] To rail; to scold.

To hear her in her spleen

Callet like a butter-quean.

Brathwait, Care's Cure in Panedone, (1621.)

CA'LLING. † n. s. [from call.]

1. Vocation; profession; trade.

If God has interwoven such a pleasure with our ordinary calling, how much superiour must that be, which arises from the survey of a pious life? Surely, as much as christianity is nobler than a trade. Smith.

We find ourselves obliged to go on in honest industry in our callings. Rogers.

I cannot forbear warning you against endeavouring at wit in your sermon; because many of your calling have made themselves ridiculous by attempting it. Swift.

I left no calling for this idle trade,
No duty broke, no father disobey'd. Pope.

2. Proper station or employment.

The Gauls found the Roman senators ready to die with honour in their callings. Swift.

3. Class of persons united by the same employment or profession.

It may be a caution to all christian churches and magistrates, not to impose celibacy on whole callings, and great multitudes of men or women, who cannot be supposable to have the gift of continence. Harmond.

4. Divine vocation; invitation or impulse to the true religion.

Give all diligence to make your calling and election sure.

2 Peter, i. 10.

St. Peter was ignorant of the calling of the Gentiles.

Hakewill on Providence.

5. Appellation. Not now in use.

I am more proud to be Sir Rowland's son,
His youngest son; and would not change that calling,
To be adopted heir of Frederick. Shakespeare, As you Like it.

CA'LLICO. * See CALICO.

CALL'DITY. * n. s. [Lat. calliditas.] Craftiness.

Cockeram.

CALLIGRAPHY. * n. s. See CALIGRAPHY.

My calligraphy, a fair hand,
Fit for a secretary.

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

CALLIGRAPHICK. * adj. [from calligraphy.] Relating to beautiful writing.

At the end is an inscription importing the writer's name, and his excellence in the calligraphick art.

Warton, Hist. of F. P.

CA'LLIPERS. † n. s. [Of this word I know not the etymology, nor does any thing more probable occur, than that, perhaps, the word is corrupted from clippers, instruments with which any thing is clipped, inclosed or embraced, Dr. Johnson says; but it is surely from caliber, (Fr. qualibre, the bore of a gun or any cylinder,) and indeed they are called caliber-compasses.] Compasses with bowed shanks.

Callipers measure the distance of any round, cylindrick, conical body, so that, when workmen use them, they open the two points to their described width, and turn so much stuff off the intended place, till the two points of the callipers fit just over their work. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

CALLO'SITY. n. s. [callosité, Fr.] A kind of swelling without pain, like that of the skin, by hard labour; and therefore, when wounds, or the edges of ulcers, grow so, they are said to be callous. Quincy.

The surgeon ought to vary the diet of his patient, as he finds the fibres loosen too much, are too flaccid, and produce funguses, or as they harden and produce callosities; in the first case, wine and spirituous liquours are useful, in the last hurtful. Arbutnot on Diet.

CA'LLOT. * See CALOTTE.

CA'LLOUS. adj. [callus, Lat.]

1. Indurated; hardened; having the pores shut up.

In progress of time, the ulcers became sinuous and callous, with induration of the glands. Wegmon.

2. Hardened in mind; insensible.

Licentiousness has so long passed for sharpness of wit, and greatness of mind, that the conscience is grown callous. L'Esrange.

The wretch is drench'd too deep,

His soul is stupid, and his heart asleep:

Fatten'd in vice, so callous and so gross,

He sins, and sees not, senseless of his loss. Dryden.

CA'LLOUSLY. * adv. In a callous or hardened manner.

CA'LLOUSNESS. n. s. [from callous.]

1. Hardness; induration of the fibres.

The oftner we use the organs of touching, the more of these scales are formed, and the skin becomes the thicker, and so a callousness grows upon it. Cheyne.

2. Insensibility.

If they let go their hope of everlasting life with willingness, and entertain final perdition with exultation, ought they not to be esteemed destitute of common sense, and abandoned to a callousness and numbness of soul. Bentley.

CA'LLOW. † adj. [Dr. Johnson offers no etymology.

It is the Sax. calo, calu, bald, without hair; Lat. calvus.] Unfledged; naked; without feathers.

Bursting with kindly rupture, forth disclos'd

Their callow young. Milton, P. L.

Then as an eagle, who, with pious care,

Was beating widely on the wing for prey,

To her now silent airy does repair,

And finds her callow infants forc'd away. Dryden.

How in small flights they know to try their young,

And teach the callow child her parent's song. Prior.

CALLUS. n. s. [Latin.]

1. An induration of the fibres.

2. The hard substance by which broken bones are united.

CALM. † adj. [calme, Fr.; kalm, Dutch; Dr. Johnson says. Calme is derived, according to Covarruvias, from καύμα, heat, the heat being greatest when there is no wind stirring. Huët deduces it from μαλακός, soft; whence the Latins formed malacia in the sense of calm, which is in Caesar's Commentaries. From malacia they made malacus, and by transposition of letters came calamus, then calmus, and so calme, Fr. V. Morin. Etym. Dict. Fr. et Gr.]

1. Quiet; serene; not stormy; not tempestuous: applied to the elements.

Calm was the day, and, through the trembling air,

Sweet breathing Zephyrus did softly play

A gentle spirit, that lightly did allay

Hot Titan's beams, which then did glister fair. Spenser.

So shall the sea be calm unto us. Jonab.

2. Undisturbed; unruffled: applied to the passions.

We are calm as peace.

Beaumont and Fl. Island Princess.

It is so ways congruous, that God should be frightening men into truth, who were made to be wrought upon by calm evidence, and gentle methods of persuasion. Atterbury.

The queen her speech with calm attention hears,
Her eyes restrain the silver-streaming tears. Pope.

CALM. n. s.

1. Serenity; stillness; freedom from violent motion: used of the elements.

It seemeth most agreeable to reason, that the waters rather stood in a quiet calm, than that they moved with any raging or overbearing violence. Raleigh.

Every pilot
Can steer the ship in calms; but he performs
The skillful part, can manage it in storms. Denham.

Nor God alone in the still calm we find,
He mounts the storm, and walks upon the wind. Pope.

2. Freedom from disturbance; quiet; repose: applied to the passions.

Great and strange calms usually portend the most violent storms; and therefore, since storms and calms do always follow one another, certainly, of the two, it is much more eligible to have the storm first, and the calm afterwards: since a calm before a storm is commonly a peace of a man's own making; but a calm after a storm, a peace of God's. South.

To CALM. v. a. [from thé noun.]

1. To still; to quiet.

Neptune we find busy in the beginning of the Æneis, to calm the tempest raised by Æolus. Dryden.

2. To pacify; to appease.

Jesus, whose bare word checked the sea, as much exerts himself in silencing the tempests, and calming the intestine storms within our breasts. Decay of Piety.

Those passions which seem somewhat calmed, may be entirely laid asleep, and never more awakened. Atterbury.

He will'd to stay,
The sacred rites and hecatombs to pay,
And calm Minerva's wrath. Pope.

CALMER. n. s. [from calm.] The person or thing which has the power of giving quiet.

Angling was, after tedious study, a rest to his mind, a cheerer of his spirits, a diverter of sadness, a calmer of unquiet thoughts, a moderator of passions, a procurer of contentedness. Walton.

CALMLY. adv. [from calm.]

1. Without storms, or violence; serenely.

In nature, things move violently to their place, and calmly in their place; so virtue in ambition is violent, in authority settled and calm. Bacon.

His curled brows
Frown on the gentle stream, which calmly flows. Denham.

2. Without passions; quietly.

The nymph did like the scene appear,
Serenely pleasant, calmly fair;
Soft fell her words, as flew the air. Prior.

CALMNESS. n. s. [from calm.]

1. Tranquillity; serenity; not storminess.

While the steep horrid roughness of the wood
Strives with the gentle calmness of the flood. Denham.

2. Mildness; freedom from passion.

Sir, 'tis fit
You have strong party, or defend yourself
By calmness, or by absence: all's in anger. Shakspeare.

I beg the grace,
You would lay by those terrors of your face;
Till calmness to your eyes you first restore,
I am afraid, and I can beg no more. Dryden.

CALMY. † adj. [from calm.] Calm; peaceful. Not used; Dr. Johnson says. It is admirably used by other poets, as well as Spenser, from whom alone Dr. Johnson has given an example; and is worthy of general use.

Will peace her halcyon nest venture to build Upon a shore with shipwrecks fill'd?
And trust that sea, where, she can hardly say,
She has known these twenty years, one calmy day?
Cowley, Ode Rector of K. Ch. II. st. 3.

Her calmy sight
Thou think'st thy heaven, and in her smiling eyes
Read'st all the sweets of thy fool's paradise.
Beaumont's Psyche, xvi. 15.

And now they sigh approached to the sted,
Where as those mermaides dwelt: it was a still
And calmy bay, on the one side sheltered
With the broad shadow of an hoary hill. Spenser, F. Q.

CALOMEL. † n. s. [calomelas, a chymical word; from καλός good and μελας black, in allusion to its colour and properties.] Mercury six times sublimed.

He repeated lenient purgatives with calomel, once in three or four days. Wiseman, Surgery.

CALORIFICK. adj. [calorificus, Lat.] That which has the quality of producing heat; heating.

A calorific principle is either excited within the heated body, or transferred to it, through any medium, from some other. Silver will grow hotter than the liquor it contains. Grew.

CALOTTE. † n. s. [French.]

1. A cap or coif, worn as an ecclesiastical ornament in France.

But we,
That tread the path of publick businesses,
Know what a tacit shrug is, or a shrink;
The wearing the calot, the politick hood,
And twenty other parerga, o' the bye,
You seculars understand not. B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

2. [In architecture.] A round cavity or depresso, in form of a cap or cup, lathed and plastered, used to diminish the rise or elevation of a chapel, cabinet, alcove, &c. Harris.

CALOYERS. n. s. [καλόι.] Monks of the Greek church.

Temp'rate as caloyers in their secret cells.

CAL'TROP, or CAL'THROP. † n. s. [Sax. coltæpp. It is called in Fr. chausse-trape, and cheval-atrapppe. See Cotgrave, and Etym. Dict. 1691.]

1. An instrument made with three spikes, so that which way soever it falls to the ground, one of them points upright, to wound horses feet.

A calthrop, anciently used in war. Blount's Tenures, p. 30. The ground about was thick sown with caltrope, which very much incommoded the sheeless Moors.

2. A plant common in France, Spain, and Italy, where it grows among corn, and is very troublesome; for the fruit being armed with strong prickles, run into the feet of the cattle. This is certainly the plant mentioned in Virgil's Georgick, under the name of tribulus. Miller.

To CALVE. † v. n. [Sax. calpian.]

1. To bring a calf: spoken of a cow.

When she has calv'd, then set the dam aside;
And for the tender progeny provide. Dryden.

2. It is used metaphorically for any act of bringing forth; and sometimes of men, by way of reproach.

I would they were barbarians, as they are,
Though in Rome litter'd; not Romans: as they are not;
Though calv'd in the porch o' th' capitol. Shakspeare.

The grassy clods now calv'd, now half appear'd
The tawny lion, pawing to get free
His hinder parts. Milton, P. L.

To CALVER.  v. a.* [In the Prompt. Parv. "to calver, as salmon or other fishes."] To cut in slices; applied to salmon, which bears the knife without breaking, which is fresh, collar, as the word still is used in the north of England; formerly, perhaps, to collar or pickle:

My foot-boy shall eat pheasants, calver'd salmons, knots, godwits, lampreys. B. Jonson, Alchemist.
Provide me then chines fried, and the salmon calver'd.

To CALVER.  v. n.* To shrink by cutting, and not fall to pieces.

C A L

His flesh, [the grayling's,] even in his worst season, is so firm, and will so easily calver, that in plain truth he is very good meat at all times. Cotton, Complete Angler.

CALVES-SNOUT. [antirrhinum.] A plant. Snap-dragon.

CALVLEE. n. s. [French.] A sort of apple.

CALVINISM.* n. s. The doctrine of Calvin; the general doctrine, says Dr. Ash, laid down in the Articles of the Church of England. Let those who may have been misled by this partial definition, or those who may still choose to avow it, read a masterly and successful "Attempt to illustrate those Articles of the Church of England, which the Calvinists improperly consider, as Calvinistical," in a Series of Sermons preached before the University of Oxford by the Rev. Richard Lawrence, 8vo. Ox. 1805.

Most unhappy for the church of England, that so great a party in the English court should be still addicted to Calvinism.

Dean Martin's Letters, (dated 1860,) p. 68.

The delights arising from these objects were to be sacrificed to the cold and philosophical spirit of Calvinism, which furnished no pleasures to the imagination.

Warton, Note on Milton's Il Penseroso.

CALVINIST.* n. s. He who holds the doctrine of Calvin.

The Calvinist is tempted to a false security, and sloth; and the Arminian may be tempted to trust too much to himself, and too little to God.

Burnet on the Articles, Art. 37.

CALVINISTICAL.* } adj. [from Calvinist.] • Relating to Calvinism.

These divines brought back with them into England those narrow principles concerning church-government and ceremonies, which they had imbibed in the petty states and republics abroad, where the Calvinistick discipline was adopted.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ii. 458.

CALVISH.* adj. [from calv.] Like a calf.

You seem like to Waltham's calf, that went nine miles to suck a cow; and when he came thither, the cow proved a bull: perhaps in your calvish meditation you thought, for your pains in advertising the picture-mother, to have sucked her dug, as your Fulbert is reported by your Baronius to have done; but you are mistaken, for you have lighted upon a bull, which with his horns will shake in pieces the mount of your holy father's supremacy.

Sheldon, Miracles of Antichrist, p. 141.

CALVITY.* n. s. [Fr. calvitie, from the Lat. calvities.] Baldness.

Cockeram.

To CALUMNIATE.† v. n. [calumnior, Lat. old Fr. calumpnier.] Calumniate is among the words in the Rhemish translation of the N. Test. which Fulke in his remarks on it in 1617 considers as not familiar to the vulgar reader, and therefore says: "By this word is signified violent oppression by word or deed." To accuse falsely; to charge without just ground.

Beauty, wit, high birth, desert in service,
Love, friendship, charity, are subject all
To envious and calumniating time.

Shakspeare.

He mixes truth with falsehood, and has not forgotten the rule of calumniating strongly, that something may remain.

Dryden, Fables, Preface.

Do I calumniate! thou ungrateful Vano! —
Perfidious prince! — Is it a calumny
To say, that Gwendolen betroth'd to Yver,
Was by her father first assur'd to Valens?

A. Phillips.

To CALUMNIATE.† v. a. To slander.

He falls again to his old trade of downright calumniating our doctrine. Bp. Patrick, Answ. to the Touchstone, &c. p. 199.

One trade or art, even those that should be the most liberal, make it their business to disdain and calumniate another.

Sparr.

CALUMNIA'TION.† n. s. [from calumniate.] That which we call calumination, is a malicious and false representation of an enemy's words or actions, to an offensive purpose.

Ayliffe.

Some faulte you must fynde, where none is, partly to keepe in use your olde custome of calumniacion.

Abp. Crammer to Bp. Gardiner, p. 388.

Inveighing sharply against these close, back-biting calumniation.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience, ii. 8.

These descriptions — are here delivered dispassionately, and not thrown out in the heat of controversy and calumnia-tion.

Warton, Note on Milton's Sil. Lib.

CALUMNIATOR.† n. s. [from calumniate, and Fr. calomniateur.] A forger of accusation; a slanderer.

The foul enemy and calumniator — whose name is the slanderous accuser of his brethren.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

The devil, the father of all calumniators and liars.

Abp. Usher, Answer to a Jesuit, &c. p. 98.

When all these calumniators shall have spit their venom, it will be found that an unspotted life will be to them both a confutation and revenge.

South, Sermon, vii. 74.

He that would live clear of the envy and hatred of potent calumniators, must lay his finger upon his mouth, and keep his hand out of the ink pot.

L'Estrange.

At the same time that Virgil was celebrated by Gallus, we know that Bavius and Marcius were his declared foes and calumniators.

Addison.

CALUMNIATORY.* adj. [from calumniator.] False; slanderous.

Upon admission of this passage, as you yourselves have related it in your calumnatory information.

Mountagu, Appeal to Cæsar, p. 17.

CALUMNIOUS.† adj. [from calumny, and Fr. calomnieux, Cotgrave.] Slanderous; falsely reproachful.

Virtue itself 'scapes not calumnious strokes.

Shakspeare.

With calumnious art

Of counterfeited truth, thus held their ears.

Milton, P. L.

Other calumnious and false taxations have been discovered in my answer.

Whose overspreading barbarism — hath rendered the pure and solid law of God unbeneficial to us by their calumnious dunceries.

Milton, Doct. and Dis. of Divorce, ii. 22.

CALUMNIOUSLY.* adv. [from calumnious.] In a slanderous manner.

Dealing in the case so insincerely, and calumniously, in their informations.

Mountagu, Appeal to Cæsar, p. 26.

Like a flood, you calumniously overflow, in the petty preface to your six reasons.

Sheldon, Miracles of Antichrist, p. 45.

CALUMNIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from calumnious.] Slanderous accusation.

The bitterness of my stile was plainness, not calumniousness.

Bp. Morton, Discharge of Imputations, &c. p. 127.

CALUMNY.† n. s. [old Fr. calomnie, calomnie; from calumnia, Lat.] Slander; false charge; groundless accusation: with against, or sometimes upon, before the person accused.

Be thou as chaste as ice, as pure as snow,

Thou shalt not escape calumny.

Shakspeare.

It is a very hard calumny upon our soil or climate, to affirm, that so excellent a fruit will not grow here.

Temple.

CALX. n. s. [Latin.] Any thing that is rendered reducible to powder by burning.

Gold, that is more dense than lead, resists peremptorily all the dividing power of fire; and will not be reduced into a calx, or lime, by such operation as reduces lead into it.

Digby.

CALYCLE. n. s. [calyculus, Lat.] A small bud of a plant.

Dict.

CALZO'NS.* n. s. [Span. calzones; Fr. calçons, close linen breeches, Cotgrave.] Dr. Ash has given, for this word, calsound's. Drawers.

The better sort of that sex here wear linnen drawers or calzoons.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 115.

CAMA'IEU.† n. s. [from cámachua, which name is given by the orientals to the onyx, when, in preparing it, they find another colour. Fr. camaieu :

low Lat. camahutus; Ital. cammeo; and we now so pronounce the word, and write it cameo.]

1. A stone with various figures and representations of landscapes, formed by nature.

Each nicer mould a softer feature drinks,
The bold cameo speaks, the soft intaglio thinks.

Darwin, Botan. Garden, P. i.

2. [In painting.] A term used where there is only one colour, and where the lights and shadows are of gold, wrought on a golden or azure ground. This kind of work is chiefly used to represent basso-relievos.

Chambers.

CAMBER. n. s. [See CAMBERING.] A term among workmen.

Camber, a piece of timber cut arching, so as a weight considerable being set upon it, it may, in length of time, be induced to a straight.

Mason's Mechanical Exercises.

CAMBERING. n. s. A word mentioned by Skinner, as peculiar to shipbuilders, who say, that a place is cambering, when they mean arched. [from chambre, French.]

CAMBIST.* n. s. [Lat. cambio, to exchange: old Fr. cambi, change, cambia, to change. Lacombe.] A name, which has been given in France to those who trade in notes and bills of exchange. The word cambist, though a term of antiquity, is even now a technical word of some use among merchants, traders, and bankers.

Chambers.

CAMBLET.* See CAMELOT. It is often written camblet. So the Italians write it ciambelotto.

CAMBRICK. n. s. [from Cambray, a city in Flanders, where it was principally made.] A kind of fine linen, used for ruffles, women's sleeves and caps.

He hath ribbons of all the colours of the rainbow; inkles, cadlises, cambricks, and lewens.

Shakspeare.

Rebecca had, by the use of a looking-glass, and by the further use of certain attire, made of cambric, upon her head, attained to an evil art.

Tatler.

Confedrate in the cheat, they draw the throng,
And cambric handkerchiefs reward the song.

Gay.

CAME. The preterite of To come.

Till all the pack came up, and ev'ry hound
Tore the sad huntsman, grov'ling on the ground.

Addison.

CAMEL. n. s. [camelus, Lat.] An animal very common in Arabia, Judea, and the neighbouring countries. One sort is large, and full of flesh, and fit to carry burdens of a thousand pounds weight, having one bunch upon its back. Another have two bunches upon their backs, like a natural saddle, and are fit either for burdens, or men to ride on. A third kind is leaner, and of a smaller size, called dromedaries, because of their swiftness; which are generally used for riding by men of quality.

Camels have large solid feet, but not hard. Camels will continue ten or twelve days without eating or drinking, and keep water a long time in their stomach, for their refreshment.

Calmet.

Patient of thirst and toil,

Son of the desert! even the camel feels,

Shot through his wither'd heart, the fiery blast!

Thomson.

CAMEL-BACKED.* adj. Having a back like a camel; a hunch-back.

Not that he was crook-shouldered, or camel-backed.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 215.

CAMELOPARD. n. s. [from camelus and pardus, Lat.] An Abyssinian animal, taller than an elephant, but not so thick. He is so named, because he has a neck and head like a camel; he is spotted like a pard, but his spots are white upon a red ground. The Italians call him giaraffa.

Trevour.

CAMELOT.* } n. s. [Fr. camelot, Ital. camelotto from CAMLET. } the Gr. καμηλαρι, the skin of the camel.

1. A kind of stuff originally made by a mixture of silk and camels hair; it is now made with wool and silk.

This habit was not of camels skin, nor any coarse texture of its hair, but rather some finer weave of camlet, grograin, or the like; in as much as these stuffs are supposed to be made of the hair of that animal.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The best camlets are made at Brussels.

Ld. Chesterfield.

2. Hair cloth.

Meaning the pastor shears their hoary beards,
And eases, of their hair, the loaden herds:
Their camlets warm in tents the soldier hold,
And shield the shiv'ring mariner from cold.

Dryden.

CAMLETTED.* adj. [from camlet.]

A piece of cloth of gold, fastened with a silken string, with a stamp of Arabick letters curiously gilded upon paper, and chemletted with red and blue, agreeable to the mode of Persia.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 214.

The paper becomes sleek and chemletted or veined in such sort, as it resembles agat or porphyry.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 294.

CAMERA OBSCURA.* [Latin.] An optical machine used in a darkened chamber, so that the light coming only through a double convex glass, objects exposed to daylight, and opposite to the glass, are represented inverted upon any white matter placed in the focus of the glass.

Martin.

He there saw the moral scenes of life passing in review before his mind, as exactly as the beautiful objects on his river Thames from his camera obscura.

Tyers, Hist. Rhapsody on Pope, p. 16.

That the objects of sight are all painted in the bottom of the eye, upon a membrane called the retina, pretty much in the same manner as the like objects are painted in a camera obscura, is well known to whoever has the slightest tincture of the science of optics.

A. Smith on the External Senses.

CAMERADE.* n. s. [Fr. camarade, from the Gr. καμαρα; and camera, a chamber, Lat.] One that lodges in the same chamber; a bosom companion. By corruption we now use comrade.

CAMPAIGN. † } n. s. [campaigne, French; campagna, Ital.] The word campaign was not used probably till after the restoration; for in the Life of Fuller in 1661 we find "during the campagna, and while the army continued in the field, he performed the duty of his holy function."

1. A large, open, level tract of ground, without hills.

In countries thinly inhabited, and especially in vast campains, there are few cities, besides what grow by the residence of kings.

Temple.

Those grateful groves, that shade the plain,

Where Tiber rolls majestic to the main.

And fattens, as he runs, the fair campaign.

Garth.

2. The time for which any army keeps the field, without entering into quarters.

This might have hastened his march, which would have made a fair conclusion of the campaign.

Clarendon.

An Iliad rising out of one campaign.

Addison.

To CAMPAIGN.  v. n.* [from the noun.] To serve in a campaign.

I have received the most flattering assurances from the officers, who campaigned in the late rebellion, that the military transactions have been accurately described.

Sir R. Musgrave, Hist. of the Ir. Rebellion, p. vi.

CAMPAIGNER.  n. s.* [from campaign.] He who serves throughout a campaign; thus we say of a soldier, "he is an old campaigner."

CAMPANO'LOGY.  n. s.* [Lat. campana, and Gr. λογος.] The art or science of ringing bells.

CAMPANIFORM. adj. [of campana, a bell, and forma, Lat.] A term used of flowers, which are in the shape of a bell.

Harris.

CAMPANULATE. adj. The same with campaniform.

Mortimer.

CAMPESTRIAN.  adj.* [old Fr. campestre, from the Lat. campestris.] Relating to the field; campestral.

CAMPHERE-TREE. n. s. [camphora, Lat.]

There are two sorts of this tree; one is a native of the isle of Borneo, from which the best camphire is taken, which is supposed to be a natural exsudation from the tree, produced in such places where the bark of the tree has been wounded or cut. The other sort is a native of Japan, which Dr. Kempfer describes to be a kind of bay, bearing black or purple berries, and from whence the inhabitants prepare their camphire, by making a simple decoction of the root and wood of this tree, cut into small pieces; but this sort of camphir is, in value, eighty or an hundred times less than the true Bornean camphire.

Miller.

It is oftener used for the gum of this tree.

To CAMPHIRE.  v. a.* [old Fr. camphrer.] To impregnate or wash with camphire.

Does every proud and self-affecting dame

Camphire her face for this?

Tourneur, the Revenger's Tragedy.

CAN

Wash-balls perfumed, camphired, and plain, shall restore complexions to that degree, that a country foxhunter, who uses them, shall, in a week's time, look with a courtly and affable paleness! Tatler, No. 101.

CAMPHORATE, or CAMPHORATED. † adj. [from camphora, Lat.] Impregnated with camphire; as, spirits of wine camphorated.

By shaking the saline and camphorate liquours together, we easily confounded them into one high-coloured liquor. Boyle.

CAMPING. * n. s. The act of playing at foot-ball in Norfolk and Suffolk, and perhaps in other counties. The Welsh camp is a game; and also the prize, given to the winner in any game of wrestling, running, and the like.

In our island, the exhibition of those manly sports in vogue among country people is called camping; and the enclosures for that purpose, where they wrestle and contend, are called camping closes. Bryant's Anc. Mythology.

CAMPION. n. s. [lychnis, Lat.] A plant.

CAMUS. n. s. [probably from camisa, Lat.] A thin dress, mentioned by Spenser.

And was yclad, for heat of scorching air,

All in a silken camus, lilly white,

Purled upon with many a folded plight. Spenser, F. Q.

CAN. * Often used for gan, or began, in our old poetry.

CAN. † n. s. [canne, Sax. the Dutch kan, is a quart.] A cup; generally a cup made of metal, or some other matter than earth.

I hate it as an unfill'd can. Shakespeare.

For his discourse, 'twas ever

About his business, war, or mirth, to make us

Relish a can of wine well. Beaum. and Fl. Love's Pilgrimage.

One tree, the coco, affordeth stuff for housing, clothing, shipping, meat, drink, and can. Grew.

His empty can, with ears half worn away,

Was hung on high, to boast the triumph of the day. Dryden.

To CAN. † v. n. [konnen, Dutch; Sax. cunnan; Iceland. kunna; Goth. kunnan; to know, and to be able. It is sometimes, though rarely, used alone; but is in constant use as an expression of the potential mood; as, I can do, thou canst do, I could do, thou couldst do. It has no other terminations.]

1. To be able; to have power.

In place there is licence to do good and evil, whereof the latter is a curse; for, in evil, the best condition is not to will; the second not to can. Bacon, Ess. xi.

O, there's the wonder!

Mecænas and Agrippa, who can most

With Cæsar, are his foes. Dryden.

He can away with no company, whose discourse goes beyond what claret and dissoluteness inspires. Locke.

2. It expresses the potential mood; as, I can do it.

If she can make me blest! She only can:

Empire and wealth, and all she brings beside,

Are but the train and trappings of her love. Dryden.

3. It is distinguished from may, as power from permission; I can do it; it is in my power: I may do it; it is allowed me: but, in poetry, they are confounded.

4. Can is used of the person with the verb active, where may is used; of the thing, with the verb passive; as, I can do it; it may or can be done.

To CAN. * v. a. To know; to understand. Frequent in Chaucer.

Seemeth thy flocke thy counsell can.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb. v. 77.

CAN

And can you these tongues perfectly?

Beaum. and Fl. The Coscombe.

CANAÏLLE. † n. s. [French.] The lowest people; the dregs; the lees; the offscouring of the people: a French term of reproach, Dr. Johnson says. The Italians have the same expression, "canaglia, gente vile e abietta." Dict. della Crusca.

To keep the sovereign canaïlle from intruding on the retirement of the poor king of the French. Burke.

CANAKIN. * n. s. [diminutive of can.] A small cup. And let me the canakin clink. Shakespeare, Othello.

CANA'L. † n. s. [canalis, Lat. Κανάλι, Græco-barb. an aqueduct. V. Critop. Emend. in Meursii Gloss. p. 42. old Fr. and Languedoc Dial. canal.]

1. A basin of water in a garden.

The walks and long canals reply. Pope.

2. Any tract or course of water made by art; as the canals in Holland, and the celebrated canals in this country.

The flood-compelling arch; the long canal,

Through mountains piercing, and uniting seas. Thomson, Liberty, P. v

3. [In anatomy.] A conduit or passage through which any of the juices of the body flow.

CANAL-COAL. † n. s. A fine kind of coal, dug up in England, Dr. Johnson says. The best is found near Wigan in Lancashire. As it soon lights, and emits a clear bright flame, it may be deduced perhaps from the Lat. candela, or the Welsh canwyll, a candle; or from the Sax. cene, quick, and wlan, to kindle. It is also written cannel-coal.

Even our canal-coal nearly equals the foreign jet. Woodward.

CANALICULATED. adj. [from canaliculatus, Lat.] Channelled; made like a pipe or gutter. Dict.

CANARY. † n. s. [from the Canary islands.]

1. Wine brought from the Canaries; now called sack.

I will to my honest knight Falstaff, and drink canary with him. — I think I shall drink in pipe wine first with him; I'll make him dance. Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

2. An old dance. It is known in the Canary Isles by the name of canario.

They [the inhabitants of the Canary Islands] were and are at this day delighted with a kind of dance which they use also in Spain, and in other places; and because it took original from thence, it is called the Canaries.

Transl. of Leo's Description of Africa, 1606

I have seen a medicine,

That's able to breathe life into a stone;

Quickens a rock, and make you dance canary

With spritely fire and motion. Shakespeare, All's Well, &c.

To CANARY. † v. a. A cant word, Dr. Johnson says, which seems to signify to dance; to frolick.

It is hardly a cant word, but adopted from the name of the dance, which Dr. Johnson dismisses with no other notice than that of "an old dance," and therefore probably guarded his definition of the verb with cant and seems.

Master, will you win your love with a French brawl? — How mean'st thou, brawling in French? — No, my compleat master; but to jigg off a tune at the tongue's end, canary to it with your feet, humour it with turning up your eyelids. Shakespeare, L. Labour Lost.

CANARY-BIRD. An excellent singing bird, formerly bred in the Canaries, and nowhere else, but now bred in several parts of Europe, particularly Germany.

Of singing birds, they have linnets, goldfinches, ruddocks, canary birds, blackbirds, thrushes, and divers other.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

TO CANCELL.† v. a. [cancellor, Fr. from cancellis notare, to mark with cross lines, somewhat resembling cancelli, or lattice-work.]

1. To cross a writing.

A chancellor is he, whose office is to look into, and peruse, the writings and answers of the emperor; to cancel what is written amiss, and to sign that which is well.

Jus Sigilli, (1673,) p. 8.

2. To efface; to obliterate in general.

Now welcome night, thou night so long expected,
That long day's labour doth at last defray,
And all my cares which cruel love collected,
Has summ'd in one, and cancelled for aye. Spenser, Epithal.
Know then, I here forget all former griefs,
Cancel all grudge; repeal thee home again.

Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

Thou whom avenging powers obey,

Cancel my debt, too great to pay,

Before the sad accounting day.

I pass the bills, my lords,

For cancelling your debts.

Southerne, Spartan Dame.

TO CANCEL.* v. n.

In spite of our worst enemies, our kindred,
And a rash oath that cancel'd in the making,

We will pursue our loves to the last point.

Conley.

CANCELLATED. particip. adj. [from cancel.] Cross-barred; marked with lines crossing each other.

The tail of the castor is almost bald, though the beast is very hairy; and cancellated, with some resemblance to the scales of fishes.

Grew's Museum.

CANCELLATION.† n. s. [old Fr. cancellation, "l'action de biffer les écritures ou les clauses d'un acte." Lacombe.] According to Bartolus, is an expunging or wiping out of the contents of an instrument, by two lines drawn in the manner of a cross.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

CANCER.† n. s. [cancer, Lat. cancrepe, Sax.]

1. A crabfish.

2. The sign of the summer solstice.

When now no more th' alternate Twins are fir'd,
And Cancer reddens with the solar blaze,
Short is the doubtful empire of the night.

Thomson.

3. A virulent swelling, or sore, not to be cured.

Any of these three may degenerate into a schirrus, and that schirrus into a cancer.

Wiseman.

As when a cancer on the body feeds,
And gradual death from limb to limb proceeds;
So does the chillness to each vital part,
Spread by degrees, and creeps into the heart.

Addison, Ovid.

TO CANCERATE. v. n. [from cancer.] To grow cancerous; to become a cancer.

But striking his fist upon the point of a nail in the wall, his hand cancerated, he fell into a fever, and soon after died on't.

L'Estrange, Fab.

CANCERATION. n. s. [from cancerate.] A growing cancerous.

CANCEROUS. adj. [from cancer.] Having the virulence and qualities of a cancer.

How they are to be treated when they are strumous, schirrhous, or cancerous, you may see in their proper places.

Wiseman.

CANCEROUSNESS. n. s. [from cancerous.] The state of being cancerous.

CANCERIFORM.* adj. [Lat. canceriformis.] The same as cancerous; as, a canceriform tumour.

CANCERINE. adj. [from cancer.] Having the qualities of a crab.

CANDENT. adj. [candens, Lat.] Hot; in the highest degree of heat, next to fusion.

If a wire be heated only at one end, according as that end is cooled upward or downward, it respectively acquires a verticity, as we have declared in wires totally candent.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

CANDICANT. adj. [candicans, Lat.] Growing white; whitish.

Dict.

CANDID.† adj. [candidus, Lat.]

1. White. This sense is certainly not common, as Dr. Johnson has observed, citing only Dryden.

The box receives all black: but, pour'd from thence,
The stones came candid forth, the hue of innocence. Dryden.
Ah! mild and gull-less dove,
Which dost the pure and candid dwellings love,
Canst thou in Albion still delight?
Still canst thou think it white?

Conley, Old Restor. K. Ch. II. st. 3.

2. Free from malice; not desirous to find faults; fair; open; ingenuous.

The import of the discourse will, for the most part, if there be no designed fallacy, sufficiently lead candid and intelligent readers into the true meaning of it.

Locke.

A candid judge will read each piece of wit,

With the same spirit that its author writ.

Pope.

CANDIDATE.† n. s. [candidatus, Lat. candidat, Fr. which Cotgrave nearly two hundred years since has rendered, in terms very suitable to a certain sort of candidates in modern times, "a flatterer, a soother, a smoother; one that ever makes it fair weather!" The Romans denominated the suitor or competitor candidatus, from the white gown which he was obliged to wear.]

1. A competitor; one that solicits, or proposes himself for something of advancement.

So many candidates there stand for wit,

A place at court is scarce so hard to get.

Anonymous.

One would be surprised to see so many candidates for glory.

Addison, Spect. No. 256.

2. It has generally for before the thing sought.

What could thus high thy rash ambition raise?

Art thou, fond youth, a candidate for praise?

Pope.

3. Sometimes of.

Thy firstfruits of poesy were giv'n,
To make thyself a welcome inmate there,
While yet a young probationer,
And candidate of heav'n.

Dryden.

TO CANDIDATE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To make a candidate; to render fit as a candidate.

The soldier is not expert, without passing through several perils.—The workman boils his silver, before it can be ready for burnishing. Without quarrelling with Rome, we can allow this purgatory, to purify and cleanse us, that we may be the better candidated for the court of Heaven and glory.

Fellham, Resolver, ii. 57.

CANDIDLY. adv. [from candid.] Fairly; without trick; without malice; ingenuously.

We have often desired, they would deal candidly with us; for if the matter stuck only there, we would propose, that every man should swear, that he is a member of the church of freeland.

Swift.

CANDIDNESS.† n. s. [from candid.] Ingenuity; openness of temper; purity of mind.

It [conscience] presently sees the guilt of a sinful action; and, on the other side, observes the candidness of a man's very principles, and the sincerity of his intentions.

South, Sermon. II. 454.

No man, drenched in hate, can promise to himself the candidness of an upright judge.

Fellham, Resolves, ii. 62.

TO CANDIFY. v. a. [candifico, Lat.] To make white; to whiten.

Dict.

CANDLE.† n. s. [candela, Lat. candel, Sax. candewyll, Welsh, which is supposed to be derived from cann, white, and gweyll, darkness, because it occasions darkness to be white. This, however, as well as the Lat. candela, refers us to the Lat. verb candeo, as the origin.]

1. A light made of wax or tallow, surrounding a wick of flax or cotton.

Here burns my candle out, ay, here it dies,
Which, while it lasted, gave King Henry light. Shakespeare.

We see that wax candles last longer than tallow candles, because wax is more firm and hard. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Take a child, and, setting a candle before him, you shall find his pupil to contract very much, to exclude the light, with the brightness whereof it would otherwise be dazzled. Ray.

2. Light, or luminary.

By these bless'd candles of the night,
Had you been there, I think you would have begg'd
The ring of me, to give the worthy doctor. Shakespeare.

CA'NDLEBERRY TREE. See SWEET-WILLOW; of which it is a species.

CA'NDLEHOLDER.† n. s. [from candle and hold.] He that holds the candle, Dr. Johnson says. It may be further observed, that candles were formerly borne by servants, and not placed on the table. Not attending to this circumstance, Dr. Johnson has also distinguished the candleholder, as "him who remotely assists;" when, in fact, the word in the passage which he has cited, means literally the holder of a torch or candle, as was common at the entertainments of our ancestors; which was a fashion borrowed from the French. Some think that the proverbial scoff, You are not fit to hold a candle to him, hence took its rise.

A torch for me: let wantons, light of heart,
Tickle the senseless rushes with her heels;
For I am proverb'd with a grandsire phrase,
To be a candleholder, and look on.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Juliet.

CA'NDLELIGHT.† n. s. [candellecht, Sax.]

1. The light of a candle.

In darkness, candlelight may serve to guide men's steps, which, to use in the day, were madness. Hooker, ii. § 4.

Before the day was done, her work she sped,
And never went by candlelight to bed. Dryden, Fables.

The boding owl
Steals from her private cell by night,
And flies about the candlelight. Swift.

Such as are adapted to meals, will indifferently serve for dinners or suppers, only distinguishing between daylight and candlelight. Swift.

2. The necessary candles for use.

I shall find him coals and candlelight. Molineux to Locke.

CA'NDLEMAS.† n. s. [candelmæsse, Sax.] The feast of the purification of the Blessed Virgin, which was formerly celebrated with many lights in churches.

The harvest dinners are held by every wealthy man, or, as we term it, by every good liver, between Michaelmas and Candlemas. Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

There is a general tradition in most parts of Europe, that inferreth the coldness of the succeeding winter, upon shining of the sun upon Candlemas day. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Come Candlemas nine years ago she dy'd,
And now lies bury'd by the yew-tree side. Gay.

CA'NDLESTICK.† n. s. [candelsticca, Sax.] The instrument that holds candles.

The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,
With torch-staves in their hands; and their poor jades
Lob down their heads. Shakespeare.

These countries were once christian, and members of the church, and where the golden candlesticks did stand. Bacon.

I know a friend, who has converted the essays of a man of quality, into a kind of fringe for his candlesticks. Addison.

CA'NDLESTUFF. n. s. [from candle and stuff.] Any thing of which candles may be made; kitchen stuff; grease; tallow.

By the help of oil, and wax, and other candlestuff, the flame may continue, and the wick not burn. Bacon.

CA'NDLEWASTER.† n. s. [from candle and waste.]

One that consumes candles; a spendthrift, Dr. Johnson says. Mr. Malone thinks it may mean a drunkard, onewho passes the night in drinking, and thus wastes candles; and drunk is connected with the word in the example. The word appears to have been also a contemptuous term for scholars.

Patch grief with proverbs, make misfortune drunk
With candlewasters. Shakespeare.

A whoreson book-worm, a candle-waster.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

CA'NDLES-ENDS.* n. s. [from candle and end.] A contemptuous term for scraps or fragments.

Our lives are but our marches to our graves,

How dost thou now, Lieutenant? —

Faith 'tis true, Sir,

We are but spans, and candles ends.

Baum. and Fl. Hum. Lieutenant.

CA'NDOCK. n. s. A weed that grows in rivers.

Let the pond lie dry six or twelve months, both to kill the water weeds, as water-lilies, candocks, reate, and bulrushes, and also, that as these die for want of water, so grass may grow on the pond's bottom. Walton.

CA'NDOUR. n. s. [candor, Lat.] Sweetness of temper; purity of mind; openness; ingenuousness; kindness.

He should have so much of a natural candour and sweetness, mixed with all the improvement of learning, as might convey knowledge with a sort of gentle insinuation. Watts.

To CA'NDY. v. a. [probably from candare, a word used in later times, for to whiten.]

1. To conserve with sugar, in such a manner as that the sugar lies in flakes, or breaks into spangles.

Should the poor be flatter'd?

No, let the candy'd tongue lick absurd pomp,
And crook the pregnant hinges of the knee,
Where thrift may follow fawning. Shakespeare.

They have in Turkey confections like to candied conserves, made of sugar and lemons, or sugar and citrons, or sugar and violets, and some other flowers, and mixture of amber. Bacon.

With candy'd plantanes, and the juicy pine,
On choicest melons and sweet grapes they dine. Waller.

2. To form into congelations.

Will the cold brook,
Candied with ice, cawdle thy morning toast,
To cure thy o'er-night's surfeit? Shakespeare.

3. To incrust with congelations.

Since when those frosts that winter brings,
Which candy every green,
Renew us like the treeming springs,
And we thus fresh are seen. Drayton

To CA'NDY. v. n. To grow congealed.

CA'NDY Lion's foot. [catanance, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

CA'NDY Tuff-tree.* [iberis, Lat.] A plant. Chambers.

CANE.† n. s. [canna, Lat.; canne, Fr.; κάννα and κάννη, Gr.; kaneh, Heb. the river Kanah, the brook of reeds, Josh. xvii. 9.]

1. A kind of strong reed, of which walking staffs are made; a walking staff.

Shall I to please another wine sprung mind
Lose all mine own? God hath given me a measure
Short of his cane and body; must I find
A pain in that wherein he finds a pleasure? Herbert.

The king thrust the captain from him with his cane; whereupon he took his leave, and went home. Harvey.

If the poker be out of the way, or broken, stir the fire with your master's cane. Swift.

2. The plant which yields the sugar.

This cane or reed grows plentifully both in the East and West Indies. Other reeds have their skin hard and dry, and their pulp void of juice; but the skin of the sugar cane is soft, and the spongy matter or pith it contains very juicy. It usually grows four or five feet high, and about half an inch in diameter. The stem or stalk is divided by knots a foot and a half apart. At the top it puts forth a number of long green tufted leaves, from the middle of which arise the flower and the seed. There are likewise leaves springing out from each knot; but these usually fall as the cane rises. They usually plant them in pieces cut a foot and a half below the top of the flower, and they are ordinarily ripe in ten months, though sometimes not till fifteen; at which time they are found quite full of a white succulent marrow, whence is expressed the liquor of which sugar is made. When ripe, they are cut, and carried in bundles to the mills, which consist of three wooden rollers, covered with steel plates. Chambers.

Thou hast bought me no sweet cane with money.

To what purpose cometh there to me incense from Sheba?
and the sweet cane from a far country? Isaiah, xliii. 24.
Jerem. vi. 20.

And the sweet liquor on the cane bestow,
From which prepar'd the luscious sugars flow. Blackmore.

3. A lance; a dart made of cane; whence the Spanish inego de cannas.

Abenamar, thy youth these sports has known,
Of which thy age is now spectator grown;
Judge-like thou sit'st, to praise or to arraign,
The flying skirmish of the darted cane. Dryden.

4. A reed.

Food may be afforded to bees, by small canes or troughs conveyed into their hives. Mortimer, Husbandry.

To CANE.† v. a. [from the noun.] To beat with a walking staff, or cane.

The great prince, who some years ago caned a general officer at the head of his army, disgraced him irrecoverably.

A. Smith, Theor. of Mor. Sent. i. 3.

CANICULAR. adj. [canicularis, Lat.] Belonging to the dog-star; as, canicular or dog-days.

In regard to different latitudes, unto some the canicular days are in the winter; as unto such as are under the equinoctial line; for, unto them, the dog-star riseth, when the sun is about the tropick of Cancer, which season unto them is winter. Brown, Vulg. Err.

CANICULE.* n. s. Lat. canicula, the dog-star; and figuratively, the dog-days.

We are here quite burnt up. — But among all these inconveniences, the greatest I suffer is from your departure, which is more afflicting to me than the canicule.

Addison, Letter in the Student, ii. 89.

CANI'NE.† adj. [old Fr. canin, from caninus, Lat.]

1. Having the properties of a dog.

A kind of women are made up of canine particles: these are scolds, who initiate the animals out of which they were taken, always busy and barking, and snarl at every one that comes in their way. Addison, Spect. No. 209.

2. Canine hunger, in medicine, is an appetite which cannot be satisfied.

It may occasion an exorbitant appetite of usual things, which they will take in such quantities, till they vomit them up like dogs, from whence it is called canine. Arbuthnot.

CANISTER.† n. s. [canister or canistrum, Lat.]

1. A small basket.

White lilies in full canisters they bring,
With all the glories of the purple spring. Dryden, Virgil.

2. A small vessel in which any thing, such as tea or coffee, is laid up. So in has Bret. canastell, a little vessel; low-Lat. canastellus.

CANKER.† n. s. [cancer, Lat. It seems to have the same meaning and original with cancer, but to be accidentally written with a k, when it denotes bad qualities in a less degree; or, canker might come from chancre, Fr. and cancer from the Latin. The Sax. cancepe or cancpe is both the animal and the disease.]

1. A worm that preys upon, and destroys fruits.

And loathful idleness he doth detest,
The canker worm of every gentle breast. Spenser, F. Q.
That which the locust hath lost, hath the canker worm eaten. Joel, i. 4.

Yet writers say, as in the sweetest bud

The eating canker dwells; so eating love

Inhabits in the finest wits of all. Shakespeare.

A huffing, shining, flatt'ring, cringing coward,

A canker worm of peace, was rais'd above him. Otway.

2. A fly that preys upon fruits.

There be of flies, caterpillars, canker flies, and bear flies. Walton's Angler.

3. Any thing that corrupts or consumes. In the north of England, canker is the word for rust.

It is the canker and ruin of many men's estates, which, in process of time, breeds a publick poverty. Bacon.

Sacrilege may prove an eating canker, and a consuming moth, in the estate that we leave them. Atterbury.

No longer live the cankers of my court;

All to your several states with speed resort;

Waste in wild riot what your land allows,

There ply the early feast, and late carouse. Pope.

4. A kind of wild worthless rose; the dogrose.

To put down Richard, that sweet lovely rose,
And plant this thorn, this canker Bolingbroke. Shakespeare.

Draw a cherry with the leaf, the shaft of a steeple, a single or canker rose. Peacham.

5. An eating or corroding humour.

I am not glad, that such a sore of time
Should seek a plaister by a contemn'd revolt,
And heal th' inveterate canker of one wound,
By making many. Shakespeare.

6. Corrosion; virulence.

As with age his body uglier grows,
So his mind with cankers. Shakespeare.

7. A disease in trees.

The calf, the wind-shock, and the knot,
The canker, scab, scurf, sap and rot. Evelyn.

8. A poisonous fungus, resembling a mushroom.

Gloucestershire. Grose.

To CANKER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To grow corrupt; implying something venomous and malignant.

That cunning architect of canker'd guile,
Whom princes late displeasure left in bands,
For falsed letters, and suborned wile. Spenser, F. Q.

I will lift the down from Mortimer

As high 't' th' air as this unthankful king,

As this ingrate and canker'd Bolingbroke. Shakespeare.

Or what the cross dire looking planet smites,

Or hurtful worm with canker'd venom bites. Milton, Arcades.

To some new clime, or to thy native sky,

Oh! friendless and forsaken virtue, fly:

The Indian air is deadly to thee grown;

Deceit and canker'd malice rule thy throne. Dryden, Aurengz.

Let envious jealousy, and canker'd spite
Produce my actions to severest light,

And tax my open day, or secret night. Prior.

2. To decay by some corrosive or destructive principle.
Silvering will sully and canker more than gilding; which, if it might be corrected with a little mixture of gold, will be profitable. Bacon, Phys. Rem.

To CANKER.† v. a.

1. To corrupt; to corrode.

Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. St. James, v. 3.

Restore to God his due in tithe and time:

A tithe purloin'd, cankers the whole estate. Herbert.

2. To infect; to pollute.

An honest man will enjoy himself better in a moderate fortune, that is gained with honour and reputation, than in an overgrown estate, that is cankered with the acquisitions of rapine and exaction. Addison, Spect. No. 469.

CANKERBIT. particip. adj. [from canker and bit.]

Bitten with an envenomed tooth.

Know thy shame is lost;

By treason's tooth baregnawn and cankerbit. Shakespeare.

CANKERED.* adj. [old Fr. cantre, "un villain avare, sordidus," Lacombe. In the north of England, a cankered fellow is a cross, ill-conditioned person. Ray. Crabbed; uncourteous; uncivil.

Therein a cankered crabbed carle does dwell,

That has no skill of court, nor courtesie.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. ix. 3.

CANKEREDLY.* adv. [from cankered.] Crossly; adversely.

Our wealth through him waxt many times the worse,

So cankardly he had our kin in hate. Mir. for Mag. p. 401.

CANKERLIKE.* adj. [from canker and like.] Destructive as a canker.

Above his cedars top it high doth shoot,

And canker-like devours it to the root.

Mir. for Mag. p. 704.

CANKEROUS.* adj. [from canker.] Corroding like a canker.

Another species of tyrannick rule,

Unknown before, whose cankorous shackles seiz'd

The envenom'd soul. Thomson, Liberty, P. iv.

CANKERY.* adj. [from canker.] Rusty.

It [the MS.] had the plain mark of age, the ink being turned brown and cankry.

Wogan, in Burton's Genuineness of Ld. Clarendon's Hist. p. 140.

CANNABINE. adj. [cannabinus, Lat.] Hempen. Dict.

CANNIBAL.† n. s. [probably from the Lat. canis, a dog; Fr. "appetit de chien," a most unsatiate appetite, Cotgrave; and the modern chien is used for one of that kind.] An anthropophagite; a man-eater.

The cannibals themselves eat no man's flesh, of those that die of themselves, but of such as are slain. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

They were little better than cannibals, who do hunt one another; and he that hath most strength and swiftness, doth eat and devour all his fellows. Davies, on Ireland.

It was my hint to speak,

Of the cannibals that each other eat;

The anthropophagi.

Shakespeare.

The captive cannibal, oppress'd with chains,
Yet braves his foes, reviles, provokes, disdains;

Of nature fierce, untameable, and proud;

He bids defiance to the gaping croud;

And spent at last, and speechless as he lies,

With fiery glances mocks their rage, and dies. Granville.

If an eleventh commandment had been given, Thou shalt not eat human flesh; would not these cannibals have esteemed it more difficult than all the rest? Bentley.

CANNIBALISM.* n. s. [from cannibal.] The character or conduct of a cannibal.

Unless a warm opposition to the spirit of levelling, to the spirit of impiety, to the spirit of proscription, plunder, murder, and cannibalism, be adverse to the true principles of freedom. Burke.

CANNIBALLY. adv. [from cannibal.] In the manner of a cannibal.

Before Corioli, he scotcht him and notcht him like a carbinado. — Had he been cannibally given, he might have broiled, and eaten him too. Shakespeare.

CANNIPERS. n. s. [corrupted from callipers; which see.]

The square is taken by a pair of cannipers, or two rulers clapped to the side of a tree, measuring the distance between them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CANNON. n. s. [cannon, Fr. from canna, Lat. a pipe, meaning a large tube. See CANE.]

1. A great gun for battery.

2. A gun larger than can be managed by the hand.

They are of so many sizes, that they decrease in the bore from a ball of forty-eight pounds to a ball of five ounces.

As cannons overcharg'd with double cracks,

So they redoubled strokes upon the foe.

Shakespeare.

He had left all the cannon he had taken; and now he sent all his great cannon to a garrison. Clarendon.

The making, or price, of these gunpowder instruments, is extremely expensive, as may be easily judged by the weight of their materials; a whole cannon weighing commonly eight thousand pounds; a half cannon, five thousand; a culverin, four thousand, five hundred; a demi-culverin, three thousand; which, whether it be in iron or brass, must needs be very costly. Willkins, Math. Magic.

CANNON-BALL.

CANNON-BULLET.

CANNON-SHOT.

He reckons those for wounds that are made by bullets, although it be a cannon-shot. Wiseman's Surgery.

Let a cannon-bullet pass through a room, it must strike successively the two sides of the room. Locke.

CANNON-PROOF.* n. s. [from cannon and proof.]

Proof against cannon; safety.

If I might stand still in cannon-proof, and have fame fall upon me, I would refuse it.

Beaumont and Fl. King and no King.

CANNONING.* n. s. [from cannon.] The noise, as it were, of a cannon.

Nay, the loud cannoning of thunderbolts,

Screeking of wolves, howling of tortur'd ghosts,

Pursue thee still, and fill thy amazed ears

With cold astonishment and horrid fears.

Brewer's Lingua, i. 1.

To CANNONADE. v. n. [from cannon.] To play

the great guns: to batter or attack with great guns.

Both armies cannonaded all the ensuing day.

Tatler, No. 63.

To CANNONADE. v. a. To fire upon with cannon.

CANNONEER. n. s. [from cannon.] The engineer that manages the cannon.

Give me the cups:

And let the kettle to the trumpets speak,

The trumpets to the cannoneer without,

The cannons to the heav'ns, the heav'ns to earth.

Shakespeare.

* A third was a most excellent cannoneer, whose good skill did much endanger the forces of the king. Hayward.

To CANNONEER.* v. a. [from the noun.] To fire upon with cannon.

Browne, Brit. Past. B. i. S. 2.

They have abundance of monoxyls or cannows, which pass through narrow channels: with these they carry all their goods to and from the town.

Randolph, State of the Morea, (1686.) p. 15.

In a war against Semiramis, they had four thousand monoxyla, or cannows, of one piece of timber. Arbuthnot on Coins.

CANON.† n. s. [Gr. kanon; Lat. canon; Sax. caunon.]

1. A rule; a law.

The truth is, they are rules and canons of that law, which is written in all men's hearts; the church had for ever, no less than now, stood bound to observe them, whether the apostle had mentioned them, or no. Hooker, iii. § 4.

His books are almost the very canon to judge both doctrine and discipline by. Hooker, Ecc. Pol. Pref.

Religious canons, civil laws are cruel,
Then what should war be? Shakespeare.

Canons in logic are such as these: every part of a division, singly taken, must contain less than the whole; and a definition must be peculiar and proper to the thing defined. Watts.

2. The laws made by ecclesiastical councils.

Canon law is that law, which is made and ordained in a general council, or provincial synod of the church. Ayliffe.

These were looked on as lapsed persons, and great severities of penance were prescribed them, by the canons of Ancyra.

Stillingfleet.

3. The books of Holy Scripture; or the great rule.

Canon also denotes those books of Scripture, which are received as inspired and canonical, to distinguish them from other profane, apocryphal, or disputed books. Thus we say, that Genesis is part of the sacred canon of the Scripture.

Ayliffe.

4. A dignitary in cathedral churches. [Sax. canonias, canons.] Canons [were] so called from their having their shares out of a common stock, canon among the Romans signifying a certain payment. Stillingfleet, Ecc. Cases, vol. ii. p. 561.

For deans and canons, or prebends of cathedral churches, they were of great use in the church; they were to be of counsel with the bishop for his revenue, and for his government in causes ecclesiastical.

Bacon.

Swift much admires the place and air,
And longs to be a canon there.

A canon! that's a place too mean;

No, doctor, you shall be a dean.

Two dozen canons round your stall,

And you the tyrant o'er them all.

Swift.

5. Canons Regular. Such as are placed in monasteries.

Ayliffe.

6. Canons Secular. Such as were placed in collegiate churches. Priests were called secular; and such as led a monastick life, regular. And so canons were both regular and secular.

Weever's Fun. Mon.

7. [Among chirurgeons.] An instrument used in sewing up wounds.

Milton, Tetrachordon.

CANONIZATION.† n. s. [canonisation, Fr.] The act of declaring any man a saint; the state of being sainted.

He that could call Heaven canamia, and whose canonization the cardinals thought fit to be talked of in his sickness.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 278.

Since the examination of Epicurus his late saintship, or canonization, tending to the undermining of all piety and godliness; our chief business hath been, by sundry instances rationally discussed, to rectify the incredulity of many.

M. Casaubon, Of Credulity, &c. p. 294.

The persuasion of Romanists is, that all such souls as deserve their canonization at Rome, go up directly to heaven, &c.

Brevint, Saul and Samiel at Endor, p. 71.

It is very suspicious, that the interests of particular families, or churches, have too great a sway in canonizations.

Addison on Italy.

To CANONIZE.† v. a. [Fr. canonizer, from canon, to put into the canon, or rule for observing festivals.] To declare any man a saint.

The king, desirous to bring into the house of Lancaster celestial honour, became suitor to pope Julius, to canonize king Henry VI. for a saint.

Bacon, K. Hen. VII.

By those hymns all shall approve

Us canoniz'd for love.

Donne's Poems, p. 10.

They have a pope too, who hath the chief care of religion, and of canonizing whom he thinks fit, and thence have the honour of saints.

Stallingfleet.

CANONRY. } n. s. [from canon.] An ecclesiastical

CANOPIED.† adj. [from canopy.] Covered with a canopy.

Her eyes, like marigolds, had sheath'd their light,
And canopied in darkness, sweetly lay,
Till they might open to adorn the day.

Shakspeare, Rape of Lucrece.

I sat me down to watch upon a bank,
With ivy canopied, and interwove
With flaunting honeysuckle.

Milton, Comus.

CANOPY.† n. s. [Lat. canopeum, or conopeum; Gr. καλυπτεον, a net "that hangeth about beds to keep away gnats;" as Barret, in his old dictionary rightly defines this word; "sometimes," he adds, "a tent or pavilion; and sometimes for a testern to hang over a bed." It is from καλυψ, a gnat or fly. Varro uses conopeum for a bed or couch, De Re Rust. Our translators of the Apocrypha employ the word in its original sense.] A covering of state over or round a throne or bed; a covering spread over the head.

She is there brought unto a paled green,

And plac'd under a stately canopy,

The warlike feats of both those knights to see. Spenser, F. Q.

Now spread the night her spangled canopy,

And summon'd every restless eye to sleep.

Fairfax.

She smote twice upon his neck with all her might, and she took away his head from him; and tumbled his body down from the bed, and pulled down the canopy from the pillars.

Judith, xiii. 9.

Nor will the raging fever's fire abate,
With golden canopies, and beds of state.

Dryden.

To CANOPY.† v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with a canopy. Dr. Johnson cites only Dryden, who has literally copied an elder poet.

When lofty trees I see barren of leaves,

At from heat did canopy the herd.

Shakspeare, Sonnet.

And there large branches did display,

To canopy the place.

Drayton, Quest of Cynthia.

The birch, the myrtle, and the bay,

Like friends did all embrace;

And their large branches did display,

To canopy the place.

Dryden.

CANO'ROUSNESS.* n. s. [from canorous.] Musicalness.

Scott.

CANT.† n. s. [probably from cantus, Lat. implying the odd tone of voice used by vagrants; but imagined by some to be corrupted from quaint. Or it may be from the Gael. caint, discourse; canteach, full of talk. But the old Fr. cant is "chant, action de chanter." V. Roquefort, Gloss.]

1. A corrupt dialect used by beggars and vagabonds.
2. A particular form of speaking peculiar to some certain class or body of men.

I write not always in the proper terms of navigation, land service, or in the cant of any profession.

Dryden.

If we would trace out the original of that flagrant and avowed impiety, which has prevailed among us for some years, we should find, that it owes its rise to that cant and hypocrisy, which had taken possession of the people's minds in the times of the great rebellion.

Addison, Freeholder, No. 37.

Astrologers, with an old paltry cant, and a few pot-hooks for planets, to amuse the vulgar, have too long been suffered to abuse the world.

Swift, Predictions for the Year 1701.

A few general rules, with a certain cant of words, has sometimes set up an illiterate heavy writer, for a most judicious and formidable critick.

Addison, Spectator, No. 291.

3. A whining pretension to goodness, in formal and affected terms.

Of promise prodigal, while power you want,

And preaching in the self-denying cant.

Dryden, Aurengz.

He who should be present at all their long cant, would shew a greater ability in watching, than ever they could pretend to in praying, if he could forbear sleeping, having so strong a provocation to it, and so fair an excuse for it.

South, Sermon, ii. 160.

4. Barbarous jargon.

The affectation of some late authors, to introduce and multiply cant words, is the most ruinous corruption in any language.

Swift.

5. Auction. [It might be supposed to be from the old Fr. cant, combien; Lat. quantum, V. Roquefort, Gloss. But the Italian incanto is literally an auktion; "vendere all' incanto," being as common as our phrase to be sold by auction; though it means that the sale is proclaimed by sound of trumpet. See Vocab. Della Crusca, in V. Incantare.]

Numbers of these tenants, or their descendants, are now offering to sell their leases by cant, even those which were for lives.

Swift.

CANT.* n. s. [kant, Dutch. See CANTLE.] An angle; a corner; a niche. In Kent, the corner of a field is termed a cant: in Pembrokeshire, a piece of cheese is so called.

The first and principal person in the temple was Peace; she was placed aloft in a cant.

B. Jonson, Coron. Entertainment.

To CANT. v. n. [from the noun.] To talk in the jargon of particular professions, or in any kind of formal, affected language, or with a peculiar and studied tone of voice.

Men cant about materia and forma; hunt chimeras by rules of art, or dress up ignorance in words of bulk or sound, which may stop up the mouth of enquiry.

Glanville, Scerp. Scient.

That uncouth affected garb of speech, or canting language rather, if I may so call it, which they have of late taken up, is the signal distinction and characteristic note of that, which, in that their new language, they call the godly party.

C A N

Bp. Sanderson.

The busy, subtle serpents of the law,
Did first my mind from true obedience draw;
While I did limits to the king prescribe,
And took for oracles that canting tribe.

Roscommon.

Unskill'd in schemes by planets to foreshow,
Like canting rascals, how the wars will go.

Dryden, Jun.

To CANT.* v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To sell by auction.

Is it not the general method of landlords to wait the expiration of a lease, and then cant their land to the highest bidder?
Swift, against the Power of Bishops.

2. To bid a price at an auction.

When two monks were outvying each other in canting the price of an abbey, he [William Rufus] observed a third at some distance, who said never a word: the king demanded why he would not offer; the monk said, he was poor; and besides, would give nothing if he were ever so rich: the king replied, then you are the fittest person to have it, and immediately gave it him.
Swift, Hist. of Eng. Reign of W. II.

CANTATA.* n. s. [Ital.] A song, intermixed with recitatives and airs.

CANTE'EN.* n. s. In military language, a vessel of tin, [and sometimes of wood,] in the form of square bottles, used for carrying liquours to supply soldiers in camp.

A very canter, sir, one that maunds

Upon the pad.

B. Jonson, Staple of News.

Oh 'twill be

An excellent age of crotchets, and of canters.

Beaumont and Fl. The Coronation.

CA'NTER.* n. s. An abbreviation of Canterbury. See CANTERBURY GALLOP; in the definition of which, Dr. Johnson uses this substantive; and he is confirmed in the derivation by a passage in Sampson's Fair Maid of Clifton, (1633) where he, who personates the hobby horse, speaks of his smooth ambles and Canterbury paces.

To CA'NTER.* v. n. [from the noun.] To gallop easily or gently. Now, a common expression; as, the horse canters in a fine style.

CANTERBURY BELLS. See BELFLOWER.

CANTERBURY GALLOP. [In horsemanship.] The hand gallop of an ambling horse, commonly called a canter; said to be derived from the pilgrims riding to Canterbury on easy ambling horses.

CANTERBURY TALE.* n. s. An expression denoting any fabulous or overwrought narrative, adopted from the Canterbury Tales of Chaucer.

CANTHARIDES.* n. s. plural. [Fr. cantharide; Gr. κάνθαρις, dimin. of κάνθαρος, a beetle or chafer.] Spanish flies; used to raise blisters.

The flies, cantharides, are bred of a worm, or caterpillar, but peculiar to certain fruit trees; as are the fig tree, the pine tree, and the wild brier; all which bear sweet fruit, and fruit that hath a kind of secret biting or sharpness: for the fig hath a milk in it that is sweet and corrosive; the pine apple hath a kernel that is strong and absterive.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

CANTHUS.* n. s. [Latin.] The corner of the eye.

The internal is called the greater, the external the lesser canthus.

CA'NTICLE.* n. s. [Sax. cantic, from the Lat. canto.]

1. A song; used generally for a song in scripture. Bullokar calls it a sonnet.

This right of estate, in some nations, is yet more significantly expressed by Moses in his canticles, in the person of God to the Jews.
Bacon, Holy War.

2. A division of a poem; a canto.

The end whereof, and dangerous event,

Shall for another canticle be spared. Spenser, F. Q. iv. vi. 46.

CANTIL'VERS.* n. s. Pieces of wood framed into the front or other sides of an house, to sustain the moulding and eaves over it. Moxon's Mechan. Exercises.

CA'NTINGLY.* adv. [from cant.] In a canting manner.

I dread nothing more than the false zeal of my friends, in a suffering hour, as he [Whitfield] cantingly expresses it.

Trial of Mr. Whitfield's Spirit, (1740,) p. 40.

CA'NTION.* n. s. [cantio, Lat.] Song, verses. Not now in use.

In the eighth eclogue the same person was brought in singing a cantion of Colin's making.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. Gloss.

CA'NTLE.* n. s. [kant, Dut. a corner; eschantillon, Fr. a piece. So far Dr. Johnson. The Teut. or Dutch kanteel, from kant, must be also noticed; and the Fr. chantel, a fragment, a piece of any thing; from the Lat. quantulum. The commentators on the passage in Shakespeare, which Dr. Johnson has cited as the only instance of this word, have derived cantle from the Fr. canton, and the Ital. canto, a corner. Cantle is one of our oldest words; signifying not merely a corner, but a portion of any thing; as a cantle or cantel of bread, cheese, and the like. Chaucer has "no part ne cantel of a thing." A fragment; a portion; a corner or piece of any thing.

She brought her fees,

A cantel of Essex cheese.

Skelton's Poems, p. 135.

Not these cantels and morsels of scripture, warbled—to give pleasure unto the ears. Harmar, Tr. of B. za's Scrm. p. 267.

See how this river comes, me cranking in,
And cuts me from the best of all my land,
A huge halfmoon, a monstrous cantle out.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Do you remember

The cantell of immortal cheese ye carried with ye?

Beaumont and Fl. Queen of Corinth.

His robe of state is a scarlet mantle,
With eleven king's beards bordered about,
And there is room left yet in a kantle,
For thine to stand, to make the twelfth out.

Enderbie's Comb. Triumph. p. 157.

To CA'NTLE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To cut in pieces; to divide.

That this vast globe terrestrial should be cantled.

Decker's Whore of Babylon, 1607.

For four times talking, if one piece thou take,

That must be cantled, and the judge go snack. Dryden, Jun.

CA'NTLET.* n. s. [from cantle.] A piece; a fragment.

Nor shield, nor armour can their force oppose;

Huge cantlets of his buckler strew the ground,
And no defence in his bor'd arms is found.

Dryden.

CA'NTO.* n. s. [Ital.]

1. A book, or section, of a poem. Dr. Johnson cites a passage, in proof of this definition, from Shakespeare, where the real word is canton; which was common, in Shakespeare's time, for canto. The cantos of the poems by Spenser and Butler must be in the recollection of most men.

2. The treble part of a song or musical composition.

C A N

CANTON.† n. s. [old Fr. cantoin, quanton, and then canton; from the Lat. quantum. Cotgrave defines canton, “a corner or cross-way in a street; also a hundred or canton, a precinct.”]

1. A small parcel or division of land.

Only that little canton of land, called the English pale, containing four small shires, did maintain a bordering war with the Irish, and retain the form of English government. Davies.

2. A small community, or clan.

The same is the case of rovers by land; such, as yet, are some cantons in Arabia, and some petty kings of the mountains, adjacent to straits and ways. Bacon, Holy War.

3. In heraldry, the canton is that which occupies only a corner of the shield.

To CANTON.† v. a. [Fr. cantonner.] To divide into little parts. See CANTONMENT.

Families shall quit all subjection to him, and canton his empire into less governments for themselves. Locke.

It would certainly be for the good of mankind, to have all the mighty empires and monarchies of the world *canton*ed out into petty states and principalities. Addison on Italy.

The late king of Spain, reckoning it an indignity to have his territories *canton*ed out into parcels by other princes, during his own life, and without his consent, rather chose to bequeath the monarchy entire to a younger son of France. Swift.

They canton out to themselves a little province in the intellectual world, where they fancy the light shines, and all the rest is in darkness. Watts on the Mind.

To CANTONIZE. v. a. [from canton.] To parcel out into small divisions.

Thus was all Ireland cantonized among ten person of the English nation. Davies on Ireland.

The whole forest was in a manner cantonized among: a very few in number, of whom some had regal rights. Howell.

CANTONMENT.* n. s. [Fr.] That distinct situation, which soldiers occupy, when quartered in different parts of a town; and to canton a town, is to divide it for such purpose.

There were no cities, no towns, no places of cantonment for soldiers. Burke, Abridg. of Eng. Hist.

CANTRED. n. s. The same in Wales as an hundred in England. For cantref, in the British language, signifieth an hundred. Cowel.

The king regrants to him all that province, reserving only the city of Dublin, and the cantreds next adjoining, with the maritime towns. Davies on Ireland.

CANTY.* adj. In the north of England, is cheerful, talkative. Grose. Perhaps from the Gael. canteuch. See CANT.

CANVASS.† n. s. [canvas, Fr. cannabis, Lat. hemp.]

1. A kind of linen cloth woven for several uses, as sails, painting cloths, tents.

The master commanded forthwith to set on all the canvass they could, and fly homeward. Sidney.

And eke the pens that did his pinions bind,
Were like main yards with flying canvass liu'd. Spenser, F. Q.

Their canvass castles up they quickly rear,
And build a city in an hour's space. Fairfax.

Where-e'er thy navy spreads her canvass wings,
Homage to thee, and peace to all she brings. Waller.

With such kind passion hastes the prince to fight,
And spreads his flying canvass to the sound;

Him whom no danger, were he there, could fright;
Now absent, every little noise can wound. Dryden.

Thou, Kneller, long with noble pride,
The foremost of thy art, hast vy'd

With nature in a generous strife,
And touch'd the canvass into life. Addison.

2. The act of sifting voices, or trying them previously to the decisive act of voting: [from canvass, as it signifies a sieve.]

C A P

There be that can pack cards, and yet cannot play well: so there are some that are good in canvasses and factions, that are otherwise weak men. Bacon, Ess. xxii.

But why shouldst thou take thy neglect, thy canvas so to heart? It may be thou art not fit.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 357.

I deem it worthy the canvass and discussion of sober and considerate men. More, Pre-exist. of the Soul, Pref.

To CANVASS.† v. a. [Skinner derives it from canabasser, Fr. to beat hemp; which being a very laborious employment, it is used to signify, to search diligently into. This is a verb in our language of much higher authority than Woodward or L'Estrange, whom Dr. Johnson cites. Barret, in his old dictionary, "has canvassed, much talked of;" and the word in Shakspeare implies to examine narrowly. So Cotgrave renders canabasser, "to canvass, or curiously to examine, or sift out, the depth of the matter.]

1. To sift; to examine: from canvass, a straining cloth.

Thou, that contriv'dst to murder our dead lord;

Thou, that giv'st whores indulgences to sin:

I'll canvass thee in thy broad cardinal's hat,

If thou proceed in this thy insolence.

Shakspeare, K. Hen. VI. P. I.

I have made careful search on all hands, and canvassed the matter with all possible diligence. Woodward.

2. To debate; to discuss.

The curs discovered a raw hide in the bottom of a river, and laid their heads together how to come at it: they canvassed the matter one way and t'other, and concluded, that the way to get it, was to drink their way to it. L'Estrange.

To CANVASS. v. n. To solicit; to try votes previously to the decisive act.

Elizabeth being to resolve upon an officer, and being by some that canvassed for others, put in some doubt of that person she meant to advance, said, she was like one with a lantern seeking a man. Bacon.

This crime of canvassing, or soliciting for church preferment, is, by the canon law, called simony Ayliffe's Parergon.

CANVASS-CLIMBER.* n. s. [from canvass and climb.]

He who climbs the mast to furl or unfurl the sail or canvass.

A sea

That almost burst the deck, and from the ladder-tackle

Wash'd off a canvass-climber.

Shakspeare, Pericles.

CANVASSER.* n. s. [from canvass.] He who solicits favour or a vote.

As real publick counsellors, not as the canvassers at a perpetual election. Burke on the Duration of Parliaments.

CANY. adj. [from cane.]

1. Full of canes.

2. Consisting of canes.

But in his way lights on the barren plains

Of Sericana, where Chineses drive,

With sails and wind, their cany waggons light. Milton, P. L.

Vecchi was most pleasing of all others, for his conceit and variety, as well his madrigals as canzonets. Pracham.

CAP.† n. s. [cap, Welsh; cappe, Sax. cappe, Germ. cappe, Fr. cappa, Ital. capa, Span. kappe, Dan. and Dutch; caput, the head, Latin.]

1. The garment that covers the head.

Here is the cap your worship did bespeak.—

Why, this was moulded on a porringer,

A velvet dish.

Shakspeare, Taming the Shrew.

I have ever held my cap off to thy fortune.—

—Thou hast serv'd me with much faith.

Shakspeare.

First, lolling, sloth in woollen cap,

Taking her after-dinner nap.

Swift.

The cap, the whip, the masculine attire,

For which they roughen to the sense.

Thomson, Autumn.

2. The ensign of the cardinalate.
Henry the Fifth did sometimes prophesy,
If once he came to be a cardinal,
He'd make his cap coequal with the crown.
Shakspeare, Henry VI.

Thou art the cap of all the fools alive. Shakspeare, Timon.
4. A reverence made by uncovering the head.
They more and less, came in with cap and knee,
Met him in boroughs, cities, villages. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
Should the want of a cap or a cringe so mortally discompose him, as we find afterwards it did. L'Estrange.
5. A vessel made like a cap.
It is observed, that a barrel or cap, whose cavity will contain eight cubical feet of air, will not serve a diver above a quarter of an hour. Wilkins.
6. Cap of a great gun. A piece of lead laid over the touch-hole, to preserve the prime.
7. Cap of maintenance. One of the regalia carried before the king at the coronation.
8. To set a man's cap. This was a phrase of elder times, meaning to make a fool of a man.
This maniple settle their aller cappe.
Chaucer, Prol. Cant. Tales.
9. To set her cap at him. This is a phrase of modern times, signifying that a woman considers herself worthy the notice of a particular person.
To CAP. † v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To cover on the top.
The bones next the joint are capped with a smooth carti-laginous substance, serving both to strength and motion. DeVries.
2. To deprive of the cap.
If one, by another occasion, take any thing from another, as boys sometimes use to cap one another, the same is straight felony. Spenser on Ireland.
3. To cap verses. To name alternately verses beginning with a particular letter; to name in opposition or emulation; to name alternately in contest. To cap, is, in the Cumberland dialect, to surpass, to overcome in argument. Capping verses, is used by Dryden, though Dr. Johnson has not noticed it.
Now I have him under girdle, I'll cap verses with him to the end of the chapter. Dryden, Amphitryon.
Where Henderson, and th' other masses,
Were sent to cap texts, and put cases. Mudibras.
Sure it is a pitiful pretence to ingenuity, that can be thus kept up, there being little need of any other faculty but memory, to be able to cap texts. Government of the Tongue.
There is an author of ours, whom I would desire him to read, before he ventures at capping characters. Atterbury.
- To CAP.* v. n.* To uncover the head, by way of salutation or respect; a word still retained in our universities.
Three great ones of the city,
In personal suit to make me his lieutenant,
Oft capp'd to him. Shakspeare, Othello.
Still capping, cringing, applauding;—waiting at men's doors with all assiduity. Barton, Anat. of Mel. p. 112.
- CAP à pié.* } [cap à pié, Fr.] From head to foot; all CAP à pié. } over.
A figure like your father,
Arm'd at all points exactly, cap à pié,
Appears before them, and, with solemn march,
Goes slow and stately by them. Shakspeare, Hamlet.
There for the two contending knights he sent,
Arm'd cap à pié, with reverence low they bent. Dryden, Fables.
A woodlouse,
That folds up itself in itself for a house,
As round as a ball, without head, without tail,
Inclos'd cap à pié in a strong coat of mail. Swift.

CAP-PAPER. A sort of coarse brownish paper. So called from being formed into a kind of cap to hold commodities.

Having, for trial sake, filtered it through cap-paper, there remained in the filtre a powder. Boyle.

CAPABILITY. † n. s. [from capable.] Capacity; the quality of being capable.

Sure he that made us with such large discourse,
Looking before, and after, gave us not
That capability and godlike reason
To rust in us unuse'd. Shakspeare.

There being a possibility of creating things after sundry and manifold manners, nothing was yet determined, but this vast capability of things was unsettled, fluid, and of itself undeterminable as water: But the Spirit of God, who was the vehicle of the Eternal Wisdom,—having hovered awhile over all the capacities of this fluid possibility,—forthwith settled upon what was most perfect and exact. Moré, Conject. Cabalist. p. 23.

CAPABLE. adj. [capable, Fr.]

1. Sufficient to contain; sufficiently capacious.

When we consider so much of that space, as is equal to, or capable to receive a body of any assigned dimensions. Locke.

2. Endued with powers equal to any particular thing.

To say, that the more capable, or the better deserver, hath such right to govern, as he may compulsorily bring under the less worthy, is idle. Bacon.

When you hear any person give his judgement, consider with yourself whether he be a capable judge. Watts.

3. Intelligent; able to understand.

Look you, how pale he glares;
His form and cause conjoined, preaching to stones,
Would make them capable. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

4. Intellectually capacious; able to receive.

I am much bound to God, that he hath endued you with one capable of the best instructions. Dugby.

5. Susceptible.

The soul, immortal substance, to remain,
Conscious of joy, and capable of pain. Prior.

6. Qualified for; without any natural impediment.

There is no man that believes the goodness of God, but must be inclined to think, that he hath made some things for as long a duration as they are capable of. Tillotson.

7. Qualified for; without legal impediment.

Of my land,
Loyal and natural boy! I'll work the means
To make thee capable. Shakspeare, R. Lear.

8. It has the particle of before a noun.

What secret springs their eager passions move,
How capable of death for injur'd love! Dryden, Virgil.

9. Hollow. This sense is not now in use.

Lean but upon a rush,
The cicatrice, and capable impressure,
Thy palm some moments keeps. Shakspeare, As you Like it.

CAPABLENESS. † n. s. [from capable.] The quality or state of being capable; knowledge; understanding;
power of mind.

The efficacy of these does not depend upon the mere opus operatum; but upon the capableness of the subject, and the qualifications of the person they are applied to.

Killingbeck's Sermon. p. 322.

To CAPACITY. v. a.* [Lat. capax and facio.] To qualify; to make one capable.

Wisdom capacities us to enjoy pleasantly and innocently all those good things the divine goodness hath provided for and consigned to us. Barrow, Sermon. i. 5.

CAPACIOUS. adj. [capax, Lat.]

1. Wide; large; able to hold much.

Beneath th' incessant weeping of those drains,
I see the rocky Siphons stretch'd immense,
The mighty reservoirs of harden'd chalk,
Or stiff compacted clay, capacious found. Thomson, Autumn.

2. Extensive; equal to much knowledge, or great design.

C A P

There are some persons of a good genius, and a capacious mind, who write and speak very obscurely. Watts.

CAPA'CIOUSLY.* adv. [from capacious.] In a wide or capacious manner.

CAPA'CIOUSNESS. n. s. [from capacious.] The power of holding or receiving; largeness.

A concave measure, of known and denominate capacity, serves to measure the capaciousness of any other vessel. In like manner, to a given weight, the weight of all other bodies may be reduced, and so found out. Holler on Time.

CAPACITA'TION.* n. s. [from the verb.] Capability.

To CAPA'CITATE. v. a. [from capacity.] To make capable; to enable; to qualify.

By this instruction we may be capacitated to observe those errors. Dryden.

These sort of men were sycophants only, and were endued with arts of life, to capacitate them for the conversation of the rich and great. Talfer, No. 56.

CAPA'CITY. n. s. [capacité, Fr.]

1. The power of holding or containing any thing.

Had our palace the capacity
To camp this host, we would all sup together. Shakspeare.

Notwithstanding thy capacity
Receiveth as the sea, nought enters there,
Of what validity and pitch so'er,
But falls into abatement and low price.

Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

For they that most and greatest things embrace,
Enlarge thereby their mind's capacity,
As streams enlarg'd, enlarge the channel's space. Davies.
Space, considered in length, breadth, and thickness, I think,
may be called capacity. Locke.

2. Room; space.

There remained, in the capacity of the exhausted cylinder, store of little rooms, or spaces, empty or devoid of air. Boyle.

3. The force or power of the mind.

No intellectual creature is able, by capacity, to do that which nature doth without capacity and knowledge.

Hooker, i. § 3.

In spiritual natures, so much as there is of desire, so much there is also of capacity to receive. I do not say, there is always a capacity to receive the very thing they desire; for that may be impossible. South.

An heroick poem requires the accomplishment of some extraordinary undertaking; which requires the duty of a soldier, and the capacity and prudence of a general.

Dryden, Juv. Dedication.

4. Power; ability.

Since the world's wide frame does not include
A cause with such capacities endu'd,
Some other cause o'er nature must preside. Blackmore.

5. State; condition; character.

A miraculous revolution, reducing many from the head of a triumphant rebellion, to their old condition of masons, smiths, and carpenters; that, in this capacity, they might repair what,
as colonels and captains, they had ruined and defaced. South.

You desire my thoughts as a friend, and not as a member of parliament; they are the same in both capacities. Swift.

CAPA'RISON. n. s. [caparazon, a great cloke,
Span.] A horsecloth, or a sort of cover for a horse, which is spread over his furniture.

Farrier's Dict.

Tilting furniture, emblazon'd shields,
Impresses quaint, caparisons, and steeds,
Bases, and tinsel trappings, gorgeous knights,
At joust, and tournament. Milton, P. L.

Some wore a breastplate, and a light jupon;
Their horses cloath'd with rich caparison. Dryden, Fob.

To CAPA'RISON. v. a. [old Fr. caparasonner.]

1. To dress in caparisons.

The steeds, caparison'd with purple, stand;
With golden trappings, glorious to behold,
And champ betwixt their teeth the foaming gold. Dryden.

2. To dress pompously: in a ludicrous sense.

C A P

Don't you think, though I am caparisoned like a man, I have a doublet and hose in my disposition?

Shakspeare, As you like it.

CA'PCASE.* n. s. [from cap and case.] A covered case; a chest.

He asked his wife whether she shut the trunks and chests fast, whether the capcase be sealed, and whether the hall-door be bolted. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 116.

One cart will serve for all your furniture,
With room enough behind to ease the footman,
A capcase for your linnen, and your plate.

Beaumont, and Fl. Noble Gentleman.

CAPE. v. n. s. [cape, Fr. capo, Ital. from the Lat.
caput.]

1. Headland; promontory.

What from the cape can you discern at sea? —
— Nothing at all; it is a high wrought flood.

Shakspeare, Othello.

The parting sun,
Beyond the earth's green cape, and verdant isles,
Hesperian sets; my signal to depart. Milton, P. L.

The Romans made war upon the Tarentines, and obliged them by treaty not to sail beyond the cape. Arbutnot on Coins.

2. The neck-piece of a cloke. [Fr. cappe, Dan. kappe, a cloke or riding-coat.]

sleeves and cape. Bacon.

CAPER. n. s. [from caper, Latin, a goat.] A leap;
a jump; a skip.

We that are true lovers, run into strange capers; but as all is mortal in nature, so is all nature in love mortal in folly.

Shakspeare, As you like it.

Elimnap, the treasurer, is allowed to cut a caper on the strait rope, at least an inch higher than any other lord in the whole empire. Swift, Gulliver's Travels.

CA'PER. v. n. s. [Fr. capre; Gr. καπρία, the tree and the fruit.] An acid pickle. See CAPER- BUSH.

We invent new sauces and pickles, which resemble the animal ferment in taste and virtue, as mangoes, olives, and capers.

Floyer on the Humours.

CA'PER-BUSH. n. s.

The fruit is fleshy, and shaped like a pear.
This plant grows in the south of France, in Spain and in Italy, upon old walls and buildings; and the buds of the flowers, before they are open, are pickled for eating. Miller.

CA'PER-CUTTING.* n. s. [from caper and cut. To cut a caper is a common phrase. See the citation from Swift under CAPER. The Italians have a similar expression, tagliar le capriole.] The act of dancing in a frolicksome manner.

I am not gentle, sir, nor gentle will be,
Till I have justice, my poor child restor'd,
Your caper-cutting son has run away with.

Beaumont, and Fl. Love's Pilgrimage.

To CA'PER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dance frolicksomenly.

The truth is, I am only old in judgement; and he that will ca- per with me for a thousand marks, let him lend me the money, and have at him. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

2. To skip for merriment.

Our master

Capering to eye her. Shakspeare, Tempest.

His nimble hand's instinct then taught each string

A capering cheerfulness, and made them sing.

To their own dance. Crashaw's Poems, p. 82.

The family tript it about, and capere'd like hailstones bound-

3. To dance: spoken in contempt.

The stage would need no force, nor song, nor dance,
Nor capering monsieur from active France. Rowe.

CAP'ERER n. s. [from caper.] A dancer: in contempt.

The tumbler's gambols some delight afford:
No less the nimble caperer on the cord;
But these are still insipid stuff to thee,
Coop'd in a ship, and toss'd upon the sea. Dryden, Juv.

CAP'IAS n. s. [Lat.] A writ of two sorts, one before judgement, called capias ad respondendum, in an action personal, if the sheriff, upon the first writ of distress, return that he has no effects in his jurisdiction. The other is a writ of execution after judgement. Cowel.

Bp. Berkeley, Stris, § 224.

CAPILLARY n. s. [old Fr. capillaire, from capillus, hair, Lat.]

1. Resembling hairs; small; minute: applied to plants.

Capillary, or capillaceous plants, are such as have no main stalk or stem, but grow to the ground, as hairs on the head; and which bear their seeds in little tufts or protuberances on the backside of their leaves. Quincy.

2. Applied to vessels of the body. Small: as the ramifications of the arteries. Quincy.

Ten capillary arteries in some parts of the body, as in the brain, are not equal to one hair; and the smallest lymphatic vessels are an hundred times smaller than the smallest capillary artery. Arbutnot on Aliments.

CAP'ILLARY n. s. [from the adj.] A small plant: or a small vessel.

The hyssop — may tolerably be taken for some kind of minor capillary, which best makes out the antithesis with the cedar. Sir T. Brown on the Plants in Scripture, p. 8.

Our common hyssop is not the least of vegetables, nor observed to grow upon walls; but, rather, some kind of capillaries which are very small plants, and only grow upon walls and stony places. Ibid. Vulg. Err.

What remains, is received into the capillaries of the veins in the several parts. Smith's Old Age, p. 233.

Tar-water, by its active qualities, doth stir the humours, entering the minutest capillaries, and dislodging obstructions.

Bp. Berkeley on Tar-Water!

CAPILLA'TION n. s. [from capillus, Lat.] A vessel like a hair; a small ramification of vessels. Not used.

Nor is the humour contained in smaller veins, or obscurer capillations, but in a vesicle. Brown, Vulg. Errs.

Edmund, I arrest thee

On capital treason. Shakspeare, King Lear.

Several cases deserve greater punishment than many crimes that are capital among us. Swift.

3. That which affects life.

In capital causes, wherein but one man's life is in question, the evidence ought to be clear; much more in a judgment upon a war, which is capital to thousands. Bacon.

4. Chief; principal.

I will, out of that infinite number, reckon but some that are most capital, and commonly occurrent both in the life and conditions of private men. Spenser on Ireland.

As to swerve in the least points, is error; so the capital enemies thereof God hateth, as his deadly foes, aliens, and, without repentance, children of endless perdition. Hooker.

They do, in themselves, tend to confirm the truth of a capital article in religion. Atterbury.

5. Chief; metropolitan.

This had been

Perhaps thy capital seat, from whence had spread
All generations; and had hither come,
From all the ends of th' earth, to celebrate
And reverence thee, their great progenitor. Milton, P. L.

6. Applied to letters; large; such as are written at the beginnings or heads of books.

Our most considerable actions are always present, like capital letters to an aged and dim eye. Bp. Taylor's Holy Living.

Warburton, Doct. of Grace, i. 33.

CAPRICIOUSNESS. † n. s. [from capricious.] The quality of being led by caprice, humour, whimsicalness. Formerly written caprichiousness.

It is no easy matter to satisfy the caprichiousness of the latter of them.

Ed. Kipper Williams, (1623,) in the Cabala, p. 80.

A subject ought to suppose, that there are reasons, although he be not apprised of them; otherwise he must tax his prince of capriciousness, inconstancy, or ill design.

Swift.

CAPRICORN. n. s. [Capricornus, Lat.] One of the signs of the zodiack; the winter solstice.

Let the longest night in Capricorn be of fifteen hours, the day consequently must be of nine.

Notes to Creech's Manilius.

CAPRIFOLE.* n. s. [old Fr. caprifole; Lat. caprifolium.] Woodbine.

And egplantine, and caprifole, among,
Fashion'd above within their inmost part.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. vi. 44.

CAPRIFICATION.* n. s. [Lat. caprificatio.] A method of ripening the fruits of fig-trees.

The process of caprification being unknown to these savages, the figs come to nothing.

Bruce's Travels, iii. 74.

CAPRIOLE. † n. s. [French.]

1. In horsemanship. Caprioles are leaps, such as a horse makes in one and the same place, without advancing forwards, and in such a manner, that when he is in the air, and height of his leap, he jerks or strikes out with his hinder legs, even and near. A capriole is the most difficult of all the high manage, or raised airs. It is different from the croupade in this, that the horse does not show his shoes; and from a balotade, in that he does not jerk out in a balotade.

Farrier's Dict.

The capriole is called by horsemen the goat's leap.

Bullough.

2. A dance; sometimes written cabriole, inaccurately; [originally from the Lat. caper, a goat.]

With lofty turns and capriols in the air.

Sir J. Davies, Poem of Dancing, st. 68.

Ixion is loosed from his wheel, and turned dancer; does nothing but cut capriols, fetch friskals, and lead lavaltoes with the Lamie!

B. Jonson, Masques.

CAPSICUM.* n. s. In botany, Guinea or Bonnet pepper.

Chambers.

CAPSTAN. n. s. [corruptly called capstern; cabestan, Fr.] A cylinder, with levers to wind up any great weight, particularly to raise the anchors.

The weighing of anchors by the capstan, is also new.

Raleigh, Essays.

No more behold thee turn my watch's key,

As seamen at a capstan anchors weigh.

Swift.

CAPSULE.* n. s. [Lat. capsula, dimin. of capsa, from the Gr. κάψα, a little chest.] A cell in plants for the reception of seeds.

On threshing I found the ears not filled, and some of the capsules quite empty.

Burke on the Scarcity.

CAPSULAR. } adj. [capsula, Lat.] Hollow like a chest.

CAPSULARY. } chest.
It ascendeth not directly unto the throat, but ascending first into a capsulary reception of the breast-bone, it ascendeth again into the neck.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

CAPSULATE. } adj. [capsula, Lat.] Inclosed, or in a box.

CAPSULATED. } a box.
Seeds, such as are corrupted and stale, will swim; and this agreeth unto the seeds of plants locked up and capsulated in their husks.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The heart lies immured, or capsulated, in a cartilage, which includes the heart, as the skull doth the brain.

Derham.

CAPTAIN. † n. s. [captain, Fr. in Lat. capitaneus; being one of those who, by tenure in capite, were obliged to bring soldiers to the war, Dr. Johnson says; but the derivation is probably from caput, the head or chief, and than, an ancient title of honour.]

1. A chief commander.

As captain of the host of the Lord am I now come.

Josh. v. 14.

Dismay'd not this

Our captains, Macbeth and Banquo? Shakspeare, Macbeth.

2. The chief of any number or body of men.

Nashon — shall be captain of the children of Judah.

Numbers, ii. 3.

The king sent unto him a captain of fifty.

2 Kings, i. 9.

The captain of the guard gave him victuals.

Jeremiah, xl. 9.

3. A man skilled in war; as, Marlborough was a great captain.

4. The commander of a company in a regiment.

A captain! these villains will make the name of captain as odious as the word occupy; therefore captains had need look to it.

Shakspeare, Henry IV.

The grim captain, in a surly tone,

Cries out, Pack up, ye rascals, and be gone!

Dryden.

5. The chief commander of a ship.

The Rhodian captain, relying on his knowledge, and the lightness of his vessel, passed, in open day, through all the guards.

Arbutnot on Cons.

6. It was anciently written captain.

And evermore their cruel captain

Sought with his rascal routs to inclose them round.

Spenser, F. Q.

7. Captain General. The general or commander in chief of an army.

To procure safe conduct for his person, of the magnanimous, and most illustrious, six-or-seventh-times honoured captain-general of the Grecian army, Agamemnon.

Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

8. Captain Lieutenant. The commanding officer of the colonel's troop or company, in every regiment. He commands as youngest captain.

CAPTAIN.* adj. [from the subst.] Chief; valiant as a captain.

More captain than the lion.

Shakspeare, Tim. of Athens.

Like captain jewels in the carnet.

Shakspeare, Sonnet.

CAPTAINRY. † n. s. [old Fr. captainerie.] The power over a certain district; the chieftainship.

There should be no rewards taken for captainry, of counties, no shares of bishopricks for nominating of bishops.

Spenser on Ireland

CAPTAINSHIP. n. s. [from captain.]

1. The condition or post of a chief commander.

Therefore so please thee to return with us,

And of our Athens, thine and ours, to take

The captainship.

Shakspeare, Timon.

2. The rank, quality, or post of a captain.

The lieutenant in the colonel's company might well pretend to the next vacant captainship in the same regiment.

Wotton.

3. The chieftainship of a clan, or the government of a certain district.

To diminish the Irish lords, he did abolish their pretended and usurped captainships.

Davies on Ireland.

4. Skill in the military trade.

CAPTATION. † n. s. [old Fr. captation, ruse, artifice. Lacombe and Roquefort.] The practice of catching favour or applause; courtship; flattery.

I am content my heart should be discovered without any of those dresses, or popular captations, which some men use in their speeches.

King Charles.

C A P

CA'PTION.† n. s. [from capio, Lat. to take.] The act of taking any person by a judicial process, Dr. Johnson says; it is also generally the act of taking any person unawares by some trick or cavil; [Lat. captio.] imposition.

I beseech you, Sir, to consider seriously 'with what strange captious you have gone about to delude your king and country; and if you be convinced they are so, give glory to God, and let the world know it, by your deserting that religion which stands upon such deceitful foundations.

Chillingworth, Relig. of Protestants.

CA'PTIOUS. adj. [captivus, Fr. captiosus, Lat.]

1. Given to cavils; eager to object.

If he shew a forwardness to be reasoning about things, take care, that nobody check this inclination, or mislead it by captious or fallacious ways of talking with him. Locke.

2. Insidious; ensnaring.

She taught him likewise how to avoid sundry captious and tempting questions which were like to be asked of him. Bacon.

CA'PTIOUSLY. adv. [from captious.] In a captious manner; with an inclination to object.

Use your words as captiously as you can, in your arguing on one side, and apply distinctions on the other. Locke.

CA'PTIOUSNESS.† n. s. [from captious.] Inclination to find fault; inclination to object; pceevishness.

The reader may see how nature passeth arte, seeing here much more captiousness in a subtil sophistical wit, than in him that hath but learned the sophistical art.

Abp. Crammer to Bp. Gardiner, p. 78.

Whither would restless subtilty proceed, if it were not bounded: there is of captiousness no end.

Wotton, Panegyrr. on K. Ch. I.

Captiousness is a fault opposite to civility; it often produces misbecoming and provoking expressions and carriage. Locke.

To CA'PTIVATE. v. a. [captiver, Fr. captivo, Lat.]

1. To take prisoner; to bring into bondage.

How ill beseeeming is it in thy sex,

To triumph like an Amazonian trull,

Upon their woes, whom fortune captivates. Shakspeare.

He deserves to be a slave, that is content to have the rational sovereignty of his soul, and the liberty of his will, so captivated. King Charles.

They stand firm, keep out the enemy, truth, that would captivate or disturb them. Locke.

2. To charm; to overpower with excellence; to subdue.

Wisdom enters the last, and so captivates him with her appearance, that he gives himself up to her. Addison, Guardian.

3. To enslave: with to.

They lay a trap for themselves, and captivate their understandings to mistake, falsehood and error. Locke.

CA'PTIVATE.* adj. [from the verb.] Made prisoner. This word Dr. Johnson had placed under the verb.

I will chain these legs and arms of thine,

That hast by tyranny, these many years,

Wasted our country, slain our citizens,

And sent our sons and husbands captivate.

Shakspeare, K. Hen. VI. P. I.

CAPTIVA'TION.† n. s. [from captivate.] The act of taking one captive.

No small part of our servitude lyes in the captivation of our understanding; such as, that we cannot see ourselves captive.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 21.

CAPTIVE. n. s. [captif, Fr. captivus, Lat.]

1. One taken in war; a prisoner to an enemy.

You have the captives

Who were the opposites of this day's trife? Shakspeare.

This is no other than that forced respect a captive pays to his conqueror, a slave to his lord. Rogers.

Free from shame

Thy captives: I ensure the penal claim. Pope, Odyssey.

2. It is used with to before the captor.

C A P

If thou say Antony lives, 'tis well,

Or friends with Caesar, or not captive to him. Shakspeare.

My mother, who the royal sceptre sway'd,

Was captive to the cruel victor made. Dryden.

3. One charmed, or ensnared by beauty or excellence.

My woman's heart

Grossly grew captive to his honey words. Shakspeare.

CA'TTIVE. adj. [captivus, Lat.] Made prisoner in war; kept in bondage or confinement, by whatever means.

But fate forbids; the Stygian floods oppose,

And with nine circling streams the captive souls inclose. Dryden.

To CA'TTIVE.† v. a. [from the noun.] It was used formerly with the accent on the last syllable, but now it is on the first. The old accent seems to have been discontinued in Milton's time; for Dryden, it appears, places the accent on the first syllable. To take prisoner; to bring into a condition of servitude.

But being all defeated save a few,

Rather than fly, or be captiv'd, herself she slew. Spenser, F. Q.

Thou leavest them to hostile sword

Of heathen and profane, their carcasses

To dogs and fowls a prey, or else captiv'd. Milton, S. I.

What further fear of danger can there be?

Beauty, which captures all things, sets me free. Dryden.

Still lay the god: the nymph surpris'd,

Yet, mistress of herself, devis'd,

How she the vagrant might intral,

And capture him, who captures all. Prior.

CAPTIVITY. n. s. [captivité, Fr. captivitas, low Lat.]

1. Subjection by the fate of war; bondage; servitude to enemies.

This is the serjeant,

Who, like a good and hardy soldier, fought

'Gainst my captivity. Shakspeare.

There in captivity he lets them dwell

The space of seventy years; then brings them back;

Remembering mercy. Milton, P. L.

The name of Ormond will be more celebrated in his captivity, than in his greatest triumphs. Dryden, Fab. Dedic.

2. Slavery; servitude.

For men to be tied, and led by authority, as it were with a kind of captivity of judgement; and though there be reason to the contrary, not to listen unto it. Hooker.

The apostle tells us, there is a way of bringing every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ. Decay of Piety.

When love's well tim'd, 'tis not a fault to love;

The strong, the brave, the virtuous, and the wise,

Sink in the soft captivity together. Addison, Cato.

CA'PTOR. n. s. [from capio, to take, Lat.] He that takes a prisoner or a prize.

CA'PTURE. n. s. [capture, Fr. captura, Lat.]

1. The act or practice of taking any thing.

The great sagacity, and many artifices used by birds in the investigation and capture of their prey. Derham, Phys. Theol.

2. The thing taken; a prize.

To CA'PTURE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To take as a prize; as, four sail of the line were captured, and two sunk.

CAPUCCIO.* n. s. [Ital.] A capuchin, or hood.

That at his back a broad capuccio had. Spenser, F. Q. iii. xii. 10.

CAPU'CHED. adj. [from capuce, Fr. a hood.] Covered over as with a hood.

They are differently cuculleted and capuched upon the head and back, and, in the cicada, the eyes are more prominent. Brown, Vulg. Err.

CAPUCHIN.† n. s. [Fr. capuce, capuchon; Ital. capuccio.]

C A R

1. A female garment, consisting of a cloke and hood, made in imitation of the dress of capuchin monks; whence its name is derived.

2. A pigeon, whose head is covered with feathers, as it were with a capouch.

CAPUCHIN. * n. s. [So called from the capuchon, or cowl, with which they covered their heads.] One of the order of St. Francis, in its strictest observance.

Behold yet a new swarm of locusts, the order of the capuchins, and of those shameless companions which attribute unto themselves the name of the company of Jesus; which are within these forty years crawled out of the bottomless pit.

Harmar, Trans. of Beza's Sermon. (1587.) p. 242.

CAPUT MORTUUM. * [Lat.] In chemistry, the pieces remaining of any body, after all the volatile and humid parts, as the phlegm, spirit, salt, &c. have been extracted from it by force of fire. Figuratively used.

Poetry is of so subtle a spirit, that, in pouring out of one language into another, it will all evaporate; and if a new spirit be not added in the transfusion, there will remain nothing but a caput mortuum.

Denham, Trans. of Æneid, Pref.

CAR, CHAR, in the names of places, seems to have relation to the British carr, a city. Gibson's Camden.

CAR. † n. s. [Celt. and old Fr. carr, a chariot; Welsh and Bret. car: Dutch, karre; Sax. cær: Lat. currus.]

1. A small carriage of burden, usually drawn by one horse or two.

When a lady comes in a coach to our shops, it must be followed by a car loaded with Wood's money. Swift.

2. In poetical language, any vehicle of dignity or splendour; a chariot of war, or triumph.

Henry is dead, and never shall revive:
Upon a wooden coffin we attend,
And death's dishonourable victory,
We with our stately presence glorify,
Like captives bound to a triumphant car. Shakspeare.

Wilt thou aspire to guide the heavenly car,
And with thy daring folly burn the world? Shakspeare.

And the gilded car of day,
His glowing axle doth allay,
In the steep Atlantick stream. Milton, Comus.

See, where he comes, the darling of the war!
See millions crowding round the gilded car! Prior.

3. The Charles's wain, or Bear; a constellation.
Every fixt and every wand'ring star,
The Pleiads, Hyads, and the Northern Car. Dryden.

CA'RABINE. † } n. s. [carabine, Fr.]

1. A small sort of fire arm, shorter than a fusil, and carrying a ball of twenty-four in the pound, hung by the light horse at a belt over the left shoulder. It is a kind of medium between the pistol and the musket, having its barrel two foot and a half long.

2. He who is armed with a carabine or carbine.
When he was taken, all the rest they fled,
And our carbines pursued them to the death. Kyd, Spanish Tragedy.

CARABINEER. † n. s. [Germ. carabinier.] A sort of light horse carrying longer carabines than the rest, and used sometimes on foot. Chambers.

CA'RACK. † n. s. [caraca, Spanish; Dr. Johnson says. The word is often written carrack, and carrick. So in old Fr. carrague, and low Lat. carraca. But carrike, or carrick, which is Chaucer's word, and which is defined in our old dictionaries a great ship of burthen, directs us to the Ital. carico, or carco, which is a freight or lading, a burthen.] A large ship of burden; the same with those which are now called galleons.

C A R

In which river, the greatest carack of Portugal, may ride afloat ten miles within the forts. Raleigh.

Which wanteth sea-room with her foes to play. Waller.

CA'RACOLE. n. s. [caracole, Fr. from caracol, Span. a snail.] An oblique tread, traced out in semi-rounds, changing from one hand to another, without observing a regular ground.

When the horse advance to charge in battle, they ride sometimes in caracoles, to amuse the enemy, and put them in doubt, whether they are about to charge them in the front or in the flank.

Barrier's Dict.

To CA'RACOLE. v. n. [from the nom.] To move in caracoles.

CA'RAT. † } n. s. [carat, Fr. "The fruit of the tree

CA'RACT. } called kuara is a red bean, which seems to have been in the earliest ages used for a weight of gold. This bean is called carat." Bruce's Travels, v. 66. Morin derives the word from the Arab. kirat, a weight; which he thinks is from the Gr. κεράτιον, a kind of small weights.]

1. A weight of four grains, with which diamonds are weighed.

In digging, if a diamond exceed twenty carats, (a carat is four grains,) such by the law of that place are reserved for the king. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 88.

2. A manner of expressing the fineness of gold.

A mark, being an ounce troy, is divided into twenty-four equal parts, called caracts, and each carat into four grains: by this weight is distinguished the different fineness of their gold; for, if to the finest of gold be put two caracts of alloy, both making, when cold, but an ounce, or twenty-four caracts, then this gold is said to be twenty-two caracts fine. Cocker.

Thou best of gold, art worst of gold;
Other, less fine in carat, is more precious. Shakspeare.

3. A manner of expressing the value of any thing.
They are men that set the carat and value upon things, as they love them; but science is not every man's mistress.

R. Jonson, Discoveries.

It is the most prevailing eloquence, and of the most exalted carat. Ibid.

Here's a gentleman
(My pair of lofty clerks) of that high carat,
As hardly hath the age produc'd his like. R. Jonson, Masques.

CARAVAN. n. s. [caravanne, Fr. from the Arabick.] A troop or body of merchants or pilgrims, as they travel in the East.

They set forth
Their airy caravan, high over seas
Flying, and over lands, with mutual wing
Easing their flight. Milton, P. I.

When Joseph, and the Blessed Virgin Mother, had lost their most holy Son, they sought him in the retinues of their kindred, and the caravans of the Galilean pilgrims.

Bp. Taylor.

CARAVANSARY. † n. s. [from caravan.] The caravans-lodge, as Sir Thomas Herbert calls it; and he distinguishes the word, in writing it caravans-rare. Trav. p. 206. Some derive it from the Arab. cairawan, or Pers. cârvân, and serai, a large house.] A house built in the Eastern countries for the reception of travellers.

The inns which receive the caravans in Persia, and the Eastern countries, are called by the name of caravansaries.

Spectator.

The spacious mansion, like a Turkish caravansary, entertains the vagabond with only bare lodging. Pope's Letters.

CA'RAVEL.† } n. s. [Span. caravella; Fr. caravelle; CA'RVEL. } Basque, carabella; Teut. karevel; Su. Goth. and Iceland. karf, a kind of ship. It is usually written carvel, and sometimes carvell. See CARVEL.] A light, round, old fashioned ship, with a square poop, formerly used in Spain and Portugal.

It did me good
To see the Spanish carvel vail her top
Unto my maiden flag.

Heywood's Fair Maid of the West, 1613.

In an obstinate engagement with some Venetian caravels, the vessel, on board which he served, took fire. Robertson.

CA'RBUNCLE. n. s. [carbunculus, Lat. a little coal.]

1. A jewel shining in the dark, like a lighted coal or candle.

A carbuncle entire, as big as thou art,
Were not so rich a jewel.

Shakspeare.

His head
Crested aloft, and carbuncle his eyes,
With burnish'd neck of verdant gold.

Milton, P. L.

It is believed that a carbuncle does shine in the dark like a burning coal; from whence it hath its name. Wilkins.

Carbuncle is a stone of the ruby kind, of a rich blood-red colour. Woodward.

2. Red spots or pimples breaking out upon the face or body.

It was a pestilent fever, but there followed no carbuncle, no purple or livid spots, or the like, the mass of the blood not being tainted. Bacon.

C A R

Red blisters, rising on their paps, appear,
And flaming carbuncles, and noisome sweat.

Dryden.

CA'RBUNCLED. adj. [from carbuncle.]

1. Set with carbuncles.

An armour all of gold; it was a king's. —

— He has deserv'd it, were it carbuncled

1. A dead body of any animal.

To blot the honour of the dead,

And with foul cowardice his carcass shame,

Whose living hands immortaliz'd his name. Spenser, F. Q.

Where cattle pastur'd late, now scatter'd lies

With carcasses and arms the ensanguin'd field,

Deserted.

Milton, P. L.

If a man visits his sick friend, in hope of legacy, he is a vulture, and only waits for the carcass.

Bp. Taylor.

The scaly nations of the sea profound,

Like shipwreck'd carcasses, are driv'n aground.

Dryden.

2. Body; in a ludicrous sense.

To-day how many would have given their honours,

To've sav'd their carcasses?

Shakspeare.

He that finds himself in any distress, either of carcass or of fortune should deliberate upon the matter, before he prays for a change. L'Estrange.

3. The decayed parts of any thing; the ruins; the remains.

A rotten carcass of a boat, not rigg'd,

Nor tackle, sail, nor mast.

Shakspeare.

4. The main parts, naked, without completion or ornament; as, the walls of a house.

What could be thought a sufficient motive to have had an eternal carcass of an universe, wherein the materials and positions of it were eternally laid together?

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

CARGASON.† n. s. [cargaçon, Spanish.] A cargo. Not used, Dr. Johnson says; and he gives only the first of the examples from Howell. By Howell it is often used, but I have not found it elsewhere.

My body is a cargason of ill humours. Howell's Letters.

The ship Swan was sailing home with a cargazon valued at 80,000*l.* Howell's Letters, i. vi. 42.

These travellers, in lieu of the ore of Ophir wherewith they should come home richly freighted, may be said to make their return in apes and owls, in a cargazon of complements and cringes, or some huge-monstrous periwigs, which is the golden fleece they bring over with them.

Howell, Instruct. for For. Travel, p. 188.

CARGO.† n. s. [charge, Fr. Dr. Johnson says. But the old Fr. cargue must here be cited. Nor should the Ital. carico or carco, a burthen, be overlooked.] The lading of a ship; the merchandize or wares contained and conveyed in a ship.

In the hurry of the shipwreck, Simfonides was the only man that appeared unconcerned, notwithstanding that his whole fortune was at stake in the cargo. L'Estrange.

A ship, whose cargo was no less than a whole world, that carried the fortune and hopes of all posterity. Bunuel, Theory.

This gentleman was then a young adventurer in the republick of letters, and just fitted out for the university with a good cargo of Latin and Greek. Addison.

CARICATURE.* n. s. [Ital. caricatura, from caricare, to load or charge, that is, to exaggerate. The word was written caricatura, in our own language, till within the last half century.] The representation of a person or circumstance, so as to render the original ridiculous, without losing the resemblance.

Expose not thyself, by four-footed manners, unto monstrous draughts and caricatura representations.

Brown, Christ. Mor. ii. 14.

From all these hands we have such draughts of mankind as are represented in those burlesque pictures which the Italians call caricaturas; where the art consists in preserving, amidst distorted proportions and aggravated features, some distinguishing likeness of the person, but in such a manner as to transform the most agreeable beauty into the most odious monster. Spectator, No. 534.

Let not this strained affectation of striving to be witty upon all occasions, be thought exaggerated, or a caricatura of Cowley. Dr. Warton, Essay on Pope.

A portrait is sufficient; a caricature needless.

Bp. Horne, Lett. on Infidelity, Pref.

A new exhibition in English of the French caricature [Amyot's] of this most valuable biographer [Plutarch] by North, must have still more widely extended the deviation from the original. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poet. iii. Diss. p. xx.

TO CARICATURE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To ridicule; to represent unfairly.

Such a scent I draw
Of carnage, prey innumerable! and taste
The savour of death from all things there that live. Milton, P. L.

His ample maw, with human carnage fill'd,
A milky deluge next the giant swill'd. Pope.

CA'RNAL. adj. [carnal, Fr. carnalis, low Lat.]

1. Fleshly; not spiritual.

Thou dost justly require us, to submit our understandings to thine, and deny our carnal reason, in order to thy sacred mysteries and commands. King Charles.

From that pretence
Spiritual laws by carnal power shall force
On every conscience. Milton, P. L.

Not such in carnal pleasure: for which cause,
Among the beasts no mate for thee was found. Milton, P. L.

A glorious apparition! had not doubt,
And carnal fear, that day dimm'd Adam's eye. Milton, P. L.

He perceives plainly, that his appetite to spiritual things abates, in proportion as his sensual appetite is indulged and encouraged; and that carnal desires kill not only the desire, but even the power of tasting purer delights. Atterbury.

2. Lustful; lecherous; libidinous.

This carnal cur
Preys on the issue of his mother's body. Shakespeare.

CA'RNAL-MINDED.* adj. [from carnal and mind.]

Thinking only of the flesh; worldly-minded.
Abusing the credulous and carnal-minded, thereby to be masters of their persons and wealth.

More, Antid. against Idolatry, ch. 10.

He [Jesus Christ] stript off those veils and colours, which the worldly and carnal-minded Scribes and Pharisees had laid over them [the Scriptures]. West on the Resurrection, p. 191.

CA'RNAL-MINDEDNESS.* n. s. [from carnal-minded.] Grossness of mind.

They made their own virtue their god, which was the most cursed piece of carnal-mindedness and idolatry.

Ellis, Knowledge of Divine Things, p. 282.

CA'RNALIST.* n. s. [from carnal.] One given to carnality.

They are in a reprobate sense mere carnalists, fleshly-minded men. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 686.

CA'RNALITE.* n. s. [from carnal.] A worldly-minded man.

God is on our side, and therefore we feare not what the pope or any other carnalite can do against us.

Anderson, Expos. upon Benedictus, (1573) fol. 7. h.

CARNA'LITY.* n. s. [old Fr. charnalité.]

1. Fleshly lust; compliance with carnal desires.

An inciter of lust, and the waker of carnality. Feltham's Resolves, ii. 36.

Mortifications were more in use, and all luxurious indulgence to carnality generally condemned.

Ricaut, Greek Church, p. 307.

If godly, why do they wallow and sleep in all the carnalities of the world, under pretence of christian liberty? South.

2. Grossness of mind.

So was Jeroboam's episcopacy partly from the pattern of the law, and partly from the pattern of his own carnality.

Milton, Reason of Ch. Gov. i. 5.

He did not institute this way of worship, but because of the carnality of their hearts, and the proneness of that people to idolatry. Tillotson.

To CA'RNALIZE.* v. a. [from carnal.] To debase to carnality.

What concord can there be between a sensual and carnalized spirit, that understands no other pleasures but only those of the flesh, and those pure and virgin-spirits, that neither eat nor drink, but live for ever upon wisdom and holiness, and love and contemplation? Scott's Christian Life, i. § 2.

CA'RNALLY.* adv. [from carnal.]

1. According to the flesh; not spiritually.

Where they found men in diet, attire, furniture of house, or any other way observers of civility and decent order, such they reprov'd, as being carnally and earthly minded. Hooker.

In the sacrament we do not receive Christ carnally, but we receive him spiritually; and that of itself is a conjugation of blessings and spiritual graces.

Bp. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

So the sense requires; it being spoken carnally, or like a man, to charge God with injustice.

Tr. of Knatchbull's Annot. p. 157.

2. Libidiously; lustfully.

Thou shalt not lie carnally with thy neighbour's wife, to defile thyself with her. Levit. xviii. 20.

CA'RNALNESS. n. s. The same with carnality. Diet.

CARNA'TION. n. s. [carnes, Lat.] The name of the natural flesh colour; from whence perhaps the flower is named: the name of a flower.

And lo the wretch! whose vile, whose insect lust
Laid this gay daughter of the spring in dust:
O punish him! or to th' Elysian shades
Dismiss my soul, where no carnation fades.

Pope.

CARNA'TIONED.* adj. [from carnation.] Coloured like the carnation.

Court gentle zephyr, court and fan
Her softer cheeks carnation'd wan. Lovelace, Luc. P. p. 12.

CARNE'LION. n. s. A precious stone.

The common carneleon has its name from its flesh colour, [carne]; which is, in some of these stones, paler, when it is called the female carneleon; in others deeper, called the male.

Woodward.

CA'RNEOUS. adj. [carneus, Lat.] Fleshy.

In a calf, the umbilical vessels terminate in certain bodies, divided into a multitude of carneous papillæ. Ray.

CARNEY.* A disease in horses, wherein their mouths become so furred that they cannot eat. Chambers.

CARNIFICA'TION.* n. s. [from carnify.] The making of, or turning to, flesh. In medicine, the reverse of ossification. Chambers.

To CARNIFY. v. n. [from *caro carnis, Lat.] To breed flesh; to turn nutriment into flesh.

At the same time I think, I deliberate, I purpose, I command: in inferior faculties, I walk, I see, I hear, I digest, I sanguify, I carnify. Hale, Origin of Mankind.

CARNIVAL.† n. s. [Ital. carnavale, Fr. carnaval.]

Our old writers seem to have considered it as "the bidding farewell to flesh," carni vale. See Bullokar's Expositor. But Ducange explains the word by carn-a-val, the flesh being put into the pot at this feast, in order to compensate for the abstinence ensuing: and therefore, in the low Latin, the word was carnelævamen.] The feast held in the popish countries before Lent; a time of luxury.

The whole year is but one mad carnival, and we are voluptuous not so much upon desire or appetite, as by way of exploit and bravery. Decay of Piety.

CARNIVOROUS. adj. [from carnis and voro.] Flesh-eating; that of which flesh is the proper food.

In birds there is no mastication or comminution of the meat in the mouth; but in such as are not carnivorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop or craw. Ray on the Creation.

Man is by his frame, as well as his appetite, a carnivorous animal. Arbutnot on Aliments.

CARNOSITY.† n. s. [carnositè, Fr.] Fleishy excrecence.

What's good for a carnosity in the bladder?

Baum. and Fl. The Chances.

By this method, and by this course of diet, with adorficks, the ulcers are healed, and that carnosity resolved. Wiseman.

CARNOUS. adj. [old Fr. charnue, from caro, carnis, Lat.] Fleishy.

The first or outward part is a thick and carnous covering, like that of a walnut; the second, a dry and flosculous coat, commonly called mace. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The muscle whereby he is enabled to draw himself together, the academists describe to be a distinct carnous muscle, extended to the ear. Ray on the Creation.

CAROB, or St. John's Bread. [soliqua, Lat.]

A tree very common in Spain, and in some parts of Italy, where it produces a great quantity of long, flat, brown-coloured pods, which are thick, mealy, and of a sweetish taste. These pods are eaten by the poorer inhabitants. Miller.

CAROCHE.† n. s. [Ital. carrozza, said to be from carro rozzo, a red carriage; whence, as chariots were first used in Italy, the Fr. carosse; and thence our old word caroche; which, Dr. Johnson says, is used in the comedy of Albumazar, and is obsolete. It is a very frequent word in our old writers. Probably the unauthorized modern word barouche may have been introduced, by some learned charioteer, with a retrospective view to caroche.]

A coach; a carriage of pleasure.

Like any lady, countess, dutchess, or queen, they shall have gowns, tires, jewels, coaches, and caroches.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 500.

Make ready my caroch.

Baum. and Fl. Custom of the Country.

A caroch with six horses. Transl. of Boccacini, (1611), p. 79.

CAROCIED.* part. adj. [from caroche.] Placed in a coach.

This man's taking up a common wench

In rags, and lowlie, then maintaining her

Carocied in cloth of tisue. Baum. and Fl. Little Fr. Lawyer.

CAROL.† n. s. [carola, Ital. from chorcola, Lat. Fr. Johnson says. Mr. Brand deduces it from cantare, to sing, and rola, an interjection of joy. In old French, however, carole is a kind of dance. See Cotgrave in V. CAROLLE, Lacombe, and Roquefort. "Carolle, divertissement accompagnée de danses et de bals." Rom. de R. Gl.]

1. A song of joy and exultation.

And let the Graces dance unto the rest,

For they can do it best:

The whiles the maidens do their carol sing,

To which the woods shall answer, and their echo ring.

Spenser, Epithalamium.

Even in the old testament, if you listen to David's harp, you shall hear as many horse-like airs as carols.

Bacon.

Oppos'd to her, on t'other side advance

The costly feast, the carol, and the dance,

Minstrels and musick, poetry and play,

And balls by night, and tournaments by day.

Dryden.

2. A song of devotion.

No night is now with hymn or carol blas'd.

Shakespeare.

They gladly thither haste; and, by a choir

Of squadron'd angels, hear his carol sung.

Milton, Ole

3. A song in general.

The carol they began that hour,

Shakespeare.

How that a life was but a flower.

To CAROL.† v. n. [carolare, Ital. caroler, old Fr.]

To sing; to warble; to sing in joy and festivity.

Hark, how the cheerful birds do chaunt their lays,

And carol of love's praise.

Spenser.

This done, she sung, and caroll'd out so clear,

That men and angels might rejoice to hear.

Dryden.

Hovering swans, their throats releas'd

From native silence, carol: omds harmonious.

Prior.

To CAROL. v. a. To praise; to celebrate in song.

She with precious viol'd liquors heels,

For which the shepherds at their festivals,

Carol her goodness loud in rustick lays.

Milton, Cor.

CAROLING.* n. s. [from carol.] An hymn, or song of devotion.

They see such admirable things,

As carries them into an extasy,

And hear such heavenly notes and carolings

Of God's high praise.

Spenser, Hymn of Hear. Beauty.

CAROTID. adj. [carotides, Lat.] Two arteries, so called, which arise out of the ascending trunk of the aorta, near where the subclavian arteries arise.

The carotid, vertebral, and splenic arteries, are not only variously contorted, but also here and there dilated, to moderate the motion of the blood.

Ray on the Creation.

CAROTIDAL.* adj. The same as CAROTID.

The two carotidal, and the two vertebral arteries are this golden quaternion.

Smith's Old Age, p. 220.

CAROUSAL.† n. s. [from carous.] It seems more properly pronounced with the accent upon the second syllable; but Dryden accents it on the first, Dr. Johnson says. Dryden, however, was only observing the fashion of his own time; as the example from Marvel shews. Some imagine carousal to be derived from the Ital. carosello, a diminutive of carro, a chariot; and that the entertainment, originally, was a course or contest of chariots and horses; and that the word at length signified generally a magnificent feast.] A festival.

This game, these carousals Ascanius taught,

And building Alba to the Latins brought.

Dryden.

Before the crystal palace, where he dwells,

The armed angels hold their carousals.

A. Marvel, in Lachrymæ Musarum, 1650.

Leaving out the warlike part of the carousals, and forming a poetical design for the use of the machines, the songs and the dances. Dryden, Pref. to Albion and Albanus.

A royal carousal given by Charles the Fifth of France to the emperor Charles the Fourth, in the year 1373, was closed with the theatrical representation of the Conquest of Jerusalem by Godfrey of Bullioign. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, i. 245.

To CAROUSE. † v. n. [carousser, Fr. from gar ausz, all out, Germ. Dr. Johnson says. But the Germ. rausch, drunkenness, seems better entitled to the fame of producing carouse.] To drink; to quaff; to drink largely.

He calls for wine: a health, quoth he, as if He'd been aboard carousing to his mates
After a storm. Shakspeare.

Learn with how little life may be preserved,
In gold and myrrh they need not to carouse. Raleigh.
Now hats fly off, and youths carouse,
Heaths first go round, and then the house,
The brides came thick and thick. Suckling.

Under the shadow of friendly boughs
They sit carousing, where their liquors grow. Waller.

To CAROUSE. v. a. To drink up lavishly.

Now my sick fool, Roderigo,
Whom love hath turn'd almost the wrong side out,
To Desdemona hath to-night carous'd
Potations pottle deep. Shakspeare.

Our cheerful guests carouse the sparkling tears
Of the rich grape, whilst merrick charms their ears. Denham.

CAROUSE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A drinking match.

Waste in wild riot what your land allows,
There ply the early feast and late carouse. Pope.

2. A hearty dose of liquor.

He had so many eyes watching over him, as he could not drink a full carouse of sack; but the state was advertised thereof within few hours after. Darwin on Ireland.

Please you, we may contrive this afternoon,
And quaff carouses to our mistress' health. Shakspeare.

CAROUSE. n. s. [from carouse.] A drinker; a toper.

The bold carouser, and adveit'ring dame,
Nor fear the fever, nor refuse the game;
Safe in his skill from all constraint set free,
But conscious shame, remorse, and piety. Granville.

CARP. n. s. [carpe, Fr.] A pond fish.

A friend of mine stored a pond of three or four acres with carps and tench. Hale, Origin of Mankind.

To CARP. † v. n. [carpo, Lat.] To censure; to cavil; to find fault: with at before the thing or person censured. It was formerly used in the sense of to jest.

In fellowship well could she laugh and carpe.
Chaucer, C. 2. Prol. 470.

Tertullian, even often through discontentment, carpet injuriously at them, as though they did it even when they were free from such meaning. Hooker.

This your all licens'd fool
Does hourly carp and quarrel, breaking forth
In rank and not to be endured riots. Shakspeare.

No, not a tooth or nail to scratch,
And at my actions carp or catch. Herbert.

When I spoke,
My honest homely words were carp'd and censur'd,
For want of courtly stile. Dryden.

To CARP. * v. a. To blame.

Which my saying divers ignorant persons, not used to reade old amient authors, nor acquainted with their phrase and manner of speech, did carpe and reprehend, for lacke of good understandyng. Abp. Craumer, Doct. of the Sacrament, fol. 100.

They carpe us like crakers. Skelton's Poems, p. 213.
Herod heard John gladly, while he carped others.

CARPENTER. † n. s. [charpentier, Fr. low Lat. carpenterius, in the thirteenth century. Mr. Horne Tooke observes, that what we now call a carpenter, was anciently called a smith; and that the translation of the N. Test. ascribed to Wicliffe proves that smith and carpenter were then [in the fourteenth century] synonymists, viz. "Wher this is not a smith, ether a carpentere, the sone of Marie." St.

Mark, vi. 2, 3. If this be the true reading, it is remarkable that it should not be noticed in a recent publication of Wicliffe's Testament, by the learned and reverend Mr. Baber, where the passage is simply thus; without smith, and without any note, or various reading; "Wher this is not a carpenter
the sone of Marye." The parallel passage in St.
Matthew, xiii. 55. has also only carpenter.] An artificer in wood; a builder of houses and ships.
He is distinguished from a joiner, as the carpenter performs larger and stronger work.

This work performed with aduancement good,
Godfrey his carpentere, and men of skill,
In all the camp, sent to an aged wood. Fairfax.

In building Hiero's great ship, there were three hundred carpenters employed for a year together. Wilkins.

In burden'd vessels, first with speedy care,
His plenteous stores do season'd timbers send,
Thither the brawny carpenters repair,
And, as the surgeons of main'd ships, attend. Dryden.

CARPENTRY. n. s. [from carpenter.] The trade or art of a carpenter.

It had been more proper for me to have introduced carpentry before joinery, because necessity did doubtless compel our forefathers to use the conveniency of the first, rather than the extravagancy of the last. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

CARPER. † n. s. [from To CARP.] A caviller; a censorious man.

I have not these weeds,
By putting on the cunning of a carper. Shakspeare.
That audacious carper at the works of God was sufficiently silenced. Smith's Old Age, p. 58.

CARPET. † n. s. [karpel, Dutch, Ital. carpetta;
from the city of Cairo, and the Ital. tapeto, i. e.
tapestry made at Cairo.]

1. A covering of various colours, spread upon floors or tables.

Be the Jacks fair within, the Jills fair without, carpet hid,
and every thing in order? Shakspeare.

Against the wall, in the middle of the half pace, is a chair placed before him, with a table and carpet before it. Bacon.

2. Ground variegated with flowers, and level and smooth.

Go signify as much, while here we march
Upon the grassy carpet of this plain. Shakspeare.

The carpet ground shall be with leaves o'erspread,
And boughs shall weave a covering for your head. Dryden.

3. Any thing variegated.

The whole dry land is, for the most part, covered over with a lovely carpet of green grass, and other herbs. Ray.

4. Carpet is used, proverbially; for a state of ease and luxury; as, a carpet knight, a knight that has never known the field, and has recommended himself only at table, Dr. Johnson says. This reflects no great credit on the knights in question. The fact is, that a carpet-knight was so called, because he received his honour from the king's hand in the court, and upon a carpet, or such like ornament belonging to the regal state. Markham's Booke of Honour, 1625. p. 71. They were sometimes called knights of the green cloth, in contradistinction to those who were knighted as soldiers; and they were selected from those, who had been serviceable to the court, city, or state, and had therefore merited distinction, whether having studied law, physick, or any other arts and sciences. Holme's Acad. of Armory, B. iii. p. 57.

C A R

He is knight, dubbed with unhacked rapier, and on carpet consideration. Shakspeare.

5. To be on the carpet, [sur le tapis, Fr.] is to be the subject of consideration; an affair in hand.

To CA'RPET. v. a. [from the noun.] To spread with carpets.

We found him in a fair chamber, richly hanged and carpeted under foot, without any degrees to the state; he was set upon a low throne, richly adorned, and a rich cloth of state over his head, of blue sattin embroidered. Bacon.

The dry land we find every where naturally carpeted over with grass, and other agreeable wholesome plants. Derham.

CA'RPET-WALK.* n. s. Carpet-way: a green way; CA'RPET-WAY. } a way on the turf. Ray.

Mow carpet-walks, and ply weeding. Evelyn.

CA'RPING. particip. adj. [from To CARP.] Captious; censorious.

No carping critick interrupts his praise,
No rival strives, but for a second place. Granville.

Lay aside therefore a carping spirit, and read even an adversary with an honest design to find out his true meaning: do not snatch at little lapses, and appearances of mistake. Watts.

CA'RPING.* n. s. [from the verb.] Cavil; censure; abuse.

The passage of the Israelites over Jordan, in memory of which those stones at Gilgal were set up, is free from all those little carpings before-mentioned, that are made as to the passage through the red-sea. Leslie, Method with the Deists.

CA'RPINGLY. adv. [from carping.] Captiously; censoriously.

We derive out of the Latin at second hand by the French, and make good English, as in these adverbs, carpingly, currently, actively, colourably. Camden's Remains.

CA'RPMEALS. n. s. A' kind of coarse cloth made in the north of England. Phillips's World of Worlds.

CARPUS. n. s. [Latin.] The wrist so named by anatomists, which is made up of eight little bones, of different figures and thickness, placed in two ranks, four in each rank. They are strongly tied together by the ligaments which come from the radius, and by the annular ligament. Quincy.

I found one of the bones of the carpus lying loose in the wound. Wise man's Surgery.

CA'RRAWAY.† n. s. See CARAWAY. Mr. Mason blames Dr. Johnson for here referring to caraway, which means caraway seeds, when carraway, the word before us, means apples; "carraway Harvey apples," he says, "so called from their spicy flavour," as a Herefordshire friend informed him. There may be such apples; but both Johnson and the poet will be supported, in opposition to Mr. Mason in using carraways as the seeds or comfits, and not as apples, by the following passage; which, as Mr. Steevens observes, may settle this important point!

This is a confirmation of our use in England, for the serving of apples and other fruites last after meales. Howbeit, we are wont to eat carraways or biscuits, or some other kind of comfits or seeds together with apples, thereby to breake winde ingendred by them: and surely it is a very good way for students. Cogan's Haven of Health, 1595.

Nay, you shall see mine orchard, where, in an arbour, we will eat a last year's pippin of my own grafting, with a dish of carraways, and so forth; come, cousin, silence, and then to bed! Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

CA'RRIBLE.* adj. [from carry.] That which may be carried. Sherwood.

CA'RRIAGE.† n. s. [cariage, Fr. baggage; from carry.]

1. The act of carrying or transporting, or bearing any thing.

The unequal agitation of the winds, though material to the carriage of sounds farther or less way, yet do not confound the articulation. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

If it seem so strange to move this obelisk for so little space, what may we think of the carriage of it out of Egypt? Wilkins.

2. Conquest; acquisition.

Solyman resolved to besiege Vienna, in good hope, that by the carriage away of that, the other cities would, without resistance, be yielded. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

3. Vehicle; that in which any thing is carried.

What horse or carriage can take up and bear away all the loppings of a branchy tree at once? Watts.

4. The frame upon which cannon is carried.

He commanded the great ordnance to be laid upon carriages, which before lay bound in great unweildy timber, with rings fastened thereto, and could not handsomely be removed to or fro. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

5. Behaviour: personal manners.

Before his eyes he did cast a mist, by his own insinuation, and by the carriage of h's youth, that expressed a natural princely behaviour. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Though in my face there's no affected frown,
Nor in my carriage a feign'd niceness shown,
I keep my honour still without a stain. Dryden.

Let him have ever so learned lectures of breeding, that which will most influence their carriage, will be the company they converse with, and the fashion of those about them. Locke.

6. Conduct; measures; practices.

You may hurt yourself; nay, utterly
Grow from the king's acquaintance by this carriage. Shakspeare.

He advised the new governour to have so much discretion in his carriage, that there might be no notice taken in the exercise of his religion. Clarendon.

7. Management; manner of transacting. Not used.

The manner of carriage of the business, was as if there had been secret inquisition upon him. Bacon, Hen. VII.

8. That which is carried; the burthen.

With speare in th' one hand [Calepine] staid himself upright,
With th' other staid his lady up with steady might:—
But when as Calepine came to the brim,
And saw his carriage past that perill well,—
His heart with vengeance inwardly did swell. Spenser, F. Q. vi. iii. 34.

CA'RRIER. n. s. [from To carry.]

1. One who carries something.

You must distinguish between the motion of the air, which is but a vehiculum cause, a carrier of the sounds, and the sounds conveyed. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

For winds, when homeward they return, will drive
The loaded carriers from their evening hive. Dryden.

2. One whose profession or trade is to carry goods for others.

I have rather made it my choice to transcribe all, than to venture the loss of my originals by post or carrier. Pierce's Letters.

The roads are crouded with carriers, laden with rich manufactures. Swift.

3. A messenger; one who carries a message.

The welcome news is in the letter found;
The carrier's not commissioned to expound;
It speaks itself. Dryden, Religio Laici.

4. The name of a species of pigeons, so called from the reported practice of some nations, who send them with letters tied to their necks, which they carry to the place where they were bred, however remote:

There are tame and wild pigeons, and of tame there are croppers, carriers, runts. Walton's Angler.

CARRION. † n. s. [old Fr. caroigne, carongne: modern, charogne; from the Lat. caro and rodens. V. Roquefort.]

1. The carcase of something not proper for food.
They did eat the dead carriens, and one another soon after; insomuch that the very carcases they scraped out of their graves. Spenser on Ireland.

It is by
That, lying by the violet in the sun,
Do, as the carriou does, not as the flower. Shakspeare.
Ravens are seen in flocks where a carriou lies, and wolves in herds to run down a deer. Temple.

Sheep, oxen, horses full; and heap'd on high,
The differing species in confusion lie,
Till, warn'd by frequent ills, the way they found,
To lodge their loathsome carriou under ground. Dryden.
Criticks, as they are birds of prey, have ever a natural inclination to carriou. Pope.

2. Any flesh so corrupted as not to be fit for food.

Not all that pride that makes thee swell,
As big as thou dost blown-up veal;
Nor all thy tricks and slights to cheat,
Sell all thy carriou for good meat. Hudibras.
The wolves will get a breakfast by my death,
Yet scarce enough their hunger to supply,
For love has made me carriou ere I die. Dryden.

3. A name of reproach for a worthless woman.

Shall we send that foolish carriou, Mrs. Quickly, to him, and excuse his throwing into the water? Shakspeare.

CARRION. † adj. [from the substantive.] Relating to carcases; feeding upon carcases.

Match to match I have encounter'd him,
And made a prey for carriou kites and crows,
Even of the bonny beasts he lov'd so well. Shakspeare, Henry VI.

You'll ask me why I rather choose to have
A weight of carriou flesh, than to receive Three thousand ducats? Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

This foul deed shall smell above the earth
With carriou men groaning for burial. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.
The charity of our death-bed visits from one another, is much at a rate with that of a carriou crow to a sheep; we smell a carcase. L'Estrange.

CARRION-LEAN. * adj. Applied properly to beasts; to jades that be more carriou like, or more lean. Hulot.

CARRONADE. * n. s. A very short piece of iron ordnance, originally made at Carron in Scotland. James's Milit. Dict.

Each thought was visible that roll'd within,

As through a crystal case the figur'd hours are seen. Dryden.

Other caterpillars produced maggots, that immediately made themselves up in cases. Ray on the Creation.

The body is but a case to this vehicle.

Brome on the Odyssey.

Just then Clarissa drew, with tempting grace,

A two-edg'd weapon from her shining case. Pope.

2. Hence the cover, or skin, of an animal.

O, thou dissembling cub, what wilt thou be.

When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy case?

Shakspeare, Twelfth Night.

Generally, as with rich-furred conies, their cases are far better than their bodies. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 480.

3. The outer part of a house or building.

The case of the holy house is nobly designed, and executed by great masters. Addison on Italy.

4. A building unfurnished.

He had a purpose likewise to raise, in the university, a fair case for books, and to furnish it with choice collections from all parts of his own charge. Wotton.

CASE-KNIFE. n. s. [from case and knife.] A large kitchen knife.

The king always acts with a great case-knife stuck in his girdle, which the lady snatches from him in the struggle, and so defends herself. Addison on Italy.

CASE-SHOT. n. s. [from case and shot.] Bullets inclosed in a case.

In each seven small brass and leather guns, charged with case-shot. Clarendon.

CASE. n. s. [casus, Lat.]

1. Condition with regard to outward circumstances.

Unworthy wretch, quoth he, of so great grace,

How dare I think such glory to attain?

These that have it attain'd, were in like case,

Quoth he, as wretched, and liv'd in like pain. Spenser, F. Q.

Question your royal thoughts, make the case yours;

Be now a father, and propose a son. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Some knew the face,

And all had heard the much lamented case. Dryden.

These were the circumstances under which the Corinthians then were, and the argument which the apostle advances is intended to reach their particular case. Atterbury.

My youth may be made, as it never fails in executions, a case of compassion. Pope, Pref. to his Works.

2. State of things.

He saith, that if there can be found such an equality between man and man, as between man and beast, or between soul and body, it investeth a right of government, which seemeth rather an impossible case, than an untrue sentence. Bacon.

Here was the case; an army of English, wasted and tired with a long winter's siege, engaged an army of a greater number than themselves, fresh and in vigour. Bacon.

I can but be a slave where-ever I am; so that, taken or not taken, 'tis all a case to me. L'Estrange.

They are excellent in order to certain ends; he hath no need to use them, as the case now stands, being provided for with the provision of an angel. Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

Your parents did not produce you much into the world, whereby you have few ill impressions; but they failed, as is generally the case, in too much neglecting to cultivate your mind. Swift.

3. [In physick.] State of the body; state of the disease.

It was well; for we had rather met with calms and contrary winds, than any tempests; for our sick were many, and in very ill case. Bacon.

Chalybeate water seems to be a proper remedy in hypochondriacal cases. Arbutnot on Aliments.

4. History of a disease.

5. State of a legal question.

If he be not apt to heat over matters, and to call up one thing, to prove and illustrate another, let him study the lawyers cases; so every defect of the mind may have a special receipt. Bacon, Essays.

6. In ludicrous language, condition with regard to leanness, or fat. In case, is lusty or fat.

Thou liest, most ignorant monster; I am in case to jostle a constable. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Pray have but patience till then, and when I am in little better case, I'll throw myself in the very mouth of you.

L'Estrange.

Quoth Ralph, I should not, if I were
In case for action now be here.

Hudibras.

For if the sire be faint, or out of case,
He will be copied in his famish'd race.

Dryden, Virgil.

The priest was pretty well in case,
And shew'd some humour in his face;
Look'd with an easy careless mien,
A perfect stranger to the spleen.

Swift.

7. Contingence; possible event.

The atheist, in case things should fall out contrary to his belief or expectation, hath made no provision for this case; if, contrary to his confidence, it should prove in the issue that there is a God, the man is lost and undone for ever.

Tillotson.

8. Question relating to particular persons or things.

Well do I find each man most wise in his own case.

Sidney.

It is strange, that the ancient fathers should not appeal to this judge in all cases, it being so short and expedite a way for the ending of controversies.

Tillotson.

9. Representation of any fact or question.

10. The variation of nouns. The several changes which the noun undergoes in the Latin and Greek tongues, in the several numbers, are called cases, and are designed to express the several views or relations under which the mind considers things with regard to one another; and the variation of the noun for this purpose is called declension.

Clarke's Lat. Gram.

11. In case. [in caso, Ital.] If it should happen; upon the supposition that: a form of speech now little used.

For in case it be certain, hard it cannot be for them to shew us where we shall find it; that we may say these were the orders of the apostles.

Hooker.

A sure retreat to his forces, in case they should have an ill day, or unlucky chance in the field.

Bacon Hen. VII.

This would be the accomplishment of their common felicity, in case, either by their evil destiny or advice, they suffered not the occasion to be lost.

Hayward.

To CASE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put in a case or cover.

Case ye, case ye; on with your vizours, there's money of the king's coming down the hill.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

The cry went once for thee,

And still it might, and yet it may again,

If thou wouldst not entomb thyself alive,

And case thy reputation in a tent.

Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

Like a full'n cedar, far diffus'd his train,

Car'd in green scales, the crocodile extends.

Thomson.

2. To cover as a case.

Then comes my fit again, I had else been perfect;

As broad, and general, as the casing air,

To saucy doubts and fears.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

3. To cover on the outside with materials different from the inside.

Then they began to case their houses with marble.

Arbutnot.

4. To strip off the covering; to take off the skin.

We'll make you some sport with the fox ere we case him.

Shakspeare, All's well that ends well.

To CASE. v. n. To put cases; to contrive representations of facts: a ludicrous use.

They fell presently to reasoning and casing upon the matter with him, and laying distinctions before him.

L'Estrange.

To CASEHARDEN. v. a. [from case and harden.] To harden on the outside.

The manner of casehardening is thus: Take cow horn or hoof, dry it thoroughly in an oven, then beat it to powder; put about the same quantity of bay salt to it, and mingle them together with stale chamberlye, or else white wine vinegar. Lay some of this mixture upon loam, and cover your iron all over with it; then wrap the loam about all, and lay it upon the hearth of the forge to dry and harden. Put into the fire, and blow up the coals to it, till the whole lump have just a blood-red heat.

Moxon, Mech. Exercises.

CA'SEMATE.† n. s. [Ital. casamatta, from casa armata; Span. casamata; a vault formerly made to separate the platforms of the lower and upper batteries. Formerly written casamate.]

1. [In fortification.] A kind of vault or arch of stone-work, in that part of the flank of a bastion next the curtain, somewhat retired or drawn back towards the capital of the bastion, serving as a battery, to defend the face of the opposite bastion, and the moat or ditch.

Secure your casemates,

Here Master Picklock, sir, your man o' law

And learn'd attorney, has sent you a bag of munition.

B. Jonson, Staple of News.

2. The well, with its several subterraneous branches, dug in the passage of the bastion, till the miner is heard at work, and air given to the mine.

Harris.

CA'SEMENT. n. s. [casamento, Ital.] A window opening upon hinges.

Why, then may you have a casement of the great chamber window, where we play, open, and the moon may shine in at the casement.

Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dr.

Here in this world they do much knowledge read,

And are the casements which admit most light.

Dante.

They waken'd with the noise, did fly

From inward room to window eye,

And gently op'ning lid, the casement,

Look'd out, but yet with some amazement.

Hudibras.

There is as much difference between the clear representations of the understanding then, and the obscure discoveries that it makes now, as there is between the prospect of a casement and a key hole.

South.

CA'SEUS. adj. [caseus, Lat.] Resembling cheese; cheesy.

Its fibrous parts are from the caseous parts of the chyle.

Floyer on Humours.

CA'SERN.† n. s. [caserne, Fr.] A little room or lodgement erected between the rampart and the houses of fortified towns, to serve as apartments or lodgings for the soldiers of the garrison, with beds.

Harris.

A colonnade, hardly inferior to the Louvre, proves when inspected to be only a casern, or a barrack.

Wrazha, Berlin, i. 101.

CA'SEWORM. n. s. [from case and worm.] A grub that makes itself a case.

Caddises, or caseworms, are to be found in this nation, in several little brooks.

Floyer.

CASH.† n. s. [caisse, Fr. This etymology, given by Dr. Johnson, has been questioned. But our word certainly seems to have been used, originally, in the French sense. "She [the countess of Shrewsbury] is said to have amassed a great sum of money to some ill use: 20,000l. are known to be in her cash." Winwood's Memorials, iii. 281. Lat. capsa. The Su. cassa is cash.] Money; properly, ready money; money in the chest, or at hand.

A thief, bent to unhoard the cash

Of some rich burgher.

Milton, P. L.

He is at an end of all his cash, he has both his law and his daily bread now upon dust.

Arbutnot, John Bull.

He sent the thief, that stole the cash, away

And punish'd him that put it in his way.

Pope.

C A S

CA'SH-KEEPER. n. s. [from cash and keep.] A man entrusted with the money.

Dispensator was properly a cash-keeper, or privy-purse.

Arbutnot on Coins.

To CASH*. v. a. [from the noun.] A mercantile expression; as, to cash a bill, i. e. to give money for the promissory payment.

To CASH*. v. a. [from the Fr. casser. Perhaps the parent of our word cashier.] To discard.

And thereupon cashing the greatest part of his land army, he only retained one thousand of the best souldiers.

Sir A. Gorges, in Purchas's Pilgrim.

CA'SHEWNUT. n. s. A tree that bears nuts, not with shells but husks. Miller.

CASH'ER. † n. s. [from cash, and Teut. cassier, or kassier. Formerly written casheare.] He that has charge of the money.

Where's my casheare?

Are the summes right? Decker, Westward Hoe, 1607.

If a steward or cashier be suffered to run on, without bringing him to a reckoning, such a sottish forbearance will teach him to shuffle. South.

A Venetian, finding his son's expences grow very high, ordered his cashier to let him have no more money, than what he should count when he received it. Locke.

Flight of cashiers, or officers, he'll never mind;
And knows no losses, while the music is kind. Pope.

To CASH'ER. v. a. [casser, Fr. cassare, Lat.]

1. To discard; to dismiss from a post, or a society, with reproach.

Does 't not go well? Cassio hath beaten thee,
And then by that small hurt hast cashier'd Cassio. Shakspeare.

Seconds in factions many times prove principals; but many times also they prove cyphers, and are cashiered. Bacon.

If I had omitted what he said, his thoughts and words being thus cashiered in my hands, he had no longer been Lucretius. Dryden.

They have already cashiered several of their followers as mutineers. Addison, Frecholder.

The ruling rogue, who dreads to be cashier'd, Contrives, as he is hated, to be feared. Swift.

2. It seems, in the following passages, to signify the same as to annul; to vacate; which is sufficiently agreeable to the derivation.

If we should find a father corrupting his son, or a mother her daughter, we must charge this upon a peculiar anomaly and baseness of nature; if the name of nature may be allowed to that which seems to be utter cashiering of it, and deviation from, and a contradiction to, the common principles of humanity. South.

Some cashier, or at least endeavour to invalidate, all other arguments, and forbid us to hearken to those proofs, as weak or fallacious. Locke.

CA'SHOO.* n. s. The gum or juice of a tree in the East Indies.

CA'SING. n. s. [from To case.]

1. The covering of any thing; that which is used for covering.

2. In Northumberland, dried cowdung, used for fuel, has still the name of casings.

God permitted him to take other fuel, namely, cow's dung, dried casings, to bake his bread with. Waterland, Script. Vindic. iii. 94.

CASK. † n. s. [casque, Fr. cadus, Lat. Dr. Johnson says. But it may be from the Goth. kas, a vessel.]

1. A barrel; a wooden vessel to stop up liquour or provisions.

The patient turning himself abed, it makes a fluctuating kind of noise, like the rumbling of water in a cask. Harvey.

Perhaps to-morrow he may change his wine,
And drink old sparkling Alban, or Setine,

C A S

Whose title, and whose age, with mould o'ergrown,
The good old cask for ever keeps unknown. Dryden.

2. It has cash in a kind of plural sense, to signify the commodity or provision of casks.

Great inconveniences grow by the bad cask being commonly so ill seasoned and conditioned, as that a great part of the beer is ever lost and cast away. Raleigh.

To CASK*. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into a cask; as, to cask beer or wine.

CASK. n. s. [casque, Fr. cassis, Lat.] A helmet;

CASQUET. } armour for the head: a poetical word.

Let thy blows, doubly redoubled,
Fall like amazing thunder on the casque
Of thy pernicious enemy. Shakspeare.

And these

Sling weighty stones, when from afar they fight;
Their casques are cork, a covering thick and light. Dryden.

Why does he load with darts
His trembling hands, and crush beneath a cask
His wrinkled brows? Addison.

CASKET. n. s. [a diminutive of caisse, a chest, Fr. casse, cassette.] A small box or chest for jewels, or things of particular value.

They found him dead, and cast into the streets,
An empty casket, where the jewel, life,
By some damn'd hand was robb'd, and ta'en away. Shakspeare.

O ignorant poor man! what dost thou hear,
Lock'd up within the casket of thy breast?
What jewels, and what riches hast thou there?
What heav'nly treasure in so weak a chest? Davies.

Mine eye hath found that sad sepulchral rock,
That was the casket of Heav'n's richest store. Milton.

That had by chance pack'd up his choicest treasure
In one dear casket, and sav'd only that. Otway.

This casket India's glowing gems unlocks,
And all Arabia breathes from yonder box. Pope.

To CASKET. † v. a. [from the noun.] To put into a casket.

I have writ my letters, casketed my treasure, and given order for our horses. Shakspeare.

Casket them not up for holy reliques.

Sir M. Sandys, Essays, (1634.) p. 133.

To CASS*. v. a. [Fr. casser.] To annul; to dismiss; to make void.

Seventhly, to cass all old and unfaithful bands, and entertain new. Raleigh, Arts of Empire, p. 14.

To CASSATE. v. a. [casser, Fr. cassare, low Lat.] To vacate; to invalidate; to make void; to nullify.

This opinion supersedes and cassates the best medium we have. Ray on the Creation.

CASSATION. n. s. [cassatio, Lat.] A making null or void. Diet.

CA'SSAVI. } n. s. A plant. It is cultivated in all the CA'SSADA. } warm parts of America, where the root, after being divested of its milky juice, is ground to flour, and then made into cakes of bread. Of this there are two sorts. The most common has purplish stalks, with the veins and leaves of a purplish colour; but the stalks of the other are green, and the leaves of a lighter green. The last sort is not venomous, even when the roots are fresh and full of juice; which the negroes frequently dig up, roast, and eat, like potatoes, without any ill effects. Miller.

CA'SSAWARE. See CASSIOWARY.

CA'SSIA. n. s. A sweet spice mentioned by Moses, Ex. xxx. 24. as an ingredient in the composition of the holy oil, which was to be made use of in the consecration of the sacred vessels of the tabernacle. This aromattick is said to be the bark of a tree very like cinnamon, and grows in the Indies without being cultivated.

All thy garments smell of myrrh, aloes, and cassia.

Psalm xlv. 8.

CASSIA. n. s. The name of a tree.

It hath a cylindrical, long, taper, or flat pod, divided into many cells by transverse diaphragms; in each of which is contained one hard seed, lodged, for the most part, in a clammy black substance, which is purgative. The flowers have five leaves, disposed orbicularly.

Miller.

Locke.

CASSOCK. † n. s. [casaque, Fr. casaca, Span.]

1. Formerly part of the dress of a soldier; his loose outward coat; [casaque, hoqueton d'armes, saire, habit de soldat. Roquefort.]

Half of the which [soldiers] dare not shake the snow from off their cassocks, lest they shake themselves to pieces.

Shakspeare, All's Well.

He will never come within the sign of it, the sight of a cassock, or a musket-rest again.

B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour.

2. Part of the dress of a clergyman.

Persons ecclesiastical may use any comely and scholar-like apparel, provided that it be not cut or pink; and that in publick they go not in their doublet and hose, without coats or cassocks.

Con. and Can. Eccl. § 74.

What enemies were some ministers to periwigs, to high-crowned or broad-brimmed hats, to long cloaks and canonical coats; and now to long cassocks, since the Scotch jump is looked upon as the more military fashion, and a badge of a northern and cold reformation!

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 119.

His scanty salary compelled him to run deep in debt for a new gown and cassock, and now and then forced him to write some paper of wit or humour, or preach a sermon for ten shillings, to supply his necessities.

Swift.

CASSWEED. n. s. A common weed, otherwise called shepherd's pouch.

To CAST. † v. a. preter. cast; particip. past. cast. [kaster, Danish.] This is a word of multifarious and indefinite use.

1. To throw with the hand.

I rather chuse to endure the wounds of those darts, which envy casteth at novelty, than to go on safely and sleepily in the easy ways of ancient mistakings.

Raleigh.

They had compassed in his host, and cast darts at the people from morning till evening.

1 Macc. vii. 80.

Then cast thy sword away,

And yield thee to my mercy, or I strike.

Psalms lxxvi. 6.

18. To condemn in a criminal trial.

But oh, that treacherous breast! to whom weak you

Did trust our counsels, and we both may rue,

Having his falsehood found too late, 'twas he

That made me cast you guilty, and you me.

Donne.

We take up with the most incompetent witnesses, nay, often suborn our own surmises and jealousies, that we may be sure to cast the unhappy criminal.

Government of the Tongue.

He could not, in this forlorn case, have made use of the very last plea of a cast criminal; nor so much as have cried, Mercy! Lord, mercy!

South.

There then we met; both try'd, and both were cast,

And this irrevocable sentence past.

Dryden.

19. To overcome or defeat in a law-suit. [from cast, Fr.]

Canden's Remains.

Were the case referred to any competent judge, they would inevitably be cast.

Decay of Piety.

20. To defeat.

No martial project to surprise,

Can ever be attempted twice;

Nor cast design serve afterwards,

As gamblers tear their losing cards.

Hudibras.

21. To cashier.

You are but now cast in his mood, a punishment more in policy than in malice; even so as one would beat his offenceless dog, to affright an impetuous lion.

Shakspeare.

22. To leave behind in a race.

- In short, so swift your judgments turn and wind,
You cast our fleetest wits a mile behind. Dryden.
23. To shed; to let fall; to lay aside; to moult; to change for new.
Our chariot lost her wheels, their points our spears,
The bird of conquest her chief feather cast. Fairfax.
Of plants some are green all winter, others cast their leaves.
Baron, Nat. Hist.
- The casting of the skin is, by the ancients, compared to the breaking of the secundine, or cawl, but not rightly; for that were to make every casting of the skin a new birth: and besides, the secundine is but a general cover, not shaped according to the parts, but the skin is shaped according to the parts. The creatures that cast the skin, are the snake, the viper, the grasshopper, the lizard, the silkworm, &c. Bacon.
- O fertile head, which every year
Could such a crop of wonders bear!
Which might it never have been cast,
Each year's growth added to the last,
These lofty branches had supply'd
The earth's bold sons prodigious pride.
The waving harvest bends beneath his blast,
The forest shakes, the groves their honours cast. Waller.
From hence, my lord, and love, I thus conclude,
That though my homely ancestors were rude,
Mean as I am, yet may I have the grace
To make you father of a generous race:
And noble then am I, when I begin,
In virtue cloth'd, to cast the rags of sin. Dryden.
- The ladies have been in a kind of moulting season, having cast great quantities of ribbon and cambric, and reduced the human figure to the beautiful globular form. Addison.
24. To lay aside, as fit to be used or worn no longer.
So may cast poets write; there's no pretension
To argue loss of wit, from loss of pension.
He has ever been of opinion, that giving cast clothes to be worn by valets, has a very ill effect upon little minds. Dryden.
25. To have abortions; to bring forth before the time.
Thy ewes and thy she-goats have not cast their young.
Genesis, xxxi. 38.
26. To make to preponderate; to decide by overbalancing; to give overweight.
Which being inclined, not constrained, contain within themselves the casting act, and a power to command the conclusion. Brown, Vulg. Err.
How much interest casts the balance in cases dubious. South.
- Life and death are equal in themselves,
That which could cast the balance, is thy falsehood. Dryden.
Not many years ago, it so happened, that a cobbler had the casting vote for the life of a criminal, which he very graciously gave on the merciful side. Addison on Italy.
Suppose your eyes sent equal-rays
Upon two distant pots of ale,
In this sad state, your doubtful choice
Would never have the casting voice. Prior.
27. To compute; to reckon; to calculate; as to cast an account; taken from the old way of computing by counters.
What the pope hath lost since printing began, let him cast his counters. Fore's Martyrs.
Hearts, tongues, figure, scribes, bards, poets, cannot Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number, ho!
His love to Antony. Shakspeare.

Search for a jewel, that too casually

Hath left mine arm.

Shakspeare.

Wood new shorn, laid casually upon a vessel of verjuice, had drunk up the verjuice, though the vessel was without any flaw.

Racon.

I should have acquainted my judge with one advantage, and which I now casually remember.

Dryden.

CA'SUALNESS.* n. s. [from casual.] *Accidentalness.

CA'SUALTY.* n. s. [from casual.]

1. Accident; a thing happening by chance, not design.

With more patience men endure the losses that befall them by mere casualty, than the damages which they sustain by injustice.

Raleigh, Essays.

That Octavius Caesar should shift his camp that night that it happened to be took by the enemy, was a mere casualty; yet it preserved a person, who lived to establish a total alteration of government in the imperial city of the world.

South.

2. Chance that produces unnatural death.

Bulds in the weagher on the outward wall,

Ev'n in the force and road of casualty.

Shakspeare.

It is observed in particular nations, that, within the space of two or three hundred years, notwithstanding all casualties, the number of men doubles.

Burnet's Theory.

We find one casualty in our bills, of which, though there be daily talk, there is little effect.

Grant's Bills of Mortality.

CA'SUIST.* n. s. [casuiste, Fr. from casus, Lat.]

One that studies and settles cases of conscience.

The judgement of any casuist, or learned divine, concerning the state of a man's soul, is not sufficient to give him confidence.

South.

You can scarce see a bench of porters without two or three casuists in it, that will settle you the rights of princes.

Addison.

C A T

Who shall decide, when doctors disagree,
And soundest casuists doubt, like you and me?

Pope.

TO CA'SUIST.* n. n. [from the noun.] To play the casuist.

We never leave subtilizing and *casuist*ing, till we have straitened and pared that liberal path into a razor's edge to walk on.

Milton, Doct. and Dis. of Divorce, ii. 20.

CASUISTICAL.† adj. [from casuist.] Relating to cases of conscience; containing the doctrine relating to cases.

What arguments they have to beguile poor, simple, unstable souls with, I know not; but surely the practical, casuistical, that is, the principal, vital part of their religion savours very little of spirituality.

South.

There is a generation of men, who have framed their casuistical divinity to a perfect compliance with all the corrupt affections of a man's nature.

South, Serm. ii. 393.

CA'SUISTRY. n. s. [from casuist.] The science of a casuist; the doctrine of cases of conscience.

This concession would not pass for good casuistry in these ages.

Pope, Odyssey, Notes.

Morality, by her false guardians drawn,
Chicane in furs, and casuistry in lawn.

Pope, Dunciad.

CAT.† n. s. [katz, Teuton: chat, Fr. cat, Sax. old Fr. cat; has Bret. cat; low Lat. catulus, cattus. The Persian also is chat. See Sir T. Herbert's Trav. p. 317.] A domestick animal that catches mice, commonly reckoned by naturalists the lowest order of the leonine species.

'Twas you incens'd the rabble:
Cats, that can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries, which Heaven
Will not have earth to know.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

Thrice the brindled cat hath mew'd.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

A cat, as she beholds the light, draws the ball of her eye small and long, being covered over with a green skin, and dilates it at pleasure.

Peacham on Drawing.

CAT.† n. s. A sort of ship.

There are vessels, at this day, which are common upon the northern part of the English coast, and are called cats. Part of the harbour at Plymouth is called Catwater, undoubtedly from ships of this denomination, which were once common in those parts.

Bryant, Observ. on Rowley's Poems.

CAT.* n. s. A double trivet or tripod, having six feet; so called perhaps, from falling, as it is said of the cat, always on its legs.

CAT in the pan.† [imagined by some to be rightly written Catipan as coming from Catipania. An unknown correspondent imagines, very naturally, that it is corrupted from Cate in the pan, Dr. Johnson says. Some have imagined it to be connected with the Ital. accattare; whence accattapane, for a beggar. But our old writers do not countenance this. They write cat in the pan, whether cate or cake be intended or not. "Perchance this turning catte in the pan, is but as he dyd in the kinge's daies." Bp. Gardiner de Obed. transl. Roan, 1553. "A subtil turning the catte in the panne, or wresting of a false thing to some purpose." Huloet's Dict.]

There is a cunning which we, in England, call the turning of the cat in the pan; which is, when that which a man says to another, he lays it as if another had said it to him.

Bacon.

CAT o' nine tails. A whip with nine lashes, used for the punishment of crimes.

You dread reformers of an impious age,
You awful cat o' nine tails to the stage,
This once be just, and in our cause engage.

Prologue to Vanbrugh's False Friend.

CAT'S-PAW.* n. s. An expression of no great date or good authority in our language; but now com-

CAT-EYED.* adj. [from cat and eye.] Having eyes like a cat.

'If cat-ey'd, then a Pallas is their love;

If freckled, she's a party-colour'd dove.

Dryden, Lucret.

CATABAPTIST.* n. s. [from Gr. κατά and βαπτίζω.] He who is against, or who abuses, Baptism.

Of these anabaptists, or catabaptists, who differ no more than Bavius and Mævius, Alstedius maketh fourteen sorts.

Featley, Dippers Dipt, p. 23.

CATACHRESIS.† n. s. [κατάχρησις, abuse.] It is, in rhetorick, the abuse of a trope, when the words are too far wrested from their native signification, or when one word is abusively put for another, for want of the proper word; as, a voice beautiful to the ear.

Smith's Rhetorick.

I ask — if now and then he does not offer at a catachresis — wresting and torturing a word into another meaning.

Dryden, Ess. on Dram. Poesy.

Their skill in astronomy dwindled into that, which, by a great catachresis, is called judicial astrology.

Still, Orig. Sac. i. 3.

CATACHRESTICAL. adj. [from catachresis.] Contrary to proper use; forced; far fetched.

A catachrestical and far derived similitude it holds with men, that is, in a bifurcation.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

CATACHRESTICALLY.* adv. [from catachrestical.] In a forced or exaggerated manner.

Where, in divers places of Holy Writ, the denunciation against groves is so express, it is frequently to be taken but catachrestically.

Evckyn, iv. § 4.

CA'TACLYSM.† n. s. [old Fr. cataclisme, from Gr. κατακλῦσις.] A deluge; an inundation; used generally for the universal deluge.

The opinion that held these cataclysms and empyroses universal, was such, as held, that it put a total consummation unto things in this lower world.

Hale, Origin of Mankind.

CA'TACOMBS.† n. s. [from κατά and κομβος, a hollow or cavity. It has been pretended that the word was formerly catatombs from κατα and τρυβος, meaning a subterranean tomb. V. Morin, Dict. Etymol. Fr. and Gr. But catacombs is the true expression. See Greenhill's Art of Embalming, 1705, p. 96.] Subterraneous cavities for the burial of the dead; of which there are a great number about three miles from Rome, supposed to be the caves and cells where the primitive christians hid and assembled themselves, and where they interred the martyrs, which are accordingly visited with devotion. But, anciently, the word catacomb was only understood of the tombs of St. Peter and St. Paul.

Chambers.

On the side of Naples, are the catacombs, which must have been full of stench, if the dead bodies that lay in them were left to rot in open niches.

Addison.

CATACOUSTICKS.* n. s. pl. [Fr. catacoustique, from Gr. κατά and ακουω.] The science of reflected sounds; or that part of acousticks, which considers the properties of echoes.

Blow, winds, and crack your cheeks; rage, blow!
You cataracts and hurricanes, spout,
Till you have drench'd our steeples. Shakspeare.

What if all

Her stores were open'd, and this firmament
Of hell should spout her cataracts of fire?

No sooner he, with them of man and beast
Select for life, shall in the ark be lodg'd,
And shelter'd round; but all the cataracts
Of heav'n set open, on the earth shall pour Rain, day and night. Milton, P. L.

Torrents and loud impetuous cataracts,
Through roads abrupt, and rude unfashion'd tracts,
Run down the lofty mountain's channel'd sides,
And to the vale convey their foaming tides. Blackmore.

CA'TARACT. [In medicine.] A suffusion of the eye, when little clouds, motes, and flies, seem to float about in the air; when confirmed, the pupil of the eye is either wholly, or in part, covered, and shut up with a little thin skin, so that the light has no admittance. Quincy.

Saladine hath a yellow milk, which hath likewise much acrimony; for it cleanseth the eyes: it is good also for cataracts.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

CATA'RRH.† n. s. [old Fr. catarrhe, from the Gr. καταρρέω, to deflue.] A defluxion of a sharp serum from the glands about the head and throat, generally occasioned by a diminution of insensible perspiration, or cold, wherein what should pass by the skin, ouzes out upon those glands, and occasions irritations. The causes are whatsoever occasions too great a quantity of serum; whatsoever hinders the discharge by urine, and the pores of the skin.

Quincy.

All fev'rous kinds,
Convulsions, epilepsies, fierce catarrhs. Milton, P. L.
Neither was the body then subject to die by piecemeal, and languish under coughs, catarrhs, or consumptions. South.

1. The change or revolution, which produces the conclusion or final event of a dramatick piece.

Pat! — He comes like the catastrophe of the old comedy.

Shakspeare.

That philosopher declares for tragedies, whose catastrophes are unhappy, with relation to the principal characters. Dennis.

2. A final event; a conclusion generally unhappy.

Here was a mighty revolution, the most horrible and portentous catastrophe that nature ever yet saw; an elegant and habitable earth quite shattered. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

CAT'CAL. n. s. [from cat and call.] A squeaking instrument, used in the playhouse to condemn plays.

A young lady, at the theatre, conceived a passion for a notorious rake that headed a party of catcalls. Spectator.

Three catcalls be the bribe

Of him, whose chatt'ring shames the monkey tribe. Pope.

To CATCH. † v. a. preter. I caught, or caught; I have caught or caught. [ketzen, Dutch; katz, Su. a snare or trap to catch fish. Or may not the substantive cat, (Armor. kaz, Germ. katze or kaze) the animal which seizes suddenly on its prey, suggest the etymology of catch?]

1. To lay hold on with the hand; intimating the suddenness of the action.

And when he arose against me, I caught him by his beard, and smote him, and slew him. 1 Sam. xvii. 35.

2. To stop any thing flying; to receive any thing in the passage.

Others to catch the breeze of breathing air,
To Tusculum or Algidio repair. Addison on Italy.

3 To seize any thing by pursuit.

I saw him run after a gilded butterfly, and, when he caught it, he let it go again; and after it again; and over and over he comes, and up again; and caught it again. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

4. To stop any thing falling; to intercept falling.

A shepherd diverted himself with tossing up eggs, and catching them again. Spectator.

5. To ensnare; to entangle in a snare; to take or hold in a trap.

And they sent unto him certain of the Pharisees and of the Herodians, to catch him in his words. St. Mark. xii. 13.

Catch'd with a trick? well, I must bear it patiently.

Beaum. and Fl. Hum. Lieutenantant.

These artificial methods of reasoning are more adapted to catch and entangle the mind, than to instruct and inform the understanding. Locke.

6. To receive suddenly.

The curling smoke mounts heavy from the fires,
At length it catches flame, and in a blaze expires. Dryden.

But stopp'd for fear, thus violently driv'n,
The sparks should catch his axletree of heav'n. Dryden.

7. To fasten suddenly upon; to seize.

To catch something out of his mouth, that they might accuse him. Luke, xi. 54.

9. To seize eagerly.

They have caught up every thing greedily, with that busy minute curiosity, and unsatisfactory inquisitiveness, which Seneca calls the disease of the Greeks. Pope.

I've perus'd her well;

Beauty and honour in her are so mingled,
That they have caught the king. Shakspeare, Henry VIII.

10. To please; to seize the affections; to charm.

For I am young, a novice in the trade,

The fool of love, unpractis'd to persuade,
And want the soothing arts that catch the fair,
But, caught myself, lie struggling in the snare. Dryden.

11. To receive any contagion or disease.

I cannot name the disease, and it is caught
Of you that yet are well. Shakspeare, Wind. Tale.

Those measles,

Which we disdain should tetter us, yet seek
The very way to catch them. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

In sooth I know not why I am so sad:

It wearies me; you say it wearies you;

But how I caught it, found it, or came by it,

I am to learn. Shakspeare, Merchant of Venice.

The softest of our British ladies expose their necks and arms to the open air, which the men could not do, without catching cold, for want of being accustomed to it. Addison, Guardian.

Or call the winds through long arcades to roar,

Proud to catch cold at a Venetian door. Pope.

12. To catch at. To endeavour suddenly to lay hold on.

Saucy lictors

Will catch at us like strumpets, and scald rhimers

Ballad us out of tune. Shakspeare, Antony and Cleopatra.

Make them catch at all opportunities of subverting the state. Addison, State of the War.

13. To catch as catch may. To seize indiscriminately.

Mine, or thine be nothing, all things equal,

And catch as catch may, be proclaim'd.

Beaum. and Fl. Loyal Subject.

14. To catch up. To snatch.

He was caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words. 2 Cor. xii. 4.

Sometimes they thought he might be only shown,

And for a time caught up to God, as once

Moses was in the mount, and missing long. Milton, P. R. ii. 14.

15. To catch a Tartar. To be caught in the trap one has laid for another; instead of taking an enemy, to be taken by him. The phrase is probably owing to some particular story.

In this defeat they lost about 5000 men, besides those that were taken prisoners: — so that, instead of catching the Tartar, they were caught themselves.

Life of the Duke of Tyrconnel, 1689.

To CATCH. v. n.

1. To be contagious; to spread infection, or mischief.

'Tis time to give them physick, their diseases

Are grown so catching. Shakspeare, Henry VIII.

CATCHPENNY.* n. s. [from catch and penny.] A worthless pamphlet, merely calculated to gain a little money.

CATCHPOLL.† n. s. [from catch and poll, Dr. Johnson says; that is, seizing a person by the poll or neck. The Welsh have ceispoll for this word. The old French language "chacepol, un bailiff." Lacombe; and "chacepol, sergent préposé a la levée des impôts." Roquefort. Catchpoll, though now it be used as a word of contempt, yet, in ancient times, seems to have been used without reproach, for such as we now call serjeants of the mace, or any other that uses to arrest men upon any cause. Cowel.] A serjeant; a bumbailiff.

When day was come, the magistratus sent catchepolls, and sciden, deliver thou the men.

Wicliffe, Acts xvi.

They call all temporal businesses undersheriffries, as if they were but matters for undersheriffs and catchpolls; though many times those undersheriffries do more good than their high speculations.

Bacon, Essays.

One drop of blood

Shed from this arm is recompence enough, Though you had cut the throats of all the Catchpools

In France, nay in the world.

Braum. and Fl., Honest Man's Fortune.

Another monster,

Sullen of aspect, by the vulgar call'd

A catchpoll, whose polluted hands the gods,

With force incredible and magick charms,

Erst have endr'd, if he his ample palm

Should haply on ill-fated shoulder lay

Of debtor.

Philips.

CA'TCHUP.* n. s. sometimes written, improperly, ketchup. A poignant liquor made from boiled mushrooms, mixed with salt; used in cookery to add a pleasant flavour to sauces.

I will catechise the world for him; that is, make questions, and bid them answer.

Shakspeare, Othello.

κατηχέω is derived from ἐχέω, and significth originally and properly catechizing, or such a kind of teaching wherein the principles of religion, or of any art or science, are often inculcated, and by sounding and resounding beat into the ears of children or novices; but yet it is taken in Holy Scripture in a larger sense, not only for catechizing of children, but instructing men of riper years in the doctrine of salvation.

Featley, Dippers Dipt. p. 31.

Had those three thousand souls been catechised by our modern casuists, we had seen a wide difference. Decay of Piety.

2. To question; to interrogate; to examine; to try by interrogatories.

Why then I suck my teeth, and catechise

My piked man of countries.

Shakspeare, K. John.

Catechise gross ignorance; purge Italy of luxury and riot.

Burton, Anal. of Mel. To the Reader, p. 59.

There flies about a strange report,

Of some express arriv'd at court;

I'm stopp'd by all the fools I meet,

And catechis'd in every street.

Swift.

CA'TECHISER.† n. s. [from To catechise.] One who catechises.

He that is a reader, preacher, or catechiser,

Con. and Can. Eccl. § 56.

This is an admirable way of teaching, wherein the catechised will at length find delight, and by which the catechiser, if he once get the skill of it, will draw out of ignorant and silly souls even the dark and deep points of religion.

Herbert, Country Parson, ch. 21.

Hark you, good Maria,
Have you got a good catechiser here?

Beaum. and Fl. Tamer tamed.

CA'TECHISING.* n. s. [from the verb.] Interrogation; examination.

You must hear long-winded exercises, sittings, and catechisings, which you are not given to. B. Jonson, Epicene.

CA'TECHISM. n. s. [from κατηχησμι.] A form of instruction by means of questions and answers, concerning religion.

Ways of teaching there have been sundry always usual in God's church; for the first introduction of youth to the knowledge of God, the Jews, even till this day, have their catechisms. Hooker.

*He had no catechism but the creation, needed no study but reflection, and read no book but the volume of the world. South.

CA'TECHIST. n. s. [from κατηχητης.] One whose charge is to instruct by questions, or to question the uninstructed concerning religion.

None of years and knowledge was admitted, who had not been instructed by the catechist in this foundation, which the catechist received from the bishop. Hammond, Fundam.

CATECHISTICAL.* adj. [from catechist.] Instructing by question and answer.

S. Cyril—was the author of those catechistical sermons or institutions which are mentioned by S. Jerome.

Bp. Cosin, Canon of Scripture, § 58.

All these are short pieces; some of them are in the catechistical method. Burke, Abr. of Eng. Hist. ii. 2.

CATECHISTICALLY.* adv. [from catechistical.] In a catechistical manner.

The principles of Christianity, briefly and catechistically taught them, is enough to save their souls. South, Sermon vii. 100.

CATECHUMEN.† n. s. [old Fr. catechumene, from the Gr. κατηχημενος.]

1. One who is yet in the first rudiments of christianity; the lowest order of christians in the primitive church.

The prayers of the church did not begin in St. Austin's time, till the catechumens were dismissed. Stillington.

2. Generally, one who is in the first rudiments of any profession.

The same language is still held to the catechumens in Jacobitism. Bolingbroke to Wyndham.

CATECHUMENICAL. adj. [from catechumen.] Belonging to the catechumens. Dict.

CATECHUMENIST.* n. s. The same as catechumen.

Hence their forenamed authors assume, that the children of the faithful dying without baptism, may be thought to receive the baptism of the spirit, as well as those catechumenists spoken of, &c. Bp. Morton, Cath. Appeals, p. 248.

CATEGORICAL.† adj. [from category, old Fr. catégorique. Cotgrave.] Absolute; adequate; positive; equal to the thing to be expressed.

The king's commissioners desired to know whether the parliament's commissioners did believe, that bishops were unlawful? They could never obtain a categorical answer. Clarendon.

A single proposition, which is also categorical, may be divided again into simple and complex. Watts's Logic.

CATEGORICALLY.† adv. [from categorical.]

1. Directly; expressly.

We must not look, from them, for either discourses, or demonstrations, or positions, directly and categorically to this purpose. Folgerby, Atheom. p. 295.

2. Positively; plainly.

I dare affirm, and that categorically, in all parts where ever trade is great, and continues so, that trade must be nationally profitable. Child's Discourse of Trade.

CATEGORY. n. s. [Gr. κατηγορια.] A class; a rank: an order of ideas; a predicament.

The absolute infinitude, in a manner, quite changes the nature of beings, and exalts them into a different category. Cheyne.

CATENARIAN. adj. [from catena, Lat.] Relating to a chain; resembling a chain.

In geometry, the catenarian curve is formed by a rope or chain, hanging freely between two points of suspension. Harris.

The back is bent after the manner of the catenarian curve, by which it obtains that curvature that is safest for the included marrow. Cheyne, Philosophical Principles.

To CATENATE. v. a. [from catena, Lat.] To chain. Dict.

CATENATION. n. s. [from catena, Lat.] Link; regular connexion.

This catenation, or consering union, whenever his pleasure shall divide, let go, or separate, they shall fall from their existence. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To CATER. v. n. [from cate.] To provide food; to buy in victuals.

He that doth the ravens feed,

Yea providently caters for the sparrow,

Be comfort to my age.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

CATER.† n. s. [from the verb.] Provider; collector of provisions, or victuals: misprinted perhaps for caterer, Dr. Johnson says; and abbreviated from acater, old English, according to Mr. Mason. Both are mistaken. There are few substantives more frequent in our ancient language than cater.

"A cater, or purveyor of victuals," Huloet's Dict.

"Cater, a steward, manciple, provider of meats,"

Barret's Alv. "A cater, Fr. despenseur," Sherwood's Fr. and Eng. Dict.

We call to witness of their fastings, and great pains they take for the church, their faces and bellies, their caters, butlers, and cooks. Harmer, Tr. of Beza's Sermons, p. 377.

Your meat should be both neat, and cleanly handled.

See, Sweet, I am cook myself, and mine own cater.

Beaum. and Fl. Women plea'd.

A lady's dainty hand,

Th' ambitious cater of her own delight,

Had curiously rais'd an antick hand

Of banquet powers.

Baumont's Psycho, iv. 127.

The servant for employment; the cater for the provision, and the cook of the provision.

Austin's Hec Homo, p. 116.

The oysters dredged in this Lyner, find a welcome acceptance, where the taste is cater for the stomach, than those of the Tamar. Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

CATER. n. s. [quatre, Fr.] The four of cards and dice.

CATER-COUSIN. n. s. A corruption of quatre-cousin, from the ridiculousness of calling cousin or relation to so remote a degree.

His master and he, saving your worship's reverence, are source cater-cousins. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Poetry and reason, how come these to be cater-cousins?

Rymer, Tragedies of the last Age.

CATERER. n. s. [from cater.] One employed to select and buy in provisions for the family; the providore or purveyor.

Let no scent offensive the chamber infest;

Let fancy, not cost, prepare all our dishes;

Let the caterer mind the taste of each guest;

And the cook, in his dressing, comply with their wishes.

B. Jonson, Tetrach Academy.

He made the greedy ravens to be Elias's caterers, and bring him food. King Charles.

Seldom shall one see in cities or courts that athletic vigour, which is seen in poor houses, where nature is their cook, and necessity their caterer. South.

CATERESS. n. s. [from cater.] A woman employed to cater, or provide victuals.

Impostor! do not charge most innocent nature,

As if she would her children should be riotous

With her abundance! she, good cateress,

Means her provision only to the good.

Milton, Comus.

CA'TERPILLAR. n. s. [This word Skinner and Minshew are inclined to derive from chatte peluse, a weasel; it seems easily deducible from cates, food, and piller, Fr. to rob; the animal that eats up the fruits of the earth.]

1. A worm, which, when it gets wings, is sustained by leaves and fruits.

The caterpillar breedeth of dew and leaves; for we see infinite caterpillars breed upon trees and hedges, by which the leaves of the trees or hedges are consumed. Bacon.

Auster is drawn with a pot pouring forth water, with which descend grasshoppers, caterpillars, and creatures bred by moisture. Peacham on Drawing.

2. Any thing voracious and useless.

CA'TERPILLAR. n. s. [scorpioides, Lat.] The name of a plant. Miller.

To CA'TERWAUL. v. n. [from cat, and waul, to howl. Formerly written caterwaul by Chaucer, and revived by Pope.]

1. To make a noise as cats in rutting time.

She licks her fair round face, and frisks abroad,
To shew her fur, and to be caterwaul'd. Pope.

2. To make any offensive or odious noise.

What a caterwauling do you keep here? If my lady has not called up her steward Malvolio, and bid him turn you out of doors, never trust me. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

Was no dispute between
The caterwauling brethren. Hudibras.

CA'TERY.* n. s. The depository of victuals purchased. "Serjeant de l'acaterie, serjeant of the caterie."

Kilham, Norm. Dict.

CATES. n. s. [Skinner imagines it may be corrupted from delicate, which is not likely, because Junius observes that the Dutch have kater in the same sense with our cater. It has no singular, Dr. Johnson says. I have shewn that it has. And the etymology is rather from the old Fr. acat. See ACATES.] Viands; food; dish of meat: generally employed to signify nice and luxurious food.

The fair acceptance, Sir, creates

The entertainment perfect, not the cates. R. Jonson.

O wasteful riot, never well content

With low priz'd fare; hunger ambitious

Of cates by land and sea far fetcht and sent. Raleigh.

Alas, how simple to these cates,

Was that crude apple that diverted Eve! Milton, P. L.

They by th' alluring odour drawn in haste

Fly to the dulcet cates, and crouding sip

Their palatable baue. Philips.

With costly cates she stain'd her frugal board,

Then with ill-gotten wealth she bought a lord. Arbutnot.

CA'TFISH. n. s. The name of a sea-fish in the West Indies; so called from its round head and large glaring eyes, by which they are discovered in hol-low rocks. Philips.

CA'TGUT.* n. s.

1. A string for fiddles and other instruments, made of the intestines of animals.

2. A species of linen or canvas with wide interstices.

CA'THARIST.* n. s. [from the Gr. katharos, pure.] One who holds himself more pure than others; one whom Coles denominates a puritan. It is indeed a name that has been usurped by sectarists at various periods.

They whom they called in ancient times Catharists as also the Donatists, — make good proof hereof.

Harnar, Tr. of Beza's Sermon, p. 88.

Catharists — deny children baptism, affirming that they have no original sin, and pretending themselves to be pure and without sin. Pagitt's Heresiography, p. 28.

CA'THARPINGS. n. s. Small ropes in a ship, running in little blocks from one side of the shrouds to the other, near the deck; they belong only to the main shrouds; and their use is to force the shrouds tight, for the ease and safety of the masts, when the ship rolls. Harris.

CATHA'RTICAL. adj. [Fr. cathartique, from the Gr. καθαρτικός.]

Quicksilver precipitated either with gold, or without addition, into a powder, is wont to be strongly enough cathartical, though the chymists have not proved, that either gold or mercury bath any salt, much less any that is purgative.

Boyle, Sceptical Chymistry.

CATHA'RTICALNESS. n. s. [from cathartical.] Purging quality.

CATHA'RTICKS. n. s. Purging medicines. The vermicular or peristaltick motion of the guts continually helps on their contents from the pylorus to the rectum: and every irritation either quickens that motion in its natural order, or occasions some little inversions in it. In both, what but slightly adheres to the coats will be loosened, and they will be more agitated, and thus rendered more fluid. By this only it is manifest, how a cathartick hastens and increases the discharges by stool; but where the force of the stimulus is great, all the appendages of the bowels, and all the viscera in the abdomen, will be twiched; by which a great deal will be drained back into the intestines, and made a part of what they discharge. Quincy.

Lustrations and catharticks of the mind were sought for, and all endeavour used to calm and regulate the fury of the passions. Decay of Piety.

The piercing causticks ply their spiteful power,
Emeticks ranch, and keen catharticks scour. Garth.

Plato has called mathematical demonstrations the catharticks or purgatives of the soul. Addison, Spectator

CA'THEAD. n. s. A kind of fossil.

The nodules with leaves in them, called catheads, seem to consist of a sort of iron stone, not unlike that which is found in the rocks near Whitehaven in Cumberland, where they call them catcaups. Woodward on Fossils.

CA'THEAD. n. s. [In a ship.] A piece of timber with two shivers at one end, having a rope and a block, to which is fastened a great iron hook, to trice up the anchor from the hawse to the top of the forecastle. Sua Dict.

CATHE'DRAL. adj. [from the Gr. καθίστα; whence the Lat. cathedra, a chair of authority; an episcopal see; Fr. cathedrale.]

1. Episcopal; containing the see of a bishop.

A cathedral church is that wherein there are two or more persons, with a bishop at the head of them, that do make as it were one body politick. Ayliffe, Parergon.

Methought I sat in seat of majesty

In the cathedral church of Westminster. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

2. Belonging to an episcopal church.

His constant and regular assisting at the cathedral service was never interrupted by the sharpness of weather. Locke.

3. In low phrase, antique; venerable; old. This seems to be the meaning in the following lines.

Here aged trees cathedral walks compose,

And mount the hill in venerable rows;

There the green infants in their beds are laid. Pope.

CATHE'DRAL. n. s. The head church of a diocese.

There is nothing in Leghorn so extraordinary as the cathedral, which a man may view with pleasure, after he has seen St. Peter's. Addison on Italy

CATHEDRATED.* adj. [from the Lat. cathedra.] Relating to the authority of the chair, or office, of a teacher. In Spain, a cathedratick doctor [catedratico] is a well-known phrase.

If his reproof be private, or with the cathedrated authority of a prælector or publick reader.

Whitlock, Manners of the Eng. p. 385.

CATHERINE PEAR. See PEAR.

For streaks of red were mingled there,
Such as are on a Catherine pear,
The side that's next the sun.

Suckling.

CATHETER.† n. s. [Gr. καθετήρ, from καθίμι, to introduce.] A hollow and somewhat crooked instrument, to thrust into the bladder, to assist in bringing away the urine, when the passage is stopped by a stone or gravel.

A large clyster, suddenly injected, hath frequently forced the urine out of the bladder; but if it fail, a catheter must help you.

Wiseman's Surgery.

CATHOLES. n. s. [In a ship.] Two little holes astern above the gun-room ports, to bring in a cable or hawser through them to the capstain, when there is occasion to heave the ship astern.

Sea Dict.

CATHOLICAL.* adj. [Gr. καθολικός, Lat. catholicus.] General.

The catholical nativities were so much believed by the ancient kings, saith Haly, that they enquired into the genitures of the principal nati under their dominions.

Gregory's Works, p. 31.

Thou the head shalt be o'er all:

Have I not sworn thee king, true king catholicall?

Morre, Song of the Soul, i. 37.

CATHOLICISM.† n. s. [Fr. catholicisme.]

1. Adherence to the catholic church. This is all which Dr. Johnson offers on this sense of the word, without any example. Adherence to a part of the catholic church is shewn in the following example.

Though they conform to the Roman catholic mode of worship, they are looked upon in the light of unbelievers; but—all the gipsies I have conversed with, assured me of their sound catholicism.

Swimburne, Travels through Spain, Lett. 29.

2. Universality, or the orthodox faith of the whole church, called catholic, that is, universal.

There is a church which is holy, and which is catholic; and I understand that church alone, which is both catholic and holy; and, being this holiness and catholicism are but affections of this church which I believe, I must first declare what is the nature and notion of the church, &c.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 9.

Near akin to their notion of church-authority, is that of catholicism.—A particular church, indeed, may be catholic in one sense, i. e. true, sound, and pure, and holding the catholic doctrine; but not catholic, i. e. universal. To say Roman-Catholic therefore, as they [the Papists] mean it, is to say part-whole; which is a contradiction. The church of Rome, notwithstanding her boasts, is but a part of the catholic church.

Trapp, Popery truly stated, i. § 2.

TO CATHOLICISE.* v. n. To catholicise it; to play the catholic; to become a catholic.

Cotgrave in V. Catholicizer.

CATHOLICK.† adj. [catholique, Fr. καθολικός, universal or general.]

1. The church of Jesus Christ is called catholic, because it extends throughout the world, and is not limited by time.

Catholic signifieth not the Romish church: it signifieth the consent of all true teaching churches of all times, and all ages.

Rogers, in Foxe's Acts and Monuments, 1555.

There are no truths are said to be catholic, because they are believed by all the faithful.

3. Catholic is often set in opposition to heretick or sectary, and to schismatick.

4. Catholic, or canonical epistles, are seven in number; that of St. James, two of St. Peter, three of St. John, and that of St. Jude. They are called catholic, because they are directed to all the faithful, and not to any particular church; and canonical, because they contain excellent rules of faith and morality.

Calmet.

5. General, in the common sense.

We observe the Fathers to use the word catholic for nothing else but general or universal, in the ordinary or vulgar sense; as the catholic resurrection is the resurrection of all men; the catholic opinion, the opinion of all men.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 9.

Doubtless the success of those your great and catholic endeavours will promote the empire of man over nature, and bring plentiful accession of glory to your nation.

Glanville, Scopsis.

Those systems undertake to give an account of the formation of the universe, by mechanical hypotheses of matter, moved either uncertainly, or according to some catholic laws.

Ray.

CATHOLICKLY.* adv. [from catholic.] Generally.

No druggist of the soul bestow'd on'all

So catholicly a curing cordiall.

Sir T. Cory, Elegy on the death of Donne.

CATHOLICKNESS.* n. s. [from catholic.] Universality.

One may judge of the catholicness, which Romanists brag of, and challenge on two accounts.

Brevint, Saul and Samuel at Endor, p. 10.

CATHOLICON. n. s. [from catholic, καθολικόν ἵαμα.]

An universal medicine.

Preservation against that sin, is the contemplation of the last judgement. This is indeed a catholicon against all; but we find it particularly applied by St. Paul to judging and despising our brethren.

Government of the Tongue.

CATILINISM.* n. s. An old substantive in our language for conspiracy, from Catiline the conspirator against his own country. [Fr. catilinisme.]

Cotgrave, and Coles.

CATKINS. n. s. [kattkens, Dutch. In botany.] An assemblage of imperfect flowers hanging from trees, in manner of a rope or cat's tail; serving as male blossoms, or flowers of the trees, by which they are produced.

Chambers.

CATLIKE. adj. [from cat and like.] Like a cat.

A lioness, with udders all drawn dry,

Lay couching head on ground, with catlike watch.

Shakspeare.

CATLING. n. s.

1. A dismembering knife, used by surgeons. Harris.

2. It seems to be used by Shakspeare for catgut; the materials of fiddle strings.

What musick there will be in him after Hector has knocked out his brains, I know not. But, I am sure, none; unless the fiddler Apollo get his sinews to make catlings of.

Shakspeare.

3. The down or moss growing about walnut trees, resembling the hair of a cat.

Harris.

CATMINT.† n. s. [Sax. cattēymint, cataria, Lat.] The name of a plant.

Miller.

Diel.

CATO'PTER.* } n. s. [Gr. κατόπτρον.] A kind of optick

CATO'PTRON. } glass; an optical instrument. Diel.

CATO'PTRICAL. adj. [from catoptricks.] Relating to catoptricks, or vision by reflection.

C A V

A catoptrical or dioptrical heat is superiour to any, vitrifying the hardest substances. Arbutnot on Air.

CATO'PTRICKS. † n. s. [Fr. catoptrique, from the Gr. κατοπτρον, a looking glass.] That part of opticks which treats of vision by reflectic n.

To see strange uncouth sights by catoptricks.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 210.

CAT'PIPE. n. s. [from cat and pipe.] The same with catcal, an instrument that makes a squeaking noise.

Some songsters can no more sing in any chamber but their own, than some clerks can read in any book but their own; put them out of their road once, and they are mere catpipes and dunces. L'Estrange.

CAT'S-EYE. n. s. A stone.

Cat's-eye is of a glistening grey, interchanged with a straw colour. Woodward on Fossils.

CAT'S-FOOT. n. s. An herb; the same with alchoof, or ground-ivy; which see.

CAT'S-HEAD. n. s. A kind of apple.

Cat's-head, by some called the go-no-further, is a very large apple, and a good bearer. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CAT'SILVER. n. s. A kind of fossile.

Catsilver is composed of plates that are generally plain and parallel, and that are flexible and elastick; and is of three sorts, the yellow or golden, the white or silvery, and the black. Woodward on Fossils.

CATS-TAIL. n. s.

1. A long round substance, that grows in winter upon nut-trees, pines, &c.

2. A kind of reed which bears a spike like the tail of a cat. Philips's World of Words.

CAT'SUP. n. s. A kind of Indian pickles, imitated by pickled mushrooms. See CATCHUP.

And, for our home-bred British cheer, Botanico, &c. p. and cavier. Siegf.

CAT'TLE. † n. s. [a word of very common use, but of doubtful or unknown etymology. It is derived by Skinner, Menage, and Spelman, from capitalia, que ad caput pertinent; personal goods: in which sense chattels is yet used in our law. Mandeville uses catle for price. The old Fr. catel means moveables of any kind. Kelham, Norm. Dict. But see CHATTLE. A learned friend informs me, that chattail is a provincial term about Lyons in France for all the beasts of every kind that are on an estate.]

1. Beasts of pasture: not wild nor domestick.

Make poor men's cattle break their necks. Shakspeare.
And God made the beast of the earth after his kind, and cattle after their kind, and every thing that creepeth upon the earth after his kind. Gen. i. 25.

2. It is used in reproach of human beings.

Boys and women are for the most part cattle of this colour. Shakspeare, As you like it.

CAVALCA'DE. † n. s. [old Fr. cavalcade, "a rattling or a road of horse, whence faire la cavalcade, to course or range up and down on horseback." Cotgrave. It is from the Ital. cavalcare; low Lat. caballicare, from cabullus; whence also the Span. cabalgar.] A procession on horseback.

Your cavalcade the fair spectators view,
From their high standings, yet look up to you:
Froth your brave train each singles out a ray,
And longs to date a conquest from your day. Dryden.

How must the heart of the old man rejoice, when he saw such a numerous cavalcade of his own raising? Addison.

CAVALIER. † n. s. [cavalier, Fr.]

1. A horseman; a knight.

C A U

It is reported, that Taliacotus had at one time in his house twelve German counts, nineteen French marquesses, and a hundred Spanish cavaliers. Taller, No. 260.

2. A gay sprightly military man.

For who is he, whose chin is but enrich'd
With one appearing hair, that will not follow
These cull'd and choice drawn cavaliers to France?

Shakspeare, Henry VIII.

Sedition cometh of tyranny, insolency, or mutinous disposition of certain captains, cavaliers, or ringleaders of the people. Raleigh, Acts of Empire, p. 101.

3. The appellation of the party of King Charles the First; so called from the gaiety which they affected in opposition to the sour faction of the parliament.

Each party grows proud of that appellation, which their adversaries at first intend as a reproach: of this sort were the Guelfs and Gibelines, Huguenots, and Cavaliers. Swift.

4. In fortification, a mount or elevation of earth, raised in a fortress, to lodge cannon for scouring the field, and to overlook and command all around the place.

Our casemates, cavaliers, and counterscarps,
Are well survey'd by all our engineers.

Heywood's Four P. Reed's Old Plays.

CAVALIER. adj. [from the substantive.]

1. Gay; sprightly; warlike.

2. Generous; brave.

The people are naturally not valiant, and not much cavalier. Now it is the nature of cowards to hurt, where they can receive none. Suckling.

3. Disdainful; haughty.

CAVALIERLY. † adv. [from cavalier.] Haughtily; arrogantly; disdainfully.

Several writers, who profess to believe the Christian religion, treat Moses and his dispensation so cavalierly, that one would suspect they thought the abandoning him could have no consequences destructive of Christianity.

Warburton, Alliance of Ch. and State, (1st. edit.) p. 157.

He [Warburton] very cavalierly tells us, that these notes were among the amusements of his younger years.

Edwards, Canons of Criticism, Pref. p. 9.

CAVALIERNESS.* n. s. [from cavalier.] Haughty or disdainful conduct.

CAVALRY. † n. s. [cavalerie, Fr. Formerly written, like the French word, in four syllables. "These regiments and cavalry were contented to enter Holland," Sir R. Williams, Actions of the Low Countries, p. 113.] Horse troops; bodies of men furnished with horses for war.

If a state rim most to gentlemen, and the husbandmen and plowmen be but as their workfolks, you may have a good cavalry, but never good stable bands of foot.

Bacon, Henry VII.

Their cavalry, in the battle of Blenheim, could not sustain the shock of the British horse. Addison on the War.

To CA'VATE. v. a. [cavo, Lat.] To hollow out; to dig into a hollow.

CAVA'ZION. n. s. [from cavo, Lat. In architecture.] The hollowing or underdigging of the earth for cellarage; allowed to be the sixth part of the height of the whole building. Phillips.

CA'UDAE.* adj. [from the Lat. cauda.] Relating to the tail of an animal.

The tail, instead of scuta, is furnished with sub-caudal squamæ, which are counted not singly, but by pairs.

Russell on Indian Serpents.

CA'UDATE.* } adj. [Lat. caudatus.] Having a tail; CAUDATED. } tailed.

How comate, caudate, crinite stars are fram'd,
I know.

Fairfax, Tasso.

CA'UDEBECK. n. s. A sort of light hats, so called from a town in France where they were first made. Phillips.

CA'UDLE. n. s. [chaudeau, Fr.] A mixture of wine and other ingredients, given to women in childbed, and sick persons.

Ye shall have a henpen caudle then, and the help of a hatchet. Shakspeare, Henry VI.

He had good broths, caudle, and such like; and I believe he did drink some wine. Wiceman, Surgery.

To CA'UDLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To make caudle; to mix as caudle.

Will the cold brook,
Candied with ice, caudle thy morning toast,
To cure thy o'ernight's surfeit? Shakspeare, Timon.

CAVE. † n. s. [Fr. cave, Lat. cavea, from cavus, hollow; which is from the Gr. χᾶος, Eoikē χαῖος, chavus. V. Morin, Etym. Dict. Fr. and Gr.]

1. A cavern; a den; a hole entering horizontally under the ground; a habitation in the earth.

The wrathful skies
Gallow the very wand'ers of the dark,
And make them keep their caves. Shakspeare, King Lear.

Bid him bring his power
Before sun-rising, lest his son George fall
Into the blind cave of eternal night. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

They did square, and carve, and polish their stone and marble works, even in the very cave of the quarry. Wotton.

Through this a cave was dug with vast expence,
The work it seem'd of some suspicious prince. Dryden.

2. Hollow; any hollow place. Not used.

The object of sight doth strike upon the pupil of the eye directly; whereas the cave of the ear doth hold off the sound a little. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To CAVE. v. n. [from the noun.] To dwell in a cave.

Such as we
Cave here, haunt here, are outlaws. Shakspeare.

To CAVE.* v. a. [Fr. caver, to hollow, Cotgrave; from the Lat. cavare.] To make hollow.

Under a steep hill's side it placed was,
There where the mouldred earth had cav'd the bank. Spenser, F. Q. iv. v. 33.

CA'VEAT. n. s. [caveat, Lat. let him beware.] Intimation of caution.

A caveat is an intimation given to some ordinary or ecclesiastical judge by the act of man, notifying to him, that he ought to beware how he acts in such or such an affair. Lyttle.

The chiefest caveat in reformation must be to keep out the Scots. Spenser on Ireland.

I am in danger of commencing poet, perhaps laureat; pray desire Mr. Rowe to enter a caveat. Trumbull to Pope.

CAVERN. † n. s. [old Fr. cavérne, from caverna, Lat.] A hollow place in the ground.

Where wilt thou find a cavern dark enough
To mask thy monstrous visage? Shakspeare, Julius Cæsar.

Monsters of the foaming deep,
From the deep ooze, and gelid cavern round,
They flounce and tremble in unwieldy joy. Thomson.

CA'VERNEB. adj. [from cavern.]

1. Full of caverns; hollow; excavated.

Embattled troops, with flowing banners, pass
Through flow'ry meads, delighted; nor distrust
The smiling surface; whilst the cavern'd ground
Bursts fatal, and involves the hopes of war
In fiery whirls. Philips.

High at his head from out the cavern'd rock,
In living rills a gushing fountain broke.* Pope's Odyssey.

2. Inhabiting a cavern.

No bandit here, no tyrant mad with pride,
No cavern'd hermit, rest self-satisfy'd. Pope.

CA'VERNOUS. adj. [from cavern.] Full of caverns.

No great damages are done by earthquakes, except only in those countries which are mountainous, and consequently stony and cavernous underneath. Woodward, Nat. History.

CAVE'SSON. n. s. [Fr. In horsemanship.] A sort of noseband, sometimes made of iron, and sometimes of leather or wood; sometimes flat, and sometimes hollow or twisted, which is put upon the nose of a horse, to forward the suppling and breaking of him.

An iron cavesson saves and spares the mouths of young horses when they are broken; for, by the help of it, they are accustomed to obey the hand and to bend the neck and shoulders, without hurting their mouths, or spoiling their bars with the bit. Farrier's Dict.

CAUF. † n. s. [perhaps from the Lat. cavus, hollow.] A chest with holes in the top, to keep fish alive in the water. Phillips, World of Words.

CAUGHT, particip. pass. [from To catch; which see.]

CAVIA'RE. † n. s. [the etymology uncertain, unless it come from garum, Lat. sauce, or pickle, made of fish salted, Dr. Johnson says. It is adopted from the Barb. or Vulg. Græc. καβίάρι, or καυίάρι, which signifies the same thing. In Italian, it is caviare, and in old Fr. caviak.]

Sturgeons, the roe of which makes caviare.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 187.

There's a fishmonger's boy with Caviar, Sir.

Beaum. and Fl., Elder Brother.

He doth learn to make strange sauces, to eat auchovies, macaroni, and caviare, because he loves 'em.

R. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

Certain of our merchants having seized upon a hundred butts of caviare in the vessel called the Swallow, riding in the downs. Milton, State-Letters.

The eggs of a sturgeon being salted, and made up into a mass, were first brought from Constantinople by the Italians, and called caviare. Grew, Museum.

CAVIER. n. s. A corruption of caviare. See CATSUP.

To CAVIL. † v. n. [caviller, Fr. cavillari, Lat.] To raise captious and frivolous objections. Formerly to mock, or scoff. Huloet's Dict. See CAVILLATION.

I'll give thrice so much land
To any well deserving friend;

But, in the way of bargain, mark ye me,
I'll cavil on the ninth part of a hair. Shakspeare, Henry IV.

My lord, you do not well, in obstinacy
To cavil in the course of this contract. Shakspeare, Henry VI.

He cavils first at the poet's insisting so much upon the effects of Achilles's rage. Pope, Notes on the Iliad.

To CA'VIL. v. a. To receive or treat with objections.

Thou didst accept them: wilt thou enjoy the good,
Then cavil the conditions? Milton, L.

CA'VIL. n. s. [from the verb.] False or frivolous objections.

Wiser men consider how subject the best things have been unto cavil, when wits, possessed with disdain, have set them up as their mark to shoot at. Hooker.

Several divines, in order to answer the cavils of those adversaries to truth and morality, began to find out farther explanations. Swift.

CAVILLA'TION. † n. s. [old Fr. cavillation, or cavellation, "finesse, ruse, subtilité, adresse," Lacombe; and in our old language, it formerly meant a merry taunt, a subtle forged tale. Huloet's Dict. Lat. cavillatio.] The disposition to make captious objection; the practice of objecting.

It is now necessary to make answer to the subtyll persuasions and sophisticall cavillations of the Papistes.

Abp. Cranmer, Doct. of the Sacrament, (1550.) fol. 112.

They shall not thereby pick any matter of cavillation against us. Martin, Marriage of Priests, (1554.) S.i.
Persuading themselves, by cavillations and sophistications, to excuse the impiety of their false oaths.

Raleigh, Arts of Empire, p. 69.
I am resolved, when I come to my answer, not to trick my innocency (as I writ to the lords) by cavillations or voidances.

Bacon, to K. James I.
I might add so much concerning the large odds between the ease of the eldest churches, in regard of heathens, and ours, in respect of the church of Rome, that very cavillation itself should be satisfied. Hooker.

CA'VILLER.† n. s. [cavillator, Lat.] Formerly a mocker. See CAVILLATION. A man fond of making objections; an unfair adversary; a captious disputant.

Socrates held all philosophers, cavillers and madmen. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 167.

The candour which Horace shews, is that which distinguishes a critic from a caviller; he declares, that he is not offended at little faults, which may be imputed to inadvertency.

Addison, Guardian.
There is, I grant, room still left for a caviller to misrepresent my meaning. Atterbury, Pref. to his Sermons.

CA'VILLING.* n. s. [from cavil.] Dispute; captious objection.

These, many times, instead of convincing the judgments of sober persons, fall to cavillings and menaces.

Bp. Taylor, Art. of Handsom, p. 66.
CA'VILLINGLY.† adv. [from cavilling.] In a cavilling manner. Sherwood.

CA'VILLINGNESS.* n. s. [from cavilling.] The disposition to cavil.

CA'VILLOUS.† adj. [old Fr. cavilleux.] Unfair in argument; full of objections.

Those persons are said to be cavillous and unfaithful advocates, by whose fraud and iniquity justice is destroyed.

Agilffe.
CA'VILLOUSLY.* adv. [from cavillous.] In a cavillous manner.

Since that so cavillously is urged against us. Milton, Art. of Peace between the E. of Orm. and the Irish.

CA'VIZ. n. s. [French. In the military art.] A natural hollow, fit to cover a body of troops, and consequently facilitate their approach to a place.

Dict.
CA'VITY.† n. s. [old Fr. cavité, from cavitas, Latin.] Hollowness; hollow; hollow place.

The vowels are made by a free passage of breath, vocalized through the cavity of the mouth; the said cavity being differently shaped by the postures of the throat, tongue, and lips.

Holder, Elements of Speech.
There is nothing to be left void in a firm building; even the cavities ought not to be filled with rubbish, which is of a perishing kind. Dryden, Dedication to Æneid.

Materials packed together with wonderful art in the several cavities of the skull. Addison, Spectator.

An instrument with a small cavity, like a small spoon, dip in oil, may fetch out the stone. Arbutnot on Dent.

If the atmosphere was reduced into water, it would not make an orb above thirty-two feet deep, which would soon be swallowed up by the cavity of the sea, and the depressed parts of the earth. Bentley.

CAUK. n. s. A coarse talky spar. Woodward.

CA'UKY. adj. [from cauk.] A white, opaque, cauky spar, shot or pointed. Woodward on Fossils.

CAUL.† n. s. [of uncertain etymology.]

1. The net in which women inclose their hair; the hinder part of a woman's cap.

Ne spared they to strip her naked all,
Then when they had de-poil'd her tire and caul,
Such as she was, their eyes might her behold. Spenser.

Her head with ringlets of her hair is crown'd,
And in a golden caul the curls are bound. Dryden's Æneid.

2. Any kind of small net.

An Indian mantle of feathers, and the feathers wrought into a caul of packthread. Grew, Musæum.

3. The omentum; the integument in which the guts are inclosed.

The caul serves for the warming the lower belly, like an apron or piece of woollen cloth. Hence a certain gladiator, whose caul Galen cut out, was so liable to suffer cold, that he kept his belly constantly covered with wool. Ray.

The beast they then divide, and disunite
The ribs and limbs, observant of the rite:
On these, in double cauls involv'd with art,
The choicest morsels lay. Pope's Odyssey.

4. The little membrane found on some children, encompassing the head, when born; esteemed an infallible preservative against drowning, and also medical in some diseases! It is thought a good omen to the child itself; and the vulgar belief is, that whoever obtains it by purchase will be fortunate. It is an old superstition, which keeps its ground to this day; for, while this account was passing my eye, I observed more than one advertisement of cauls to be sold in the newspapers. The credulous seamen are yet said to be purchasers!

You were born with a caul on your head. B. Jonson, Alchymist.

If a child be borne with a caule on his head, he shall be very fortunate. Melton's Astrologaster, p. 45.

A person possessed of a caul, may know the state of health of the party who was born with it: if alive and well, it is firm and crisp; if dead or sick, relaxed and flaccid!

Grose's Popular Superstitions.

CA'ULET.* n. s. [Celt. and old Fr. caul; old Fr. caulet also, a kind of cabbage; Lat. caulis.] Colewort, pronounced in many places collet; as cauliflower is colliflower. See COLE and COLEWORT.

CAUL'FEROUS. adj. [from caulis, a stalk, and fero, to bear, Lat.] A term in botany for such plants as have a true stalk, which a great many have not.

CAULIFLOWER. n. s. [from caulis, Lat. the stalk of a plant.] A species of cabbage.

Towards the end of the month, earth up your winter plants and salad herbs; and plant forth your cauliflowers and cabbage, which were sown in August. Evelyn's Calendar.

To CAULK. See To CALK.

To CA'UPONATE. v. n. [cauponor, Lat.] To keep a victualling-house; to sell wine or victuals. Dict.

To CA'UPONISE.* v. n. [from the Lat. cauponor.] To sell wine or victuals.

I call your virtues unaccountable, as I do the wealth of our rich rogues, who cauponized to the armies in Germany in this last war. Warburton to Hurd, Lett. 171.

CA'USABLE. adj. [from causo, low Lat.] That which may be caused, or effected by a cause.

That may be miraculously effected in one, which is naturally causable in another. Brown, Vulgar Errors.

CA'USAL. adj. [causalis, low Lat.] Relating to causes; implying or containing causes.

Every motion owing a dependence on pre-required motors, we can have no true knowledge of any, except we would distinctly go into the whole method of causal considerations. Glauville, Sci. Scientifica.

Causal propositions are, where two propositions joined by causal particles; as, houses were not built, tho' they might be destroyed; Rehoboam was unhappy, because he followed evil counsel. Al's Logic.

CAUSA'LITY. n. s. [causalitas, low Latin.] The agency of a cause; the quality of causing.

C A U

As he created all things, so is he beyond and in them all, in this very essence, as being the soul of their causalities, and the essential cause of their existences. Brown, Vulgar Errors.

By an unadvised transiency from the effect to the remotest cause, we observe not the connection, through the interposal of more immediate causalities. Chauville's Scopsis.

CAUSALLY. adv. [from causal.] According to the order or series of causes.

Thus may it more be causally made out; what Hippocrates affirmeth. Brown, Vulgar Errors.

CAUSATION. n. s. [from causo, low Lat.] The act or power of causing.

Thus doth he sometimes delude us in the conceits of stars and meteors, besides their allowable actions, ascribing effects thereunto of independent causation. Brown, Vulgar Errors.

CAUSATIVE. adj.

1. [A term in grammar.] That expresses a cause or reason.

Let any Hebrew reader judge whether pihel can properly be said, in general, to augment the signification, or pihel to be causative. Student, ii. 308.

2. That effects as an agent.

It appeareth to be one of the essential forms of things, as that, that is causative in nature of a number of effects.

Bacon on Learning.
The notion of a Deity doth expressly signify a being or nature of infinite perfection; of a nature or being which consisteth in this, that it be absolutely, and essentially necessary, an actual being of itself; and potential or causative of all beings beside itself; independent from any other, upon which all things depend, and by which all things else are governed.

Pearson, on the Creed, Art. I.

CAUSATIVELY.  adv.* [from causative.] In a causative manner.

Several conjugations are used very indiscriminately; and whether they are to be taken actively, passively, causatively, or absolutely, must be determined by the context.

Student, ii. 308.

CAUSATOR. n. s. [from causo, low Lat.] A causer; author of any effect.

Demonstratively understanding the simplicity of perfection, and the invisible condition of the first causator, it was out of the power of earth, or the arcopagy of hell, to work them from it. Brown, Vulgar Errors.

CAUSE. n. s. [causa, Lat.]

1. That which produces or effects any thing; the efficient.

The wise and learned amongst the very heathens themselves, have all acknowledged some first cause, whereupon originally the being of all things dependeth; neither have they otherwise spoken of that cause, than as an agent, which, knowing what and why it worketh, observeth, in working, a most exact order or law. Hooker.

Butterflies, and other flies, revive easily when they seem dead, being brought to the sun or fire; the cause whereof is the diffusion of the vital spirit, and the dilating of it by a little heat. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Cause is a substance exerting its power into act, to make one thing begin to be. Locke.

2. The reason; motive to any thing.

The rest shall bear some other fight,
As cause will be obey'd. Shakspeare.
So great, so constant, and so general a practice, must needs have not only a cause, but also a great, a constant, and a general cause, every way commensurate to such an effect. South.

Thus, royal sir! to see you landed here,

Th. Was cause enough of triumph for a year. Dryden.

The storm was wondrous stood: then ask'd the cause;

Bursts fatal; the stream the crowding people draw. Dryden.

In fiery whirls. Even he,

High at his height, that there had been cause of enmity,

In living rills a great fate had ordain'd your friends. Rowe.

2. Inhabiting a debate; subject of litigation.

No bandit fierce, madness of discourse!

No cavern'd hermit, with and against thyself!

CA'VERNOUS. adj. [from caverna, low Lat.]

Shakspeare.

C A U

Heard the causes between you brethren, and judge righteously between every man and his brother, and the stranger that is with him. Deut.

4. Side; party; ground or principle of action or opposition.

Ere to thy cause, and thee, my heart inclin'd,
Or love to party had seduc'd my mind. Tickell.

TO CAUSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To effect as an agent; to produce.

Never was man whose apprehensions are sober, and by a pensive inspection advised, but hath found by an irresistible necessity one everlasting being, all for ever causing and all for ever sustaining. Rulegh.

It is necessary in such a chain of causes to ascend to and terminate in some first, which should be the original of motion, and the cause of all other things; but itself be caused by none. South.

She weeping ask'd, in these her blooming years,
What unforeseen misfortune caus'd her care
To loath her life, and languish in despair? Dryden, Fables.

Things that move so swift, as not to affect the senses distinctly, and so cause not any train of ideas in the mind, are not perceived to move. Locke.

TO CAUSE.  v. n.* [old Fr. causer, "to babble, to talk idly, to reason foolishly, to use much speech to little purpose." Cotgrave.] To assign insufficient cause or reason. Not now in use.

But he, to shifte their curious request,
Can causen why she could not come in place;
Her cras'd health, her late recourse to rest,
'And humid evening ill for sick folks' case;
But none of these excuses could take place. Spenser, F. Q. iii. ix. 26.

CAUSELESS. adj. [from cause.]

1. Having no cause; original in itself.

Reach th' Almighty's sacred throne,
And make his causeless pow'r, the cause of all things, known. Blackmore's Creation.

2. Wanting just ground or motive.

Yet is my truth yplight,
And love avow'd to other lady late,
That, to remove the same, I have no might;
To change love causeless, is reproach to warlike knight. Spenser, F. Q.

And me and mine, threats not with war but death;
Thus causeless hatred endless is uneth. Fairfax.

The causeless dislike, which others have conceived, is not sufficient reason for us to forbear in any place. Hooker.

As women yet who apprehend
Some sudden cause of causeless fear,
Although that seeming cause take end,
A shaking through their limbs they find. Waller.

Alas! my fears are causeless and ungrounded,
Fantastick dreams, and melancholy fumes. Denham.

CAUSELESSLY. adv. [from causeless.] Without cause; without reason.

They [sin against the ninth commandment] that secretly raise jealousies and suspicion of their neighbour causelessly.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, vii. § 4.

Human laws are not to be broken with scandal, nor at all without reason; for he that does it causelessly, is a despiser of the law, and undervalues its authority.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

CAUSELESSNESS. n. s. [from causeless.] Unjust ground or motive.

Discerning and acknowledging the causelessness of your exceptions. Hammond, Works, i. 196.

CAUSER. n. s. [from cause, old Fr. causeours, causers, the occasion of. Kelham, Norm. Dict.]

He that causes; the agent by which an effect is produced.

His whole oration stood upon a short narration, what was the causer of this metamorphosis. Sidney.

Is not the causer of these times?

As blameful as the executioner? Shakspeare.

Abstinence the apostle determines is of no other real value in religion, than as a ministerial causer of moral effects. Rogers.
CA'USEY.† } n. s. [chaussée, Fr.] This word, by a false notion of its etymology, has been lately written causeway. Dr. Johnson rightly observes. But he has improperly placed Milton, who writes it causey, among those who have mistaken the word. Causey is referrible also to the Teut. kautsije. In old Fr. it is sometimes written cauté and also calsay. V. Kelham, Norm. Dict. In our own old language, it is calsey. V. Hulot's Dict. low Lat. calceatum. The Irish cāsan is a path. A way raised and paved; a way raised above the rest of the ground.

To Shuppin the lot came forth westward by the causey.

1 Chron. xxvi. 16.

The other way Satan went down,
 The causey to hell-gate. Milton, P. L.
 But that broad causeway will direct your way,
 And you may reach the town by noon of day. Dryden.
 Whose causeway parts the vale with shady rows;
 Whose seats the weary traveller repose. Pope.

CAUSTICAL.* adj. [from the Lat. causidicus, a pleader; and Colas, in his Dict. 1677, gives us the subst. causidick, a pleader of causes: But this is not in use. The adjective, however, is now sometimes used.] Relating to an advocate or pleader.

CAUSTICAL.† } adj. [old Fr. caustique, from the Gr. καυστικός.] Epithets of medicaments which destroy the texture of the part to which they are applied, and eat it away, or burn it into an eschar, which they do by extreme minuteness, asperity, and quantity of motion, that, like those of fire itself, destroy the texture of the solids, and change what they are applied to, into a substance like burnt flesh; which, in a little time, with detergent dressing, falls quite off, and leaves a vacuity in the part. Quincy.

If extirpation be safe, the best way will be by caustical medicines or escharoticks. Wiseman, Surgery.

I proposed eradicating by escharoticks, and began with a caustick stone. Wiseman, Surgery.

Air too hot, cold, and moist, abounding perhaps with caustick, astrigent, and conglutinating particles. Arbuthnot.

CAUSTICITY.* n. s. In chymistry, a quality belonging to several substances, by the acrimony of which the parts of living animals may be corroded and destroyed. Chambers.

CAUSTICK. n. s. A burning application.

It was a tenderness to mankind, that introduced corrosives and causticks, which are indeed but artificial fires. Temple.

The piercing causticks ply their spiteful pow'r,
 Emetic's ranch, and keen catharatic's scour. Garth.

CAUSTICKNESS.* n. s. [from caustick.] The quality of being caustick. Scot.

CAUTEL.† n. s. [old Fr. cautelle, "a wile, cautel or sleight," Cotgrave. Dr. Johnson deduces it from the Lat. cautela, which signifies caution or prudent foresight; and has cited, in proof of this etymology, a passage from Shakspeare, which he has not given accurately, and to the word cautel in which he has assigned the meaning of caution or scruple. But it there means deceit. Such is the definition in our old lexicography, as we have seen in Cotgrave; and as it is in Hulot, "cautels, crafty ways to deceive;" and in Minshew, "a crafty way to deceive." In Shakspeare's Hamlet, which is the only notice taken of the word by Dr. Johnson, it will hence be seen that cautel is cunning; though cautel for caution may also be found in our old language.]

1. Cunning; subtlety; deceit.

Perhaps, he loves you now;

And now no soil, nor cautel, doth besmirch

The virtue of his will. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

In him a plénitude of subtle matter,

Applied to cautels, all strange forms receives.

Shakspeare, Lover's Complaint.

2. Caution; provision. [Lat. cautela; old Fr. cautels, warnings. Kelh. Norm. Dict.]

This penance, canonical was appointed—for cautels and provision against the like sins.

Fulke against Allen, (1586.) p. 418.

CA'UTELOUS. adj. [cauteleux, Fr.]

1. Cautious; wary; provident. Not in use.

Palladio doth wish, like a cauteleux artisan, that the inward walls might bear some good share in the burden. Wotton.

2. Wily; cunning; treacherous.

Of themselves, for the most part, they are so cauteleux and wily headed, especially being men of so small experience and practice in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow such subtilties and sly shifts. Spenser on Ireland.

Your son

Will or exceed the common, or be caught

With cauteleux baits and practice. Shakspeare.

CA'UTELOUSLY. adv. [from cauteleux.]

1. Cunningly; slyly; treacherously. Not in use.

All pretorian courts, if any of the parties be laid asleep, under pretence of a retirement, and the other party doth cauteleously get the start and advantage, yet they will set back all things in statu quo prius. Bacon, War with Spain.

2. Cautiously; warily.

The Jews, not resolved of the sciatica side of Jacob, do cauteleously, in their diet, abstain from both. Brown.

CA'UTELOUSNESS.* n. s. [from cauteleux.] Cautiousness. Not now in use.

Let it not offend you, if I compare these two great Christian virtues, Cauteleousness, Repentance. Hales, Rem. p. 254.

This Christian cauteleousness and wariness here commended. Ibid.

CA'UTER.* n. s. [old Fr. cautère, Gr. καυτήριον, from καίω, to burn.] A searing hot iron; or more generally, any thing that is applied to burn, and is burning or boiling hot. Minshew, and Cotgrave.

CA'UTERISM.* n. s. [from cauterize.] The application of cautery.

Some use the cauterisms on the legs.

Ferrand's Love Melancholy, p. 261.

CAUTERIZA'TION.† n. s. [Fr. cauterisation.] The act of burning flesh with hot irons, or caustick medicaments.

They require, after cauterization, no such bandage, as that thereby you need to fear interception of the spirits. Wiseman.

To CA'UTERIZE. v. a. [cauteriser, Fr.] To burn with the cautery.

No marvel though cantharides have such a corrosive and cauterizing quality; for there is not one other of the insects, but is bred of a duller matter. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The design of the cautery is to prevent the canal from closing; but the operators confess, that, in persons cauterized, the tears trickle down ever after. Sharp's Surgery.

CA'UTERIZING.* n. s. [from the verb.] The act of burning with the cautery. The following passage in Shakspeare is corrupted in Dr. Johnson's Dictionary, and so presents the word as a verb.

For each true word, a blister! and each false

Be as a cauterizing to the root o' the tongue,

Consuming it with speaking. Shakspeare, Timon of Athens.

CAUTERY. n. s. [καίω, uro.]

Cautery is either actual or potential; the first is burning by a hot iron, and the latter with caustick medicines. The actual cautery is generally used to stop mortification, by burning the dead parts to the quick; or to stop the effusion of blood, by searing up the vessels.

C A W

In heat of fight it will be necessary to have your actual cautery always ready; for that will secure the bleeding arteries in a moment.

Quincy.
Wiseman, Surgery.

CAUTION. n. s. [caution, Fr. cautio, Lat.]

1. Prudence, as it respects danger; foresight; provident care; wariness against evil.
2. Security for.

Such conditions, and cautions of the condition, as might assure with as much assurance as worldly matters bear.

The Cedar, upon this new acquiescence, gave him part of Bacharia for caution for his disbursements.

The parliament would yet give his majesty sufficient caution that the war should be prosecuted.

He that objects any crime, ought to give caution by the means of surties, that he will persevere in the prosecution of such crimes.

3. Provision or security against.

In despite of all the rules and cautions of government, the most dangerous and mortal of vices will come off.

4. Provisionary precept.

Attention to the forementioned symptoms afford the best cautions and rules of diet, by way of prevention.

5. Warning.

To CAUTION. v. a. [from the noun.] To warn; to give notice of a danger.

How shall our thought avoid the various snare?

Or wisdom to our caution'd soul declare

The different shapes thou pleasest to employ,

When bent to hurt, and certain to destroy?

You caution'd me against their charms,

But never gave me equal arms.

CAUTIONARY. † adj. [from caution.]

1. Given as a pledge, or in security.

I am made the cautionary pledge,

The gage and hostage of your keeping it.

Is there no security for the island of Britain? Has the enemy no cautionary towns and sea-ports, to give us for securing trade?

2. Warning.

Of old, the Jews wrote the entrances of their synagogues with devout and cautionary sentences.

L. Addison, State of the Jews, p. 90.

Too servile an adherence to the letter—requires a cautionary or explanatory note.

CAUTIOUS. adj. [from cautus, Lat.] Wary; watchful.

Be cautious of him; for he is sometimes an inconstant lover, because he hath a great advantage.

CAUTIOUSLY. adv. [from cautious.] In an attentive, wary manner; warily.

They know how fickle common lovers are:

Their oaths and vows are cautiously believ'd;

For few there are but have been once deceiv'd.

CAUTIOUSNESS. n. s. [from cautious.] Watchfulness; vigilance; circumspection; provident care; prudence with respect to danger.

I could not but approve their generous constancy and cautiousness.

We should always act with great cautiousness and circumspection, in points where it is not impossible that we may be deceived.

To CAW. v. n. [taken from the sound.] To cry as the rook, raven, or crow.

Russet-pated thoughts, many in sort,

Rising and cawing at the gun's report.

A walk of aged elms, so very high, that the rooks and crows

No on the tops seem to be cawing in another region.

No cavern-rook, who high amid the boughs,

spring, his airy city builds,

A'VERNOUS.

Thomson, Spring.

C E C

CA'XON.* n. s. A cant expression for a wig. Dr. Ash's Dictionary presents caxon for caxon, a technical word among miners.

CA'XOU.* n. s. In metallurgy, a chest of ores of silver, or any other metal, that has been burnt, ground, and washed, and is ready to be refined.

CAYE'NNE Pepper.* A powder brought from the West Indies under that name, the basis of which is a species of the piper Indicum, called in the West Indies bird-pepper. It is used principally in sauces.

CAZI'QUE.* n. s. A title given by the Spaniards to the petty kings, and chiefs, of several countries in America.

The principal cazique of the island came to visit Cortes, with a numerous but ill-appointed equipage.

Townsend, Conq. of Mexico, i. 15.

To CEASE. † v. n. [cesser, Fr. cesso, Lat.]

1. To leave off; to stop; to give over; to desist; with from before a noun.

The lives of all, who cease from combat, spare;

My brother's be your most peculiar care.

2. Without from.

Yet not the more

Cease I to wander, where the Muses haunt

Clear spring, or shady grove, or sunny hill,

Smit with the love of sacred song.

3. To fail; to be extinct; to pass away.

The poor shall never cease out of the land.

The soul being removed, the faculties and operations of life, sense, and intellection, cease from that moles corporea, and are no longer in it.

4. To be at an end.

But now the wonder ceases, since I see

She kept them only, Tityrus, for thee.

5. To rest.

The ministers of Christ have ceased from their labours.

To CEASE. v. a. To put a stop to; to put an end to.

Importune him for my monies; he not ceas'd

With slight denial.

You may sooner, by imagination, quicken or slack a motion, than raise or cease it; as it is easier to make a dog go slower, than to make him stand still.

Cease then this impious rage.

But he, her fears to cease,

Sent down the meek-ey'd peace.

The discord is complete, nor can they cease

The dire debate, nor yet command the peace.

CEASE. n. s. [from the verb.] Extinction; failure; perhaps for decease.

The cease of majesty

Dies not alone, but, like a gulph, withdraws

What's near it, with it.

CE'ASELESS. adj. [from cease.] Incessant; perpetual; continual; without pause; without stop; without end.

My guiltless blood must quench the ceaseless fire,

On which my endless tears were bootless spent.

All these, with ceaseless praise his works behold,

Both day and night.

Like an oak

That stands secure, though all the winds employ

Their ceaseless roar, and only sheds its leaves,

Or mast, which the revolving spring restores.

CE'ASELESSLY.* adv. [from ceaseless.] Incessantly; perpetually.

This universal quire—

Prays ceaselessly.

CECCHI'N.* n. s. [old Fr. cechin.] We now write it chequin. A coin of Italy, and also of Barbary.

C E D

Sec, Mosca, look,
Here, I have brought a bag of bright cecchines,
Will quite weigh down his plate. B. Jonson, For.

CE'CITY.† n. s. [old Fr. cecité, from cecitas, Lat.]
Blindness; privation of sight.

They are not blind, nor yet distinctly see; there is in them no cecity, yet more than a cecuteniency; they have sight enough to discern the light, though not perhaps to distinguish objects or colours. Brown, Vulg. Err.

CECUTENIENCY.• n. s. [from cecutio, Lat.] Tendency to blindness, cloudiness of sight.

There is in them no cecity; yet more than a cecuteniency.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

CE'DAR.† n. s. [ceben, Sax. cedre, Fr. cedrus, Lat.
from the Gr. ξέδος.] A tree.

It is evergreen; the leaves are much narrower than those of the pine tree, and many of them produced out of one tubercle, resembling a painter's pencil; it hath male flowers, or katkins, produced at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree.
The seeds are produced in large cones, squamose and turbinate. The extension of the branches is very regular in cedar trees; the ends of the shoots declining, and thereby shewing their upper surface, which is constantly clothed with green leaves, so regularly as to appear at a distance like a green carpet, and, in waving about, makes an agreeable prospect. It is surprising that this tree has not been more cultivated in England; for it would be a great ornament to barren bleak mountains, even in Scotland, were few other trees would grow; it being a native of Mount Libanus, where the snow continues most part of the year. Maundrel, in his Travels, says, he measured one of the largest cedars on Mount Libanus, and found it to be twelve yards six inches in circumference, and sound. At about five or six yards from the ground, it was divided into five limbs, each of which was equal to a great tree. The wood of this famous tree is accounted proof against the putrefaction of animal bodies. The saw dust is thought to be one of the secrets used by the mountebanks, who pretend to have the embalming mystery. This wood is also said to yield an oil, which is famous for preserving books and writings, and the wood is thought by Bacon to continue above a thousand years sound. Miller.

I must yield my body to the earth:
Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge,
Whose arms gave shelter to the princely eagle;
Under whose shade the ramping lion slept,
Whose top branch overpeer'd Jove's spreading tree,
And kept low shrubs from winter's powerful wind,
Shakespeare.

CE'DARLIKE.• adj. [from cedar and like.] Resembling a cedar tree.

His tall
And growing gravity, so cedar-like. B. Jonson, New Inn.

CE'DARN.• adj. [from cedar.] Of or belonging to the cedar tree.

West winds, with musky wing,
About the cedarn alleys sing
Nard and Cassia's balmy smells. Milton, Comus.

To CE'DE.• v. n. [Fr. ceder, Lat. cedo.] To submit;
to yield.

This fertile glebe, this fair domain,
Had well nigh ceded to the slothful hands
Of monks libidinous. Shenstone, Ruin'd Abbey.

C E L

To CE'DE.• v. a. [This verb, whether as an active or neuter, is perhaps of no great age in our language.
It has been hitherto unnoticed.] To resign; to give up.

That honour was entirely ceded to the Pathian royal race.
Drummond's Travels, (1754.) p. 256.

By the peace of Paris in 1763, it [Dominica] was ceded in express terms to the English. Gothric, Geogr.

CE'DRINE.• adj. [from cedrinus, Lat.] Of or belonging to
the cedar tree.

CE'DRY.• adj. [Lat. cedrinus.] Resembling the colour of cedar.

That which comes from Bergen being long, strait, and clear, and of a yellow or more cedry colour, is esteemed much below
the white. Evelyn, ii. 3. § 2.

CE'DULE.• n. s. [old Fr. cédule. Our elder word for schedule, which see.] A scroll, or writing;
also, an additional written instrument. Cotgrave.

CE'DUOUS.• adj. [Lat. cedaus.] Fit to be felled.

These we shall divide into the greater and more ceduous, fruticant, and shrubby. Evelyn, Sylv. Introd. § 3.

To CE'IL.• v. a. [from celo, Lat.] To overlay, or cover the inner roof of a building.

And the greater house he ceiled with fir-tree, which he overlaid with fine gold. 2 Chron.

How will he, from his house ceiled with cedar, be content with his Saviour's lot, not to have where to lay his head?
Decay of Piety.

CE'ILING.† n. s. [from ceil, Dr. Johnson says; but perhaps it might be celing, as some still write it, from ciel, Fr. cielo, Ital. the heavens. In reference to this etymology, Richardson supposes Milton to have employed the word. Our old word is cielure.]

1. The inner roof.
Varnish makes ceilings not only shine, but last. Bacon.

And now the thicken'd sky
Like a dark ceiling stood; down a rush'd the rain Impetuous. Milton, P. L.

So when the sun by day, or moon by night,
Strike on the polish'd brass their trembling light,
The glittering species here and there divide,
And cast their dubious beams from side to side:
Now on the walls, now on the pavement play,
And to the ceiling flash the glaring day. Dryden.

2. In sea language, the inside planks of a ship.
Chambers.

CE'LANDINE.• n. s. [from chclidoneum, Lat.] A plant.

The swallows use celandine, the linnet euphrasia. More.

CE'LATURE.† n. s. [from celatura, Lat.] The art of engraving or cutting in figures.

These celatures in their drinking cups were so framed, that they might put them on or take them off at pleasure, and were therefore called embemata. Hakewill on Providence, p. 372.

To CE'LEBRATE.• v. a. [from celebro, Lat.].

1. To praise; to commend; to give praise to; to make famous.

The songs of Sion were psalms and pieces of poetry, that adored or celebrated the Supreme Being. Addison.
I would have him read over the celebrated works of antiquity, which have stood the test of so many different ages.
Addison.

2. To distinguish by solemn rites; to perform solemnly.

He slew all them that were gone to celebrate the sabbath.

On the feast day, the father cometh forth, after divine service, into a large room, where the feast is celebrated. Bacon.

3. To mention in a set or solemn manner, whether of joy or sorrow.

This pause of pow'r, 'tis Ireland's hour to mourn;
While England celebrates your safe return. Dryden.

C E L

CELEBRATION. n. s. [from celebrate.]

1. Solemn performance; solemn remembrance.

He laboured to drive sorrow from her, and to hasten the celebration of their marriage. Sidney.

He shall conceal it,
While you are willing it shall come to note;
What time we will our celebration keep,
According to my birth. Shakespeare.

During the celebration of this holy sacrament, you attend earnestly to what is done by the priest. Taylor.

2. Praise; renown; memorial.

No more shall be added in this place, his memory deserving a particular celebration, than that his learning, piety and virtue, have been attained by few. Clarendon.

Some of the ancients may be thought sometimes to have used a less number of letters, by the celebration of those who have added to their alphabet. Holder, Elements of Speech.

CELEBRATOR. * n. s. [Lat. celebrator.] He who celebrates or praises.

It [Scripture] has, among the wits, as well celebrators and admirers, as disregards. Boyle's Style of H. Script. p. 174.

CELEBRIOUS. † adj. [old Fr. celebre, from celeber, Lat.] Famous; renowned; noted. Not in use.

The Jews, Jerusalem, and the Temple, having been always so celebrious; yet when, after their captivities, they were spoiled of their glory, even then, the Assyrians, Greeks, and Romans, honoured, with sacrifices, the most high God, whom that nation worshipped. Grew.

CELEBRIOUSLY. adv. [from celebrious.] In a famous manner.

CELEBRIOUSNESS. n. s. [from celebrious.] Renown; fame.

CELEBRITY. † n. s. [old Fr. celebrité, from celebritas, Lat.] Publick and splendid transaction.

The manner of her receiving, and the celebrity of the marriage, were performed with great magnificence. Bacon.

CELE'RIACK. n. s. A species of parsley; it is also called turnip rooted celer.

CELE'RITY. † n. s. [Fr. célérité, from the Lat. celeritas.] Swiftmess; speed; velocity.

We very well see in them, who thus plead, a wonderful celerity of discourse; for, perceiving at the first but only some cause of suspicion, and fear lest it should be evil, they are presently, in one and the self-same breath, resolved, that what beginning soever it had, there is no possibility it should be good. Hooker.

His former custom and practice was ever full of forwardness and celerity, to make head against them. Bacon.

Thus, with imagin'd wings, our swift scene flies,
In motion with no less celerity
Than that of thought. Shakespeare.

Three things concur to make a percussion great; the bigness, the density, and the celerity of the body moved. Digby.

Whatever encreaseth the density of the blood, even without encreasing its celerity, heats, because a denser body is hotter than a rarer. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CE'LERY. n. s. A species of parsley; which see.

CELE'STIAL. adj. [celestis, Lat.]

1. Heavenly; relating to the superiour regions.

There stay, until the twelve celestial signs
Have brought about their annual reckoning. Shakespeare.

The ancients commonly applyed celestial descriptions of other climates to their own. Brown, Vulg. Errs.

2. Heavenly; relating to the blessed state.

Play that sad note
I nam'd my knell; whilst I sit meditating
On that celestial harmony I go to. Shakespeare.

3. Heavenly, with respect to excellence.

Canst thou pretend desire, whom zeal inflam'd
To worship, and a pow'r celestial nam'd? Dryden.

Tellinachus, his bloomy face
Glowing celestial sweet, with godlike grace. Pope.

C E L

CELE'STIAL. n. s. [from the adj.] An inhabitant of heaven.

Thus affable and mild, the prince precedes,
And to the dome th' unknown celestial leads. Pope.

CELE'STIALY. adv. [from celestial.] In a heavenly manner.

To CELE'STIFY. v. a. [from celestis, Lat.] To give something of heavenly nature to any thing. Not used.

We should affirm, that all things were in all things, that heaven were but earth terrestriated, and earth but heaven celestified, or that each part above had influence upon its affinity below. Brown, Vulg. Errs.

CE'LESTINS. * n. s. Monks of a religious order, so called; reformed by Pope Celestin V.

CE'LIACK. † adj. [old Fr. celiaque, or coeliaque, from the Gr. κοιλία, the belly.] Relating to the lower belly.

The blood moving slowly through the celiack and mesenterick arteries, produces complaints. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CE'LIBACY. n. s. [from celebs, Latin.] Single life; unmarried state.

I can attribute their numbers to nothing but their frequent marriages; for they look on celibacy as an accursed state, and generally are married before twenty. Spectator.

By teaching them how to carry themselves in their relations of husbands and wives, parents and children, they have, without question, adorned the gospel, glorified God, and benefited man, much more than they could have done in the devoutest and strictest celibacy. Atterbury.

CE'LIBATE. † n. s. [old Fr. celibat, Cotgrave. Lat. celibatus, from celchs; which has been derived from the Gr. κοίτη, a bed, and λείπω, to leave; i. e. he who declines the nuptial bed, or he who has never entered it. Scaliger. V. Morin.] Single life.

The forced celibate of the English clergy is of greater antiquity than these his saints.

Bp. Hall, Honour of the Married Clergy, p. 312.

No divine law then, he grants, hath enjoined this celibate, but an ecclesiastical.

Bp. Hall, Honour of the Married Clergy, p. 123.

Celibate, like the fly in the heart of an apple, dwells in a perpetual sweetness, but sits alone. Bp. Taylor, Sermon i. 223.

If any persons, convict of this unchastity, are in the state of celibate, they are only chastised with scourges.

L. Addison, West Barbary, p. 172.

The males oblige themselves to celibate, and then multiplication is hindered. Graunt.

CELL. † n. s. [cella, Lat. Dryden has used this word in an extraordinary manner; converting Chaucer's word dale into cell, in his fable of the Cock and Fox, "Deep in a cell her cottage lonely stood;" where the original is her "cottage standing in a dale;" which is very plain; but standing in a cell, is not so; and as this mistake, if I may so call it, in this great master of our language, has hitherto been unnoticed, it seems right to remark it here.]

1. A small cavity or hollow place.

The brain contains ten thousand cells,
In each some active fancy dwells. Prior.

How bees for ever, though a monarch reign,
Their separate cells and properties maintain. Pope.

2. The cave or little habitation of a religious person.

Besides, she did intend confession

At Patrick's cell this even; and there she was not. Shakespeare.

Then did religion in a lazy cell,

In empty, airy contemplations dwell. Denham.

3. A small and close apartment in a prison.

When Jeremiah was entered into the dungeon, and into the cabins, [in the margin, cells.] Jerem. xxxvii. 16.

4. Any small place of residence; a cottage.

C E M

Mine eyes he clos'd, but open left the cell
Of fancy, my internal sight.
For ever in this humble cell
Let thee and I together dwell.
In cottages and lowly cells,
True piety neglected dwells,
Till call'd to heaven, its native seat,
Where the good man alone is great.

Milton, P. L.

Prior.

Somerville.

Tanner.

5. A religious house, subordinate to some great abbey.

As loud as doth the chapell belle,
There as this lord was keeper of the celle.

Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

6. Little bags or bladders, where fluids, or matter of different sorts are lodged; common both to animals and plants.

Quincy.

CELLAR.† n. s. [cellarium, Lat. from cella; Græco-barb. κελλάριον, a place where provisions are kept. V. Meursii Gloss.] A place under ground, where stores and liquours are repositied.

If this fellow had lived in the time of Cato, he would, for his punishment, have been confined to the bottom of a cellar during his life.

Peacham, on Drawing.

CELLARAGE. n. s. [from cellar.] The part of the building which makes the cellars.

Come on, you hear this fellow in the cellarage.

Shakespeare.

A good ascent makes a house wholesome, and gives opportunity for cellarage.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

CELLARER, or CELLERER.* n. s. [Lat. cellarius, and cellerarius.] The officer in a monastery who had the care of provisions; and generally, a butler.

Huicet.

Upon my faith, thou art some officer,
Some worthy sextein, or some celerer.

Chaucer, Monk's Prologue.

CELLARIST. n. s. [cellarius, Lat.] The butler in a religious house.

Dict.

CELLULAR. adj. [cellula, Lat.] Consisting of little cells or cavities.

The urine, insinuating itself amongst the neighbouring muscles, and cellular membranes, destroyed four.

Sharp's Surgery.

CELLULE.* n. s. [Lat. cellula.] A little cell or cavity.

CELSITUDE.† n. s. [celsitudo, Lat.] Height.

Dict.

Honour to thee, celestial and cleare
Goddess of Love, and to thy celsitude!

Chaucer, Test. of Love, 611.

CELTICISM.* n. s. The manner or custom of the Celts.

The latter, which has every signature of Celticism, I conceive to be coeval and perhaps of a class with Stonehenge.

Warton, Hist. of Kildington, p. 61.

CELTICK.* adj. Relating to the country, language, customs, or manners, of the Celts, or Gauls.

Roving the Celtick and Iberian fields.

Milton, Comus.

Very many of the Celtick or Gallick words, which are still preserved in authors, agree very well with our British words, both in sound and sense.

Richards, Brit. Dict. Pref. p. viii.

These barrows, apparently connected with the rampart, are as indisputably Celtick, and not Roman.

Warton, Hist. of Kildington, p. 66.

CELTS.* n. s. Lat. Cellæ, Fr. Celtes.] Inhabitants of Gaul.

Nor is it suspected, that many of the numerous encampments in Wiltshire, especially those of a large and loose formation, are probably the effects of this obstinate war between the insular Britons, and the continental Celts.

Warton, Hist. of Kildington, p. 67.

CEMENT.† n. s. [old Fr. cement, from the Lat. cementum.]

C E N

1. The matter with which two bodies are made to cohere; as, mortar or glue.

Your temples burned in their cement, and your franchises confined into an augre's bore.

Shakespeare.

There is a cement compounded of flower, whites of eggs, and stones powdered, that becometh hard as marble.

Bacon.

You may see divers pebbles, and a crust of cement or stone between them, as hard as the pebbles themselves.

Bacon.

The foundation was made of rough stone, joined together with a most firm cement; upon this was laid another layer, consisting of small stones and cement.

Arbutnot on Coins.

2. Bond of union in friendship.

Let not the piece of virtue which is set

Between us, as the cement of our love,

To keep it builded, be the rain to batter.

Shakespeare.

What cement should unite heaven and earth, light and darkness?

Glanville.

Look over the whole creation, and you shall see, that the band or cement, that holds together all the parts of this great and glorious fabrick, is gratitude.

South.

To CEMENT.† v. a. [from the noun. Dr. Johnson places the accent on the second syllable in this verb, but, in the example which he brings from Shakespeare, it is on the first; and Dryden, as also Beaumont and Fletcher, have so accented it. The distinction between the verb and the substantive, however, is now generally observed, by the first being accented on the last syllable, and the last on the first.] To unite by means of something interposed.

But how the fear of us

May cement their divisions, and bind up

The petty difference, we yet not know.

Shakespeare.

Liquid bodies have nothing to cement them; they are all loose and incoherent, and in a perpetual flux: even an heap of sand, or fine powder, will suffer no hollowness within them, though they be dry substances.

Burnet, Theory of the Barith.

Love with white lead cements his wings;

White lead was sent us to repair

Two brightest, brittlest earthly things,

A lady's face, and china ware.

Swift.

To CEMENT. v. u. To come into conjunction; to cohere.

When a wound is recent, and the parts of it are divided by a sharp instrument, they will, if held in close contact for some time, reunite by inoculation, and cement like one branch of a tree ingrafted on another.

Sharp's Surgery.

CEMENTATION. n. s. [from cement.] The act of cementing, or uniting with cement.

CEMENTER.† n. s. [old Fr. cementers, bricklayers, masons. Kelham, Norm. Dict.] A person or thing that unites in society.

God having designed man for a sociable creature, furnished him with language which was to be the great instrument and cementer of society.

Locke.

CEMETERY.† n. s. [old Fr. cemetarie, Gr. κοιμητήριον, from κοιμάω, to sleep.] A place where the dead are repositied.

The souls of the dead appear frequently in cemetaries, and hover about the places where their bodies are buried, as still hankering about their old brutal pleasures, and desiring again to enter the body.

Addison.

CEN, and CIN, denote kinsfolk; so Cinulph is a help to his kindred; Cinhelm, a protector of his kinsfolk; Cinburg, the defence of his kindred; Cinric, powerful in kindred.

Gibson.

CENATORY. adj. from ceno, to sup, Lat.] Relating to supper.

The Romans washed, were anointed, and wore a cenatory garment; and the same was practised by the Jews.

* Brown, Vulgar Errors.

CENOBITICAL.† adj. [Fr. cénobitique, from κοινός and βίος.] Living in community.

They have multitudes of religious orders, black and gray, crenitical and cenobitical, and nuns. Stillingfleet.

CENOBY.* n. s. [from the Gr. κοινός and βίος.] The place where persons live in community.

His arms are yet to be seen in the ruins of the hospital of St. John's near Smithfield, and in the church of Allhallows at the upper end of Lombard Street, which was repaired and enlarged with the stones brought from that cenoby.

Sir G. Buck, Hist. of Rich. III. p. 68.

CENOTAPH.† n. s. [old Fr. cénotaphe, from κέν and τάφος.] A monument for one buried elsewhere.

Priam, to whom the story was unknown,
As dead, deplor'd his metamorphos'd sor;
A cenotaph his name and title kept,
And Hector round the tomb with all his brothers wept.

Dryden, Fab.

The Athenians, when they lost any men at sea, raised a cenotaph, or empty monument. Notes on Odyssey.

CENSE.† n. s. [cense, old Fr. census, Lat.]

1. Publick rate.

We see what floods of treasure have flowed into Europe by that action; so that the cense, or rates of Christendom, are raised since ten times, yea twenty times told. Bacon.

2. Condition; rank.

If you write to a man, whose estate and cense—you are familiar with, you may the bolder venture on a knot.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

To CENSE.† v. a. [encenser, Fr.] To perfume with odours; contracted from incense.

In his hand he bore a golden censer with perfume; and, censing about the altar, having first kindled his fire on the top, is interrupted by the genius.

B. Jonson, Part of K. James's Entertainment.

The Salii sing, and cense his altars round
With Saban smoke, their heads with poplar bound. Dryden.
Grineus was near, and cast a furious look
On the side altar, cens'd with sacred smoke,
And bright with flaming fires. Dryden.

CENSER. n. s. [encensoir, Fr.]

1. The pan or vessel in which incense is burned.

Antonius gave piety in his money, like a lady with a censer before an altar. Peacham on Drawing.

Of incense clouds,
Fuming from golden censers, hid the mount. Milton, P. L.

2. A pan in which any thing is burned; fire-pan.

Here's snip, and nip, and cut, and slash, and slash,
Like to a censer in a barber's shop.

Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

CENSIION. n. s. [censio, Lat.] A rate, an assessment.

God intended this cension only for the blessed Virgin and her son, that Christ might be born where he should. Joseph Hall.

CENSOR.† n. s. [censor, Lat.]

1. An officer of Rome, who had the power of correcting manners; "a high constable, judge, or reformer of manners." Huloet.

I reflected, that it was the proper office of the magistrate to punish only knaves, and that we had a censor of Great-Britain, for people of another denomination. Tatler, No. 212.

These characters were forwarded by proper officers—till they arrived at length into the hands of the censor, an officer of great fame in the Roman government.

Harris on the 53d chap. of Isaiah.

2. One who is given to censure and exprobatation.

Ill-natur'd censors of the present age,
And fond of all the follies of the past. Roscommon.

The most severe censor cannot but be pleased with the prodigality of his wit, though, at the same time, he could have wished, that the master of it had been a better manager. Dryden.

CENSORIAL.* adj. [from censor.] Full of censure; severe.

The moral gravity and the censorial declamation of Juvenal. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iv. 6.

CENSORIAN. adj. [from censor.] Relating to the censor.

As the chancery had the pretorian power for equity, so the star-chamber had the censorian power for offences under the degree of capital. Bacon.

CENSORIOUS.† adj. [from censor.]

1. Addicted to censure; severe; full of invectives.

Sometimes animating the subject by censorious exauthorizing the prince. Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 17.

Do not too many believe no religion to be pure, but what is intemperately rigid? no zeal to be spiritual, but what is censorious, or vindictive? Spratt.

O! let my presence make my travels light,
And potent Venus shall exalt my name
Above the rumours of censorious fame. Prior.

2. Sometimes it has of before the object of reproach.

A dogmatical spirit inclines a man to be censorious of his neighbours. Watts on the Mind.

3. Sometimes on.

He treated all his inferiours of the clergy with a most sanctified pride; was rigorously and universally censorious upon all his brethren of the gown. Swift.

CENSORIOUSLY.† adv. [from censorious.] In a severe reflecting manner.

If it be suspected, that this great hatred of the Christians moved this Gentile to animadvert too censoriously upon their carriage, then it will be reasonable to enquire what others have delivered in this matter. L. Addison, Life of Mahomet, p. 128.

CENSORIOUSNESS.† n. s. [from censorious.] Disposition to reproach; habit of reproaching.

Some silly souls are prone to place much piety in their mawkishly plainness, and in their censoriousness of others, who use more comely and costly curiosities.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 87.

Sourness of disposition, and rudeness of behaviour, censoriousness and sinister interpretation of things, all cross and distasteful humours, render the conversation of men grievous and uneasy to one another. Tillotson.

CENSORLIKE.* adj. [from censor and like.] Censorious; austere. Cotgrave in J. Censorin.

CENSORSHIP.† n. s. [from censor.]

Has censur'd him

Already, and, as I hear, the provost hath

A warrant for his execution. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

3. To judge; to estimate.

The onset and retire

Of both your armies; whose equality

By our best eyes cannot be censured. Shakspeare, K. John.

Should I say more, you well might censure me (what yet I never was) a flatterer. Beaum. and Fl. Elder Brother.

To CE'NSURE.* v. n. To judge; to give an opinion.

'Tis a passing shame,

That I, unworthy body as I am,

Should censure thus on lovely gentlemen.

Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Verona.

Bearing my words and doings to the lords

To gloss upon, and, censuring, frown or smile! Milton, S. A.

CE'NSURER, n. s. [from censure.] He that blames; he that reproaches.

We must not stint

Our necessary actions, in the fear

To cope malicious censurers. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

A statesman, who is possess'd of real merit, should look upon his political censurers with the same neglect, that a good writer regards his critics. Addison.

CE'NSURING.* n. s. [from censure.] Reproach; blame.

The like censurings and despisings have embittered the spirits, and wetted both the tongues and pens, of learned men one against another. Sanderson.

CE'NSUS.* n. s. [Lat.] A declaration, among the Romans, made by the several subjects of the empire, of their names and places of abode, before the censors; by whom the declarations were recorded.

This is manifest from the history of the Jewish nation, from the account of the Roman census, and registers of our own country, where the proportion of births to burials is found upon observation to be yearly as fifty to forty.

Bentley, Sermon, p. 107.

I shall say little here of the census of the Romans, it being a thing so well known; and shall only stay to remark, that there were, in their books or registers, not only the condition and quality of all people, but also their characters.

Harris on the 53d chap. of Isaiah.

CENT.† n. s. [centum, Lat. a hundred.] A hundred; as, five per cent, that is, five in the hundred.

The demon makes his full descent

In one abundant shower of cent per cent.

2. A kind of white paint or wash, with which ladies have affected to mend their complexions. See CERUSED.

The sun
Hath given some little taint unto the ceruse. B. Jonson, Sejanus.

He should have brought me some fresh oil of tale;
These ceruses are common. Massinger's City Madam.

CERUSED.  adj.* [from the noun.] Washed with the preparation of white lead.

Here's a colour, what ladies check,
Though cerus'd over, comes near it. Beauvoir, and Fl. Sea Voyage.

I dare tell you,
To your new cerus'd face, what I have spoken Freely behind your back. Beaton, and Fl. Spanish Curate.

CESAREAN. † adj. [from Cæsar, old Fr. enfantement cesarien; section cesarienne. Cotgrave.]

The Cesarean section is cutting a child out of the womb either dead or alive, when it cannot otherwise be delivered. Which circumstance, it is said, first gave the name of Cæsar to the Roman family, so called. Quincy.

CESPITIOUS.  adj.* [from cespes, Lat. pl. cespites.] Made of turfs.

Height and breadth of the cespitious ramparts. Gough.

CESS. † n. s. [probably corrupted from cense; see CENSE; though imagined by Junius to be derived from saisire, to seize. It was anciently written cense, perhaps from the old Fr. cens. The Germ. schoss, tribute-money, is as probable an etymon, at least, as Junius's saisire.]

1. A levy made upon the inhabitants of a place, rated according to their property.

The like cess is also charged upon the country sometimes for victualling the soldiers, when they lie in garrison. Spenser on Ireland.

2. The act of laying rates.

3. [from cesse, Fr.] It seems to have been used by Shakspeare for bounds, or limits, though it stand for rate, reckoning.

I prythee, Tom, beat Cutt's saddle, put a few flocks in the point; the poor jade is wrung in the withers out of all cess. Shakspeare, Henry IV.

To CESS. † v. a. [from the noun.] To rate; to lay charge on.

We are to consider how much land there is in all Ulster, that, according to the quantity thereof, we may cess the said rent, and allowance issuing thereout. Spenser on Ireland.

They came not armed like soldiers to be cessed upon me. Briskett, Disc. of Civil Life, p. 157.

To CESS. v. n. To omit a legal duty. See CESSOR.

CESSATION. † n. s. [cessation, old Fr. cessatio, Lat.]

1. A stop; a rest.
The day was yearly observed for a festival, by cessation from labour, and by resorting to church. Hayward.

True piety, without cessation tost
By theories, the practick part is lost. Denham.

2. Vacation, suspension.
There had been a mighty confusion of things, an interruption and perturbation of the ordinary course, and a cessation and suspension of the laws of nature. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

The rising of a parliament is a kind of cessation from politicks. Addison, Freeholder.

3. End of action; the state of ceasing to act.
The scrum, which is mixed with an alkali, being poured out to that which is mixed with an acid, raiseth an effervescence; at the cessation of which, the salts of which the acid was composed, will be regenerated. Arbutnot on Aliments.

4. A pause of hostility, without peace.
When the succours of the poor protestants in Ireland were diverted, I was intreated to get them some respite, by a cessation. King Charles.

CESSAVIT. n. s. [Latin.]

A writ that lies upon this general ground, that the person, against whom it is brought, hath, for two years, omitted to perform such service, or pay such rent, as he is obliged by his tenure, and hath not, upon his land or tenement, sufficient goods or chattels to be distrained. Cowel.

CESSIBILITY. n. s. [from cedo, cessum, Latin.] The quality of receding, or giving way, without resistance.

If the subject stricken be of a proportionate cessibility, it seems to dull and deaden the stroke; whereas if the thing stricken be hard, the stroke seems to lose no force, but to work a greater effect. Digby on the Soul.

CESSIBLE. adj. [from cedo, cessum, Lat.] Easy to give way.

If the parts of the stricken body be so easily cessible, as without difficulty the stroke can divide them, then it enters into such a body, till it has spent its force. Digby on the Soul.

CESSION. † n. s. [cession, Fr. cessio, Lat.]

1. Retreat; the act of giving way.
Sound is not produced without some resistance either in the air or the body percussed; for if there be a mere yielding or cession, it produceth no sound. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Resignation; the act of yielding up or quitting to another.

A parity in their council would make and secure the best peace they can with France, by a cession of Flanders to that crown, in exchange for other provinces. Temple.

3. A manner of vacating or voiding an ecclesiastical benefice; that kind of resignation which is understood, and requires no form, where the clerk takes some benefice which may not be consistent with what he already possesses.

CESSIONARY. † adj. [old Fr. cessionnaire. V. Cotgrave in Cession des biens, who makes cessionary also a substantive.] As, a cessionary bankrupt, one who has delivered up all his effects. Martin.

CESSMENT. n. s. [from cess.] An assessment or tax. Dict.

CESSOR. † n. s. [from cesso, Lat.]

1. In law, he that ceaseth or neglecteth so long to perform a duty belonging to him, as that by his cess, or cessing, he incurreth the danger of law, and hath, or may have the writ cessavit brought against him. Where it is said the tenant cesseth, such phrase is to be understood, as if it were said, the tenant cesseth to do that which he ought, or is bound to do by his land or tenement. Cowel.

2. A taxer. Sherwood.

Some [faults] there be of that nature, that though they be in private men, yet their evil reacheth to a general hurt; as the extortion of sheriffs, and their sub-sheriffs, and bayliffs; the corruption of victuallers, cessors, and purveyors.

Spenser on Ireland.

CEST. * n. s. [old Fr. cestc, Lat. cestus, Gr. κεστός.] The girdle of a lady.

Young Fancy thus, to me divinest name!
To whom, prepar'd and bath'd in heaven,
The cest of amplest power is given.

Collins, Ode on the Poetical Character.

CESTUS. † n. s. [Latin.] The girdle of Venus.

She [sickness] pulls off the light and fantastick summer-robe of lust and wanton appetite; and as soon as that cestus, that lascivious girdle is thrown away, then the reins chasten us.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, iii, § 6.

Venus, without any ornament but her own beauties, not so much as her own cestus. Addison, Spectator.

CETA'CEOUS. † adj. [old Fr. cetacé; "poisson cetacée, of the kind of whales." Cotgrave. Lat. cete, Gr. κῆτος.] Of the whale kind.

Such fishes as have lungs or respiration, are not without the wezzon, as whales and cetaceous animals. Brown, Vulg. Err.

He hath created variety of these cetaceous fishes, which converse chiefly in the northern seas, whose whole body being encompassed round with a copious fat or blubber, it is enabled to abide the greatest cold of the sea-water.

Ray on the Creation.

CE'TEBACH. * n. s. [old Fr. ceterach.] A plant; the scale-fern, stone-fern, finger-fern, miltewast.

Cotgrave.

CE'SURE. * n. s. See CÆSURA. The close of a verse; the pause in a sentence.

Vulgar languages that want
Words and sweetness, and be scant
Of true measure;

Tyrant rhyme hath so abused,
That they long since have refused
Other cesure.

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

CÆ'UT. A note in the scale of musick.

Canst I am, the ground of all accord;

A re, to plead Hortensio's passion;

B mi Bianca, take him for thy lord,

C fa ut, that loves with all affection.

Shakespeare.

CH has, in words purely English, or fully naturalized, the sound of tsh; a peculiar pronunciation, which it is hard to describe in words. In some words, derived from the French, it has the sound of sh, as chaise; and, in some derived from the Greek, the sound of k as choleric.

CHACE. See CHASE.

CHACO'ON. * n. s. [Span. chacóna.] A dance, like a saraband, borrowed from the Spaniards, and by them from the Moors. The incasture of it is said to have been always triple time. See Gloss. Ang. Nov. 1707.

Of round fish there are brit, sprat, whiting, chad, eels, congar, millet. Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

To CHAFE. † v. a. [echauffer, Fr. perhaps from the Lat. calfacere, to make warm.]

1. To warm with rubbing.

They laid him upon some of their garments, and fell to rub and chafe him, till they brought him to recover both breath, the servant, and warmth, the companion of living. Sidney.

At last, recovering heart, he does begin
To rub her temples, and to chafe her skin. Spenser, F. Q.

First to chafe and prepare the wax to receive the seal; then, as officers, to set to that seal.

Mountagu, App. to Cæsar, p. 318.

Soft, and more soft, at ev'ry touch it grew;

Like pliant wax, when chafing hands reduce

The former mass to form, and frame to use.

Dryden.

2. To heat by rage or hurry.

Have I not heard the sea, puff'd up with winds,

Rage like an angry boar, chafed with sweat? Shakspeare.

Why do you

Chafe yourself so?

Beaum. and Fl. Philaster.

3. To perfume.

Lillies more white than snow,

New fall'n from heav'n, with violets mix'd, did grow;

Whose scent so chaf'd the neighbour air, that you

Would surely swear Arabick spices grow.

Suckling.

4. To make angry; to enflame passion.

Her intercession chaf'd him so,

When she for thy repeal was suppliant,

That to close prison he commanded her.

Shakspeare.

An offer of pardon more chafed the rage of those, who were resolved to live or die together. Sir John Hayward.

For all that he was inwardly chafed with the heat of youth and indignation, against his own people as well as the Rhodians, he moderated himself betwixt his own rage, and the offence of his soldiers. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

This chaf'd the boar, his nostrils flames expire,

And his red eyeballs roll with living fire. Dryden.

To CHAFE. v. n.

1. To rage; to fret; to fume; to rave; to boil.

Therewith he 'gan full terribly to roar,

And chaf'd at that indignity right sore. Spenser, Iub. Tale.

He will not rejoice so much at the abuse of Falstaff, as he will chafe at the doctor's marrying my daughter. Shakspeare.

Be lion mettled, proud, and take no care,

Who chafes, who frets, or where conspirers are. Shakspeare.

How did they fume, and stamp, and roar, and chafe,

And swear! not Addison himself was safe.

Pope.

2. To fret against any thing.

Once upon a raw and gusty day,

The troubled Tyber chafing with his shores.

Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

The murmuring surge,

That on th' unnumber'd idle pebbles chafes,

Cannot be heard so high.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

CHAFE. n. s. [from the verb.] A heat; a rage; a fury; a passion; a fume; a pett; a fret; a storm.

When Sir Thomas More was speaker of the parliament, with his wisdom and eloquence, he so crossed a purpose of cardinal Wolsey's, that the cardinal, in a chafe, sent for him to Whitehall Canden, Remains.

C H A

At this the knight grew high in chafe,
And staring furiously on Ralph,
He trembled.

Hudibras.

Full loud the chaffer swarms rejoice. T. Warton, Ode XI.

CHAFERY. n. s. A forge in an iron mill, where the iron is wrought into complete bars, and brought to perfection. Phillips.

CHAFF. † n. s. [ceaf, Sax. kaf, Dutch. Perhaps from the Sax. cap, swift; or the Gr. κηρος, light.]

1. The husks of corn that are separated by threshing and winnowing.

We shall be winnow'd with so rough a wind,
That ev'n our corn shall seem as light as chaff,
And good from bad find no partition.

Shakspeare, Henry IV.

Pleasure with instruction should be join'd;
So take the corn, and leave the chaff behind. Dryden.

He set before him a sack of wheat, as it had been just threshed out of the sheaf; he then bid him pick out the chaff from among the corn, and lay it aside by itself. Spectator.

2. It is used for any thing worthless.

Not meddling with the dirt and chaff of nature, that makes the spirit of the mind mud too.

Beaum. and Fl. Elder Brother.

To CHAFFER. † v. n. [kauffen, Germ. to buy, Dr. Johnson says. But "exchange is the sense of the Hebrew word capher, and as all merchandises, amongst the ancients, were generally managed by exchanges of goods for goods; that word capher has travelled very far into our northern languages: thus we have in our English language the word to chaffer or make a bargain. Hence came the name of our Cheap-side in London." Harris on the 53d Chap. of Isaiah, p. 53. Chaffering is, in our old language, chepe-faring, that is going to market, trading, bargaining.] To treat about a bargain; to haggle; to bargain.

That no man overgo, neither deceive his brother in chaffering.

Wicliffe, 1 Thess. iv.

Nor rode himself to Paul's, the publick fair,
To chaffer for preferments with his gold.

Where bishopricks and sinecures are sold. Dryden, Fab.

The chaffering with discenters, and dodging about this or t'other ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a-jar. Swift.

In disputes with chairmen, when your master sends you to chaffer with them, take pity, and tell your master that they will not take a farthing less. Swift.

To CHAFFER. v. a. [The active sense is obsolete.]

1. To buy.

He chaffer'd chairs in which churchmen were set,
And breach of laws to privy farm did let. Spenser, Hub. Tale.

2. To exchange.

Approaching nigh, he never staid to greet,
Ne chaffer words, proud courage to provoke. Spenser, F. Q.

CHAFFER.* n. s. [from the verb.] Merchandize; ware. The word perhaps is not wholly out of use.

Small chaffer doth ease. Skelton's Poems, p. 132.

Deinties for damosels, chaffer far set. Ibid. p. 96.

The chief chaffer and merchandise of England.

Abp. Sandys, Sermon. fol. 20.

CHAFFINCH. n. s. [from chaff and finch.] A bird so called, because it delights in chaff, and is by some much admired for its song.

Phillips's World of Words.

The chaffinch, and other small birds, are injurious to some fruits. Montimer's Husbandry.

CHAFFLESS. adj. [from chaff.] Without chaff.

The love I bear him,

Made me to fan you thus; but the gods made you,
Unlike all others, chaffless. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

CHAFFWEED. n. s. [gnaphalium, Lat.] An herb; the same with cudweed; which see.

CHAFFY. † adj. [from chaff.] Like chaff; full of chaff; light.

If the straws be light and chaffy, and held at a reasonable distance, they will not rise unto the middle.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

A very thief in love, a chaffy lord,
Nor worth the name of villain.

Beaum. and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen.

The most slight and chaffy opinion, if at a great remove from the present age, contracts a veneration. Glanville

CHAFINGDISH. n. s. [from chafe and dish.] A vessel to make any thing hot in; a portable grate for coals.

Make proof of the incorporation of silver and tin in equal quantities, whether it will endure the ordinary fire which belongeth to chafingdishes, posnets, and such other silver vessels.

Bacon, Physical Remains.

CHAGRIN. † n. s. [from chagrin, Fr. which may have been formed from the Lat. aceritas, sourness.] Ill humour; vexation; fretfulness; peevishness. It is pronounced shagreen.

Hear me, and touch Belinda with chagrin;

That single act gives half the world the spleen. Pope.

I grieve with the old, for so many additional inconveniences and chagrins, more than their small remain of life seemed destined to undergo. Pope, Letters.

To CHAGRIN. v. a. [chagriner, Fr.] To vex; to put out of temper; to tease; to make uneasy.

CHAIN. n. s. [chaîne, Fr.]

1. A series of links fastened one within another.

And Pharaoh took off his ring, and put it upon Joseph's hand, and put a gold chain about his neck. Gen. xli. 42.

2. A bond; a manacle; a fetter; something with which prisoners are bound.

Still in constraint your suffering sex remains,

Or bound in formal, or in real chains. Pope.

3. A line of links with which land is measured.

A surveyor may as soon, with his chain, measure out infinite space, as a philosopher, by the quickest flight of mind, reach it, or, by thinking, comprehend it. Locke.

4. A series linked together; as, of causes, or thoughts; a succession; a subordination.

Those so mistake the Christian religion, as to think it is only a chain of fatal decrees, to deny all liberty of man's choice to ward good or evil. Hammond.

As there is pleasure in the right exercise of any faculty, so especially in that of right reasoning; which is still the greater, by how much the consequences are more clear, and the chains of them more long. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

To CHAIN. † v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten or bind with a chain.

They repeal daily any wholesome act established against the rich, and provide more piercing statutes daily to chain up and restrain the poor. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

The mariners he chained in his own galleys for slaves.

Kneller.

Or, march'd I chain'd behind the hostile ear,
The victor's pastime, and the sport of war!
They, with joint force oppression chaining, set
Imperial justice at the helm.

Prior.

Thomson.

2. To enslave; to keep in slavery.

The monarch was ador'd, the people chain'd.

Prior.

This world, 'tis true,

Was made for Cæsar, but for Titus too:

And which more blest? who chain'd his country, say,

Or he, whose virtue sigh'd to lose a day?

Pope.

3. To keep by a chain.

The admiral seeing the mouth of the haven chained, and the castles full of ordnance, and strongly manned, durst not attempt to enter.

Knollys, Hist. of the Turks.

4. To unite.

O Warwick, I do bend my knee with thine,

And in this vow do chain my soul with thine.

Shakspeare.

CHA'INPUMP. n. s. [from chain and pump.] A pump used in large English vessels, which is double, so that one rises as the other falls. It yields a great quantity of water, works easily, and is easily mended, but takes up a great deal of room, and makes a disagreeable noise.

Chambers.

It is not long since the striking of the topmast, a wonderful great ease to great ships both at sea and in harbour, hath been devised, together with the chainpump, which takes up twice as much water as the ordinary did; and we have lately added the bonnet and the drabble.

Raleigh, Essays.

CHA'INSHOT. n. s. [from chain and shot.] Two bullets or half bullets, fastened together by a chain, which, when they fly open, cut away whatever is before them.

In sea fights oftentimes, a buttock, the brawn of the thigh, and the calf of the leg, are torn off by the chainshot, and splinters.

Wiseman, Swi. erg.

CHA'INWORK. n. s. [from chain and work.] Work with open spaces like the links of a chain.

Nets of chequerwork, and wreaths of chainwork, for the chapeters which were upon the tops of the pillars. 1 Kings, vii. 17.

CHAIR. † n. s. [chair, Fr. from cathedra, Lat.
καθῆδρα, Gr.]

1. A moveable seat.

Whether thou choose Cervantes' serious air,

Or laugh and shake in Rab'lais' easy chair,

Or praise the court, or magnify mankind,

Or thy griev'd country's copper chains unbind.

Pope.

If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person, without a back.

Watts, Logic.

2. A seat of justice, or of authority.

He makes for England, here to claim the crown.—

—Is the chair empty? Is the sword unsway'd?

Is the king dead?

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

If thou be that princely eagle's bird,

Show thy descent by gazing 'gainst the sun;

For chair and dukedom, throne and kingdom, say;

Either that's thine, or else thou wert not his.

Shakspeare.

The honour'd gods

Keep Rome in safety, and the chairs of justice

Supply with worthy men.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

Her grace sat down to rest a while,

In a rich chair of state.

Shakspeare, Henry VIII.

The committee of the commons appointed Mr. Pym to take the chair.

Clarendon.

In this high temple, on a chair of state,

The seat of audience, old Latinus sat.

Dryden, Æneid.

3. A vehicle born by men; a sedan.

Think what an equipage thou hast in air,

And view with scorn two pages and a chair.

Pope.

4. A vehicle drawn by one horse.

E'en kings might quit their state to share

Contentment and a one-horse chair.

T. Warton, Phaeton and the One-Horse Chair.

CHA'IRMAN. n. s. [from chair and man.]

1. The president of an assembly.

In assembly, generally one person is chosen chairman or moderator, to keep the several speakers to the rules of order.

Watts.

2. One whose trade it is to carry a chair.

One elbows him, one justles in the shole,

A rafter breaks his head, or chairmen's pole.

Dryden.

Troy chairmen bore the wooden steed,

Pregnant with Greeks, impatient to be freed;

Those bully Greeks, who, as the mo'ns do,

Instead of paying chairmen, run them through.

Swift.

CHAISE. † n. s. [chaise, Fr.]

1. A carriage of pleasure drawn by one horse. Dr.
Johnson says: which was the case formerly, before post-chaises were in request.

Instead of the chariot he might have said the chaise of government; for a chaise is driven by the person that sits in it.

Addison.

[They] ran.

They know not whither, in a chaise and one.

Pope, *Imit. of Horace.*2. A chaise and pair; a chaise and four; the term of later days for a light vehicle, with four wheels, drawn by two or four horses.

CHA'LCEDONY.* See CALCEDONY.

CHALCO'GRAPHIER. n. s. [χαλκογράφος, of χαλκός, brass, and γραφω, to write or engrave.] An engraver in brass.

CHALCO'GRAPHY. n. s. [χαλκογραφία.] Engraving in brass. See CALCOGRAPHY.

CHALDE'E.* adj. Denoting or relating to the language of Chaldea.

The names of the points or accents are all of a late original,
all Chaldee, not any Hebrew.

Br. Walton, Considerata Considered, p. 247.

CHA'LDREN. † n. s. A dry English measure of coals,

CHA'LDRON. } consisting of thirty-six bushels heaped CHA'LDROM. } up, according to the scaled bushel kept at Guildhall, London. The chaldron should weigh two thousand pounds.

Chambers.

Mr. Malone observes, that the preceding notice of the weight must be a mistake or a misprint. A ton of coals weighs twenty hundred pounds; a chaldron should weigh 2800; so that a chaldron is to a ton, as seven to five. Mr. Malone means a London chaldron, which on an average weighs 28½ cwt.
But a Newcastle chaldron, 53 cwt.

CHA'LICE. n. s. [calic, Sax. calice, Fr. calix, Lat.]

1. A cup; a bowl.

When in your motion you are hot,

And, that he calls for drink, I'll have prepar'd him

A calice for the nonce.

Shakspeare.

2. It is generally used for a cup used in acts of worship.

All the church at that time did not think emblematical figures unlawful ornaments of cups or chalices.

Stillington.

CHA'LICED. adj. [from calix, Lat. the cup of a flower.]

Having a cell or cup: applied by Shakspeare to a flower, but now obsolete.

Hark, hark! the lark at heav'n's gate sings,

And Philobus' gins arise,

His steeds to water at these springs,

On calic'd flowers that lie.

Shakspeare.

CHALK. † n. s. [cealc, Sax. calch, Welsh; calch,
Gael. cal or kal, Celt. soft stone.]

Chalk is a white fossil, usually reckoned a stone, but by some ranked among the bolcs. It is used in medicine as an absorbent, and is celebrated for curing the heartburn.

Chambers.

Chalk is of two sorts; the hard, dry, strong chalk, which is best for lime; and a soft, unctuous chalk, which is best for lands, because it easily dissolves with rain and frost. Mortimer.

With chalk I first describe a circle here,
Where these ethereal spirits must appear.

Dryden.

CHALK for cheese. A very old expression, not yet disused, for the imposition practised by those who would substitute an inferior thing for what is good.

Lo! how they feign'd chalke for cheese.

Gower, Conf. Am. Pro.

TO CHALK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To rub with chalk.

The beastly rabble then came down
From all the garrets in the town,
And stalls and shopboards in vast swarms,
With new chalk'd bills and rusty arms.

Hudibras.

2. To manure with chalk.

Land that is chalked, if it is not well dunged, will receive but little benefit from a second chalking.

Mortimer.

3. To mark or trace out as with chalk.

Being not prompt by ancestry, whose grace
Chalks successors their way.

Shakespeare.

His own mind chalked out to him the just proportions and measures of behaviour to 'd. fellow-creatures.

South.

With these helps I might at least have chalked out a way for others, to amend my errors in a like design.

Dryden.

The time falls within the compass here chalked out by nature, very punctually.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

CHALK-CUTTER. n. s. [from chalk and cut.] A man that digs chalk.

Shells, by the sea-side called chalk eggs, are dug up commonly in the chalk-pit, where the chalk-cutters drive a great trade with them.

Woodward.

CHALK-PIT. n. s. [from chalk and pit.] A pit in which chalk is dug. See CHALK-CUTTER.

CHALK-STONE. * n. s. [Sax. cealc-stan.] A small piece of chalk.

He maketh all the stones of the altar as chalk-stones that are beaten in sunder.

Isaiah, xxvii. 9.

CHALKY. adj. [from chalk.]

1. Consisting of chalk; white with chalk.

As far as I could ken the chalky cliffs,
When from thy shore the tempest beat us back,
I stood upon the hatches in the storm.

Shakespeare.

That bellowing beats on Dover's chalky cliff.

Rowe.

2. Impregnated with chalk.

Chalky water towards the top of earth is too fretting. Bacon.

TO CHALLENGE. v. a. [old Fr. challenge, to claim. Kelham, Norm. Dict. chalonger, to dispute, to contest, Lacombe. Calenger, calonger, "calomnier, accuser, disputer," Roquefort; and thus our old lexicography terms "challenge or challenging, a crafty and false accusation, calumnia." Huloet. One of the oldest meanings of challenge which I find, is the legal one of objecting to a witness, viz. in the tenth century. See CHALLENGE.]

1. To call another to answer for an offence by combat.

The Prince of Wales stepped forth before the king,
And, nephew, challeng'd you to single fight.

Shakespeare.

2. To call to a contest.

Thus form'd for speed, he challenges the wind,
And leaves the Scythian arrow far behind.
I challenge any man to make any pretence to power by right of fatherhood, either intelligible or possible.

Dryden.

Locke.

3. To accuse.

Many of them be such losels and scatterlings, as that they cannot easily by any sheriff be gotten, when they are challenged for any such fact.

Spenser on Ireland.

Where the grac'd person of our Banquo present,
Whom I may rather challenge for unkindness.

Shakespeare.

4. [In law.] To object to the impartiality of any one.

[See the noun.]

Though only twelve are sworn, yet twenty-four are to be returned, to supply the defects or want of appearance of those that are challenged off, or make default.

Hale.

5. To claim as due.

That divine order, whereby the pre-eminence of chiefest acceptation is by the best things worthily challenged.

Hooker.

Which of you, shall we say, doth love us most?

That we our largest bounty may extend,
Where nature doth with merit challenge.

Shakespeare.

And so much duty as my mother shew'd

To you, preferring you before her father;

So much I challenge, that I may profess

Due to the Moor, my lord.

Shakespeare.

Had you not been their father, these white flakes

Did challenge pity of them.

Shakespeare.

So when a tyger sucks the bullock's blood,

A famish'd lion, issuing from the wood,

Roars loudly fierce, and challenges the food.

Dryden.

Hast thou yet drawn o'er young Juba?

That still would recommend thee more to Cæsar,

And challenge better terms.

Addison.

6. To call any one to the performance of conditions.

I will now challenge you of your promise, to give me certain rules as to the principles of blazonry.

Peacham on Drawing.

CHALLENGE. † n. s. [old Fr. challenge, a claim.

Kelham, Norm. Dict. "Challenge, moyens par lesquels on rejette le témoignage des jureurs. 930." Lacombe.]

1. A summons to combat.

I never in my life

Did hear a challenge urg'd more modestly.

Shakespeare.

2. A demand of something as due.

And he scide to hem, smyte ye no man wrongfully, nether make ye fals challenge, and be ye apayed with your sondis.

Wicliffe, St. Luke, iii.

Taking for his younglings cark,

Lest greedy eyes to them might challenge lay,

Busy with oker did the shoulders mark.

Sidney.

There must be no challenge of superiority, or discountenancing of freedom.

Collier of Friendship.

3. [In law.] An exception taken either against persons or things; persons, as in assize to the jurors, or any one or more of them, by the prisoner at the bar. Challenge made to the jurors, is either made to the array, or to the polls: challenge made to the array is, when the whole number is excepted against, as partially empannelled: challenge to or by the poll, is when some one or more are excepted against, as not indifferent: challenge to the jurors is divided into challenge principal, and challenge for cause: challenge principal is that which the law allows without cause alleged, or farther examination; as a prisoner at the bar, arraigned upon felony, may peremptorily challenge to the number of twenty, one after another, of the jury empannelled upon him, alleging no cause.

Cowel.

You are mine enemy, I make my challenge,

You shall not be my judge.

Shakespeare.

CHALLENGEABLE. * adj. [from challenge.] That may be called to account; liable to challenge.

How lords are challengeable by their vassals; and how homage may be dissolved, and adjudged by combat.

Sadler's Rights of the Kingdom, (1649,) p. 30.

God now useth his Majesty to succeed and suppress persons lately in power, highly challengeable for the want of mercy and truth.

Spencer's Righteous Ruler, (1660,) p. 47.

CHALLENGER. † n. s. [from challenge, old Fr. "les chalezurs, the challengers." Kelham, Norm. Dict.]

1. One that defies or summons another to combat.

Young man, have you challenged Charles the wrestler?—
No, fair princess; he is the general challenger. Shakspeare.

Death was denounc'd;
He took the summons, void of fear,
And unconcernedly cast his eyes around,
As if to find and dare the grisly challenger. Dryden.

2. One that claims superiority.

Whose worth
Stood challenger on mount of all the age,
For her perfections. Shakspeare.

3. A claimant; one that requires something as of right.

Earnest challengers there are of trial, by some publick disputation. Hooker.

CHALYBEAN.* adj. [old Fr. chalibé, steeled, done over with steel; from the Lat. chalybes, men who were famous among the ancients for their iron works; chalybs, iron or steel.] Relating to steel well wrought or tempered.

The hammer'd cuirass,
Chalybean temper'd steel, and frock of mail

CHALYBEATE. adj. [from chalybs, Lat. steel.] Impregnated with iron or steel; having the qualities of steel.

The diet ought to strengthen the solids, allowing spices and wine, and the use of chalybeate waters. Arbuthnot on Diet.

CHAM.* n. s. [Pers.] The sovereign prince of Tartary, by way of distinction; a lord of the Persian court, or a governor of a Persian province.
I will fetch you a toothpicker now from the farthest nich of Asia; bring you the length of Prester John's foot; fetch you a hair off the great Chan's beard.

Shakspeare, Much Ato, &c. ii. 1.

CHAMADE.* n. s. [French.] The beat of the drum which declares a surrender, Dr. Johnson says. This, however, is the more modern acceptation of the word; It was formerly the sound of the trumpet; whence "sonner la chamade, to sound a parley; also, to summon, challenge, call on." Cotgrave. Menage derives the word from the Ital. chiamata, Lat. clamare, to cry out.

Several French battalions made a shew of resistance; but, upon our preparing to fill up a little fossé, in order to attack them, they beat the chamade, and sent us charte blanche.

Addison.

CHAMBER.* n. s. [chambre, Lat. siambr, Welch; cambre, Celt. low Lat. cambra, Gr. καμάρα.]

1. An apartment in a house; generally used for those appropriated to lodging.

Bid them come forth and hear me,
Or at their chamber door I'll beat the drum,
Till it cry, Sleep to death. Shakspeare.

When we have mark'd with blood those sleepy two,
Of his own chamber. Shakspeare.

A natural cave in a rock may have something not much unlike to parlours or chambers. Bentley.

2. Any retired room.

The dark caves of death, and chambers of the grave. Prior.

3. Any cavity or hollow.

Petit has, from an examination of the figure of the eye, argued against the possibility of a film's existence in the posterior chamber. Sharp.

4. A court of justice.

In the Imperial chamber this vulgar answer is not admitted, viz. I do not believe it, as the matter is propounded and alleged. A life, Pargeron.

5. The lower part of a gun where the charge is lodged.

6. A species of cannon; a small piece of ordnance.

"A chamber is a gun which stands erect on its breech. Such are used only on occasions of rejoicing, and are so contrived as to carry great charges, and thereby to make a noise more than proportioned to their bulk. They are called chambers because they are mere chambers to lodge powder; a chamber being the technical term for that cavity in a piece of ordnance which contains the combustibles. Some of them are still fired in the Park, and at the places opposite to the Parliament-house when the king goes thither." Note on Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. ed. Steevens.

Names given them, as cannons, demi-cannons, chambers, arquebuse, musket, &c. Camden, Rem.

To come off the breach with his pike bent bravely, and to surgery bravely; to venture upon the charged chambers bravely.

Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.

7. The cavity where the powder is lodged in a mine.
CHAMBER of London.* The city of London obtained the title of Camera Regis, some centuries since; and was addressed by this appellation in our authors of elder times.

Welcome, sweet prince, to London, to your chamber.

Shakspeare, K. Rich. III.

His majesty's triumphant passage from the Tower through his honourable city and chamber of London, being the 15th of March, 1603. Dekker's Entertainment given to K. James.

To CHAMBER.* v. n. [from the noun.] To be wanton, to intrigue. See CHAMBERING.

Their chambering fortitude they did desery
By their soft maiden voice, and flickering eye.

Niccol's Cuckow, 1607.

To CHAMBER.* v. a. To shut up as in a chamber. The example from Shakspeare is given by Dr. Johnson, under the verb neuter.

To prove myself a loyal gentleman
Even in the best blood chamber'd in his bosom.

Shakspeare, K. Rich. II.

A beggarly drunkard is haled to the stocks, whiles the rich is chambered up to sleep out his surfeit.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. b. 4.

I that have now been chamber'd here alone,
Barr'd of my guardian, or of any else,
Am not for nothing at an instant freed
To fresh access. Ford, Trag. 'Tis Pity She's a Whore.

CHAMBER-COUNCIL.* n. s. Private or secret council; confidential communication.

I have trusted thee, Camillo,
With all the nearest things to my heart, as well
My chamber-councils. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale, i. 2.

CHAMBER-COUNSEL.* n. s. A counsellor who delivers his private opinion, but does not plead in the court of law. See CHAMBER-PRACTICE.

CHAMBER-HANGING.* n. s. [from chamber and hang.] The tapestry or other furniture of a chamber.

With tokens thus and thus; averring notes
Of chamber-hanging, pictures, &c. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

CHAMBER-PRACTICE.* n. s. The practice of lawyers, who give their advice privately, without appearing in court.

Chamber-practice, and even private conveyancing, the most voluntary agency, are prohibited to them.

Burke on the Popery Laws.

CHAMBERER.* n. s. [from chamber.]

1. A man of intrigue.

I have not those soft parts of conversation,
That chamberers have. Shakspeare.

2. A chamberlain; a groom of a chamber.

Our old authors use it also for a chamber-maid.

[old Fr. chambriere, f. g. Cotgrave. chambrier, m. g. camérier, Lat. camerarius.]

I ne held me never digne in no manere

To be your wife, ne yet your chamberere. Chaucer, Clerk's Tale.
Ladies faire with their gentilwomen chamberers also and lavenders. Arnold's Chronicle, fol. 193.

She [Q. Katherine Howard] had gotten also into her privy chamber, to be one of her chamberers, one of the women which had before lye in the bed with her.

Lord Herbert, Hist. of K. Hen. VIII.

CHA'MBERFELLOW, n. s. [from chamber and fellow.]

One that lies in the same chamber.

It is my fortune to have a chamberfellow, with whom I agree very well in many sentiments. Spectator.

CHAMBERING.* n. s. [from chamber.] Intrigue; wantonness. It is a noun, both in the original, and in the translation, of the N. Test., but has been given as an example of the verb nouter. The passage is rendered by Wicliffe, "not in beddis and unchastitees."

Let us walk honestly as in the day, not in rioting and drunkenness, not in chambering and wantonness. Rom. xiii. 13.

CHA'MBERLAIN.* n. s. [old Fr. camberlane, chamber- lan.]

1. Lord great chamberlain of England is the sixth officer of the crown; a considerable part of his function is at a coronation; to him belongs the provision of every thing in the house of lords; he disposes of the sword of state; under him are the gentleman usher of the black rod, yeomen ushers, and door keepers. To this office the duke of Ancaster makes an hereditary claim. Chambers.

2. Lord chamberlain of the household has the oversight of all officers belonging to the king's chambers, except the precinct of the bedchamber. Chambers.

Humbly complaining to her deity,

Got my lord chamberlain his liberty.

Shakspeare.

He was made lord steward, that the staff of chamberlain might be put into the hands of his brother. Clarendon.

A patriot is a fool in every age,
Whom all lord chamberlains allow the stage.

Pope.

3. A servant who has the care of the chambers.

Think'st thou,

That the bleak air, thy boisterous chamberlain,

Will put thy shirt on warm.

Shakspeare.

When Duncan is asleep, —

his two chamberlains

Will I with wine and wassel so convince.

Shakspeare.

He serv'd at first Emilia's chamberlain.

Dryden, Fables.

4. A receiver of rents and revenues; as, chamberlain of the exchequer, of Chester, of the city of London.

Chambers.

Erastus, the chamberlain of the city, saluteth you.

Rom. xvi. 23.

CHA'MBERLAINSHIP. n. s. [from chamberlain.] The office of a chamberlain.

CHA'MBERMAID. n. s. [from chamber and maid.] A maid whose business is to dress a lady, and wait in her chamber.

Men will not hiss,

The chambermaid was named Ciss.

B. Jonson.

Some coarse country wench, almost decay'd,

Trudges to town, and first turns chambermaid.

Pope.

When he doubted whether a word were intelligible or no,
he used to consult one of his lady's chambermaids.

Swift.

If these nurses ever presume to entertain the girls with the common follies practised by chambermaids among us, they are publicly whipped.

Swift.

CHA'MBLET.* } n. s. [from camelot. See CAMELOT

CHA'MELOT. } and CHAMLET.] Variegated stuff.

And way'd upon like water-chamlet.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. xl. 45.

Your cold water-chamlets; or your paintings

Spitted with copper.

Beaum. and Fl. Philaster.

To CHA'MBLET. v. a. [from camelot. See CAMELOT.]

To vary; to variegate.

Some have the veins more varied and chamblated; as oak, whereof wainscot is made. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

CHA'MBREL of a Horse. The joint or bending of the upper part of the hinder legs. Farrier's Dict.

CHAMELEON. n. s. [χαμαιλεων.]

The chameleon has four feet, and on each foot three claws. Its tail is long; with this, as well as with its feet, it fastens itself to the branches of trees.
Its tail is flat, its nose long, ending in an obtuse point; its back is sharp, its skin plaited, and jagged like a saw from the neck to the last joint of the tail, and upon its head it has something like a comb; like a fish, it has no neck. Some have asserted, that it lives only upon air; but it has been observed to feed on flies, caught with its tongue, which is about ten inches long, and three thick; made of white flesh, round, but flat at the end; or hollow and open, resembling an elephant's trunk. It also shrinks, and grows longer. This animal is said to assume the colour of those things to which it is applied; but our modern observers assure us, that its natural colour, when at rest and in the shade, is a bluish grey; though some are yellow, and others green, but both of a smaller kind. When it is exposed to the sun, the grey changes into a darker grey, inclining to a dun colour, and its parts, which have least of the light upon them, are changed into spots of different colours. The grain of its skin, when the light doth not shine upon it, is like cloth mixed with many colours. Sometimes when it is handled, it seems speckled with dark spots, inclining to green. If it be put upon a black hat, it appears to be of a violet colour; and sometimes if it be wrapped up in linen, it is white; but it changes colour only in some parts of the body. Calmet.

A chameleon is a creature about the bigness of an ordinary lizard; his head unproportionably big, and his eyes great; he moveth his head without writhing of his neck, which is inflexible, as a hog doth;
his back crooked, his skin spotted with little tumours, less eminent nearer the belly; his tail slender and long; on each foot he hath five fingers, three on the outside, and two on the inside; his tongue of a marvellous length in respect of his body, and hollow at the end, which he will launch out to prey upon flies; of colour green, and of a dusky yellow, brighter and whiter towards the belly; yet spotted with blue, white, and red. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

I can add colours even to the chameleon;

Change shapes with Proteus, for advantage.

Shakspeare.

One part devours the other, and leaves not so much as a mouthful of that popular air, which the chameleons gasp after.

Decay of Piety.

The thin chameleon, fed with air, receives

The colour of the thing to which he cleaves.

Dryden.

As the chameleon, which is known

To have no colours of his own,

But borrows from his neighbour's hue

His white, or black, his green, or blue.

Prior.

To CHAMELEONIZE.* v. a. [from chameleon.] To change into many colours. Dict.

These are the beasts which you shall eat, the ox, the sheep, and wild ox, and the chamois. Deut. xiv. 5.

CHA'MOMILE. n. s. [χαμαιμύλον. See CAMOMILE.] An odoriferous plant.

Cool violets, and orpine growing still,
Embathed balm, and cheerful galingale,
Fresh costmary, and breathful chamomile,
Dull poppy, and drink quick'ning setuale. Spencer.

For though the chamomile, the more it is trodden on the faster it grows; yet youth, the more it is wasted, the sooner it wears. Shakspeare.

Posset drink with chamomile flowers. Floyer on the Humours.

To CHAMP. v. a. [champayer, Fr.]

1. To bite with a frequent action of the teeth.

Coffee and opium are taken down, tobacco but in smoke, and betel is but champed in the mouth with a little lime. Bacon.

The fiend reply'd not; overcome with rage;
But, like a proud steed rein'd, went haughty on,
Champing his iron curb. Milton, P. L.

At his command,
The steeds caparison'd with purple stand,
And champ betwixt their teeth the foaming gold. Dryden.

2. To devour, with violent action of the teeth.

A tobacco pipe happened to break in my mouth, and the pieces left such a delicious roughness on my tongue, that I champed up the remaining part. Spectator.

To CHAMP. v. n. To perform frequently the action of biting.

Muttering and champing, as though his cud had troubled him, he gave occasion to Musidorus to come near him. Sidney.

They began to repent of that they had done, and irresolutely to champ upon the bit they had taken into their mouths. Hooker.

His jaws did not answer equally to one another; but by his frequent motion and champing with them, it was evident they were neither luxated nor fractured. Wiseman.

CHAMPA'GNE.* n. s. [from the province of Champagne in France.] Wine so called.

Quick,

As is the wit it gives, the gay champagne. Thomson, Autumn.

CHAMPAIGN.† n. s. [campagne, Fr. Our word was formerly written champion, and champion; and, in later times, champain; as in Milton's own editions of his poetry. See the adjective.] A flat open country.

In the abuses of the customs, meseems, you have a fair champaign laid open to you, in which you may at large stretch out your discourse. Spencer, State of Ireland.

The Canaanites, which dwell in the champaign over against Gilead. Deut. xi. 30.

C H A

There were very many in the open valley, [in the margin champaign.] Ezek. xxxvii. 2.

Of all these bounds,

With shadowy forests and with champaigns rich'd,
We make thee lady. Shakspeare.

If two bordering princes have their territory meeting on an open champaign, the more mighty will continually seek occasion to extend his limits unto the further border thereof. Raleigh.

Sir John Norris maintained a retreat without disarray, by the space of some miles, part of the way champaign, unto the city of Gaunt, with less loss of men than the enemy. Bacon.

From his side two rivers flow'd,

The one winding, the other straight, and left between Fair champaign, with less rivers interven'd. Milton, P. L.

CHAMPAIGN, or CHAMPAIN.* adj. [from the substantive.] Open, or flat.

Thee all the champion fields about, both hill and vale doe cry;
And all the pasture grounds. Turberville, Mant. Ecl. 26.

The champaign head

CHAMPER.* n. s. [from To champ.] A biter, or nibbler; facetiously introduced into the Spectator, but a serious word of elder times; for a horse is "a bridle-champ." Sherwood.

CHAMPERTORS.† n. s. [old Fr. champarteur, from champart; which is from the Lat. campi pars. Our word should be written champartors.] Such as move suits, or cause them to be moved, either by their own or others procurement, and pursue, at their proper costs, to have part of the land in contest, or part of the gains. Cowel.

CHAMPERTY.† n. s. [champart, Fr. See CHAMPERTOR.] A maintenance of any man in his suit while depending, upon condition to have part of the thing when it is recovered. Cowel.

They bring grace to his good cheer, but no peace or benediction else to his house; these made the champarty, he contributed the law, and both joined in the divinity. Milton, Colasterion.

He thought himself in duty and in conscience bound to clear those points from error which he delivered, lest sacred authority might come in for maintenance and champerty, as they would have it. Mountagu, App. to Cws. p. 5.

CHAMPI'GNON. n. s. [champignon, Fr.] A kind of mushroom.

He viler friends with doubtful mushrooms treats,
Secure for you, himself champignons eats. Dryden.

It has the resemblance of a large champignon before it is opened, branching out into a large round knob. Woodward.

CHAMPION.† n. s. [champion, Fr. campione, Ital. campio, low Lat. campus, Lat. a field; kamp, old Goth. a battle; Sax. campian, to fight; Germ. kampen. Serenius adduces the Goth. kampe, or kappe, pugil. a champion.]

1. A man who undertakes a cause in single combat.

In many armies, the matter should be tried by duel between two champions. Bacon.

For hot, cold, moist, and dry, four champions fierce,
Strive here for mastery, and to battle bring
Their embryon atoms. Milton, P. L.

O light of Trojans, and support of Troy,
Thy father's champion, and thy country's joy! Dryden.

At length the adverse admirals appear,
The two bold champions of each country's right. Dryden.

2. A hero; a stout warrior; one bold in contest.

A stouter champion never handled sword. Shakspeare
This makes you incapable of conviction, and they applaud themselves as zealous champions for truth, when indeed they are contending for error. Locke.

3. In law.

In our common law, champion is taken no less for him that trieth the combat in his own case, than for him that fighteth in the case of another. Conuel.

To CHA'MPION. v. a. [from the noun.] To challenge to the combat.

The seed of Banquo, kings!

Rather than so, come fate, into the list,

And champion me to the utterance. Shakspeare.

CHA'MPIONESS. * n. s. [from champion.] A female warrior.

The championess he thought he saw and knew.

Fairfax, Tasso.

The championess had harnessed her peacocks to go for Samos.

Dryden, Amphitryon.

CHANCE. † n. s. [chance, Fr. from the Lat. ca-dentia.]

1. Fortune; the cause of fortuitous events.

As the unthought accident is guilty

Of what we wildly do, so we profess

Ourselves to be the slaves of chance, and flies

Of every wind that blows. Shakspeare.

The only man, of all that chance could bring

To meet my arms, was worth the conquering.

Dryden.

Chance is but a mere name, and really nothing in itself; a conception of our minds, and only a compendious way of speaking, whereby we would express, that such effects as are commonly attributed to chance, were verily produced by their true and proper causes, but without their design to produce them.

Bentley.

2. Fortune; the act of fortune; what fortune may bring: applied to persons.

These things are commonly not observed, but left to take their chance.

Bacon's Essays.

3. Accident; casual occurrence; fortuitous event.

The race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong; nor bread to the wise, nor riches to men of understanding; nor yet favour to men of skill; but time and chance happeneth to them all. Eccles. ix. 11. The meaning is, that the success of these outward things is not always carried by desert; but by chance in regard of us, though by PROVIDENCE in regard of God.

Hakewill on Providence, p. 451.

To say a thing is a chance or casualty, as it relates to second causes, is not profaneness, but a great truth; as signifying no more, than that there are some events besides the knowledge and power of second agents.

South.

The beauty I beheld, has struck me dead;

Unknowingly she strikes, and kills by chance;

Poison is in her eyes, and death in ev'ry glance.

Dryden.

All nature is but art, unknown to thee;

All chance direction, which thou canst not see.

Pope.

4. Event; success; luck: applied to things.

Now we'll together, and the chance of goodness

Be like our warrantied quarrel!

Shakspeare.

5. Misfortune; unlucky accident.

You were us'd

To say, extremity was the trier of spirits,

That common chances common men could bear. Shakspeare.

6. Possibility of any occurrence.

A chance, but chance may lead, where I may meet

Some wand'ring spirit of heav'n, by fountain side,

Or in thick shade retir'd.

Milton, P. L.

Then your ladyship might have a chance to escape this address.

Swift.

CHANCE. † adj. Happening by chance.

Now should they part, malicious tongues would say,

They met like chance companions on the way.

Dryden.

I would not take the gift,

Which, like a toy dropt from the hands of fortune,

Lay for the next chance comer.

Dryden.

Besides these there were five chance auditors.

Swift.

CHANCE. * adv. By chance; perchance.

If chance by lowly contemplation led,

Some kindred spirit shall enquire thy fate.

Gray's Elegy.

To CHANCE. v. n. [from the noun.] To happen; to fall out; to fortune.

Think what a chance thou chancest on; but think;—

Thou hast thy mistress still.

Shakspeare.

How chance thou art not with the prince thy brother?

Shakspeare.

Ay, Casca, tell us what hath chanc'd to-day,

That Caesar looks so sad.

Shakspeare.

He chanced upon divers of the Turks victuallers, whom he easily took.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

I chose the safer sea, and chanc'd to find

A river's mouth impervious to the wind.

Pope, Odyssey.

CHA'NCEFUL. adj. [chance and full.] 'Hazardous.

Out of use.

Myself would offer you to accompany

In this adventurous chanceful jeopardy.

Spenser.

CHANCE-MEDLEY. † n. s. [from chance and medley,

Dr. Johnson says. Some have considered it as a corruption of the Fr. chaud mēlée, a fault committed in a sudden tumult; and Coles, in his English vocabulary, gives chaud-melle, with this meaning. The Scotch also have the expression chaud-melle, for a sudden quarrel. Kelham, in his Norman dictionary, says, that chaud-melle is "a hot or sudden debate, corruptly called chance-medley." Fr. chaud, hot; and melle, an affray.] In law.

The casual slaughter of a man, not altogether without the fault of the slayer, when ignorance or negligence is joined with the chance; as if a man lop trees by an highway side, by which many usually travel, and cast down a bough, not giving warning to take heed thereof, by which bough one passing by is slain: in this case he offends, because he gave no warning, that the party might have taken heed to himself.

Conuel.

If such an one should have the ill hap, at any time, to strike a man dead with a smart saying, thought, in all reason and conscience, to be judged but a chance-medley.

South.

CHA'NCEABLE. adj. [from chance.] Accidental.

The trial thereof was cut off by the chanceable coming thither of the king of Iberia.

Sidney.

CHA'NCEL. † n. s. [from cancelli, Lat. lattices, with which the chancel was inclosed. κρύγελαι, κἀγγελοι, vox Græco-barb. Cancelli. "Ita vocantur in templis sacra adyta, velis, cancellis, et fenestris januis obvelata, quibus ab accessu indigni arcentur." V. Meursii Gloss. et Critopuli Emend. in Meurs. p. 39.] The eastern part of the church, in which the altar is placed.

Whether it be allowable or no, that the minister should sit in service in the chancel.

Hooker.

The chancel of this church is vaulted with a single stone of four feet in thickness, and an hundred and fourteen in circumference.

Addison on Italy.

CHA'NCELLOR. † n. s. [cancellarius, Lat. chancellor,

Fr. from cancellare, litteras vel scriptum linea per medium ducta damnare, and seemeth of itself likewise to be derived à cancellis, which signify all one with κρύκλιδες, a lattice; that is, a thing made of wood or iron bars, laid crossways one over another, so that a man may see through them in and out. It may be thought that judgement seats were compassed in with bars, to defend the judges and other officers from the press of the multitude, and yet not to hinder any man's view, Dr. Johnson says. Casiodorus, deducing the name from cancelli, adds that "chancellors examined matters within places severed apart, enclosed with partitions of such cross bars. Regard, saith he to the chancellor, what name you bear; it cannot be hidden, which you do within lattices; for you keep your grates lightsome, your bars open, and your doors as transparent as windows. Whereby it is evident, that he sate within grates, where he was to be seen on every side; and thereof it may be thought he took his name." Jus Sigilli, or the law of England, 1673. p. 7. Others derive it from his power of cancelling writings. See To CANCEL.

*Quasitus regni tibi cancellarius Angli,
Primus solliciti mente petendus erit.
"Hic est, qui regni leges cancellat iniquas,
Et mandata pii principis aqua facit.*

Verses of Nigel de Wetcere to the Bishop of Ely, chancellor to Richard I.

Our word was formerly written chancellor; so Lord Bacon, in the original editions of his works, repeatedly writes it; and perhaps it should be so, when we consider the derivation chancellier.]

1. The highest judge of the law.

Cancellarius, at the first, signified the registers or actuaries in court; grapharios, scil. qui conscribendis & excipiendis judicium actis dant operam. But this name is greatly advanced, and not only in other kingdoms but in this, is given to him that is the chief judge in causes of property; for the chancellor hath power to moderate and temper the written law, and subjecteth himself only to the law of nature and conscience. Cowel.

Turn out, you rogue, how like a beast you lie:
Go, buckle to the law: Is this an hour
To stretch your limbs? you'll ne'er be chancellor.

Dryden, jun.

Aristides was a person of the strictest justice, and best acquainted with the laws, as well as forms of their government; so that he was in a manner chancellor of Athens. Swift.

2. CHANCELLOR in the Ecclesiastical Court. A bishop's lawyer; a man trained up in the civil and canon law, to direct the bishops in matters of judgment, relating as well to criminal as to civil affairs in the church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. CHANCELLOR of a Cathedral. A dignitary; whose office it is to superintend the regular exercise of devotion.

4. CHANCELLOR of the Exchequer. An officer who sits in that court, and in the exchequer chamber. He has power, with others, to compound for forfeitures on penal statutes, bonds and recognizances entered into by the king. He has great authority in managing the royal revenue, and in matters of first fruits. The court of equity is in the exchequer chamber, and is held before the lord treasurer, chancellor, and barons, as that of common law before the barons only. Cowel. Chamb.

5. CHANCELLOR of an University. The principal magistrate, who, at Oxford, holds his office during life, but, at Cambridge, he may be elected every three years.

6. CHANCELLOR of the Order of the Garter, and other military orders, is an officer who seals the commissions and mandates of the chapter and assembly of the knights, keeps the register of their deliberations, and delivers their acts under the seal of the order. Chambers.

CHA'NCELLORSHIP. n. s. The office of chancellor.

The Sunday after More gave up his chancellorship of England, he came himself to his wife's pew, and used the usual words of his gentleman-usher, Madam, my lord is gone. Camden.

CHA'NCERY.† n. s. [from chancellor; probably chancellery; then shortened.] The court of equity and conscience, moderating the rigour of other courts, that are tied to the letter of the law; whereof the lord chancellor of England is the chief judge, or the lord keeper of the great seal.

Cowel.

The contumacy and contempt of the party must be signified in the court of chancery, by the bishops letters under the seal episcopal.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

The mercy, and the pardon, and the huge moderation of that court, [the Gospel,] though it hath mollified the strict law into never so much chancery, will not proceed further, and mollify obedience into libertinism. Hammond, Serm. vi.

CHA'NCRE. n. s. [chancre, Fr.] An ulcer usually arising from venereal maladies.

It is possible he was not well cured, and would have relapsed with a chancre. Wiseman.

CHA'NCROUS. adj. [from chancre.] Having the qualities of a chancre; ulcerous.

You may think I am, too strict in giving so many internals in the cure of so small an ulcer as a chancre, or rather a chancreous callus. Wiseman.

CHANDELIER.† n. s. [chandelier, Fr.] A branch for candles.

Lamps, branches, or chandeliers, (as we now modishly call them,) were adorned with the flowers then most in season.

Stukeley, Palaeogr. Sacra, (1736.) p. 69.

CHA'NDLER.† n. s. [chandelier, Fr.]

1. An artisan whose trade it is to make candles, or a person who sells them.

The sack that thou hast drunken me, would have bought me lights as good cheap at the dearest chandlers in Europe. Shakespeare.

Shakespeare.

But whether black or lighter dyes are worn,
The chandler's basket, on his shoulder born,
With tallow spots thy coat.

Gay.

2. Formerly, a candlestick. Ray's North Country Words, p. 14. It is still employed in this sense in Scotland. It is an abbreviation of the Fr. chandelier; a word which our ancestors disdained to adopt; for Stukeley sneers at the modish introduction of it, in 1736. See CHANDELIER.

3. A corn-chandler, a seller of corn. See CORN-CHANDLER.

CHA'NDLERLY*. adj. [from chandler.] Like a chandler. To be senced our headmoney, our twopences in their chandlerly shopbook of Easter. Milton, of Ref. in Eng. B. 2.

CHA'NDLERY*. n. s. [from chandler.] The articles sold by a chandler.

CHA'NDRY*. n. s. low Lat. eschanderia.] The place where the candles are kept. Blount.

To mistake six torches from the chandry, and give them one. B. Jonson, Masques.

CHA'NERIN. n. s. [old French.] The forepart of the head of a horse, which extends from under the ears, along the interval between the eyebrows, down to his nose. Farrier's Dict.

To CHANGE. v. a. [changer, Fr. cambia, Lat.]

1. To put one thing in the place of another.

He that cannot look into his own estate, had need choose well whom he employeth, and change them often; for new are more timorous, and less subtle. Bacon's Essays.

2. To quit any thing for the sake of another: with for before the thing taken or received.

Persons grown up in the belief of any religion, cannot change that for another, without applying their understanding duly to consider and compare both. South.

The French and we still change; but here's the curse,
They change for better, and we change for worse. Dryden.

3. To give and take reciprocally: with the particle with before the person to whom we give, and from whom we take.

To secure thy content, look upon those thousands, with whom thou wouldst not, for any interest, change thy fortune and condition. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

4. To alter; to make other than it was.

Thou shalt not see me blush,
Nor change my countenance for this arrest;
A heart unspotted is not easily daunted. Shakespeare.

Whatsoever is brought upon thee, take cheerfully, and be patient when thou art changed to a low estate. Eccles. ii. 4.

For the elements were changed in themselves by a kind of harmony, like as in psaltary notes change the name of the tune, and yet are always sounds. Wisdom, xix. 18.

5. To mend the disposition or mind.

I would she were in heaven, so she could Intreat some pow'r to change this curish Jew. Shakespeare.

6. To discount a larger piece of money into several smaller.

A shopkeeper might be able to change a guinea, or a moi-dore, when a customer comes for a crown's worth of goods. Swift.

7. To change a horse, or to change hand, is to turn or bear the horse's head from one hand to the other from the left to the right, or from the right to the left. Furrier's Dict.

TO CHANGE. v. n.

1. To undergo change; to suffer alteration: as, his fortune may soon change, though he is now so secure.

One Julia, that his changing thought forgot,
Would better fit his chamber. Shakespeare.

2. To change, as the moon; to begin a new monthly revolution.

I am weary of this moon; would he would change. Shakespeare.

CHANGE. v. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. An alteration of the state of any thing.

All the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come. Job, xiv. 14.

Since I saw you last,
There is a change upon you. Shakespeare.

2. A succession of one thing in the place of another.

O wondrous changes of a fatal scene,
Still varying to the last! Dryden.

Nothing can cure this part of ill breeding, but change and variety of company, and that of persons above us. Locke.

Empires by various turns shall rise and set;
While thy abandon'd tribes shall only know

A different master, and a change of time. Prior.

Hear how Timotheus' various lays surprize,
And bid alternate passions fall and rise!

While, at each change, the son of Libyan Jove
Now burns with glory, and then melts with love. Pope.

3. The time of the moon in which it begins a new monthly revolution.

Take seeds or roots, and set some of them immediately after the change, and others of the same kind immediately after the full. Bacon, Natural History.

4. Novelty; a state different from the former.

The hearts
Of all his people shall revolt from him,
And kiss the lips of unacquainted change. Shakespeare.

Our fathers did, for change, to France repair,
And they, for change, will try our English air. Dryden.

5. [In ringing.] An alteration of the order in which a set of bells is sounded.

Four bells admit twenty-four changes in ringing, and five bells one hundred and twenty. Holder, Elements of Speech.

Easy it may be to contrive new postures, and ring other changes upon the same bells. Norris.

6. That which makes a variety; that which may be used for another of the same kind.

I will now put forth a riddle unto you; if you can find it out, then I will give you thirty sheets, and thirty change of garments. Judges, xiv. 12.

7. Small money, which may be given for larger pieces.

Wood buys up our old halfpence, and from thence the present want of change arises; but supposing not one farthing of change in the nation, five and twenty thousand pounds would be sufficient. Swift.

8. Change for exchange; a place where persons meet to traffick and transact mercantile affairs. [old Fr. change, place de commerce, Roquet. cambium, Lat.]

The bar, the bench, the change, the schools, and pulpits, are full of quacks, jugglers, and plagiaries. L'Estrange.

CHANGABLE. adj. [from change.]

1. Subject to change; fickle; inconstant.

A steady mind will admit steady methods and counsels; there is no measure to be taken of a changeable humour. L'Estrange.

As I am a man, I must be changeable; and sometimes the gravest of us all are so, even upon ridiculous accidents. Dryden.

2. Possible to be changed.

The fibrous or vascular parts of vegetables seem scarce changeable in the alimentary duct. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Having the quality of exhibiting different appearances.

Now the taylor make thy doublet of changeable taffata; for thy mind is a very opal. Shakespeare.

CHANGEABLENESS. n. s. [from changeable.]

1. Inconstancy; fickleness.

At length he betrothed himself to one worthy to be liked, if any worthiness might excuse so unworthy a changeableness. Sidney.

There is no temper of mind more unmanly than that changeableness with which we are too justly branded by all our neighbours. Addison, Freeholder.

2. Susceptibility of change.

If how long they are to continue in force, be no where expressed, then have we no light to direct our judgment concerning the changeableness or immutability of them, but considering the nature and quality of such laws. Hooker.

CHANGEABLY. adv. [from changeable.] Inconstantly.

CHANGEFUL. adj. [from change and full.] Full of change; inconstant; uncertain; mutable; subject to variation; fickle.

Unsound plots, and changeful orders, are daily devised for her good, yet never effectually prosecuted. Spenser on Ireland.

Britain, changeful as a child at play,
Now calls in princes, and now turns away. Pope.

CHANGELESS.  adj.* [from change and less.] Without change; constant; not subject to variation.

Thus for each change my changeless heart I fortify. Sidney, Arcad. b. 2.

To teach each hollow grove, and shrubby hill,
Each murmuring brook, and solitary vale,
To sound our love, and to our song accord,
Wearying echo with one changeless word. Bp. Hall, Defiance to Envy.

CHANGELING. n. s. [from change; the word arises from an odd superstitious opinion, that the fairies steal away children, and put others that are ugly and stupid in their places.]

7. A child left or taken in the place of another.

And her base elfin breed there for thee left;
Such men do changelings call, so chang'd by fairies theft. Spenser, F. Q.

She, as her attendant, hath
A lovely boy stol'n from an Indian king;
She never had so sweet a changeling.

Shakspeare.

2. An idiot; a fool; a natural.

Changelings and fools of heav'n, and thence shut out,
Wildly we roam in discontent about.
Would any one be a changeling, because he is less determined by wise considerations than a wise man?

Dryden.

Locke.

3. One apt to change; a waverer.

Of fickle changelings and poor discontents
That gape and rub the elbow at the news
Of hurly-burly innovation.

Shakspeare.

'Twas not long
Before from world to world they swung;
As they had turn'd from side to side,
And as they changelings liv'd, they died.

Hudibras.

4. Any thing changed and put in the place of another: in ludicrous speech.

I folded the writ up in form of the other,
Subscrib'd it, gave the impression, plac'd it safely,
The changeling never known.

Shakspeare.

CHA'NGER.† n. s. [old Fr. changeoy; mod. changeur.]

1. One that is employed in changing or discounting money; money-changer.

He turn'de upsodoun the boordis of chaungeris, and the chayeris of men that solden culveris. Wicliffe, St. Matt. xxi. 12.
The changers of money sitting. St. John, ii. 12.

2. One who alters the form of any thing.

Changer of all things, yet immutable,
Before and after all, the first and last.
G. Fletcher, Christ's Triumph, ii. st. 40.
Effect most strange!

At last the changer shar'd herself the change.

Fusden, Ovid, Mel. 4.

3. One who forsakes the cause which he had espoused.

Meddle not with them that are given to change, [in the margin, changers.] Prov. xxiv. 21.

CHA'NNEL.† n. s. [old Fr. chanel; bas Bret. canol; modern Fr. canal; Lat. canalis.]

1. The hollow bed of running waters.

It is not so easy, now that things are grown into an habit, and have their certain course, to change the channel, and turn their streams another way.

Spenser on Ireland.

Draw them to Tyber's bank, and weep your tears
Into the channel, till the lowest stream
Do kiss the most exalted shores of all.

Shakspeare.

So th' injur'd sea, which, from her wonted course,
To gain some acres, avarice did force;
If the new banks, neglected once, decay,
No longer will from her old channel stay.

Waller.

Had not the said strata been dislocated, some of them elevated, and others depressed, there would have been no cavity or channel to give reception to the water of the sea.

Woodward.

The tops of mountains and hills will be continually washed down by the rains, and the channels of rivers abraded by the streams.

Bentley.

2. Any cavity drawn longways.

Complaint and hot desires, the lover's hell,
And scalding tears, that wore a channel where they fell.

Dryden, Fables.

3. A strait or narrow sea, between two countries: as the British Channel between Britain and France; St. George's Channel between Britain and Ireland.

4. A gutter or furrow of a pillar.

5. A kennel in the street. [old Fr. chenal, & channel or gutter. Cotgrave.]

As if a channel should be call'd the sea.

Shakspeare, K. Hen. VI.

To CHA'NNEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut any thing in channels.

No more shall trenching war channel her fields,
Nor bruise her flowrets with the armed hoofs
Of hostile paces.

Shakspeare.

The body of this column is perpetually channelled, like a thick plaited gown.

Wotton, Architecture.

Torrents, and loud impetuous cataracts,
Roll down the lofty mountain's channel'd sides,
And to the vale convey their foaming tides.

Blackmore.

CHA'NSON.* n. s. [old Fr. chanson.] A song.

The first row of the pious chanson will shew you more.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

These [Christmas carols] were festal chansons for enlivening the merriments of the Christmas celebrity.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poet. iii. 142.To CHANT. v. a. [chanter, Fr.]

1. To sing.

Wherein the chearful birds of sundry kind
Do chant sweet musick.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. To celebrate by song.

The poets chant it in the theatres, the shepherds in the mountains.

Bp. Bramhall.

3. To sing in the cathedral service.

To CHANT. v. n. To sing; to make melody with the voice.

They chant to the sound of the viol, and invent to themselves instruments of musick.

Amos, vi. 7.

Heav'n heard his song, and hasten'd his relief;

And chang'd to snowy plumes his hoary hair,

And wing'd his flight, to chant aloft in air.

Dryden.

CHANT.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Song; melody.

A pleasant grove,
With chant of tuneful birds, resounding loud.

Milton, P. R.

2. A part of cathedral service, both with and without the organ.

I have now taken notice of every musical part of our cathedral service, except that of the unaccompanied chant used in the verses and responses, and that other which is accompanied by the organ in the use of the Psalter.

Mason on Church Musick, p. 154.

CHA'NTER.† n. s. [from chant.]

1. A singer; a songster.

You curious chanters of the wood,
That warble forth dame Nature's lays.

Wotton, Rcm. p. 379.

Jove's ethereal lays, resistless fire,
The chanter's soul, and raptur'd song inspire,
Instinct divine! nor blame severe his choice,
Warbling the Grecian woes with harp and voice.

Pope.

2. He who, in a cathedral, presides over the choir; or, as Huloet says, who is the chief singer. [Lat. cantor, præcentor.] And simply, the dignitary of a cathedral; and the priest of a chantry.

The chanter chorister is to begin De Sancta Maria, &c. The respond is, Felix namque, &c.

Gregory on the Child-Bishop, Posth. p. 115.

A certain revenue, sufficient for a chanter to one chapel.

Aubrey, Berk. iii. 24.

A country gentleman related a famous quarrel that had lately happened, in a little church in his province, between the treasurer and the chanter, the two principal dignitaries of that church.

Dr. Warton, Essay on Pope.

He orders many of them [psalms] to be sung by the rector
chori, or chanter, and the quier, or choir, alternately.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii. 183.CHA'NTICLEER. n. s. [from chanter and clair, Fr.]

The name given to the cock, from the clearness and loudness of his crow.

And chearful chanticleer, with his note shrill,
Had warn'd once, that Phœbus' fiery car
In haste was climbing up the eastern hill.

Spenser.

Hark, hark, I hear

The strain of strutting chanticleer.

Shakspeare.

Stay, the chearful chanticleer

Tells you that the time is near.

B. Jonson.

These verses were mentioned by Chaucer, in the description of the sudden stir, and panical fear, when Chanticleer the cock was carried away by Reynard the fox.

Camden, Remains.

Within this homestead liv'd without a peer,
For crowing loud, the noble chanticleer. Dryden, Fables.

CHA'NTRESS.† n. s. [old Fr. chantresse, "a chaunteress, a woman that sings, or sings much." Cotgrave.] A woman singer.

Sweet bird, that shun'st the noise of folly,
Most musical, most melancholy,
Thee, chantress, oft the woods among,
I woo to hear thy even-song. Milton, Il Pens.

CHA'NTRY.† n. s. [old Fr. chanterie.]

Chantry is a church or chapel endowed with lands, or other yearly revenue, for the maintenance of one or more priests, daily to sing mass for the souls of the donors, and such others as they appoint. Cowel.

Now go with me, and with this holy man,
Into the chantry by;
And, underneath that consecrated roof,
Plight me the full assurance of your faith. Shakespeare.

CHA'OS.† n. s. [chaos, Lat. from the Gr. χάος. This word is very unusual in the plural number; but Donne gives it.]

1. The mass of matter supposed to be in confusion before it was divided by the creation into its proper classes and elements.

The whole universe would have been a confused chaos, without beauty or order. Bentley.

2. Confusion; irregular mixture.

Had I followed the worst, I could not have brought church and state to such a chaos of confusions, as some have done. King Charles.

Their reason sleeps, but mimic fancy wakes,
Supplies her parts, and wild ideas takes
From words and things, ill sorted, and misjoin'd,
The anarchy of thought, and chaos of the mind. Dryden.

3. Any thing where the parts are undistinguished.

Of did we grow
To be two chausses, when we did show
Care to aught else. Donne, Poems, p. 36.

We shall have nothing but darkness and a chaos within, whatever order and light there be in things without us. Locke.

Pleas'd with a work, where nothing's just or fit,
One glaring chaos and wild heap of wit. Pope.

CHAOTICK. adj. [from chaos.] Resembling chaos; confused.

When the terraqueous globe was in a chaotick state, and the earthy particles subsided, then those several beds were, in all probability, repositied in the earth. Decham.

To CHAP.† v. a. [kappen, Dutch, to cut. This word seems originally the same with chop; nor were they probably distinguished at first, otherwise than by accident; but they have now a meaning something different, though referrible to the same original sense. Such is Dr. Johnson's statement. To chap, however, is more probably a derivative of the Sax. ýppan, to open. In the Biblioth. Eliotæ, 1559, I find "to chappe, to be opened." See also CHAPT.] To break into hiatus, or gapings.

Neither summer's blaze can scorch, nor winter's blast chap her fair face. Lilly's Eudymion, i. 1.

It weakened more and more the arch of the earth, drying it immoderately, and chapping it in sundry places. Burnet.

Then would unbalanc'd heat licentious reign,
Crack the dry hill, and chap the russet plain. Blackmore.

CHAP. n. s. [from the verb.] A cleft; an aperture; an opening; a gaping; a chink.

What moisture the heat of the summer sucks out of the earth, it is repaid in the rains of the next winter; and what chaps are made in it, are filled up again. Burnet, Theory.

CHAP. n. s. [This is not often used, except by anatomists, in the singular.] The upper or under part of a beast's mouth.

Froth fills his chaps, he sends a grunting sound,
And part he churns, and part befoams the ground. Dryden.
The nether chap in the male skeleton is half an inch broader than in the female. Grew, Musæum.

To CHAP.* v. n. [Sax. ceapian.] To cheap or cheapen; to bargain or deal for a price. See CHEAP, and CHOP.

CHAP.* n. s. An abbreviation of chapman; still in use among the common people. If the phrase be "a good chap," it implies a dealer to whom credit may be given; if simply "a chap," it usually designates a person, of whom a contemptuous opinion is entertained.

CHAPE. n. s. [chappe, Fr.]

1. The catch of any thing by which it is held in its place; as the hook of a scabbard by which it sticks in the belt; the point by which a buckle is held to the back strap.

This is Monsieur Parolles, that had the whole theory of the war in the knot of his scarf, and the practice in the chape of his dagger. Shakespeare.

2. A brass or silver tip or case, that strengthens the end of the scabbard of a sword.

Phillip's World of Words.

CHAPEL. n. s. [capella, Lat.]

A chapel is of two sorts, either adjoining to a church, as a parcel of the same, which men of worth build, or else separate from the mother church, where the parish is wide, and is commonly called a chapel of ease, because it is built for the ease of one or more parishioners, that dwell too far from the church, and is served by some inferior curate, provided for at the charge of the rector, or of such as have benefit by it, as the composition or custom is. Cowel.

She went in among those few trees, so closed in the tops together, as they might seem a little chapel. Sidney.

Will you dispatch us here under this tree, or shall we go with you to your chapel? Shakespeare.

Where truth erecteth her church, he helps error to rear up a chapel hard by. Howell.

A chapel will I build with large endowment. Dryden.

A free chapel is such as is founded by the King of England. Ayliffe's Parergon.

To CHAPEL.* v. a. [from the noun.] To deposit in a chapel; to enshrine.

Give us the bones
Of our dead kings, that we may chapel them. Beaumont and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen.

CHAPELESS. adj. [from chape.] Wanting a chape.

An old rusty sword, with a broken hilt, and chapeless, with two broken points. Shakespeare.

CHAPELLANY. n. s. [from chapel.]

A chapellany is usually said to be that which does not subsist of itself, but is built and founded within some other church, and is dependent thereon. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CHAPELRY. n. s. [from chapel.] The jurisdiction or bounds of a chapel.

CHAPERON.† n. s. [French.] A kind of hood or cap worn by the knights of the garter in their habits, Dr. Johnson says. But it was a cap not confined to them.

I will omit the honourable habiliments, as robes of state, parliament robes, chaperons, and caps of state. Candem.

The executioner stands by, — his head and face covered with a chaperon, out of which there are but two holes to look through. Howell, Lett. i. v. 42.

C H A

TO CHA'PERON.* n. a. An affected word, of very recent introduction into our language, to denote a gentleman attending a lady in a public assembly. The old French verb chaperonner is "to uncover the head before others, or put off the cap to them." Cotgrave.

CHAPÉAU.* n. s. [Fr.] A hat; and in heraldry, a cap or coronet. The chapeau de bras is almost an indispensable part of the full dress of a gentleman.

CHA'PFALLEN,† adj. [from chap and fallen.] Having the mouth shrunk.

They be indeed
A couple of chap-fall'n curs. B. Jonson, Poetaster.
Till they be chap-fall'n, and their tongues at peace,
Nail'd in their coffins sure, I'll ne'er believe 'em.

Beaum. and Fl. Wild-geese Chase.
A chap-fall'n beaver loosely hanging by
The cloven helm. Dryden, Jur. sat. x.

CHA'PITER. n. s. [chapiteau, Fr.] The upper part or capital of a pillar.

He overlaid their chapters and their fillets with gold.
Exod. xxxvi. 38.

CHA'PLAIN.† n. s. [old Fr. chapelain, chapelain, from capellanus, Latin.]

1. He that performs divine service in a chapel, and attends the king, or other person, for the instruction of him and his family, to read prayers, and preach.

Wishing me to permit
John de la Court, my chaplain, a choice hour,
To hear from him a matter of some moment. Shakspeare.
Chaplain, away! thy priesthood saves thy life. Shakspeare.

2. One that officiates in domestick worship.
A chief governour can never fail of some worthless illiterate chaplain, fond of a title and precedence. Swift.

CHA'PLAINCY.* n. s. [from chaplain.] The office of a chaplain.

The chaplaincy was refused to me, and given to Dr. Lambert.
Swift, Lett.

CHA'PLAINSHIP.† n. s. [from chaplain.]

1. The office or business of a chaplain.
The Bethesda of some knight's chaplainship, where they bring grace to his good cheer. Milton, Colasterion.

2. The possession or revenue of a chapel.

CHA'PLESS. adj. [from chap.] Without any flesh about the mouth.

Now chapless, and knocked about the muzzard with a sexton's spade. Shakspeare.
Shut me nightly in a charnel-house,
With reeky shanks and yellow chapless bones. Shakspeare.

CHA'PLET. n. s. [chapelet, Fr.]

1. A garland or wreath to be worn about the head.
Upon old hyems' chin, and icy crown,
An od'rous chaplet of sweet summer's buds,
Is, as in mockery, set. Shakspeare.

I strangely long to know,
Whether they nobler chaplets wear,
Those that their mistress scorn did bear,
Or those that were us'd kindly. Suckling.

All the quire was grac'd
With chaplets green, upon their foreheads plac'd. Dryden.
The winding ivy chaplet to invade,
And folded fern, that your fair forehead shade. Dryden.
They made an humble chaplet for the king. Swift.

2. A string of beads used in the Romish church for keeping an account of the number rehearsed of pater-nosters and ave-marias. A different sort of chaplets is also used by the Mahometans.

C H A

3. [In architecture.] A little moulding carved into round beads, pearls, or olives.

4. [In horsemanship.] A couple of stirrup leathers, mounted each of them with a stirrup, and joining at top in a sort of leather buckle, which is called the head of the chaplet, by which they are fastened to the pommel of a saddle, after they have been adjusted to the length and bearing of the rider.

Farrier's Dict.

5. A tuft of feathers on the peacock's head.

CHA'PLET.* n. s. [diminut. of chapel.] A small chapel or shrine.

This is in Amos, ch. v. 26. the tabernacle, or socoth, of your king or Moloch; that is, the chaplet, where that image of your false god, called here κόροιβ, was enshrined or dwelt: so κόροιβ signifies; and the like seems to be understood by Succoth Benoth, the tabernacle of Venus, some little chapel or shrine where her image was kept and worshipped.

Hammond on Acts, vii. 43.

CHA'PMAN.† n. s. [ceapman, Sax.] A cheapner; one that offers as a purchaser; a seller; a market-man.

Fair Diomedé, you do as chapmen do,
Dispraise the thing that you intend to buy. Shakspeare.

Beauty is bought by judgement of the eye,
Not utter'd by base sale of chapmen's tongues.

Shakspeare, Love's L. Lost.

Yet have they seen the maps, and bought 'em too,
And understand 'em as most chapmen do. B. Jonson.

There was a collection of certain rare manuscripts, exquisitely written in Arabick; these were upon sale to the Jesuits at Antwerp, liquourish chapmen of such wares. Wotton.

He dressed two, and carried them to Samos, as the likeliest place for a chapman. L'Estrange.

Their chapmen they betray,
Their shops are dens, the buyer is their prey. Dryden.

CHA'PPY.* adj. [from chap.] Cleft; cut asunder; open; gaping. Cotgrave in V. Fendu.

CHAPS. n. s. [from chap.]

1. The mouth of a beast of prey.

So on the downs we see
A hasten'd hare from greedy greyhound go,
And past all hope, his chaps to frustrate so. Sidney.
Open your mouth; you cannot tell who's your friend; open your chaps again. Shakspeare.

Their whelps at home expect the promis'd food,
And long to temper their dry chaps in blood. Dryden.

2. It is used in contempt for the mouth of a man.

CHAPT. } particip. pass. [from To chap.]

CHA'PPED. }
Like a table upon which you may run your finger without rubs, and your nail cannot find a joint; not horrid, rough, wrinkled, gaping, or chapt. B. Jonson.

Cooling ointment made,
Which on their sun-burnt cheeks and their chapt skins they laid. Dryden, Fables.

CHAPTER. n. s. [chapitre, Fr. from capitulum, Lat.]

1. A division of a book.

The first book we divide into three sections; whereof the first is these three chapters. Burnet, Theory.

If these mighty men at chapter and verse, can produce then no scripture to overthrow our church ceremonies, I will undertake to produce scripture enough to warrant them. South.

2. From hence comes the proverbial phrase, to the end of the chapter; throughout; to the end.

Money does all things; for it gives and it takes away, it makes honest men and knaves, fools and philosophers; and so forward, mutatis mutandis, to the end of the chapter. L'Estrange.

3. Chapter, from capitulum, signifies, in our common law, as in the canon law, whence it is borrowed, an assembly of the clergy of a cathedral or collegiate church. Cowel.

The abbot takes the advice and consent of his chapter, before he enters on any matters of importance. Addison on Italy.

4. The place where delinquents receive discipline and correction. Ayliffe's Parergon.
5. A decretal epistle. Ayliffe's Parergon.
6. Chapter-house; the place in which assemblies of the clergy are held.

Though the canonical constitution does strictly require it to be made in the cathedral, yet it matters not where it be made, either in the choir or chapter-house. Ayliffe's Parergon.

To CHA'PTER.* v. a. [from the noun. See the 4th sense.] To tax; to correct; to take to task.

He more than once arraigns him for the inconstancy of his judgement, and chapters even his own Aratus on the same head. Dryden, Character of Polybius.

CHA'PTREL. n. s. [probably from chapiter.] The capitals of pillars, or pillasters, which support arches, commonly called imposts.

Let the keystone break without the arch, so much as you project over the jaums with the chaptrels. Moron.

CHAR.† n. s. [of uncertain derivation, Dr. Johnson says. Some derive it from the Sax. cýpan, to turn, because this fish turneth itself swiftly in the water.] A fish found only in Winander mere in Lancashire, Dr. Johnson says; which is not exactly the case.

There are no char ever taken in these lakes, but plenty in Buttermere water, which lies a little way north of Borrowdale, about Martinmas, which are potted here.

Gray, Letter to Dr. Warton.

To CHAR. v. a. [See CHARCOAL.] To burn wood to a black cinder.

Spraywood, in charring, parts into various cracks.

Woodward.

CHAR.† n. s. [cýppe, work, Sax. Lyc. It is derived by Skinner, either from charge, Fr. business, or capic, Sax. care, or keeren, Dutch, to sweep. Mr. H. Tooke deduces it from the Sax. cýpan, to turn or return, to turn about. The Goth. kar may not be omitted, which is business or concern: "hwa kara unsis thu witeis," what is that to us, &c. St. Matt. xxvii. 4. "I have a little char for you." Ray's North Country Words. The word is now usually written and pronounced chare; and also in its compounds chare-woman and chare-work. But in Wiltshire it is pronounced cheure, and is sometimes so written in the old editions of Beaumont and Fletcher.] Work done by the day; a single job or task.

No more but e'en a woman, and commanded
By such poor passion, as the maid that milks,
And does the meanest chare. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.
She, harvest done, to char work did aspire;
Meat, drink, and twopence, were her daily hire.

Dryden, Theocritus.

To CHAR. v. n. [from the noun.] To work at others houses by the day, without being a hired servant.

To CHAR.* v. a. To perform a business.
That char is char'd; that business is dispatched.
Ray's North Country Words.

All's char'd when he is gone.

Beaum. and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen.

CHA'B-WOMAN. n. s. [from char and woman.] A woman hired accidentally for odd work, or single days.

Get three or four char-women to attend you constantly in the kitchen, whom you pay only with the broken meat, a few coals, and all the cinders. Swift.

CHAR-WORK.* See CHAR.

CHA'RACT, or CHA'RECT.* n. s. An inscription; and formerly a charm, or magical inscription. [charact, the inscription, or thing written; characters, the letters in which it is written; character, the materials of which characters are composed. Note on Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas. ed. Steevens.]

It was by netromancy,
By caracteres and conjuration.

Skelton, Poems, p. 161.

That he use ne hilde no charme, ne charecte.

Dugdale, Orig. Jud. p. 81.

Even so may Angelo,

In all his dressings, characts, titles, forms,

Be an arch-villain.

Shakspeare, Measure for Measure.

CHA'RACTER.† n. s. [character, Lat. χαρακτήρ.]

1. A mark; a stamp; a representation. This is a very ancient acceptation of the word, being used by Wicliffe.

And he schal make alle, smale and greete,—to have a caracter in their right hond either in their forheedis.

Wicliffe, Apoc. xiii. 16.

To his own love his loialtie he saved;

Whose character in the adamantine mould

Of his true heart so firmly was engraved,

That no new love's impression ever could

Berave it thence.

Spenser, F. Q. v. vi. 2.

[Titles of] honour are the character of that estimation, which publicly is had of publick estates and callings in the church or commonwealth.

Hooker, 6. vii.

In outward also her resembling less

His image, who made both; and less expressing

The character of that dominion given

O'er other creatures.

Milton, P. L.

2. A letter used in writing or printing.

But his neat cookery! —

He cut our roots in characters.

Shakspeare.

The purpose is perspicuous even as substance,

Whose grossness little characters sum up.

Shakspeare.

It were much to be wished, that there were throughout the world but one sort of character for each letter, to express it to the eye; and that exactly proportioned to the natural alphabet formed in the mouth.

Holder's Elements of Speech.

3. The hand or manner of writing. Formerly with the accent on the second syllable.

And writing strange charácters on the ground.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. iii. 14.

I found the letter thrown in at the casement of my closet.—

You know the character to be your brother's.

Shakspeare.

4. A representation of any man as to his personal qualities.

Each drew fair characters, yet none

Of these they feign'd, excels their own.

Denham.

Homer has excelled all the heroick poets that ever wrote, in the multitude and variety of his characters; every god that is admitted into his poem, acts a part which would have been suitable to no other deity.

Addison.

5. An account of any thing as good or bad.

This subterraneous passage is much mended, since Seneca gave so bad a character of it.

Addison on Italy.

6. The person with his assemblage of qualities; a personage.

In a tragedy, or epick poem, the hero of the piece must be advanced foremost to the view of the reader or spectator; he must outshine the rest of all the characters; he must appear the prince of them, like the sun in the Copernican system, encompassed with the less noble planets.

Dryden.

7. Personal qualities; particular constitution of the mind.

Nothing so true as what you once let fall,

Most women have no characters at all.

Pope.

8. Adventitious qualities impressed by a post or office.

The chief honour of the magistrate consists in maintaining the dignity of his character by suitable actions.

Atterbury.

To CHA'RACTER.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To inscribe; to engrave. It seems to have had the accent formerly on the second syllable, Dr. Johnson says; which indeed Shakspeare exhibits, as also the accent on the first syllable of this verb. The substantive in Spenser has also the accent on the second syllable. See CHARACTER, 3d. sense.

These few precepts in thy memory

See thou character,

Shew me one scar character'd on thy skin.

O Rosalind! these trees shall be my books

And in their barks my thoughts I'll character.

The pleasing poison

The visage quite transforms of him that drinks,

And the inglorious likeness of a beast

Fixes instead, unmounting reason's mintage,

Character'd in the face.

A law not only written by Moses, but charactered in us by nature.

Milton, Doct. and Div. of Divorce.

2. To describe; to denominate; to characterize.

Being thus character'd,

And challenged, know, I dare appear, and do

To who dares threaten.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Love's Pilgrimage.

Thuanus, one that writeth truth with a steady hand, thus charactereth the Con-Waldenses:—They used raw pelts clapped about them for their clothes, &c.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 145.

The apostle charactereth a lawful magistrate by this spirit; Rom. xiii. 4. He is the minister of God to thee for good.

Spenser, Righteous Ruler, p. 8.

CHA'RACTERISM.* n. s. [from character.] The distinction of character.

The characterism of an honest man: He looks not to what he might do, but what he should.

Bp. Hall, Characters, p. 13.

He [Christ] was described by infallible characterisms which did fit him, and did never fit any but him.

Bp. Taylor, Demonst. of the Truth of the Chr. Religion.

So far is our version from preserving this Lucianism, this characterism of an author, that it inverts the thought.

Bentley, Phil. Lips. p. 275.

CHARACTERISTICAL. } adj. [from characterize.] That CHARACTERISTICK. } which constitutes the character, or marks the peculiar properties of any person or thing.

There are several others that I take to have been likewise such, to which yet I have not ventured to prefix that characteristick distinction.

Woodward on Fossils.

The shining quality of an epic hero, his magnanimity, his constancy, his patience, his piety, or whatever characteristical virtue his poet gives him, raises our admiration.

Dryden.

CHARACTERISTICALLY.* adv. [from characteristical.]

In a manner which constitutes or distinguishes character.

The title of wise men seems to have been anciently the peculiar addition of prophets, and used characteristically.

Spencer, Vanity of Vag. Prophecies, p. 36.

Slaying with the sword is very characteristically spoken here, in this epistle, of the faithful martyr Antipas.

More, Seven Churches, ch. 5.

Henry's hypocrisy is not characteristically nor consistently sustained.

Watson, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii. 141.

CHARACTERISTICALNESS. n. s. [from characteristical.]

The quality of being peculiar to a character; marking a character.

CHARACTERISTICK. n. s. That which constitutes the character; that which distinguishes any thing or person from others.

This vast invention exerts itself in Homer, in a manner superior to that of any poet; it is the great and peculiar characteristick which distinguishes him from all others.

Pope.

CHARACTERISTICK of a Logarithm. The same with the index or exponent.

To CHA'RACTERIZE. v. a. [from character.]

1. To give a character or an account of the personal qualities of any man.

It is some commendation, that we have avoided publickly to characterize any person, without long experience.

Swift.

2. To engrave, or imprint.

They may be called anticipations, prenotions, or sentiments characterized and engraven in the soul, born with it, and growing up with it.

Hale, Origin of Mankind.

3. To mark with a particular stamp or token.

There are faces not only individual, but gentilities and national; European, Asiatick, Chinese, African, and Grecian faces are characterized.

Arbutnot on Air.

CHA'RACTERLESS. adj. [from character.] Without a character.

When water drops have worn the stones of Troy,

And blind oblivion swallowed cities up,

And mighty states characterless are grated

To dusty nothing.

Shakspeare.

CHA'RACTERY.† n. s. [from character.] Impression; mark; distinction & accented anciently on the second syllable.

Fairies use flowers for their charactery.

Shakspeare.

All my engagements I will construe to thee,

All the charactery of my sad brows.

Shakspeare.

A third sort—bestowed their time in drawing out the true lineament of every virtue and vice so lively, that who saw the medals might know the face; which art they significantly termed charactery.

Bp. Hall, Characters. To the Reader.

CHARADE.* n. s. [Fr.] A species of riddle, usually in verse.

An enigma, which consists in disguising the truth by an ambiguous or obscure expression, is certainly superiour to a rebus or charade, which only puzzles you with letters and syllables; a species of difficult trifling, which one cannot but wonder to find prevailing in this enlightened age, amongst people of good understanding in the polite world.

Graves's Recollect. of Shenstone, p. 99.

CHA'RCOAL.† n. s. [imagined by Skinner to be derived from char, business; but, by Mr. Lye, from To charke, to burn, Dr. Johnson says. It may be added, that the word was formerly written charke coal: "A man made charke coles in a wood," Festival, fol. 25. The process of making charcoal, however, has been termed charring the wood.] Coal made by burning wood under turf. It is used in preparing metals.

Seacoal lasts longer than charcoal; and charcoal of roots, being coaled into great pieces, lasts longer than ordinary charcoal.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Love is a fire that burns and sparkles,

In men as nat'rally as in charcoals,

Which sooty chymists stop in holes,

When out of wood they extract coals.

Hudibras.

Is there, who, lock'd from ink and paper, scrawls

With desperate charcoal round his darken'd walls?

Pope.

CHARD. n. s. [charde, Fr.]

1. Charls of artichokes are the leaves of fair artichoke plants, tied and wrapped up all over but the top, in straw, during the autumn and winter; this makes them grow white, and lose some of their bitterness.

Chambers.

2. Charls of beet, are plants of white beet transplanted, producing great tops, which, in the midst, have a large white, thick, downy, and cotton-like main shoot, which is the true chard.

Mortimer.

To CHARGE.† v. a. [charger, Fr. caricare. Ital. low Lat. cargare, from carrus, Lat.]

1. To entrust; to commission for a certain purpose: it has with before the thing entrusted.

And the captain of the guard charged Joseph with them, and he served them. Genesis, xl. 4.

What you have charged me with, that I have done. Shakspeare.

2. To impute as a debt: with on before the debtor.

My father's, mother's, brother's death, I pardon:
That's somewhat sure; a mighty sum of murder,
Of innocent and kindred blood struck off;
My prayers and penance shall discount for these,
And beg of Heaven to charge the bill on me. Dryden.

3. To impute: with on before the person to whom any thing is imputed.

No more accuse thy pen, but charge the crime
On native sloth, and negligence of time. Dryden.
It is easy to account for the difficulties he charges on the peripatetick doctrine. Locke.

It is not barely the ploughman's pains, the reaper's and thresher's toil, and the baker's sweat is to be counted into the bread we eat; the plough, mill, oven, or any other utensils, must all be charged on the account of labour. Locke.

Perverse mankind! whose wills, created free,
Charge all their woes on absolute decree;
All to the dooming gods their guilt translate,
And follies are miscall'd the crimes of fate. Pope.

We charge that upon necessity, which was really desired and chosen. Watts, Logick.

4. To impute to, as cost, or hazard.

He was so great an encourager of commerce, that he charg'd himself with all the sea risk of such vessels as carried corn to Rome in winter. Arbutnot on Coins.

5. To impose as a task: it has with before the thing imposed.

The gospel chargeth us with piety towards God, and justice and charity to men, and temperance and chastity in reference to ourselves. Tillotson.

6. To accuse; to censure.

Speaking thus to you, I am so far from charging you as guilty in this matter, that I can sincerely say, I believe the exhortation wholly needless. Wake, Preparation for Death.

7. To accuse: it has with before the crime.

Concerning charity, the final object whereof is that incomprehensible beauty which shineth in the countenance of Christ, the Son of the living God.

Hooker.

Peace, peace, for shame, if not for charity. —

— Urge neither charity nor shame to me;
Uncharitably with me have you dealt.

Shakspeare.

Only add

Deeds to thy knowledge answerable, add faith;

Add virtue, patience, temperance, add love,

By name to come call'd charity, the soul

Of all the rest.

Milton, P. L.

Faith believes the revelations of God; hope expects his promises; charity loves his excellencies and mercies.

Taylor.

But lasting charity's more ample sway,

Nor bound by time, nor subject to decay,

In happy triumph shall for ever live.

Prior.

Charity, or a love of God, which works by a love of our neighbour, is greater than faith or hope.

Atterbury.

Prior.

To fam'd Apelles, when young Ammon brought

The darling idol of his captive heart;

And the pleas'd nymph with kind attention sat,

To have her charms recorded by his art.

Waller.

But what avail her unexhausted stores,

Her blooming mountains and her sunny shores,

With all the gifts that heaven and earth impart,

The smiles of nature, and the charms of art,

While proud oppression in her vallies reigns,

And tyranny usurps her happy plains.

Addison.

To CHARM.† v. a. [from the noun.]

Arbutnot.

CHA'RTTEL.* See CARTEL.

CHA'RTER. n. s. [charta, Latin.]

1. A charter is a written evidence of things done between man and man. Charters are divided into charters of the king, and charters of private persons. Charters of the king are those, whereby the king passeth any grant to any person or more, or to any body politick: as a charter of exemption, that no man shall be empannelled on a jury; charter of pardon, whereby a man is forgiven a felony, or other offence. Coxvel.

Any writing bestowing privileges or rights.

If you deny it, let the danger light
Upon your charter, and your city's freedom. Shakspeare.

It is not to be wondered, that the great charter whereby God bestowed the whole earth upon Adam, and confirmed it unto the sons of Noah, being as brief in word as large in effect, hath bred much quarrel of interpretation. Raleigh's Essays.

Here was that charter seal'd, wherein the crown
All marks of arbitrary power lays down. Denham.

She shakes the rubbish from her mounting brow,
And seems to have renew'd her charter's date,
Which Heav'n will to the death of time allow. Dryden.

God renewed this charter of man's sovereignty over the creatures. South.

Privilege; immunity; exemption.

I must have liberty,
Withal as large a charter as the wind,
To blow on whom I please; for so fools have;
And they that are most gaul'd with my folly,
They most must laugh. Shakspeare.

My mother,
Who has a charter to extol her blood,
When she does praise me, grieves me. Shakspeare.

CHARTER-LAND.* n. s. In law, such land as a man holds by charter; freehold; which the Saxons termed boc-land; both meaning land held by evidence in writing.

Charter-land had its name from a particular form in the charter, or deed, which ever since the reign of Hen. VIII. hath been disused. Coke on Littleton.

CHARTER-PARTY. n. s. [chartre partie, Fr.] A paper relating to a contract, of which each party has a copy.

When he speaks,
The air, a charter'd libertine, is still. Shakspeare.

CHARTREUX, CHARTREUSE.* n. s. [Fr.] A celebrated monastery of Carthusians; and also a monk of the order of St. Bruno. See CARTHUSIAN. Our CHARTER-HOUSE is a corruption of this word: it was a convent of this order.

A monk o' the Chartreux. Shakspeare, K. Hen. VIII.

The order of the Carthusians was first established in the year 1086, in the desert of Chartreuse, in Grenoble, by one Bruno. Summary of Religious Houses.

Like some lone Chartreux stands the good old hall,
Silence without, and fasts within the wall. Pope.

A famous monastery, called the grand Chartreuse.
Gray, Lett. to his Mother.

CHARTULARY.* n. s. See CARTULARY.

These particulars are recorded by an authentic and well-informed annalist, Henning the learned sub-priour of that monastery, who compiled a chartulary of its possessions and privileges. Warton, Hist. of Kildington, p. 26.

CHARY.* adj. [Sax. ceapig.] Careful; cautious; wary; frugal.

Over his kindred he held a wary and chary care, which bountifully was expressed, when occasion so required. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

The chariest maid is prodigal enough,
If she unmask her beauty to the moon. Shakspeare.

Yet I am chary too who comes about me:
Two innocents should not fear one another. Beaumont and Fl., Elder Brother.

To CHASE.* v. a. [chasser, Fr. derived by some from the Lat. calcare, to trample or tread; whence the low Lat. caciare, chaciare; and the Ital. cacciare; by others, from captare, to catch.]

1. To hunt.
It shall be as the chased roe. Isaiah, xiii. 14.
Mine enemies chased me sore like a bird. Lament. iii. 52.

2. To pursue as an enemy.
And Abimelech chased him, and he fled before him. Judges, ix. 40.

How should one chase a thousand. Deut. xxxii. 30.

3. To drive away.
He that chaseth away his mother, is a son that causeth shame. Proverbs, xix. 26.

4. To follow as a thing desirable.

5. To drive.
Thus chased by their brother's endless malice, from prince to prince, and from place to place, they, for their safety, fled at last to the city of Bisennis. Knoller's Hist. of the Turks.

When the following morn had chas'd away
The flying stars, and light restor'd the day. Dryden.

To CHASE Metals. See To ENCHASE.

CHASE.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Hunting; as, the pleasures of the chase.
The chase I sing; hounds, and their various breed. Somerville.

2. Pursuit of any thing as game.
Whilst he was hastening, in the chase, it seems,
Of this fair couple, meets he on the way
The father of this seeming lady. Shakspeare.
There is no chase more pleasant, methinks, than to drive a thought, by good conduct, from one end of the world to another, and never to lose sight of it till it fall into eternity. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

3. Fitness to be hunted, appropriation to chase or sport.

Concerning the beasts of chase, whereof the buck is the first, he is called the first year a fawn. Shakspeare.

A maid I am, and of thy virgin train;
Oh! let me still that spotless name retain,
Frequent the forests, thy chaste will obey,
And only make the beasts of chase my prey. Dryden.

4. Pursuit of an enemy, or of something noxious.
The admiral, with such ships only as could suddenly be put in readiness, made forth with them, and such as came daily in, we set upon them, and gave them chase. Bacon.

He sallied out upon them with certain troops of horsemen, with such violence, that he overthrew them, and, having them in chase, did speedily execution. Knoller's Hist.

They seek that joy, which us'd to glow,
Expag'd on the hero's face;
When the thick squadrons prest the foe,
And William led the glorious chase. Prior.

5. Pursuit of something as desirable.
Yet this mad chase of fame, by few pursu'd,
Has drawn destruction on the multitude. Dryden, Juv.

6. The game hunted.
She, seeing the towering of her pursued chase, went circling about, rising so with the less sense of rising. Sidney.

Hold, Warwick! seek thee out some other chase,
For I myself must put this deer to death. Shakspeare.
Honour's the noblest chase; pursue that game,
And recompence the loss of love with fame. Granville.

7. Open ground stored with such beasts as are hunted.
A receptacle for deer and game, of a middle nature between a forest and a park; being commonly less than a forest, and not endued with so many liberties, and yet of a larger compass, and stored with greater diversity of game than a park. A chase differs from a forest in this, because it may be in the hands of a subject, which a forest, in its proper nature, cannot; and from a park, in that it is not inclosed, and hath not only a larger compass, and more store of game, but likewise more keepers and overseers.

Cowel.

He and his lady both are at the lodge,
Upon the northside of this pleasant chase. Shakspeare.

8. The CHASE of a gun, is the whole bore or length of a piece, taken withinside. Chambers.

9. A term at the game of tennis, signifying the spot where a ball falls, beyond which the adversary must strike his ball to gain a point or chase.

Tell him, he hath made a match with such a wrangler,
That all the courts of France will be disturb'd
With chases. Shakspeare, K. Hen. V.

T. I have two chases.

I. Sir, the last is no chase, but a loss.

T. Sir, how is it a loss?

I. Because you did strike it at the second bound.

Wodroephe's Fr. Gr. (1624,) p. 234.

CHASE-GUN. n. s. [from chase and gun.] Guns in the forepart of the ship, fired upon those that are pursued.

Mean time the Belgians tack upon our rear,
And raking chase-guns through our stern they send. Dryden.

CH'ASEABLE, or CH'ACEABLE. * adj. [old Fr. chassable, "chaseable, fit to be chased, pursued, hunted after." Cotgrave.] Fit for the chase.

Beastes which ben chaceable. Gower, Conf. Am. b. 5.

CH'ASER. n. s. [from chase.]

1. Hunter; pursuer; driver.

Then began

A stop i' th' chaser, a retire; anon

A rout, confusion thick.

Shakspeare.

So fast he flies, that his reviewing eye

Has lost the chasers, and his ear the cry.

Denham.

Stretch'd on the lawn, his second hope survey,

At once the chaser, and at once the prey.

Lo, Rufus tugging at the deadly dart,

Bleeds in the forest like a wounded hart!

Pope.

2. An enchaser.

CHASM. n. s. [χάσμα]

1. A breach unclosed; a cleft; a gap; an opening.

In all that visible corporeal world, we see no chasms or gaps.

Locke.

The water of this orb communicates with that of the ocean, by means of certain hiatuses or chasms passing betwixt it and the bottom of the ocean. Woodward.

The ground adast her riv'n mouth disparts,

Horrible chasm! profound.

Philips.

2. A place unfilled; a vacancy.

Some lazy ages, lost in ease,

No action leave to busy chronicles;

Such, whose supine felicity but makes,

In story chasms, in epochas mistakes.

Dryde.

CH'ASMED. * adj. [from chasm.] Having gaps or openings.

Fast by yon chasmed hill that frowns,

Cleft by an elemental shock.

Essays by a Society of Gentlemen at Exeter, (1796,) p. 542.

CHASSE-LAS. n. s. [French.] A sort of grape.

CHASTE, adj. [chaste, Fr. castus, Lat.]

1. Pure from all commerce of sexes; as, a chaste virgin.

Diana chaste, and Hebe fair.

Prior.

2. With respect to language; pure; uncorrupt; not mixed with barbarous phrases.

3. Free from obscenity.

Among words which signify the same principal ideas, some are clean and decent, others unclean; some chaste, others obscene.

Watts, Logick.

4. True to the marriage bed.

To love their children, to be discreet, chaste, keepers at home.

Titus, ii. 5.

C H A

CHASTE-EYED. * adj. [from chaste and eye.] Having chaste or modest eyes.

The oak-crown'd sisters, and their chaste-ey'd queen.

Collins, Ode on the Passions.

CHASTE-TREE. n. s. [vitex, Lat.]

This tree will grow to be eight or ten feet high, and produce spikes of flowers at the extremity of every strong shoot in autumn.

Miller.

CH'ASTELY. † adv. [from chaste.]

1. Without incontinence; purely; without contamination.

You should not pass here: no, though it were as virtuous to lie as to live chastely.

Shakspeare.

Make first a song of joy and love,

Which chastely flame in royal eyes.

Wotton.

Succession of a long descent,

Which chastely in the channels ran,

And from our demi-gods began.

Dryden.

2. Without violation of decent ceremony.

Howsoe'er my cause goes, see my body

(Upon my knees I ask it) buried chastely.

Beaum. and Fl. Knight of Malta.

To CH'ASTEN. v. a. [chastier, Fr. castigo, Lat.] To correct; to punish; to mortify.

Chasten thy son while there is hope, and let not thy soul spare for his crying.

Proverbs, xix. 12.

I follow thee, safe guide! the path

Thou lead'st me; and to the hand of Heaven submit,

However chastening.

Milton, P. L.

Some feel the rod,

And own, like us, the father's chastening hand.

Rowe.

From our lost pursuit she wills to hide

Her close decrees, and chasten human pride.

Prior.

CH'ASTENER. * n. s. [from chasten.] He who corrects or chastens.

CH'ASTENESS. † n. s. [from chaste.]

1. Chastity; purity.

Stand not upon thy strength, though it surpass;

Nor thy fore-proved chastness stand thou on:

Thou art not holier than David was,

Nor wiser than was most wise Solomon.

Davies, Wil's Pilgrim. Q. 8.

Religion requires of him the highest degree of purity and chasteness.

Young, on Idolatrous Corruptions, ii. 213.

2. Purity of writing.

He [Sacheverel] wrote without either chasteness of style, or liveliness of expression.

Burnet, Hist. of his own Times.

To CHASTISE. † v. a. [castigo, Lat. anciently accented on the first syllable, now on the last. So far Dr. Johnson. But it is rather from the old Fr. chastier, chastoyer, which is also from the Lat. castigare. In confirmation of this etymology, I may adduce Chaucer, who writes, for chastise, the word chastie, Rom. of the Rose, "I, that other folke chastie, woll not be taught, &c."]

1. To punish; to correct by punishment; to afflict for faults.

My breast I'll burst with straining of my courage,

But I will chastise this high-minded strumpet.

Shakspeare.

I am glad to see the vanity or envy of the canting chymists thus discovered and chastised.

Boyle.

Seldom is the world affrighted or chastised with signs or prodigies, earthquakes or inundations, famines or plagues.

Grew, Cosmologia Sacra.

Like you, commission'd to chastise and bless,

He must avenge the world, and give it peace.

Prior.

2. To reduce to order, or obedience; to repress; to restrain; to awe.

Hie thee hither,

That I may pour my spirits in thine ear,

And chastise, with the valour of my tongue,

All that impedes thee.

Shakspeare

Know, sir, that I

Will not wait pinion'd at your master's court,
Nor once be chastis'd with the sober eye
Of dull Octavia.

Shakspeare.

The gay social sense
By decency chastis'd.

Thomson.

CHASTISEABLE. * adj. [old Fr. chastiable.] Deserving chastisement.

Sherwood.

CHASTISEMENT. † n. s. [chastiment, Fr.] Correction; punishment: commonly, though not always, used of domestick or parental punishment. Dr. Johnson has not noticed the twofold accentuation of this word. The example from Shakspeare shews it to have been, occasionally, on the first syllable; and, in modern times, many so pronounce the word.

Shall I so much dishonour my fair stars,
On equal terms to give him chastisement?

Shakspeare.

He held the chastisement of one which molested the see of Rome, pleasing to God.

Raleigh, Essays.

For seven years what can a child be guilty of, but lying, or ill-natur'd tricks; the repeated commission of which shall bring him to the chastisement of the rod.

Locke.

He receives a fit of sickness as the kind chastisement and discipline of his heavenly father, to wean his affections from the world.

Bentley.

CHASTISER. * n. s. [from chastise.] He who chastises, or corrects by punishment.

They have grown in strength, and by their strength now begin to despise their chastisers.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

An instrument of humility, and a chastiser of too big a confidence.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, v. § 3.

The thought of death indulge:

Give it its wholesome empire; let it reign,
That kind chastiser of the soul to joy!

Young, Night Th. 3.

Such as preserve them [the traces of sorrow] longest, do perhaps best acquiesce in the will of the chastiser.

Gray, Lett. to Mr. Nicholls.

CHASTITY. † n. s. [old Fr. chasteté, castitas, Lat.]

1. Purity of the body.

Who can be bound by any solemn vow,

To force a spotless virgin's chastity?

Shakspeare.

Chastity is either abstinence or continence: abstinence is that of virgins or widows; continence of married persons: chaste marriages are honourable and pleasing to God.

Bp. Taylor.

Ev'n here where frozen chastity retires,

Love finds an altar for forbidden fires.

Pope.

2. Freedom from obscenity.

There is not chastity enough in language,

Without offence to utter them.

Shakspeare, Much ado.

3. Freedom from bad mixture of any kind; purity of language, opposed to barbarisms.

That chastity of worship, which God has, so suitably to our understandings, expressed himself to expect from us.

Bp. Compton, Episcopalia, (1686,) p. 29.

CHASTISER. n. s. [from chastise.] The person that chastises; a punisher; a corrector.

To CHAT. v. n. [from caqueter, Fr. Skinner; perhaps from achat, purchase or cheapening, on account of the prate naturally produced in a bargain; or only, as it is most likely, contracted from chatter.]

To prate; to talk idly; to prattle; to cackle; to chatter; to converse at ease.

Thus chatten the people in their steads,

Ylike as a monster of many heads.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

Because that I familiarly sometimes,

Do use you for my fool, and chat with you,

Your sauciness will jest upon my love.

Shakspeare.

The shepherd's on the lawn

Sat simply chatting in a rustick row.

Milton, Ode.

With much good-will the motion was embrac'd,

To chat a while on their adventures pass'd.

Dryden.

VOL. I.

To CHAT. v. a. To talk of. Not in use, unless ludicrously.

All tongues speak of him, and the bleared sights
Are spectacled to see him! Your prattling nurse
Into a rapture lets her baby cry,
While she chats him.

Shakspeare.

CHAT. n. s. [from the verb.] Idle talk; prate; slight or negligent tattle.

Lords that can prate

As amply and unnecessarily,

As this Gonzalo, I myself would make

A chough of as deep chat.

Shakspeare.

The time between before the fire they sat,

And shorten'd the delay by pleasing chat.

Dryden.

The least is good, far greater than the tickling of his palate with a glass of wine, or the idle chat of a soaking club.

Locke.

Snuff, or the fan, supplies each pause of chat,
With singing, laughing, ogling, and all that.

Pope.

CHAT. n. s. The keys of trees are called chats; as ash chats.

CHATEAU. * n. s. [Fr.] A castle.

The strong chateaux, those feudal fortresses, that were ordered to be demolished, attracted next the attention of your committee.

Burke.

CHA'TELET. * n. s. [Fr. diminut. of chateau.] A little castle.

Chambers.

CHA'TELLANY. n. s. [châtelanie, Fr.] The district under the dominion of a castle.

Here are about twenty towns and forts of great importance, with their châtellanies and dependencies.

Swift.

CHA'TTEL. † n. s. [See CATTLE. Goth. katila; old Fr. catals, catels, chatels, moveables of any kind. V. Charpentier, Kellham, and Roquefort. Some of our elder authors write the word cattel. The etymology of chattel is by some referred to the Lat. castellum or capitale; Row Lat. captale.] Any moveable possession: a term now scarce used but in forms of law.

Nay, look not big, nor stamp, nor stare, nor fret;

I will be master of what is mine own;

She is my goods, my chattels.

Shakspeare.

Honour's a lease for lives to come,

And cannot be extended from

The legal tenant: 'tis a chattle

Not to be forfeited in battle.

Hudibras.

To CHA'TTER. † v. n. [caqueter, Fr.]

1. To make a noise as a pie, or other unharmonious bird.

Like a crane, or a swallow, so did I chatter.

Isaiah, xxxviii. 14.

Nightingales seldom sing, the pie still chattereth.

Sidney.

So doth the cuckow, when the mavis sings,

Begin his witless note apace to chatter.

Spenser.

There was a crow sat chattering upon the back of a sheep; Well, sirrah, says the sheep, you durst not have done this to a dog.

L'Estrange.

Your birds of knowledge, that in dusky air

Chatter futurity.

Dryden.

2. To make a noise by collision of the teeth. See To CHITTER.

Stood Theodore surpriz'd in deadly fright,

With chattering teeth, and bristling hair upright.

Dryden.

Dip but your toes into cold water,

Their correspondent teeth will chatter.

Prior.

3. To talk idly or carelessly.

Come hither you, to whom the breath

Of music is a second death;

Whose untun'd ears are neither fit

For concord, poesie, nor wit;

That chatter in unpainted prose,

And use no organ but the nose.

Jordan's Poems, (before 1650.)

C H E

CHA'TTER. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Noise like that of a pie or monkey.

The mimick ape began his chatter,
How evil tongues his life bespatter!

Swift.

2. Idle prate.

CHA'TTERBOX. * n. s. A word of contempt, applied to such as are perpetually talking of themselves, or talking idly but incessantly of other things.

CHA'TTERER. † n. s. [from chatter.] An idle talker; a prattler. Sherwood.

CHA'TTERING. * n. s. [from chatter.] Idle or unprofitable talk.

Suffer no hour to pass away in a lazy idleness, an impertinent chattering, or useless trifles. Watts, Logick.

CHA'TTY. * adj. [from chat.] Full of prate; chattering; conversing freely.

Expect me in your dressing room as constant as your India cabinet, and as chatty as your parrot. Montagu's Letters, i. 35.

CHA'TWOOD. n. s. Little sticks; fuel.

CHA'UDRON. * See CHAWDRON.

CHA'VENDER. n. s. [chevesne, Fr.] The chub; a fish.

These are a choice bait for the chub, or chavender, or indeed any great fish. Walton's Angler.

CHAUMONTEILLE. n. s. [French.] A sort of pear.

CHAUN. * n. s. [Sax. ceonan, to yawn, to gape; Gr. χαλινω.] A gap; a chasm.

Full of crannies, full of chauns. Colgrave in V. Fend.

The earth at first, you must suppose, was a very paradise; but in process of time, the sun, with its mighty heat, so parched and filled it with chops and chauns which descended very far into the earth, and prepared it for a rupture.

Bp. H. Croft on Burnet's Theory, (1685.) p. 113.

To CHAUN. * v. n. To open. Sherwood.

CHAUNT. * See CHANT.

To CHAW. † v. a. [kaewen, Germ. ceapan, Sax.

The old past participle is chawen; the modern, chawed.] To champ between the teeth; to masticate; to chew.

I home returning, fraught with foul despite,
And chawing vengeance all the way I went. Spenser, F. Q.

They be forced to say, that accidents be broken, eaten, drunken, chawen, and swallowed without any substance at all.

Abp. Cramer, Answer to Bp. Gardiner. p. 391.

They come to us, but us love draws;

He swallows us, and never chaws;

He is the tyrant pike, and we the fry.

Donne.

Whether he found any use of chawing little sponges, dipt in oil, in his mouth, wh he was perfectly under water, and at a distance from his engine.

Boyle.

The man who laught but once to see an ass
Mumbling to make the cross-grain'd thistles pass,
Might laugh again, to see a jury chaw
The prickles of unpalatable law.

Dryden.

CHAW. n. s. [from the verb.] The chap; the upper or under part of a beast's mouth.

I will turn thee back, and put hooks into thy chaws, and will bring thee forth and all thine army. Ezekiel, xxix. 4.

CHA'WDRON. † n. s. [written also chauldron, and chaudron.] Entrails.

Add thereto a tyger's chaudron,

For the ingredients of our cauldron.

Shakespeare.

Sheep-heads will stay with thee?—

Yes, sir, or chauldrons.

Beaumont and Fl. Vice Valour.

CHAWN. * See CHAUN.

CHEAP. † adj. [ceapan, Sax. *koop*en, Dutch, to buy, from the Goth. kaupan.]

C H E

1. To be had at a low rate; purchased for a small price.

Where there are a great many sellers to a few buyers, there the thing to be sold will be cheap. On the other side, raise up a great many buyers for a few sellers, and the same thing will immediately turn dear. Locke.

2. Of small value; easy to be had; not respected.

The goodness, that is cheap in beauty, maketh beauty brief in goodness. Shakespeare.

Had I so lavish of my presence been,
So common haekney'd in the eyes of men,
So stale and cheap to vulgar company.

Shakespeare.

He that is too much in any thing, so that he giveth another occasion of society, maketh himself cheap.

Bacon.

May your sick fancy still languish till it die,
And you grow cheap in every subject's eye.

Dryden.

The titles of distinction, which belong to us, are turned into terms of derision, and every way is taken by profane men, towards rendering us cheap and contemptible.

Atterbury.

CHEAP. † n. s. [chepe is an old word for market, whence Eastcheap and Cheapside. Dr. Johnson might have added, that our ancient lexicography gives "chepe for price," Prompt. Parv.] Market; purchase; bargain: as good cheap; [à bon marche, Fr.]

It is like to children sitting in chepyng.

Wicliffe, St. Matt. xi.

The same wine which we pay so dear for now a days, in that good world was very good cheap.

Sidney.

Victuals shall be so good cheap upon earth, that they shall think themselves to be in good case.

2 Esdras, xvi. 21.

It is many a man's case to tire himself out with hunting after that abroad, which he carries about him all the while, and may have it better cheap at home.

L'Estrange.

Some few insulting cowards, who love to vapour good cheap, may trample on those who give least resistance.

Devoy of Piety.

To CHE'APEN. † v. a. [Goth. kaupan, ceapan, Sax. to buy.]

1. To attempt to purchase; to bid for any thing; to ask the price of any commodity.

Rich she shall be, that's certain; wise, or I'll none; virtuous, or I'll never cheapen her.

Shakespeare.

He goes on negotiating and cheapening the loyalty of our faithful governor of Ireland.

Milton, Observ. on Peace between E. of Orm. and the Irish.

The first he cheapened was a Jupiter, which would have come at a very easy rate.

L'Estrange.

She slept sometimes to Mrs. Thody's,

To cheapen tea.

Prior.

To shops in crowds the daggled females fly,

Pretend to cheapen goods, but nothing buy.

Swift.

2. To lessen value.

My hopes pursue a brighter diadem;

Can any brighter than the Roman be?

I find my profer'd love has cheapen'd me.

Dryden.

CHE'APENER. * n. s. [from cheapen. Prompt. Parv. chepener, negotiator.] A bargainer. Sherwood.

CHE'APLY. adv. [from cheap.] At a small price; at a low rate.

By these I see

So great a day as this is cheaply bought.

Shakespeare.

Blood, rapines, massacres, were cheaply bought,

So mighty recompence your beauty brought.

Dryden.

CHE'APNESS. n. s. [from cheap.] Lowness of price.

Ancient statutes incite merchant strangers to bring in commodities; having for end cheapness.

Bacon.

The discredit which is grown upon Ireland, has been the great discouragement to other nations to transplant themselves hither, and prevailed farther than all the invitations which the cheapness and plenty of the country has made them.

Temple.

CHEAR. See CHEER.

To CHEAT. † v. a. [of uncertain derivation; probably from acheter, Fr. to purchase, alluding to the tricks used in making bargains. See the noun, Dr. Johnson says; where escheat is proposed as the etymology, and perhaps justly. But the Sax. ceatz, circumvention, may be noticed. Serenius gives the old Goth. kyta, deceitfully to impose upon.]

1. To defraud; to impose upon; to trick. It is used commonly of low cunning.

It is a dangerous commerce, where an honest man is sure at first of being cheated; and he recovers not his losses, but by learning to cheat others. Dryden.

There are people who find that the most effectual way to cheat the people, is always to pretend to infallible cures. Tillotson.

2. It has of before the thing taken away by fraud.

I that am curtail'd of this fair proportion,

Cheated of feature by dissembling nature,

Deformed, unfinish'd.

Shakspeare.

CHEAT. † n. s. [from the verb. Some think abbreviated from escheat, because many fraudulent measures being taken by the lords of manors in procuring escheats, cheat, the abridgement, was brought to convey a bad meaning. This may be further illustrated. "They call their art [gaming] by a new found name, as cheating; themselves, cheators; and the dice, cheters; borrowing the term from among our lawyers, with whom all such casuals as fall to the lord at the holding of his leets, as waives, straies, and such like, be called chetes, and are accustomedly said to be escheated to the lord's use." Greene's Michel Munchance, his Discoverie of the Art of Cheating, before 1600.]

1. A fraud; a trick; an imposture.

The pretence of publick good is a cheat that will ever pass, though so abused by ill men, that I wouder the good do not grow ashamed to use it. Temple.

Emp'rick politicians use deceit,
Hide what they give, and cure but by a cheat.

Dryden.

When I consider life, 'tis all a cheat;
Yet, fool'd with hope, men favour the deceit.
Trust on, and think to-morrow will repay;
To-morrow's falsur than the former day;
Lyes worse; and while it says, we shall be blest,
With some new joys cuts off what we possess.

Dryden.

2. A person guilty of fraud.

Disimulation can be no farther useful than it is concealed; for as much as no man will trust a known cheat.

South.

Like that notorious cheat, vast sums I give,
Only that you may keep me while I live.

Dryden.

CHEATABLENESS. * n. s. [from cheat.] Disposition to deceive.

Not faith, but folly, an easy cheatableness of heart; and not confidence, but presumption. Hammond's Works, i. 554.

CHEAT-BREAD. * n. s. [probably from the Fr. achet, bought.] Fine bread; bought bread; in opposition to that of a coarser quality, usually baked at home; or, as we now say, wheaten, in contradistinction to household. Cotgrave renders "bis-blanc, whenten or cheat bread."

Without French wines, cheat-bread, or quails.

Com. of Eastward Hoe.

CHEATER. † n. s. [from cheat.] One that practises fraud.

I will be cheater to them both, and they shall be exchequers to me. Shakspeare.

[It is in the preceding example, by way of joke or quibble, for eschator; "with the es left out, and so turned cheater," as Lord Coke in his Charge at Norwich, in 1607, thus played upon the word.]

They say this town is full of couzenage,
As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye;
Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks,
And many such like libertines of sin.

Shakspeare.

He is no swaggerer, hostess; a tame cheater i' faith.

Cheater, call you him? I will bar no honest man my house, nor no cheater.

Shakspeare.

All sorts of injurious persons, the sacrilegious, the detainers of tithes, cheaters of men's inheritances, false witnesses and accusers.

Bp. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

To CHECK. † v. a. [from the French echecs, chess; from whence we use, at that game, the term check-mate, when we stop our adversary from carrying on his play any farther. The Dutch have also the word schaak, belonging to the game of chess. But see the remarks on CHECKMATE.]

1. To repress; to curb.

Reserve thy state; with better judgement check
This hideous rashness.

Shakspeare.

Fumes may be sown and raised, they may be spread and multiplied, they may be checked and laid dead.

Bacon.

I hate when vice can bolt her arguments,
And virtue has no tongue to check her pride.

Milton, Comus.

He who sat at a table, richly and deliciously furnished, but with a sword hanging over his head by one single thread or hair, surely had enough to check his appetite.

South.

2. To reprove; to chide.

Richard, with his eye brimful of tears,
Then check'd and rated by Northumberland,
Did speak these words, now prov'd a prophecy.

Shakspeare.

His fault is much, and the good king his master
Will check him for't.

Shakspeare.

The king, which erst kept all the realme in doubt,
The veriest rascall now dare checke and flout.

Mir. for Mag. p. 293.

3. To compare a bank note or other bill, with the correspondent paper.

4. To controul by a counter reckoning; to compare the items of an account with vouchers, so as to check and controul it, and thus ascertain its justness. This sense seems to have been taken not from the game of chess, as Mr. Malone also has observed, but from the chequered cloth on the board of the Exchequer, which was used for settling accounts passed before the court. See Archæologia, vol. ix. p. 28.

To CHECK. v. n.

1. To stop; to make a stop; with at.

With what wing the staniel checks at it.

Shakspeare.

He must observe their mood on whom he jests,
The quality of the persons, and the time;

And, like the haggard, check at every feather
That comes before his eye.

Shakspeare.

The mind, once jaded by an attempt above its power, either is disabled for the future, or else checks at any vigorous undertaking ever after.

Locke.

2. To clash; to interfere.

If love check with business, it troubleth men's fortunes.

Bacon.

3. To strike with repression.

I'll avoid his presence;
It checks so strong upon me.

Dryden.

CHECK. † n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Repressure; stop; rebuff; sudden restraint.

Rebellion in this land shall lose his sway,
Meeting the check of such another day.

Shakspeare.

C H E

We see also, that kings that have been fortunate conquerors in their first years, must have some check or arrest in their fortunes.

God hath of late years manifested himself in a very dreadful manner, as if it were on purpose to give a check to this insolent impiety.

It was this viceroy's zeal, which gave a remarkable check to the first progress of Christianity.

God put it into the heart of one of our princes, to give a check to that sacrilege, which had been but too much winked at.

- The great struggle with passions is in the first check.
2. Restraint; curb; government; continued restraint. They who come to maintain their own breach of faith, the check of their consciences much breaketh their spirit.

The impetuosity of the new officer's nature needed some restraint and check, for some time, to his immoderate pretences and appetite of power.

Some free from rhyme or reason, rule or check, Break Priscian's head, and Pegasus's neck.

While such men are in trust, who have no check from within, nor any views but towards their interest.

3. A reproof; a slight.

Oh! this life Is nobler than attending for a check.

I do know, the state, However this may gall him with some check, Cannot with safety cast him.

So we are sensible of a check, But in a brow, that saucily controuls Our action.

4. A dislike; a sudden disgust; something that stops the progress.

Say I should wed her, would not my wise subjects Take check, and think it strange? perhaps revolt?

5. In falconry, when a hawk forsakes her proper game to follow rooks, pies, or other birds that cross her flight.

The free haggard (Which is that woman, that hath wing, and knows it, Spirit and plume, will make an hundred checks, To shew her freedom.

A young woman is a hawk upon her wings; and if she be handsome, she is the more subject to go out on check.

When whistled from the fist, Some falcon stoops at what her eye design'd, And with her eagerness, the quarry miss'd, Straight flies at check, and clips it down the wind.

6. The person checking; the cause of restraint; a stop.

He was unhappily too much used as a check upon the lord Coventry.

A satirical poet is the check of the laymen on bad priests.

7. Any stop or interruption.

The letters have the natural production by several checks or stops, or, as they are usually called, articulations of the breath or voice.

8. The corresponding cipher of a bank bill. This word is often corruptly used for the draft itself of the person on his banker.

9. A term used in the game of chess, when one party obliges the other either to move or guard his king.

10. Linen cloth fabricated in squares of the same or of different colours.

11. Clerk of the CHECK, in the king's household, has the check and controulment of the yeomen of the guard, and all the ushers belonging to the royal family.

12. Clerk of the CHECK, in the king's navy at Plymouth, is also the name of an officer invested with like powers.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 35.

From India and the golden chersonesse. Milton, P. R. iv. 74.

CHERT. n. s. [from quartz, Germ.] A kind of flint. Flint is most commonly found in form of nodules; but 'tis sometimes found in thin strata, when 'tis called chert. Woodward.

CHE'RTY.* adj. [from chert.] Flinty. The clay is found near the town, over the cherty stratum. Pennant.

CHERUB.† n. s. [כרוב plur. כרובים] It is sometimes written in the plural, improperly, cherubims. Milton gives the plural cherubs.] A celestial spirit, which, in the hierarchy, is placed next in order to the seraphim. All the several descriptions which the Scripture gives us of cherubim, differ from one another; as they are described in the shapes of men, eagles, oxen, lions, and in a composition of all these figures put together. The hieroglyphical representations in the embroidery upon the curtains of the Tabernacle, were called by Moses, Exod. xxvi. 1. cherubim of cunning work. Calmet.

Make one cherub on the one end, and the other cherub on the other end; even of the mercy seat shall ye make the cherubims on the two ends thereof. Exod. xxv. 19.

To Thee cherubim and seraphim continually do cry. Ti. Deum.

The roof o' the chamber
With golden cherubims is fretted. Shakspeare.

Heaven's cherubin hors'd,
Upon the sightless coursers of the air,
Shall blow the horrid deed in every eye,
That tears shall drown the wind. Shakspeare.

Thou sitt'st between the cherubs bright,
Between their wings outspread. Milton, Ps. lxxx.

Some cherub finishes what you begun,
And to a miracle improves a tune. Prior.

CHERU'BICAL.* adj. [from cherub.] Angelical; relating to the cherubim.

Why did you not call to mind the cherubical angel, which, in the form of a crucifix, spoke to St. Francis?

Sheldon, Miracles of Antichrist, p. 162.

A third hymn of great note in the church was the cherubical hymn, or the trisagion, as it was called, because of the thrice repeating, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of Hosts.

Christian Antiquities, ii. 117.

CHERT'ICK. adj. [from cherub.] Angelick; relating to the cherubim.

Thy words
Attentive, and with more delighted ear,

C H E

Divine instructor! I have heard, than when Cherubick songs by night from neighb'ring hills
Aerial musick send.

Milton, P. L.

And on the east side of the garden place
Cherubick watch.

Milton, P. L.

CHE'RUBIN. adj. [from cherub.] Angelical.

This fell whore of thine,
Hath in her more destruction than thy sword,
For all her cherubin look.

Shakspeare.

CHE'RUBIN* n. s. A cherub.

O daughter of the rose, whose cheeks unite
The differing titles of the red and white—
Whose face is paradise, but fenc'd from sin;
For God in either eye has plac'd a cherubin.

Dryden to the Duchess of Ormond.

CHE'RVIL.† n. s. [Sax. ceppille, Dutch kervill, from chærophyllum, Lat.] An umbelliferous plant.

Miller.

To CHE'RUP. v. n. [from cheer; perhaps from cheer up; corrupted to cherip.] To chirp; to use a cheerful voice.

The birds——

Frame to thy song their cheerful cheriping;
Or hold their peace for shame of thy sweet lays.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. June.

CHESE* n. s. Often written by our old authors for CHOSE. See To CHOOSE.

CHE'SIBLE* n. s. [old Fr. casuble; low Lat. casula, casula. Our old word for this kind of dress was also sometimes casule.] A kind of cope; a short vestment without sleeves, which a Popish priest wears at mass.

Phillips.

Manyfold kinds of ornaments, as scopes, corporasses, chesi- bles, tunicles, stoles, &c. Bale on the Revel. P. II. k. vi. b.

CHE'SLIP. n. s. A small vermin, that lies under stones or tiles.

Skinner.

CHESS.† n. s. [echec, Fr.] A nice and abtruse game, in which two sets of men are moved in opposition to each other. The first citation, which Dr.
Johnson gives, ascribes the invention of the game to the Persian magi. Mr. Bryant says, that "to the Indo-Cuthites is attributed the most rational and amusing game, called chess; and the names of the several pieces prove that we received it from them." Analys. of Anc. Mythology, vol. iii. p. 510.

This game the Persian magi did invent,
The force of Eastern wisdom to express;

From thence to busy Europeans sent,
And styl'd by modern Lombards pensive chess.

Denham.

So have I seen a king on chess,
(His rooks and knights withdrawn,
His queen and bishops in distress)
Shifting about, grow less and less,
With here and there a pawn.

Dryden.

CHESS-APPLE. n. s. A species of Wild Service.

CHESS-BOARD. n. s. [from chess and board.] The board or table on which the game of chess is played.
And cards are dealt, and chessboards brought,
To ease the pain of coward thought.

Prior.

CHESS-MAN. n. s. [from chess and man.] A puppet for chess.

A company of chessmen, standing on the same squares of the chessboard where we left them: we say, they are all in the same place, or unmoved.

Locke.

CHESS-PLAYER. n. s. [from chess and player.] A gamester at chess.

Thus like a skilful chessplayer, he draws out his men, and makes his pawns of use to his greater persons.
Cherubon! follow earth.

Dryden.

C H E

The tender cheston and mellow earth is the best, being mere mould, between the two extremes of clay and sand; especially if it be not loomy and binding.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

CHEST.† n. s. [Celt. kest; Goth. and Su. kista;
Welsh, cist, cyst; Sax. cýrt; Lat. cista;—formerly used for a coffin, as by Chaucer: "He is now ded, and nailed in his cheste:" whence our verb to chest, in this sense; of which Dr. Johnson has taken no notice. The Sax. substantive is so used. Kist is our old word, found in manuscripts of Gower; and is still our Yorkshire word for chest. Mr. Tooke refers to the Sax. ceaprt, used for womb, in Alfred's Laws by Lambard, fol. 21. But perhaps the Hebrew kis, as Dr. Jamieson has observed, a little chest or bag for holding weights or money, is the root.]

1. A box of wood or other materials, in which things are laid up.

He will seek there, on my word: neither press, chest, trunk, well, vault, but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of such places.

Shakspeare.

But more have been by avarice oppress,
And heaps of money crowded in the chest.

Dryden.

2. A CHEST of Drawers. A case with moveable boxes or drawers.

3. The trunk of the body, or cavity from the shoulders to the belly.

Such as have round faces, or broad chests, or shoulders, have seldom or never long necks.

Brown.

He describes another by the largeness of his chest, and breadth of his shoulders.

Pope, Notes on the Iliad.

To CHEST.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To reposit in a chest; to hoard.

2. To place in a coffin; "to chest a dead corpse with spice and sweet ointments in a coffin."

Hudoc.

He dieth, and is chested.

Genesis, l. 26. Contents of the Chapter.

That afternoon we chested our late commander, putting some great shot with him into it, that he might presently sink.

Terry, Voyage to the E. Indies, (1655,) p. 41.

CHEST-FOUNDING. n. s. A disease in horses. It comes near to a pleurisy, or peripneumony, in a human body.

Farricr's Dict.

CHESTED. adj. [from chest.] Having a chest; as, broad-chested, narrow-chested.

CHE'STER. See CASTOR.

CHE'STUT.* } n. s. [chastaigne, Fr. castanea,

CHE'STUT-TREE. } Lat. so called from Castania in Asia Minor, whence the chestnut was brought into Europe. The word is frequently pronounced, and sometimes written, chesnut.]

1. The tree hath katkins, which are placed at remote distances from the fruit, on the same tree. The outer coat of the fruit is very rough, and has two or three nuts included in each husk or covering.
This tree was formerly in greater plenty, as may be proved by the old buildings in London, which were, for the most part, of this timber; which is equal in value to the best oak, and, for many purposes, far exceeds it, particularly for making vessels for liquors; it having a property, when once thoroughly seasoned, to maintain its bulk constantly, and is not subject to shrink or swell, like other timber.

Miller.

2. The fruit of the chestnut tree.

C H E

A woman's tongue,
That gives not half so great a blow to the ear,
As will a chestnut in a farmer's fire. Shakspeare.

October has a basket of services, medlars and chestnuts, and fruits that ripen at the latter time. Peacham on Drawing.

3. The name of a brown colour.

His hair is of a good colour. —

—An excellent colour: your chestnut was ever the only colour. Shakspeare.

Merab's long hair was glossy chestnut brown. Cowley.

CHESTON. n. s. A species of plum.

CHEVACHIE.  n. s.* [Fr. low Lat. chevalchia.] An expedition with cavalry. Obsolete.

He had been sometime in chevarhie,
In Flaunders, in Artois, and in Picardie. Chaucer, C. T. Prolog.

CHEVAGE.  See CHIEFAGE.*

CHEVALIER. n. s. [chevalier, Fr.] A knight; a gallant strong man.

Renowned Talbot doth expect my aid;

And I am low'd by a traitor-villain,

And cannot help the noble chevalier. Shakspeare.

CHEVAUX de Frise. n. s. [Fr. The singular cheval de frise is seldom used.] The Friesland horse, which is a piece of timber, larger or smaller, and traversed with wooden spikes, pointed with iron, five or six feet long; used in defending a passage, stopping a breach, or making a retrenchment to stop the cavalry. It is also called a turnpike, or tourniquet. Chamber's.

CHEVEN. † n. s. [chevesne, Fr. from chef, the head; the fish having a large head.] A river fish; the same with chub.

The fishes of this lake were trouts, pikes, chevins, and tenches.

Sir T. Brown, Tracts, p. 99.

CHEVERIL. † n. s. [old Fr. cheverel, from chevreau, i. e. petit chevre. V. Roq. This word, now obsolete, was a favourite expression with our ancestors to denote the pliability of certain consciences; and to the solitary instance of a cheveril conscience in Shakspeare, given by Dr. Johnson, a pleasant illustration of the phrase may be added from an elder writer. B. Jonson has also cheveril conscience, in his Poetaster.] A kid; kid-leather:

A sentence is but a cheveril glove to a good wit: how quickly the wrong side may be turned outward. Shakspeare.

Neither the captains nor souldiers can stand or prevail. And no mervail; for their armour is of cheverel leather; and the nature of cheverel leather is, that if a man take it by the sides, and pull it in breadth, he may make a little point as brode as both his hands; if he take it by the ends, and pull it in length, he may make it as small as a thread. Moste men now a dayes have cheverel consciences! if the matter touch their owne profit or pleasure, they make their consciences wide enough, and large enough; if it touch another man's profit, they make them as small as a thread.

Ep. of Chichester's Sermon at Paul's Cross, (1576.) c. viii.

Which gifts the capacity

Of your soft cheveril conscience would receive,

If you might please to stretch it. Shakspeare.

O, here's a wit of cheveril, that stretches from an inch narrow to a ell broad. Shakspeare.

TO CHEVERILIZE.  v. a.* [from cheveril.] To make as pliable as kidleather. Not now in use.

I appeal unto your own, though never so much cheverillized, consciences, my good calumniators; can there be inferred a just accusation? Mountagu, App. to Cas. p. 23.

CHEVISANCE. † n. s. [chevisance, Fr.]

1. Enterprize; achievement. A word now not in use.

Fortune, the foe of famous chevisance,
Seldom, said Guyon, yields to virtue aid. Spenser, F. Q.

VOL. I.

C H E

2. Bargain. [old Fr. chevisance, chevisance, an agreement between debtor and creditor, in relation to the loan of money. Kelham.]

They maken many a wrong chevisaunce,
Heaping up waves of wealth and woe.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. May.

CHEVRON. † n. s. [French.] One of the honourable ordinaries in heraldry. It represents two rafters of a house, set up as they ought to stand.

Harris.

The masquers were placed in a great concave shell, like mother of pearl; — the top thereof was stuck with a cheveron of lights, which, indented to the proportion of the shell, struck a glorious beam upon them, as they were seated one above another. B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

CHEVRONED.  adj.* [from chevron.] Variegated in the shape of a chevron.

Their bases were of watchet cloth of silver, cheveroned all over with lace. B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

CHEVRONEL.  n. s.* A diminutive of, and in size half, the heraldick chevron.

TO CHEW. v. a. [ceopan, Sax. kauwen, Dutch. It is very frequently pronounced chaw, and perhaps properly.]

1. To grind with the teeth; to masticate.

If little faults, proceeding on distemper,
Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye,
When capital crimes, chew'd, swallow'd, and digested,
Appear before us? Shakspeare.

Pacing through the forest,
Chewing the food of sweet and bitter fancy. Shakspeare.

This pious cheat, that never suck'd the blood,
Nor chew'd the flesh of lambs. Dryden, Fables.

The vales

Descending gently, where the lowing herd
Chews verdurous pasture. Philips.

By chewing, solid aliment is divided into small parts: in a human body, there is no other instrument to perform this action but the teeth. By the action of chewing, the spittle and mucus are squeezed from the glands, and mixed with the aliment; which action, if it be long continued, will turn the aliment into a sort of chyle. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. To meditate; or ruminate in the thoughts.

While the fierce monk does at his trial stand,
He chews revenge, abjuring his offences:
Guile in his tongue, and murder in his hand,
He stabs his judge, to prove his innocence. Prior.

3. To taste without swallowing.

Heav'n's in my mouth,
As if I did but only chew its name. Shakspeare.

Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested: that is, some books are to be read only in parts; others to be read, but not curiously; and some few to be read wholly, with attention. Bacon.

TO CHEW. v. n. To champ upon; to ruminate.

I will with patience hear, and find a time;
'Till then, my noble friend, chew upon this. Shakspeare.

Inculcate the doctrine of disobedience, and then leave the multitude to chew upon't. L'Alfange.

Old politicians chew on wisdom past,
And blunder on in business to the last. Pope.

CHEW.  n. s.* [from the verb.] That which is chewed; a vulgarism, as a chew of tobacco.

CHEWING.  n. s.* [Sax. ceopung.] Mastication.

CHEWET.  n. s.* [probably from chew. See CHURCH.]

A pie consisting of various articles chopped, and mixed together. Cotgrave terms the "chewet pie, goubelet." There is a receipt for this olio, whether fried or baked, in the Archæologia, vol. 15. p. 12.

A kind of dainty chewet, or minced pie.

Florio, Ital. Dict. in V. Frilingotti.
Men laden with bottles of wine, chewets, and currant-custards,
Middleton's Witch, ii. 1.

CHI'BBAL. * n. s. [Fr. ciboule. In the north of England chibe is the word; Sax. cipe, Lat. cepa.] A small kind of onion.

Ye eating rascals,
Whose gods are beef and brewis, whose brave angers
Do execution upon these, and chibbals.

Beaum. and Fl., Bonduca.

CHICA'NE. † n. s. [chicane, Fr. derived by Menage from the Spanish word chico, little, Dr. Johnson says. But Morin asserts, that both Menage and Huet derive the word from the Gr. δixavixds, he who loves a suit at law. Others derive it from σικavds, which at first signified a Sicilian, and afterwards a deceiver, because the Sicilians were so esteemed.
V. Morin, Dict. Etym. Fr. and Gr. in V. CHICA-NEUR.]

1. The art of protracting a contest by petty objection and artifice.

The general part of the civil law concerns not the chicane of private cases, but the affairs and intercourse of civilized nations, grounded upon the principles of reason. Locke.

His attorneys have hardly one trick left; they are at an end of all their chicane. Arbutnot, Hist. of John Bull.

2. Artifice in general. This sense is only in familiar language.

Unwilling then in arms to meet,
He strove to lengthen the campaign,
And save his forces by chicane.

Prior.

To CHICA'NE. † v. n. [chicaner, Fr.] To prolong a contest by tricks.

Give me but virtuous actions, and I will not quibble and chicane about the motives. Ld. Chesterfield.

CHICA'NER. n. s. [chicaneur, Fr.] A petty sophister;
a trifling disputant; a wrangler.

This is the way to distinguish the two most different things
I know, a logical chicaner from a man of reason. Locke.

CHICA'NERV. n. s. [chicanerie, Fr.] Sophistry; mean arts of wrangle.

His anger caused him to destroy the greatest part of these reports; and only to preserve such as discovered most of the chicanery and futility of the practice. Arbutnot.

CHI'CHES. † n. s. [old Fr. chiches; chich-peas, Sherwood; from the Lat. cicer.] Dwarf peas, or vetches. See CHICKPEAS.

Such things as neede not much moisture, as speric, chick, and the other pulses. B. Googe's Husbandrie, (1586.) fol. 18. b.

He chiches gives, for winter laid aside;
Nor are the long and slender oats denied.

Sir J. Beaumont's Poems, p. 41.

CHI'CHLING VETCH. n. s. [lathyrus, Lat.] In Germany they are cultivated, and eaten as peas, though neither so tender nor well tasted. Miller.

CHICK. n. s. } [cicen, Sax. kiccken, Dutch.
CHI'CKEN. † n. s. } Chicken is, I believe, the old plural of chick, though now used as a singular noun, Dr. Johnson says. "The old proverb, however, yet countenances chicken as the regular plural; and we still say, "a couple of chicken." See Ray's Prov.
"Children and chicken must always be picking."]

1. The young of a bird, particularly of a hen, or small bird.

All my pretty ones!

What all my pretty chickens, and their dam,

At one fell swoop!

For when the shell is broke, out comes a chick.

Shakespeare.

Davies.

While it is a chick, and hath no spurs, nor cannot hurt, nor hath seen the motion, yet he readily practiseth it. Hale.

Ev'n since she was a se'en-night old, they say,

Was chaste and humble to her dying day;

Nor chick, nor hen, was known to disobey. Dryden, Fables.

Having the notion that one laid the egg out of which the other was hatched, I have a clear idea of the relation of dam and chick. Locke.

On rainy days alone I dine,

Upon a chick and pint of wine;

On rainy days I dine alone,

And pick my chicken to the bone.

Swift.

2. A word of tenderness.

My Ariel, chick;

This is thy charge.

Shakespeare.

3. A term for a young person.

Then, Chloe, still go on to prate

Of thirty-six and thirty-eight;

Pursue your trade of scandal-picking,

Your hints, that Stella is no chicken.

Swift.

To CHICK. * v. n. [from the Sax. cicen.] To sprout, as seed in the ground; to vegetate. A word still used in some parts of England. "Chykynge or sprowing of corne, pullulatus; to chyken as corne, or spyren, pullulo." Prompt. Parv.

CHI'CKENHEARTED. adj. [from chicken and heart.]
Cowardly; timorous; fearful.

Now we set up for tilting in the pit,

Where 'tis agreed by bullies, chickenhearted,

To fright the ladies first, and then be parted.

Prolog. to Sp. Friar.

The CHI'CKENPOX. n. s. An exanthematous distemper, so called from its being of no very great danger.

CHI'CKLING. n. s. [from chick.] A small chicken.

CHI'CKPEAS. n. s. [from chick and pea.] A kind of degenerate pea. Miller.

CHI'CKWEED. n. s. [chick and weed.] The name of a plant.

Green mint, or chickweed, are of good use, in all the hard swellings of the breast, occasioned by milk. Wiseman.

To CHIDE. † v. a. preter. chid or chode, part. chid
or chidden. [Sax. chidan, part. chid.]

1. To reprove; to check; to correct with words: applied to persons.

Chide him for faults, and do it reverently,

When you perceive his blood inclin'd to mirth.

Shakespeare.

And fly like chidden Mercury from Jove.

Shakespeare.

Those, that do teach your babes,

Do it with gentle means, and easy tasks;

He might have chid me so: for, in good faith,

I am a child to chiding.

Shakespeare.

Scylla wept,

And chid her barking waves into attention.

Milton, Com.

Above the waves as Neptune shew'd his face,

To chide the winds, and save the Trojan race.

Waller.

You look, as if yon stern philosopher

Had just now chid you.

Addison.

If any woman of better fashion in the parish happened to be absent from church, they were sure of a visit from him, to chide and to dine with her. Swift.

2. To drive with reproof.

Margaret my queen, and Clifford too,

Have chid me from the battle.

Shakespeare.

If, rather than to marry county Paris,

Thou hast the strength of will to slay thyself;

Then it is likely, thou wilt undertake

A thing like death to chide away this shame.

Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet.

3. To blame; to reproach: applied to things.

He'll call you to so hot an answer for it,

That caves and womby vaultages of France

Shall chide your trespass.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. V.

Winds murmur'd through the leaves your long delay,

And fountains, o'er the pebbles, chide your stay.

Dryden.

I chid the folly of my thoughtless haste;
For, the work perfected, the joy was past.
To CHIDE.† v. n. Prior.

1. To clamour; to scold.

Therefore the Jews chidden togidere, and seyden, how may this give to us his fleisch to ete? Wicliffe, St. John, vi.
What had he to do to chide at me? Shakespeare.

Next morn, betimes, the bride was missing:
The mother scream'd, the father chid,
Where can this idle wench be hid? Swift.

2. To quarrel with.

And the people chode with Mosés.
Numbers, xx. 3. (Transl. 1578.)

The business of the state does him offence,
And he does chide with you. Shakespeare.

3. To make a noise.

My duty,
As doth a rock against the chiding flood,
Should the approach of this wild river break,
And stand unshaken yours. Shakespeare.

CHIDE.* n. s. [from the verb.] Murmur; gentle noise.

Nor the chide of streams,
And hum of bees, inviting sleep sincere
Into the guiltless breast. Thomson, Autumn.

CHIDER.† n. s. [from chide.] A rebuker; a re-prover.

Whether any be brawlers, slanderers, chiders, scolders, and sewers of discord between one and another.

Not her that chides, sir, at any hand, I pray.—
I love no chiders, sir. Shakespeare.

CHIDRESS.* n. s. [from chider.] She who chides.
Obsolete.

If one be full of wantonnesse,
Another is a chidresse. Chaucer, Rom. of the Rose.

CHIDING.* n. s. [Sax. cibing.]

1. Rebuke; contention; quarrel.

He called the name of the place Massuh, and Meribah, because of the chiding [in the margin strife] of the children of Israel, and because they tempted the Lord. Exod. xvii. 7.
Well thou know'st what cruel chidings
Oft I've from my mother borne.

Bp. Percy, Alcanzor and Zaida.

2. Simply, noise; sound.

I was with Hercules and Cadmus once,
Whence in a wood of Crete they bay'd the boar
With hounds of Sparta: never did I hear
Such gallant chiding. Shakespeare, M. N. Dr.

CHIDINGLY.* adv. [from chiding.] After the manner of chiding. Hulot.

CHIEF.† adj. [chef, the head, Fr. from the Gr.
κεφαλη.]

1. Principal; most eminent; above the rest in any respect.

These were the chief of the officers that were over Solomon's works. 1 Kings, ix. 13.

My lord chief justice, speak to that vain man.
Shakespeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.

The hand of the princes and rulers hath been chief in this trespass. Exra, w. 2.

Your country, chief in arms, abroad defend;
At home, with morals, arts, and laws amend. Pope.

2. Eminent; extraordinary.

A froward man soweth strife, and a whisperer separateth chief friends. Proverbs, xvi. 28.

3. Capital; of the first order; that to which other parts are inferior, or subordinate.

I came to have a good general view of the apostle's main purpose in writing the epistle, and the chief branches of his discourse wherein he prosecuted it. Locke.

4. It is used by some writers with a superlative termination; but, I think improperly: the comparative chiefer is never found.

We beseech you, bend you to remain,
Here in the cheer and comfort of our eye,
Our chiefest courtier, cousin, and our son. Shakespeare.
Doeg an Edomite, the chiefest of the herdmen. 1 Sam. xxi. 7.

He sometimes denied admission to the chiefest officers of the army. Clarendon.

CHIEF. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A military commander; a leader of armies; a captain.

Is pain to them
Less pain, less to be fled? or thou than they Less hardy to endure? courageous chief!
The first in flight from pain. Milton, P. L.

After or before were never known
Such chiefs; as each an army seem'd alone. Dryden.

A wit's a feather, and a chief a rod;
An honest man's the noblest work of God. Pope.

A prudent chief not always must display
His pow'rs in equal ranks, and fair array;
But with th' occasion and the place comply,
Conceal his force, nay seem sometimes to fly. Pope.

2. In CHIEF, in law. In capite, by personal service.

All sums demandable, either for licence of alienation to be made of lands holden in chief, or for the pardon of any such alienation already made without licence, have been stayed in the way to the hanaper. Bacon.

I shall be proud to hold my dependance on you in chief, as I do part of my small fortune in Wiltshire. Dryden.

3. In Spenser it seems to signify somewhat like achievement; a mark of distinction.

Where be the nosegays that she dight for thee?
The coloured chaplets wrought with a chief,
The knottish rush-rings, and gilt rosemary. Spenser.

4. In heraldry.

The chief is so called of the French word chef, the head or upper part: this possesses the upper third part of the escut-cheon. Peacham on Drowning.

CHIEF.* adv. [from the adj.] Chiefly.

Then, issuing chearful, to thy sport repair,
Chief, should the western breezes curling play,
And light o'er ether bear the shad'wing clouds.
Thomson, Spring.

CHIEF.* n. s. [old Fr. chef, from chcoir; whence meschcoir, meschief; and thence our word mischief.

• See also BONCHIEF.] Hap; fortune. Prompt.
Parv. Not now in use, except in the compound mischief.

CHIEFAGE, or CHIEVAGE.* [old Fr. chevage, poll-money paid by a villain to his lord, Kelham; from chef, the head.] A tribute by the head.

The Jews, allowed to live in England, long paid chevage, or poll-money; viz. three pence per head, at Easter.

CHIEFDOM. n. s. [from chief.] Sovereignty. Not in use. Chambers.

Zephyrus being in love with Chloris, and coveting her to wife, gave her for a dowry the chiefdom and sovereignty of all flowers and green herbs. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Gloss.

CHIEFLESS.* adj. [from chief.] Wanting a head;
being without a leader.

And chiefless armies doz'd out the campaign,
And navies yawn'd for orders on the main. Pope.

CHIEFLY. adv. [from chief.] Principally; eminently;
more than common.

Any man who will consider the nature of an epick poem, what actions it describes, and what persons they are chiefly whom it informs, will find it a work full of difficulty. Dryden.

Those parts of the kingdom, where the number and estates of the dissenters chiefly lay. Swift.

CHIEFRIE. n. s. [from chief.] A small rent paid to the lord Paramount.

They shall be well able to live upon those lands, to yield her majesty reasonable chiefrie, and also give a competent maintenance unto the garrisons. Spenser on Ireland.

Would the reserved rent at this day be any more than a small chiefrie? Swift.

CHIEFTAIN. † n. s. [old Fr. chefetain; and in our ancient language chevetain and cheventeyn. Chaucer uses the former in the Knight's Tale; and the latter occurs in a ballad of earlier days than his. See Ritson's Anc. Songs, p. 19.]

1. A leader; a commander.

That forc'd their chieftain, for his safety's sake,
(Their chieftain Humber named was aright)

Unto the mighty stream him to betake,
Where he an end of battle and of life did make.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. The head of a clan.

It broke, and absolutely subdued all the lords and chieftains of the Irishry. Davies on Ireland.

CHIEFTAINRY.* } n. s. [from chieftain.] Headship.

The chieftainship of the highlandry is a very dangerous influence. Smollett.

The laird of Raarsa has sometimes disputed the chieftainry of the clan with Macleod of Skie.

Johnson, Lett. to Mrs. Thrale.

CHIEVANCE. n. s. [probably from achervance, Fr. purchase.] Traffick, in which money is extorted; as discount. Now obsolete.

There were good laws against usury, the bastard use of money; and against unlawful chievances and exchanges, which is bastard usury. Bacon.

To CHIEVE, or CHEVE.* v. n. [Fr. chevoir.] To turn out; to come to a conclusion; to succeed. Not yet obsolete. Chieve in Lancashire is to prosper.

Evil mote he cheve.

Chaucer, Chan. Yeom. Tale.

It chieves nought with him.

Ray, N. C. Words, p. 14.

CHIEBLAIN. n. s. [from chill, cold, and blain; so that Temple seems mistaken in his etymology, or has written it wrong to serve a purpose.] Sores made by frost.

I remembered the cure of childblanes when I was a boy, (which may be called the children's gout,) by burning at the fire. Temple.

CHILD. † n. s. [Sax. cild; Goth. kilthein, the womb; inkiltho, with child; probably from the Heb. choul, to bring forth.] In the plural children.

1. An infant, or very young person.

A faire young man,

Of wondrous beauty, and of freshest years:—

Whom when the palmer saw, abasht he was

Through fear and wonder, that he nought could say,

Till him the child bespoke. Spenser, F. Q. ii. viii. 5—7.

In age, to wish for youth is full as vain,

As for youth to turn a child again. Denham.

The young lad must not be ventured abroad at eight or ten, for fear of what may happen to the tender child; though he then runs ten times less risque than at sixteen. Locke.

The stroke of death is nothing: children endure it, and the greatest cowards find it no pain. Wake.

2. One in the line of filiation, opposed to the parent.

Of a truth, against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles and the people of Israel, were gathered together. Acts, iv. 27.

Where children have been exposed, or taken away young, and afterwards have approached to their parents' presence, the parents, though they have not known them, have had a secret joy, or other alteration thereupon. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

I shall see

The winged vengeance overtake such children. Shakespeare.

So unexhausted her perfections were,

That for more children, she had more to spare. Dryden.

He in a fruitful wife's embraces old,

A long increase of children's children told. Addison.

3. The descendants of a man, how remote soever, are called children; as the children of Edom, the children of Israel.

And the Midianites, and the Amalekites, and all the children of the east, lay along in the valley like grasshoppers for multitude. Judges, vii. 12.

4. In the language of scripture.

One weak in knowledge. Isaiah, x. 19.

1 Cor. xiii. 11.

Such as are young in grace.

1 John, ii. 13.

Such as are humble and docile.

St. Matthew, xvii. 3, 4.

The children of light, the children of darkness; who follow light, who remain in darkness.

The elect, the blessed, are also called the children of God.

How is he numbered among the children of God, and his lot is among the saints! Wisdom, v. 5.

In the New Testament, believers are commonly called children of God.

Ye are all the children of God, by faith in Jesus Christ.
Gal. iii. 26. Calmet.

5. A girl child. Not in use, Dr. Johnson says. But, in some of our inland counties, the contradistinction of a female to a male infant is said to be yet kept up, among the lower orders, by the word child. See Steevens's Note on the Winter's Tale. Formerly, however, it was just the reverse; child being restrained to the young of the male sex; as, "the child Iulus," a translation of "puer Iulus;" and the children of the chapel, signify the boys of the royal chapel. See Warton's Hist. of Eng. Poetry, vol. iii. p. 23.

Mercy on's, a bearne, a very pretty bearne!

A boy, or child, I wonder.

Shakespeare, Winter's Tale.

6. Any thing, the product or effect of another.

Macduff, this noble passion,

Child of integrity, hath from my soul

Wip'd the black scruples.

Shakespeare.

7. A noble youth; like the Fr. bachelier; not a knight, but a young man of noble birth dubbed esquire, in his progress to the honour of knight-hood; though, in our old ballads and romances, child may certainly be sometimes found for knight. But the sense, best authorized, is that of a youth of noble blood. In Spenser, child Tristram is not knight Tristram, as Bp. Percy has asserted; for he is called child, not after, but before he was made a knight.

Every knight had after him riding

Three henchmen [each] on him awaiting:—

And every childe ware of leaves green

A fresh chapelet upon his haire bright.

Chaucer, Flower and Leaf.

The noble childe, preventing his desire,

Under his club with wary boldnesse went,

And smote him on the knee that never yet was bent.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. viii. 35.

8. To be with CHILD. To be pregnant.

If it must stand still, let wives with child

Pray that their burthen may not fall this day,

Lest that their hopes prodigiously be crost.

Shakespeare

To CHILD. v. n. [from the noun.] To bring children.

The spring, the summer,

The childing autumn, angry winter, change

Their wonted liveries.

Shakespeare.

As to childing women, young vigorous people, after irregularities of diet, in such it begins with hæmorrhages.

Arbutnot.

TO CHILD. * v. a. To bring forth children.

Whilst ye in durance dwelt, ye to me gave
A little mayde, the which ye childed tho:
The same again if now ye list to have,
The same is yonder lady, whom High God did save.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. xii. 17.

An hundred plants beside, e'en in his sight,
Childed an hundred nymphs.

Fairfax, Tasso, xviii. 26.

CHILDBEARING. n. s. [from child and bear.] The act of bearing children.

To thee,
Pains only in childbearing were foretold,
And, bringing forth, soon recompens'd with joy,
Fruit of thy womb.

Milton, P. L.

The timorous and irresolute Sylvia has demurred 'till she is past childbearing.

Addison.

CHILDBED. n. s. [from child and bed.] The state of a woman bringing a child, or being in labour.

The funerals of Prince Arthur, and of Queen Elizabeth, who died in childbed in the Tower.

Bacon.

Pure, as when wash'd from spot of childbed stain.

Milton, Sonnet.

Yet these, tho' poor, the pain of childbed bear.

Dryden.

Let no one be actually married, 'till she hath the childbed pillows.

Spectator.

Women in childbed are in the case of persons wounded.

Arbutnot on Det.

CHILDBIRTH. n. s. [from child and birth.] Travail; labour; the time of bringing forth; the act of bringing forth.

The mother of Pyrocles, after her childbirth, died.

Sidney.

A kernel void of any taste, but not so of virtue, especially for women travelling in childbirth.

Carew's Survey.

In the whole sex of women, God hath decreed the sharpest pains of childbirth; to shew, that there is no state exempt from sorrow.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

He to his wife, before the time assign'd

For childbirth came, thus bluntly spoke his mind.

Dryden.

CHILDED. adj. [from child.] Furnished with a child.

How light and portable my pain seems now,

When that which makes me bend, makes the king bow;

He childed, as I father'd.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

CHILDERMAS DAY. † [Sax. childamasse-dæg.]

The day of the week, throughout the year, answering to the day on which the feast of the holy Innocents is solemnized, which weak and superstitious persons think an unlucky day.

To talk of hares, or such uncouth things, proves as ominous to the fisherman, as the beginning of a voyage on the day when childermas day fell, doth to the mariner.

Carew.

CHILDHOD. n. s. [from child, childhood, Sax.]

1. The state of children, or, the time in which we are children: it includes infancy, but is continued to puberty.

Now I have stain'd the childhood of our joy
With blood, remov'd but little from our own.

Shakspeare.

The sons of lords and gentlemen should be trained up in learning from their childhoods.

Spenser on Ireland.

Seldom have I ceas'd to eye

Thy infancy, thy childhood, and thy youth.

Milton, P. R.

The same authority that the actions of a man have with us in our childhood, the same, in every period of life, has the practice of all whom we regard as our superiours.

Rogers.

2. The time of life between infancy and puberty.

Infancy and childhood demand thin, copious, nourishing aliment.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. The properties of a child.

Their love in early infancy began,
And rose as childhood ripen'd into man.

Dryden.

CHILDISH. † adj. [Sax. childisc.]

1. Having the qualities of a child; trifling; ignorant; simple.

Learning hath its infancy, when it is but beginning and almost childish: then its youth, when it is luxuriant and juvenile.

Bacon, Essays.

2. Becoming only children; trifling; puerile.

Musidgrus being elder by three or four years, there was taken away the occasion of childish contentions.

Sidney.

The lion's whelps she saw how he did bear,

And lull in rugged arms withouten childish fear.

Spenser, F. Q.

When I was yet a child, no childish play

To me was pleasing; all my mind was set

Serious to learn and know.

Milton, P. R.

The fathers looked on the worship of images as the most silly and childish thing in the world.

Stillingfleet.

One that hath newly learn'd to speak and go,

Loves childish plays.

Roscommon.

They have spoiled the walls with childish sentences, that consist often in a jingle of words.

Addison on Italy.

By conversation the childish humours of their younger days might be worn out.

Arbutnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

CHILDISHLY. adv. [from childish.] In a childish trifling way; like a child.

Together with his fame their infamy was spread, who had so rashly and childishly ejected him.

Hooker.

Some men are of excellent judgement in their own professions, but childishly unskillful in any thing besides.

Hayward.

CHILDISHMINDEDNESS. * n. s. [from childish and mind.] Triflingness.

I have somewhat of the French; I love birds, as the king does; and have some childishmindedness wherein we shall consent.

Bacon.

CHILDISHNESS. † n. s. [from childish.]

1. Pucility; triflingness; state of a child.

Last scene of all,

That ends this strange eventful history,

Is second childishness, and mere oblivion.

Shakspeare, As you Like it.

The actions of childishness, and unfashionable carriage, time and age will of itself be sure to reform.

Locke.

Nothing in the world could give a truer idea of the superstition, credulity, and childishness of the Roman catholic religion.

Addison on Italy.

2. Harmlessness.

Speak thou, boy;

Perhaps thy childishness will move him more

Than can our reasons.

Shakspeare.

CHILDLIENESS. † adj. [from child.] Without children; without offspring.

As thy sword hath made women childless, so shall thy mother be childless among women.

1 Samuel, xv. 33.

A man shall see the noblest works and foundation have proceeded from childless men; which have sought to express the images of their minds, where those of their bodies have failed: so the care of posterity is most in them that have no posterity.

Bacon, Essays.

Childless thou art, childless remain: so death

Shall be deceiv'd his glut.

Milton, P. L.

She can give the reason why one died childless.

Spectator.

So the sad nightingale, when childless made

By some rough swain, that steals her young away.

Ld. Mulgrave, Virg. Georg. iv.

CHILDLIKE. adj. [from child and like.] Becoming or becoming a child.

Who can owe no less than childlike obedience to her that hath more than motherly care.

Hooker.

I thought the remnant of mine age

Should have been cherish'd by her childlike duty.

Shakspeare.

CHILDLY. * adj. [from child.] Like a child. Not in use.

In childly wyse on her [he] gan to smyle.

Lidgate, Fall of Princes, ii. 12.

C H I

CHI'LIAD. n. s. [from χιλιας.] A thousand; a collection or sum containing a thousand.

We make cycles and periods of years; as decades, centuries; chiliads, for the use of computation in history. Holder.

CHILIA'EDRON. n. s. [from χιλια.] A figure of a thousand sides.

In a man, who speaks of a chiliaedron, or a body of a thousand sides, the idea of the figure may be very confused, though that of the number be very distinct. Locke.

CHI'LIARCH.* n. s. [χιλιάρχης.] A commander of a thousand. Coles, and Blount.

CHI'LIAS.* n. s. [χίλιας.] One of the sect of the millenarians.

To reign with Christ a 1000 years before the ending of the world, was the old error of the chiliasts.

Pagitt's Heresiography, p. 20.

This imposture was put upon us by the Hellenists, those among them who affected that ancient heresy of the chiliasts.

Gregory's Posthuma, p. 115.

CHILIFA'CTIVE.† adj. [from chile, or rather chyle.] This word and the two following should be written chylifactive, chylifactory, and chylification. That which makes chile.

Whether this be not effected by some way of corrosion, rather than any proper digestion, chylifactive mutation, or alimential conversion. Brown, Vulg. Errs.

CHILIFA'CTORY. adj. [from chile.] That which has the quality of making chile.

We should rather rely upon a chylifactory menstruum, or digestive preparation drawn from species or individuals, whose stomachs peculiarly dissolve lapideous bodies. Brown.

CHILIFICA'TION. n. s. [from chile.] The act of making chile.

Nor will we affirm that iron is indigested in the stomach of the ostrich; but we suspect this effect to proceed not from any liquid reduction, or tendency to chylification, by the power of natural heat. Brown, Vulg. Err.

CHILL.† adj. [cele, Sax. kyla, Su. cold.]

1. Cold; that which is cold to the touch.

And all my plants I save from nightly ill,
Of noisom winds, and blasting vapours chill. Milton, Arcades.

2. Cold; having the sensation of cold; shivering with cold.

My heart, and my chill veins, freeze with despair. Rowe.

3. Dull; not warm; not forward: as, a chill reception.

4. Depressed; dejected; discouraged.

5. Unaffectionate; cold of temper.

CHILL. n. s. [from the adjective.] Chilness; cold.

I very well know one to have a sort of chill about his precordia and head. Derham, Physico-Theology.

To CHILL. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make cold.

Age has not yet

So shrunk my sinews, or so chill'd my veins,

But conscious virtue in my breast remains. Dryden.

Heat burns his rise, frost chills his setting beams,

And vex the world with opposite extremes. Creesh.

Each changing season does its poison bring;

Rheums chill the winter, agues blast the spring.

Now no more the drum

Provokes to arms; or trumpet's clangor shrill

Affrights the wives, or chills the virgin's blood. Philips.

2. To depress; to deject; to discourage.

Every thought on God chills the gaiety of his spirits, and awakens terrors, which he cannot bear. Rogers.

3. To blast with cold.

The fruits perish on the ground,

Or soon decay, by snows immolate chill'd,

By winds are blasted, or by lightning kill'd. Blackmore.

C H I

CHI'LLINESS. n. s. [from chilly.] A sensation of shivering cold.

If the patient survives three days, the acuteness of the pain abates, and a chilliness or shivering affects the body. Arbuthnot.

CHI'LLY.† adj. [from chill.] Somewhat cold.

Their winters are for the most part sharper than ours — perchance by vicinity to the chilly tops of the Alps.

Wotton, Rem. p. 251.

A chilly sweat bedews

My shuddering limbs. Philips.

CHI'LLY.* adv. Coldly. Sherwood.

CHI'LLNESS. n. s. [from chill.] Coldness; want of warmth.

If you come out of the sun suddenly into a shade, there followeth a chillness or shivering in all the body. Bacon.

This, while he thinks, he lifts aloft his dart,

A gen'rous chillness seizes ev'ry part,

The veins pour back the blood, and fortify the heart. Dryden.

CHIMB. n. s. [kime, Dut.] The end of a barrel or tub.

CHIME.† n. s. [The original of this word is doubtful. Junius and Minshew suppose it corrupted from cimbal; Skinner from gamme, or gamut; Henshaw from chiamare, to call, because the chime calls to church. Perhaps it is only softened from chirme, or churme, an old word for the sound of many voices, or instruments making a noise together. But Mr. H. Tooke asks where this old word, chirm, is to be found. I am surprised that it escaped his researches. See To CHIRM.]

1. The consonant or harmonick sound of many correspondent instruments.

Hang our shaggy thighs with bells;

That, as we do strike a tune,

In our dance, shall make a chime. B. Jonson.

The sound

Of instruments, that made melodious chime,

Was heard, of harp and organ. Milton, P. L.

Love virtue, she alone is free;

She can teach you how to climb

Higher than the spherie chime. Milton, Comus.

2. The correspondence of sound.

Love first invented verse, and form'd the rhyme,

The motion measur'd, harmoniz'd the chime. Dryden.

3. The sound of bells, not rung by ropes, but struck with hammers. In this sense it is always used in the plural, chimes.

We have heard the chimes at midnight. Shakespeare.

4. The correspondence of proportion or relation.

The conceptions of things are placed in their several degrees of similitude; as in several proportions, one to another: in which harmonious chimes, the voice of reason is often drowned. Grew's Cosmol.

To CHIME. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To sound in harmony or consonance.

To make the rough recital a chime,

Or bring the sum of Gallia's loss to rhyme,

'Tis mighty hard. Prior.

2. To correspond in relation or proportion.

Father and son, husband and wife, and such other correlative terms, do belong one to another; and through custom, do readily chime, and answer one another, in people's memories. Locke.

3. To agree; to fall in with.

He not only sat quietly and heard his father railed at, but often chimed in with the discourse. Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

4. To suit with; to agree.

Any sect, whose reasonings, interpretation, and language, I have been used to, chime, of course, make all chime that way; and make another, and perhaps the genuine meaning of the author, seem harsh, strange and uncouth to me. Locke.

5. To jingle; to clatter.

But with the meaner tribe I am fore'd to chime,
And, wanting strength to rise, descend to rhyme. Smith.
To CHIME. v. a.

1. To move, or strike, or cause to sound harmonically, or with just consonancy.

With lifted arms they order ev'ry blow,
And chime their sounding hammers in a row:
With labour'd anvils, Etna groans below. Dryden, Georg.

2. To strike a bell with a hammer.

CHIMMER. n. s. [from chima.] He who chimes the bells. Sherwood.

CHIMERA. n. s. [Chimera, Lat.] A vain and wild fancy, as remote from reality as the existence of the poetical chimera, a monster feigned to have the head of a lion, the belly of a goat, and the tail of a dragon.

In short, the force of dreams is of a piece, Chimeras all; and more absurd, or less. Dryden, Fables.

No body joins the voice of a sheep with the shape of a horse, to be the complex ideas of any real substances, unless he has a mind to fill his head with chimeras, and his discourse with unintelligible words. Locke.

CHIMERE. n. s. [Ital. ciamare, old Fr. chamarre.] Dryden writes the word sinar, or syamar, which Dr. Johnson has defined "a woman's robe;" and Henry Wharton, the eminent antiquary, samarra, but not in Dr. Johnson's limited and imperfect meaning. See SIMAR. This variation of orthography arises, perhaps, from imitating the Dutch word saniere, the Span. samarra, or the Goth. samaria; the last of which denotes the priestly gown; as chimere, in some degree, is used by us.] A robe.

The chimere [is] the upper robe, to which the lawn sleeves are generally sewed; which before and after the reformation, till Queen Elizabeth's time, was always of scarlet silk; but Bishop Hooper scrupling first at the robe itself, and then at the colour of it; as too light and gay for the episcopal gravity; it was changed for a chimere of black satin.

Wheatley on the Comm. Prayer, ii. § 4.

CHIMERICAL. adj. [old Fr. chimerique.] Imaginary; fanciful; wildly, vainly, or fantastically conceived; fantastick.

As if the solemnity of this vow had never had beginning! Chimerical fancies, fit for a shorn head.

Ep. Hall, Honour of the Married Clergy, p. 312.

Notwithstanding the fineness of this allegory may atone for it in some measure, I cannot think that persons of such a chimerical existence are proper actors in an epic poem.

Spectator.

CHIMERICALLY. adv. [from chimerical.] Vainly; wildly; fantastically.

To CHIMERIZE. v. n. [from chimera.] To entertain wild fancies. Not in use.

What are all these but of chimerical dreams and chimerizing ideas of shallow imaginative scholars?

Transl. of Boccacini, (1626.) p. 226.

CHIMINAGE. n. s. [from chemin, an old law word for a road.] A toll for passage through a forest.

Cowel.

CHIMNEY. n. s. [cheminée, French, from the Lat. caminus, which also figuratively denotes fire. Wicliffe employs chimney, where the later translations employ furnace. "And they schulen send hem into the chimney of fier; there schal be wepying and beting togidre of teeth. St. Matt. xiii."]

1. The passage through which the smoke ascends from the fire in the house.

Chimnies, with scorn, rejecting smoke. Swift.

2. The turret raised above the roof of the house, for conveyance of the smoke.

The night has been unruly: where we lay,
Our chimnies were blown down. Shakespeare.

3. The fireplace.

The chimney
Is south the chamber; and the chimney-piece,
Chaste Dian bathings. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.
The fire which the Chaldeans worshipped for a god, is crept into every man's chimney. Raleigh, Hist.

Low offices, which some neighbours hardly think it worth stirring from their chimney sides to obtain. Swift on Sac. Test.

CHIMNEY-CORNER. n. s. [from chimney and corner.] The fireside; the seat on each end of the firegrate; usually noted in proverbial language for being the place of idlers.

Yet some old men
Tell stories of you in their chimney-corner. Denham.
Perhaps he had it from an old woman in a chimney-corner, or out of a romance. Leslie's Short Method with the Deists.

CHIMNEY-MONKEY. n. s. Hearth-money, or a tax imposed by statute, in Charles the Second's time, on fire-hearths and stoves in houses; and abolished in the first year of William and Mary.

CHIMNEYPIECE. n. s. [from chimney and piece.] The ornamental piece of wood, or stone, that is set round the fireplace.

Polish and brighten the marble hearths and chimneypieces with a clout dipt in grease. Swift.

CHIMNEYSWEEPER. n. s. [from chimney and sweeper.]

1. One whose trade it is to clean foul chimnies of soot.

To look like her, are chimneysweepers black:
And since her time are colliers counted bright. Shakespeare.

The little chimneysweeper skulks along,
And marks with sooty stains the heedless throng. Gay.
Even lying Ned the chimneysweeper of Savoy and Tom the Portugal dustman, put in their claims. Arbutnot.

2. It is used proverbially for one of a mean and vile occupation.

Golden lads and girls, all must,
As chimneysweepers, come to dust. Shakespeare.

CHIMNEYTOP. n. s. [from chimney and top.] The summit of a chimney.

Many a time and oft
Have you climb'd up to walls and battlements,
To towers and windows, yea, to chimney-tops. Shakespeare, Jul. Caesar.

CHIN. n. s. [cinne, Sax. kin, Germ. from the Goth. kinmus, kin. It may be curious to add, that the Pers. chyosser is the chin. See Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 316.] The part of the face beneath the under lip.

But all the words I could get of her, was wrying her waist, and thru-ting out her chin. Sidney.

With his amazonian chin he drove
The bristled lips before him. Shakespeare.

He rais'd his hardy head, which sunk again,
And, sinking on his bosom, knock'd his chin. Dryden.

CHINNED. adj. [from chin.] Used in composition for having a long or short chin; "long-chinned."

Kersey.

CHINA. n. s. [from China, the country where it is made.] China ware; porcelain; a species of vessels made in China, dimly transparent, partaking of the qualities of earth and glass. They are made by mingling two kinds of earth, of which one easily vitrifies; the other resists a very strong heat: when the vitrifiable earth is melted into glass, they are completely burnt.

Sneez, vapours, or small-pox, above them all,
And mistress of herself, tho' china fall.

After supper, carry your plate and china together in the same basket. Pope.

CHI'NA-ORANGE. n. s. [from China and orange.] The sweet orange; brought originally from China. Swift.

Not many years has the China-orange been propagated in Portugal and Spain. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CHI'NA-ROOT. n. s. [from China and root.] A medicinal root, brought originally from China.

CHI'NCOUGH. n. s. [perhaps more properly kinough, from kincken, to pant, Dutch, and cough; Goth. and Su. kikna, to have the respiration interrupted. Kersey, in 1702, calls it the "chine-cough, vulgò chin-cough."] A violent and convulsive cough, to which children are subject.

It shall ne'er be said in our country

Thou dy'st o' th' chin-cough. Beaum. and Fl. Bonduca.

I have observed a chincough, complicated with an intermitting fever. Flayer on the Humours.

CHINE. n. s. [eschine, Fr. schiena, Ital. spina, Lat. cein, Græc.]

1. The part of the back, in which the spine or backbone is found.

She strake him such a blow upon his chine, that she opened all his body. Sidney.

He presents her with the tusky head,
And chine, with rising bristles roughly spread. Dryden.

2. A piece of the back of an animal.

Cut but the burly boned clown in chines of beef ere thou sleep. Shakspeare.

He had killed eight fat hogs for this season, and he had dealt about his chine very liberally amongst his neighbours. Spectator.

To CHINE. v. a. [from the noun. Fr. eschiner, "to chine, to divide, or break the back of." Cotgrave.] To cut into chines.

He that in his line did chine the long rib'd Apennine. Dryden.

CHI'NEO. adj. [from chine.] Relating to the back.

Some hind, that, like another Milo, [can] bear quarters of malt upon his back, and sing with it; thrash all day, and in the evening in his stockings strike up a hornpipe: These be they, these steel-chined rascals. Beaum. and Fl. Scornful Lady.

CHINESE. n. s. Used elliptically for the language of the people of China; and for the people themselves, having, in our language, for its plural, Chinases, a circumstance which requires to be noticed.

The Chinases are no quarrellers, albeit voluptuous. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 364.

The barren plains
Of Schiana, where Chinases drive
Wag-sails and wind their cany waggons light. Milton, P. L.

CHINOLE. n. s. [perhaps a corruption of channel; which indeed the passage in Donne illustrates.] Gravel, free from dirt. It is yet a local word.

In the superficies whereof was represented in a fair work the flood Meander, running with his returns and windings; in the channel of which, one might see a splendour of precious stones, representing his rolling waves; which chingle was of carbuncles, emeralds, agates, and all other sorts of precious stones, sparkling in their native lustre. Donne, Hist. of the Septuagint, p. 51.

CHINK. n. s. [Goth. chian, to gape, Sax.] A small aperture longwise; an opening or gap between the parts of any thing.

Pyramus and Thisby did talk through the chink of a wall. Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

Plagues also have been raised by anointing the chinks of doors, and the like. Baron, Nat. Hist.

Though birds have no epiglottis, yet they do contract the chink of their larynx, as to prevent the admission of wet or cold air. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Other inventions, false and absurd, that are like so many chinks and holes to discover the rottenness of the whole fabric. South.

In vain she search'd each cranny of the house,
Each gaping chink, impervious to a mouse. Swift.

To CHINK. v. a. [derived by Skinner from the sound.] To shake so as to make a sound.

He chinks his purse, and takes his seat of state
With ready quills the dedicators wait. Pope, Dunciad.

To CHINK. v. n. To sound by striking such a body.

Lord Strutt's money shines as bright, and chinks as well, as 'squire South's. Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

When not a guinea chink'd on Martin's boards,
And Atwill's self was drain'd of all his hoards. Swift.

To CHINK.* v. a. [Sax. cinan.] To break into apertures or chinks. "To be chinked or crannied."

Hudoc. "To chink or chap, as the north wind does, the face." Cotgrave in V. Cerceus.

The surface, which is the skin of that great body, is chopped, and chinked with drought, and burnt up with heat. Seasonable Serm. p. 15.

To CHINK.* v. n. "To open, or gape; as, "the boat chinketh." Barret.

CHINKY. adj. [from chink.] Full of holes; gaping; opening into narrow clefts.

But plaster thou the chinky hives with clay. Dryden, Virgil.

Grimalkin, to domestick vermin sworn

An everlasting foe, with watchful eye

Lies nightly brooding o'er a chinky gap,

Pretending her fell claws, to thoughtless mice.

Sure ruin. Philips's Poems.

CHINTS. n. s. Cloath of cotton made in India, and printed with colours.

Let a charming chints, and Brussels lace,
Wrap my cold limbs, and shade my lifeless face. Pope.

CHI'OPINE. n. s. [from chapin, Span. often written chapin, or chopin, in our own language.] A high shoe, formerly worn by ladies.

Your ladyship is nearer heaven than when I saw you last, by the altitude of a chiopine. Shakspeare.

Nor are those short-legged ladies thought less goodly, who fly to chopines. Bp. Taylor, Art. and Language, p. 60.

The queen of Spain took off one of her chapins, and clouted Olivarez about the noddle with it, because he had accompanied the king to a lady of pleasure. Hotell's Lett. ii. 43.

The woman was a giantess, and yet walked always in chiopines. Cowley.

To CHIP. v. a. [probably corrupted from chop.] To cut into small pieces; to diminish, by cutting away a little at a time.

His mangled myrmidons
Noseless, handless, hackt and chipt come to him, Crying on Hector. Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

To return to our statue in the block of marble, we see it sometimes only begun to be chipped; sometimes rough hewn, and just sketched into an human figure.

The critick strikes out all that is not just,
And 'tis ev'n so the butler chips the crust. Indust.

Taught him to chip the wood, and hew the st.

CHIP, CHEAT, CHIPPING, in the name of, imply a market; from the Sax. cyppan, ceppan, to buy. Glosson.

To CHIP.* v. n. [Dutch kippen, to hatch, to disclose.] To break, or crack. An egg is said to chip, when the young bird cracks the shell. A north country word. Grose. Potters also now use the phrase, meaning the flying of small pieces, or the breaking of the edges of earthen ware.

CHIP. n. s. [fr]

1. A small piece taken off by a cutting instrumen

As children be as it were chippes hewen from their parents, so are other things when they are disjoined one of them from another.

Expos. of Solomon's Song, (1585.) p. 232.

Cucumbers do extremely affect moisture, and over-drink themselves, which chaff or chips forbideth.

That chip made iron swim, not by natural power:

Br. Taylor.

The saw was laid below;

Of chips and screw-wood was the second row. Dryden, Fables.

2. A small piece, however made.

The manganese lies in the vein in lumps wrecked, in an irregular manner, among clay, spar, and chips of stone.

Woodward.

CHIP-AXE. * n. s. A chip-axe, or one-handed plane-axe, wherewith carpenters hew their timber smooth.

Hulot, and Cotgrave in V. Aisciau.

CHIPPING. * n. s. [from To chip.] A fragment cut off.

I know you were one could keep

The battery-batch still lock'd and save the chippings.

B. Jonson, Alchemist.

They dug their land with the chippings of a sort of soft stone.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

The chippings and filings of these jewels, could they be preserved, are of more value than the whole mass of ordinary authours.

Felton on the Classics.

CHIRAGRA. * n. s. [Lat. and Fr. chiragra, from the Gr. χειρ the hand, and αγρος inert.] The gout in the hands only.

CHIRAGICAL. adj. [chiragra, Lat.] Having the gout in the hand; subject to the gout in the hand.

Chiragical persons do suffer in the finger as well as in the rest, and sometimes first of all.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

To CHIRK. * v. n. [Teut. circken, to chirp; and perhaps chirk is our true word for chirp; which is hardly a contraction of cheer up, as Dr. Johnson supposes; but rather a corruption of chirk. Dr. Jamieson has connected chirp with cheep or chepe, to peep, or cry as young birds in the nest; and in his illustration of chirk, which he defines only "to make a chirping noise," has overlooked the use of the word in Chaucer, where it expresses the brisk or cheerful noise of the bird, not the puling of it in the nest.] To chirp.

This here ariseth up ful curteisly,

And hir embraceth in his armes narowe,

And kisseth hir swete, and chirketh as a sparowe

With his lippe.

Chaucer, Somnour's Tale.

To CHIRME. * v. n. [Hulot, noticing this old verb, says "to chirme, or to chur, as birds do, Lat. gagrio." Gagrio, however, is to gaggle or cackle. But to chur, or chirre, is to coo. See To CHIRRE. Possibly it may mean, generally, to sing, as the example which I bring seems to shew; Lat. carmen, whence our charm, and Sax. cipm, a charm; and so chirme. The Dutch verb kermen, to moan, is hardly applicable to this sense.] To chirp, as a bird.

bird chirmes as it is whistled to,

Wedroephe's Fr. Gr. (1623.) p. 505.

CHIROGRAPH. * n. s. [Fr. chirographe, from chiro-graphie, "double copie d'un acte passé entre plusieurs personnes," 1200." Lacombe. Lat. chirographum, from χειρ the hand, and γραφω, to write.]

Formerly, a deed, requiring a counterpart, engrossed twice upon the same piece of parchment, and cut through the middle; the same as chaper-party; which see.

2. Formerly also, a fine: a phrase still preserved in the office of the chirographer in the common pleas.

CHIRO'GRAPHER. * n. s. [from chirograph.] He that exercises or professes the art or business of writing; and, by way of distinction, the officer in the common pleas who engrosses fines.

Thus passeth it from this office to the chirographer's, to be engrossed.

Bacon, Office of Alienation.

CHIRO'GRAPHERIST. * n. s. [See CHIROGRAPHER.] This word is used in the following passage, I think improperly, for one that tells fortunes, by examining the hand: the true word is chirosofist, or chiro-mancer.

Let the phisiognomists examine his features; let the chiro-graphists behold his palm; but, above all, let us consult for the calculation of his nativity.

Aburknot, on Pope.

CHIRO'GRAPHY. * n. s. [See CHIROGRAPHER.] The art of writing.

CHIRO'LOGY. * n. s. [Fr. chirologie, Gr. χειρ and λογος.]

What we now call, talking by the hand.

Chirology is interpretation by the transient motions of the fingers; which, of all other ways of interpretation, comes nearest to that of the tongue.

Dalgarno, Deaf and Dumb Man's Tutor, (Ox. 1686.)

CHIRO'ROMANCER. * n. s. [See CHIRO'ROMANCY.] One that foretells future events by inspecting the hand.

The middle sort, who have not much to spare,

To chiro-mancers' cheaper art repair,

Who clap the pretty palm, to make the lines more fair.

Dryden, Juvenal.

CHIRO'ROMANCY. * n. s. [Fr. chiromancie, Gr. χειρ the hand, and μαντις, a prophet.] The art of foretelling the events of life, by inspecting the hand. Sometimes written chiromanty.

There is not much considerable in that doctrine of chiro-mancy that spots in the top of the nails do signify things past; in the middle, things present; and at the bottom, events to come.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Other signs [of melancholy] there are taken from physiognomy, metoposcopy, chiro-mancy. Burton, Anal. of Mel. p. 58.

The thumb, in chiro-mancy, we give Venus.

B. Jonson, Alchemist.

To CHIRP. * v. n. [perhaps contracted from cheer up; and the Dutch have circken, Dr. Johnson says; but the etymology is more fully shown in To chirk, which silences the supposition of cheer up.] To make a cheerful noise; as birds, when they call without singing.

She chirping ran, he peeping flew away.

Sidney.

And, thinks he, that the chirping of a wren

Can chase away the first conceived sound?

Shakespeare.

How cheerfully do these little birds chirp, and sing, out of the natural joy they conceive at the approach of the sun.

Bp. Hall, Occ. Medit. 36.

No chirping lark the welkin sheer invokes.

Gay, Pastorals.

The careful hen

Calls all her chirping family round.

Thomson, Spring.

To CHIRP. * v. a. [This seems apparently corrupted from cheer up.] To make cheerful.

Let no sober bigot here think it a sin,

To push on the chirping and moderate bottle.

Johnson.

Sir Balsam now, he lings like other folks;

He takes his chirping pint, he cracks his jokes.

Pope.

CHIRP. * n. s. [from the verb.] The voice of birds or insects.

Winds over us whisper'd, flocks by us did bleat,

And chirp went the grasshopper under our feet.

Spectator.

CHIRPER. * n. s. [from chirp.] One that chirps; one that is cheerful.

CHIRPING. * n. s. [from chirp.] The gentle noise of birds.

Let the songs be loud and cheerful, and not chirpiage or pulings. Bacon.

To CHIRRE. v. n. [ceojuan, Sax.] See CHURME. To coo as a pigeon. Junius.

CHIRURGEON.† n. s. [old Fr. chirurgien, Gr. χειρουργος, from χειρ, the hand, and εργον, work.] One that cures ailments, not by internal medicines, but outward applications. It is now generally pronounced, and by many written, surgeon, Dr. Johnson says. Surgeon, it must be added, was the old word; and not modern, as Dr. Johnson's remark insinuates.

Thou art surgeon that cureth some deadly. Old Morality of Every Man.

When a man's wounds cease to smart, only because he has lost his feeling, they are nevertheless mortal, for his not seeing his need of a chirurgion. South, Sermons.

CHIRURGERY.† n. s. The art of curing by external applications. This is called Surgery, [old Fr. chirurgie.]

Gynecia having skill in chirurgery, an art in those days much esteemed. Sidney.

Nature could do nothing in her case without the help of chirurgery, in drying up the luxurious flesh, and making way to pull out the rotten bones. Wiscam.

CHIRURGICAL.† adj. [old Fr. chirurgical.] See CHIRURGICK. } CHIRURGEON.

1. Having qualities useful in outward applications to hurts.

As to the chirurgical or physical virtues of wax, it is reckoned a mean between hot and cold. Mortimer.

2. Relating to the manual part of healing.

In the Marchant's second tale, the history of Beryn, falsely ascribed to Chaucer, a chirurgical operation of changing eyes is partly performed by the assistance of the occult sciences. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poet. i. 44.

3. Manual in general, consisting in operations of the hand. This sense, though the first, according to etymology, is now scarce found.

The chirurgical or manual part doth refer to the making instruments, and exercising particular experiments. Wilkins.

CHI'SSEL.† n. s. [ciseau, Fr.: Ital. cisello, of scissum, Lat.] An instrument with which wood or stone is pared away.

What fine chisel

Could ever yet cut breath? Let no man mock me, For I will kiss her. Shakspeare.

There is such a seeming softness in the limbs, as if not a chisel had hewed them out of stone, but a pencil had drawn and stroaked them in oil. Walton, Architecture.

Imperfect shapes: in marble such are seen, When the rude chisel does the man begin. Dryden.

To CHI'SSEL.† v. a. [from the noun. Fr. ciseler.] To cut with a chisel.

A grace [step] there was, yehesgld all of stone Out of the rock.

Hawes, Hist. of Grande Amoure, (1555.) b. 3.

CHIT.† n. s. [according to Dr. Hickes, from kind, Germ. child; perhaps from chico, little, Span. To this etymology, given by Dr. Johnson, it may be added, that the dwarf pea, or chitch-pea, is called a chit. See Sherwood's Dict. 1632. Citto is an Italian word, addressed to children in order to make them hold their peace, when noisy. Florio's Ital. Dict. Citto is also a low Italian word for a little dirty boy.]

1. A child; a baby. Generally used of young persons in contempt.

These will appear such chits in story, 'Till turn all politicks to jest.

Anonymous.

She pinched me, and called me squealing chit, and threw me into a girl's arms that was taken in to tend me.

Tatler, No. 89.

2. The shoot of corn from the end of the grain. A cant term with maltsters. This is probably a corruption of chick. See To CHICK.

Barley, couched four days, will begin to shew the chit or sprit at the root-end. Mortimer, Husbandry.

3. A freckle. [from chick-pease.] In this sense it is seldom used. Hulot denominates "chits in the face or body, warts;" and gives the adjective chitty also from this word. See CURRY.

To CURT. v. n. [from the noun.] To sprout; to shoot at the end of the grain: cant.

I have known barley chit in seven hours after it had been thrown forth. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CHIT'CHAT.† n. s. [corrupted by reduplication from chat.] Prattle; idle prate; idle talk. A word only used in ludicrous conversation.

I am a member of a female society, who call ourselves the chitchat club. Spectator.

If Ralph had learning added to the common chit-chat of the town, he would have been a disputant upon all topics that ever were considered by men of his own genius.

Tatler, No. 197.

To CHIT'TER.* v. n. [Dutch, citteren, to tremble for cold.] To shiver. We now use chatter in this sense. See To CHATTER. But our old genuine word is this, "Chyttering, quivering, or shaking for colde."

Hulot.

CHIT'TERLINGS.† n. s. [from schysterlingh, Dut. Minshen; from luteln, Germ. Skinner.] The guts; the bowels. Dr. Johnson is mistaken in stating the word to be without singular. "A gut or chitterling hanged in the smoke." Burvet.

Cypresse hatbands shrivelled into black chitterlins.

Gayton, Notes on D. Quax. iii. 3.

His warped ear hung o'er the string,

Which was but souze to chitterlings. Hudibras, i. ii.

CHIT'TERLING.* n. s. The frill to the breast of a shirt, which appears to have been a very ancient, as it is still a fashionable, part of dress.

We Englishmen can mocke and scoffe at all countryes for their defectes; but, before they have many times mustred before us, we can learne by lytle and lytle to exceede and pass them all: — of an Italian waist, we make an English payeate; of a French ruffe, an English chytterling, &c.

Gascoigne, Delicate Diet for Droonkards, (1576.)

CHIT'TY.† adj. [from chit.]

1. Childish; like a baby; as, a chitty face; still a common expression. Sherwood, in his old dictionary, parallels "a chittie-face with chichie-face," old Fr. chicheface, which however means one of a sneaking or miserable appearance.

2. Full of chits or warts. Hulot.

CHIVALROUS.† adj. [old Fr. chevalereux, Gower writes our word chevalcrous, Conf. Am. B. 1.] Relating to chivalry, or errant knighthood; knightly; warlike; adventurous; daring. A word now out of use, Dr. Johnson says; but this is surely not the case.

And noble minds of yore allied were

In brave pursuit of chivalrous emprise.

Spenser, F. Q.

I'll answer thee in any fair degree,

Or chivalrous design of knightly trial. Shakspeare, K. Rich. II.

The duc de Mantua, Count Spadassin, and captain Mardaille, persude him, [king Microcholo] that he is the most puissant and chivalrous prince that ever appeared since Alexander the great!

Louth, Lett. to Warburton.

The Spaniards, from temper and constitution, were extravagantly fond of chivalrous exercises.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poet.

CHIVALRY.† n. s. chevalerie, Fr. knighthood, from cheval, a horse; as equis in Latin.]

1. Knighthood; a military dignity.

There be now, for martial encouragement, some degrees and orders of chivalry; which, nevertheless, are conferred promiscuously upon soldiers and no soldiers. Bacon, Essays.

2. The qualifications of a knight; as valour; dexterity in arms.

Thou hast slain
The flow'r of Europe for his chivalry. Shakspeare.

I may speak it to my shame,
I have a trust been to chivalry. Shakspeare.

3. The general system of knighthood.

Solemnly he swore,
That by the faith which knights to knighthood bore,
And what'er else to chivalry belongs,
He would not cease 'till he reveng'd their wrongs. Dryden.

4. An adventure; an exploit. Not now in use.

They four doing acts more dangerous, though less famous,
because they were but private chivalries. Sidney.

5. The body, or order, of knights.

And by his light
Did all the chivalry of England move
To do brave acts. Shakspeare.

Arthur, with all his chivalry. Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. in.

6. In law.

Servitium militare, of the French, chevalier; a tenure of land by knights service. There is no land but is holden immediately or immediately of the crown, by some service or other; and therefore are all our freeholds, that are to us and our heirs, called jeuda, fees, as proceeding from the benefit of the king. As the king gave to the nobles large possessions for this or that rent and service, so they parcelled out their lands, so received for rents and services as they thought good; and those services are by Littleton divided into chivalry and socage. The one is martial and military; the other, clownish and rustick. Chivalry, therefore, is a tenure of service, whereby the tenant is bound to perform some noble or military office unto his lord, and is of two sorts; either regal, that is, such as may hold only of the king; or such as may also hold of a common person as well as of the king. That which may hold only of the king is properly called sergeantry, and is again divided into grand or petit, i. e. great or small. Chivalry that may hold of a common person as well as of the king, is called scutagium. Crovel.

7. It ought properly to be written chevalry. It is a word not much used, but in old poems or romances, Dr. Johnson says; which is so far from being the case, that few words have been more forcibly employed by writers both of his own time, and since.

We find the divinity lectures of Don Quixote, and the penance of his squire, are both of them in the ritual of chivalry.

Warburton, on Lanc's Lab. Lost.

I look upon chivalry on some mighty river, which the fables of the poets have made immortal. It may have sprung up amidst rude rocks, and blind deserts. But the noise and rapidity of its course, the extent of country it adorns, and the towns and palaces it ennobles, may lead a traveller out of his way, and invite him to take a view of those dark caverns,

unde superne

Plurimus Eridani per sylvam volvitur amnis.

Hurd, Lett. on Chiv. and Rom. L. 2.

I thought ten thousand swords must have leaped from their scabbards to avenge even a look that threatened her with insult. But the age of chivalry is gone.

Burke, on the Fr. Revolution.

Cin'ves.† n. s. [cive, Fr. Skiuner.]

1. The threads or filaments rising in flowers, with seeds at the end.

The masculine or prolific seed contained in the chives, or apices of the stamina. Ray on the Creation.

2. A species of small onion. [old Fr. ceves, ciboule, oignon; cepa, Lat. V. Roq. Gloss.]

CHLORO'SIS. n. s. [from χλόη, green.] The green-sickness.

CHLORO'TICK.* adj. [Fr. chlorotique, from chlorosis.] Affected by chlorosis; subject to it.

The extasies of sedentary and chlorotick nuns. Ballie.

To CHOKE. See CHOKER.

CHOCK.* n. s. [old Fr. choc, a shock, a brunt, a violent encounter. Cotgrave: "Choquer sa teste contre le muraille, to run his head against a wall."] An encounter; an attack.

One of the kings of France died miserably by the chock of an hog. Rp. Patrick, Divine Arithmetick, p. 27.

CHOCOLATE. n. s. [chocolate, Span.]

1. The nut of the cacao-trees.

The tree hath a rose flower, of a great number of petals, from whose emplacement arises the pointal, being a tube cut into many parts, which becomes a fruit shaped somewhat like a cucumber, and deeply furrowed, in which are contained several seeds, collected into an oblong heap, and slit down, somewhat like almonds. It is a native of America, and is found in great plenty in several places between the Tropicks, and grows wild. See COCOA.

Miller.

2. The cake or mass, made by grinding the kernel of the cacao-nut with other substances, to be dissolved in hot water.

The Spaniards were the first who brought chocolate into use in Europe, to promote the consumption of the cacao-nuts, achiot, and other drugs, which their West Indies furnish, and which enter the composition of chocolate.

Chambers.
